15TH FEBRUARY 1905.

Rangoon Gazette.—The Standard is in a position to state that the Prince of Wales will leave England towards the end of August to visit India, and that definite plans are expected to be made before Lord Curzon goes to Simla.

26TH FEBRUARY 1905.

Bombay Gazette.—It is officially announced that the Prince and Princess of Wales will arrive in India in November next and stay till March. They will visit the principal cities of India.

The programme includes visits to the more important Native States, reception of Native Princes and Chiefs and levées at which the principal personages will be presented.

The King, after consulting with Lord Curzon, directs that exchange of ceremonial presents be dispensed with.

His Majesty the King-Emperor has been pleased to approve the arrangements for the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales to the Indian Empire.

It is expected that the Prince and Princess will arrive in India in November, and that their stay will continue until March 1906. Their Royal Highnesses will be received in India by His Excellency the Viceroy as the representative of His Majesty. It is the intention of Their Royal Highnesses to visit, so far as the time at their disposal will permit, the principal cities of British India and the more important Native States. During the tour His Royal Highness will receive the Princes and Chiefs, who rule under the paramount protection of the King-Emperor, and will hold levées at which will be presented to him the principal personages in His Majesty's Indian dominions.

His Majesty has been pleased, on the advice of His Majesty's Government after consultation with the Viceroy, to direct that the exchange of ceremonial presents on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses shall be dispensed with. No presents will, in consequence, be accepted by Their Royal Highnesses.

His Majesty has approved of the appointment of Sir Walter Lawrence, K.C.I.E., to be the head of the staff during the coming visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India.

We have at last the interesting official announcement that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will visit India during the next cold weather. The country will welcome the Heir-Apparent and his consort as loyally and as enthusiastically as India welcomed His Majesty the King-Emperor as Prince of Wales in 1877. There will be nothing lacking in the cordiality of the reception which will be given to Their Royal Highnesses, and the knowledge of the great demonstration which will be made compels us to regret that another year had not been allowed to elapse ere the long promised visit had been finally arranged. Another twelve months would have enabled the Native States to prepare more effectively for the reception of the Imperial visitors. The wise decision of His Majesty to dispense with the exchange of ceremonial presents will be a considerable relief to the Princes and Chiefs, but we are yet too near to the Delhi Durbar for the less fortunate of the Native States to have recovered from the difficulties into which that brief period of brilliance and profitless expenditure plunged them. Moreover, it is not yet clear that considerable areas of the country will not find their resources seriously affected during the present year. The abnormal winter has destroyed the late crops in many parts of Upper India, and it is to be feared that where this has been the case in Native territory the obligations imposed by loyalty and the desire to do honour to the future Sovereign will involve a further burden on the State finances of the future. We have no doubt that the Government of India having advised the dispensation on the subject of gifts will seek to moderate the tendency of the Princes and Chiefs to excessive display. Even thus the coming of the illustrious visitors will be signalised in the remarkable manner which creates false impressions of the country's conditions; but the sacrifices it may involve will be loyally and willingly made.

The Bengalee.—It has been authoritatively announced that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will visit India in November next and that the principal cities and Native States are included in the programme. It is further announced that in consultation with His Majesty's Government and the Viceroy, His Majesty the King-Emperor has been pleased to direct that there should be no exchange of ceremonial presents on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses. We Indians are a loyal people, and royalty may ever rest assured of a most warm and cordial welcome in this ancient land. The prohibition of the exchange of ceremonial presents is probably a practical recognition of the strain which a Royal visit cannot fail to put upon the financial resources of the Princes and the people of India. But are there other presents besides ceremonial ones? And if there are, may we respectfully enquire whether the prohibition also extends to those which may perhaps be called "unceremonial" presents?

Advocate of India.—It is formally announced that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales are to visit India next cold weather. The arrival will be in November and the departure in March following. The visit will be confined to the principal cities of British India and a few Native States. Exchange of ceremonial presents will be dispensed with. Sir Walter Lawrence, K.C.I.E., is to be the head of the Prince's staff. It is superfluous to say that the Royal guests of India will everywhere receive loyal welcome and everything will be done to make their visit to this country pleasant to them. Let us hope the visit will cement the bonds that bind India to England.

Bengalee.—The practice of the heir to the British throne paying a visit to the most important dependency of the British Empire began with the visit of the present King-Emperor as Prince of Wales in 1875-76. Previous to that visit, however, the late Duke of Edinburgh had paid a visit to India. Several years later the Duke of Connaught accepted a military command in India and served for some years, first as the Officer commanding the Meerut District and next as Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, with a seat in the Bombay Legislative Council. The Duke made himself extremely popular by his courtesy and unassuming ways. In His Royal Highness the people of India had a true friend, and he warmly advocated the scheme of an Indian Sandhurst. Subsequently, the late Duke of Clarence and Avondale visited India. The Duke of Connaught visited India again as the King's representative at the Coronation Durbar. From Her late Majesty Queen Victoria the Good all the members of the Royal Family have learned to look upon India and her people with sympathy, and we are certain the next Royal visit will help to draw closer the bonds of loyalty and affection between the Royal Family and the people of India.

Rangoon Gazette.—The Indian Daily News hears that the Prince and Princess of Wales are likely to be in Bombay on the 9th of November next, when the King's Birthday will be celebrated.

5TH MARCH 1905.

Rast Gaftar.—Next year, this season would be one of a continuous round of joyous festivities and gaieties throughout the length and breadth of the country by the long looked for visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to India. It has been officially announced that the Royal tour which had ere now been deferred through political and other considerations, will be undertaken by the end of November next, and will terminate somewhere in the month of March following, after Their Royal Highnesses have visited the principal cities and towns of India under the Government and the feudatory States. The visit of the Prince of Wales would be productive of immense benefit to this country, and without stint let India open the strings of her purse to meet the outlay for a grand and magnificent reception which she must prepare herself to tender to His Majesty the King-Emperor's heir to the throne. It is not every off and on that we are favoured with such visits from Princes of Royal blood, and when it is considered that thirty years have elapsed since King Edward paid a visit to these shores, followed by only one more by his much lamented eldest son, the late Prince Albert Victor, our country should not suffer this opportunity to glide by of making most of the ensuing Royal tour. The warm and affectionate reception with which the people greeted the Emperor, and the outburst of loyal sentiments and devotion which was then displayed impressed His Majesty, and withal the British nation, more favourably than ever, and they realised as they perhaps seldom did before that the loyalty of the Indian people was no mean factor in determining the safety and security of their world-wide Empire.

Let the Prince once more realise, and through him the British nation, that the loyalty of the peoples of this vast continent is no lip-loyalty, that the people, though not in the prime of happiness and material prosperity, are not yet estranged from their rulers, that they are not less grateful to them for what blessings they have showered on their land during a continuous reign of peace and tranquillity, that they have yet enough faith in their sense of justice though in straggling instances that boon was withheld and their birth-rights trampled down, that even in their adversities they would cheer up, and smile under their tears if it be to join the chorus of Imperial rejoicings and Imperial greatness, that they would smile when they smiled and weep when they mourned. Let the Prince realise, and through him his nation, that in the surging mass of humanity as may turn out of their hearth and home to bid their Royal guests their loyal welcome, there is an element of strength and latent force above the potentiality of the mightiest armament which the wealth of his country can build up, that their love and their devotion are more precious than the precious metal itself to weld together the fabrics of his unwieldy Empire, that their united sympathy would offer more insuperable bulwarks to foreign invasion than the most durable fortifications which architectural genius could build out of stone and earth. Let the Prince realise, and through him the world, that the vast ocean of humanity, as may hail from Kashmir to Comorin to greet him, owe allegiance to a handful of Britons not by the strength of their army nor the rigours of military discipline, but by a rule of divine righteousness, justice and equality; as by nothing short of an unswerving adherence to its principles can any isolated nation dream of conglomerating in a harmonious whole a confounded mass of such conflicting interests and diversified nationalities.

It is no fancied picture this nor a hyperbolic description of the moralising lessons which a flying visit from the Prince may inculcate upon his country as our own. For though the ephemeral pomp and pageantry of the show may die out and the glamour of the Durbars of Rajas and Chiefs may flicker, the deafening din of the applause of the masses and the shouts of their acclamations as they greet their Monarch's heir from station to station and village to village, will survive for years and be wafted beyond the seas and over the Frontiers till they settle finally at St. Petersburg and Moscow, asserting themselves beyond the crack of the Cossacks' whip and the grunt of the blood-thirsty Bear. Then the Muscovite will learn, and so will the world's greedy nations as have a covetous eye on the brightest gem in England's diadem, that while Czars and Princes crouch and cower about in masquerades for refuge against their own people, Britain's royalty may move freely about in the land of a Dependency, amid foreign peoples and subdued nations, midst unmixed blessings and prayers for their welfare.

Bengalee.—We cordially endorse every word of the following paragraph which appeared in yesterday's Englishman:—

At the special meeting of the Municipal Corporation to be held to-morrow Mr. Shirley Tremearne is to move that Rs. 20,000 be provided in the next budget for an address and present to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, on the occasion of their visit to Calcutta, and that a small committee be appointed to select a suitable present. It will generally be conceded that it is a pity that such a proposal should have been made, for it is likely to place those of the Commissioners who wish to conserve the money of the rate-payers under the imputation of disloyalty. And yet the value of an address, whether accompanied by a present or not, lies not so much in the money expended, as in the feelings it is meant to present. In these circumstances, it is not only not necessary but is setting an example which other Municipalities and corporate bodies might feel themselves bound to follow, without the excuse of the large income that Calcutta has. It has already been decided that there is to be no interchange of presents between the Princes of India and Their Royal Highnesses. To extend this principle to corporate bodies would seem to be a simple and desirable expedient.

We are afraid Mr. Tremearne's motion, however loyal, is obviously illegal. The Calcutta Municipal Act does not authorise the expenditure of a single rupee for the purpose indicated in this motion. The only section of the Act, upon which Mr. Tremearne apparently relies, is section 14, sub-section (2), clause (IX), which says that "the Corporation may, in their discretion, provide, from time to time, either wholly or partly," for certain matters including, "with the previous sanction of the Local Government, the payment of contribution to the cost incurred on the occasion of any public ceremony or entertainment held in Calcutta." Now, the presentation of a mere address of welcome would be a public ceremony, and the cost thereof could be legally sanctioned by the Corporation. But, in the present case the money is required for the presentation of a gift which certainly does not come under the category of a public ceremony or entertainment. Indeed, the case is exactly on all fours with that of the presentation of a souvenir to Lady Curzon, the cost of which has been subscribed by the Municipal Commissioners individually and not treated as a charge upon the rate-payers' money. We think that the best way to nip the mischief in the bud would be to accept the suggestion made by the Englishman, namely, to extend to corporate bodies the principle of non-interchange of presents. We yield to none in our loyalty to the Throne, but even loyalty should not be testified to by the sacrifice of legality.

8TH MARCH 1905.

Rangoon Gazette.—Arrangements in connection with the Indian tour next cold weather of the Prince and Princess of Wales are not yet finally settled, but it may be taken as probable that the landing will take place at Bombay about the 9th November for the celebration of the King's Birthday, also that Calcutta will be reached about Christmas week for the Viceroy's Cup Race, and the laying of the foundation-stone for the Victoria Memorial. Visits to Agra, Delhi, Lahore, Peshawar, Rawalpindi and some of the Rajputana States, including Bikanir, also to Cawnpore and Lucknow, are all practically certain to be included. Madras, Hyderabad and Mysore may also confidently expect to see Their Royal Highnesses. The Prince is a keen sportsman, and will no doubt be shown some of the shooting for which Mysore is famous. A big tiger shoot is also likely to be arranged either in Nepal or Assam.

9TH MARCH 1905.

Rangoon Gazette.—It is confirmed that the Renown will bring out the Prince and Princess of Wales.

At the meeting of the Calcutta Corporation held yesterday, there was a long discussion over Mr. Tremearne's motion to devote Rs. 20,000 of the rate-payers' money to furnishing an address and welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. This proposal was ultimately carried by a majority, seven Commissioners voting against.

11TH MARCH 1905.

Rangoon Gazette.—Chapters of the Star of India and the Indian Empire will most probably be held in Calcutta next cold weather during the Prince of Wales' visit.

12TH MARCH 1905.

Advocate of India.—Then in the end, now at the start. Thus was protest provoked: then in favour of humanity, now in favour of legality. When a memorial was to be erected in honour of the visit of the late Duke of Avondale, His Majesty's eldest son, the people were for a leper asylum and the rulers for a statue. At the last meeting of the Calcutta Corporation Mr. Tremearne proposed that Rs. 20,000, four times of what was voted when the King-Emperor had visited these shores, should be voted in the next budget for an address and present to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to Calcutta. In spite of protest the motion has been carried. It may give rise to further complication. At the meeting and outside the idea prevailed that the Corporation had no power to grant any such expenditure. That good many members think so is proved by the fact that for presenting a souvenir to Lady Curzon the members subscribed the money among themselves. There was no reason for departing from this procedure. The Corporation had another reason for doing away with the portion of the motion in relation to gift. The decision about the non-interchange of gifts between the Prince and Indian Ruling Chiefs might easily be applied to the present case.

14TH MARCH 1905.

Muslim Herald.—It is now officially announced that the Prince of Wales is going to pay a visit to this country during the cold weather this year. From this distance in time nothing can be said concerning the prosperity or otherwise of the current year. This particular item cannot be decided until after the rains and the Indian rains are a most unaccountable quantity. It is devoutly to be hoped that the rains will be propitious and that the Indian ryot everywhere will be enjoying prosperity about the time when the beloved Prince visits these shores. But this uncertainty of the season excepted, the Prince of Wales will meet with the heartiest welcome from his Indian subjects. A tentative programme of the movements of the Royal guest has already been got up. And from this it appears that the Prince-Royal is to visit every important centre during the time he spends in this country.

Within recent years India has been greatly impoverished in her resources and for the last nearly ten years she has been much harassed by the pests of famine and plague. Consequently in many quarters it was apprehended that the cost of this forthcoming Royal visit would have to be borne by this country. But to the great relief of the Indian ryot it has been positively decided that this cost is to be paid out of the English revenues. This cost is calculated to be something like 20,000 pounds in English money which in our Indian currency means three lakhs of rupees. It is, indeed, very thoughtful and gracious of the British Parliament to have undertaken to bear the cost of this visit. Even otherwise the Indian exchequer would have felt in duty and honour bound to stand the cost. But just now poor India is otherwise situated.

However, the British Government knows that the heart of India is full and overflowing with sincere loyalty and that the Indian people are truly joyful that their future King-Emperor is shortly going to pay them a personal visit.

21ST MARCH 1905.

Muslim Herald.—It is a very wise and timely suggestion that is made by Mr. K. C. Bedarkar, of Dumas, in the Advocate of India of the 14th instant concerning the forthcoming visit of the Prince of Wales to this country. Mr. Bedarkar's communication says:—

The visit to India of her future Sovereign is necessarily an event of the first magnitude from every point of view, whether ceremonial and other presents are exchanged or not. Indian Princes and people will rejoice in undertaking an expence commensurate, with the importance of the visits and with a splendour befitting the hosts and the guests. Tamasha there must be, and tamasha there will be.

But if the Royal visit is to be one for the masses of India to know and remember with a genuine sense of loyalty and pleasure, it must necessarily be associated with a substantial gift to the people at large, such as reductions or remissions of taxation, on salt, for instance. No measure was so popular with the masses at the introduction of the British rule in India as the remission of vexatious local imposts; and it may be predicted with some considerable confidence that an edict reducing the tax on salt by another 8 or 12 annas per maund will elicit from 300 millions of Indians a shower of blessings on British rule and the members of the British Royal Family. The expressions of gratitude will be absolutely sincere and not merely courteous or diplomatic.

Mr. Archibald Colquhoun, in his "Russia against India," has outlined a policy of transfrontier defence to prevent India's financial ruin. Frontier defences are being annually strengthened and military expeditions beyond the frontier undertaken at India's expense to secure "Imperial" interests. Each cause will have its legitimate effect according to the inexorable law of nature. If British rule in India is to be for the benefit of both, the greatest defence will be found in the contentment and happiness, and the resulting loyalty of the Indian people, which alone can give it permanence and which it is for the interest of all to secure by concessions on both sides. Let the Royal visit be made an auspicious event, to be fixed in the grateful memory of the people by an act of Royal munificence. Let it not be a mere brilliant tamasha. The best defence of India is the internal defence, which can rest on no other foundation than the good feeling of the people themselves, the place of which solid fortification nothing else in the world can possibly supply.

Rangoon Gazette.—The Standard states that the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales in India will include official visits to Calcutta, Mysore, Hyderabad, Delhi and Kashmir; a Durbar at Delhi and the laying of the foundation stone of the Victoria Memorial in Calcutta also a review of the troops in the Punjab with Lord Kitchener leading in the march past.

26TH MARCH 1905.

Advocate of India.—The long talked-of visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India is at last definitely fixed. As you have been informed by telegraph, the King has given his approval to the arrangements and the Royal couple will leave England about the beginning of next November and will stay in India until March 1906. The duration of their visit will therefore be about four months which will allow them to include in their itinerary the principal cities of British India and the capitals of the important feudatory States. The details of the tour are not yet settled, but I understand that among the places to be visited are Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Hyderabad, Mysore, Gwalior, Lucknow, Benares, Allahabad, Agra, Delhi, Amritsar, Lahore, Jaipur, Jodhpur, Udaipur, and Ahmedabad. They will also get a peep at the Himalayas and the Prince will be given abundant opportunities of gratifying his sporting propensities.

According to the official announcement, His Royal Highness will receive the Princes and Chiefs who rule under the paramount protection of the King-Emperor, and will hold levées on behalf of His Majesty, at which will be presented to him the principal personages of the Indian Empire.

There is one very notable departure from precedent in connection with the tour. On the advice of the Government, and after consultation with the Viceroy, His Majesty has directed that the exchange of ceremonial presents shall be dispensed with. No presents will consequently be given or accepted by the Prince and Princess. This very wise decision has probably been taken on the initiative of the King himself. His own experience thirty years ago has no doubt led him to the conclusion that the Prince and Princess will derive more pleasure from their tour and the Indian Princes will be far less embarrassed if the giving and taking of presents is dispensed with. It is in such matters as these that King Edward shows his shrewd common sense. He knows as well as any one that the reception given to his son will be none the less loyal because a burdensome and unnecessary custom is relinquished. It is to be hoped that those who have the honour of entertaining the Royal visitors will also avoid all extravagant display. The pouring out of wealth in wasteful direction upon this occasion will not only be (as it always is) out of place in a poor country like India, but will be out of keeping with the plain hint as to economy which His Majesty has given in the decision above referred to.

It is well that the future ruler of the Empire should travel through the realm which gives to the monarchs of England their Imperial title. It would be better still if the Prince could see the life of India itself as distinct from the trappings and pageantry which must necessarily accompany the Royal tour. If half as much care were taken to show the Prince the real conditions under which the vast mass of the people of India live and die as will be taken to provide him with "good sport," it would be one of the most effective tours that could possibly be undertaken. But it will be one of the chief concerns of Lord Curzon and Sir Walter Lawrence (who is to be chief of the Staff) to conceal from Their Royal Highnesses anything that would be likely to touch their susceptibilities or cause them to have any doubt that our system of rule in India is the best that was ever devised for government of man.

28TH MARCH 1905.

Rangoon Gazette.—When the Prince and Princess of Wales made a tour of the colonies the Orient liner Ophir was chartered for the voyage, and the cost of engaging her and fitting her up suitably was very great. The battleship Renown, one of the fastest vessels of the Fleet, has been chosen to convey the Heir. Apparent and his wife to India, and this resort to a State vessel for a State visit has gratified the Royal Navy. The Renown took the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to India on the occasion of their attending the Delhi Durbar, and it served as a flagship to Sir John Fisher when he was Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean. The amount of structural alteration it is likely to require will be small, and its selection in preference to chartering a merchant liner will save many thousands of pounds. I understand that the programme of the tour has not yet been finally settled, and that the applications being made for the inclusion of various places and institutions in the itinerary are being carefully considered on their merits. I have heard conflicting opinions about the decision not to permit presents to be offered. In some well-informed quarters it is held to be a mistake not to allow the ruling Princes at least to give and receive presents, by way of indicating their special relationship to the Crown. But it is not to be supposed that there will be any deviation from a decision made by the King-Emperor on the advice of the Indian authorities, with the object of saving the Chiefs from extravagant emulation of one another.

Rangoon Gazette.—The statement that the battleship Renown has been chosen to convey the Prince and Princess of Wales to India has not come in any sense as a surprise to naval circles. Indeed, for some weeks past, this vessel's name has been freely mentioned at Devonport as likely to be selected for this mission.

A telegram was received at Devonport yesterday from the Prince of Wales stating that he would pay the Renown a visit at Portsmouth on the 29th instant. The Renown will accordingly leave Devonport for Portsmouth on the 27th instant. It is now stated that the Prince and Princess will embark at Portsmouth and sail for India on November 9th.

It will be remembered that the Renown carried the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to India in December 1902 for the Great Durbar. She was at that time in commission in the Mediterranean Fleet, but on being relieved by the Cornwallis in January, 1904, came home and paid off with the Fleet Reserve at Devonport. The Renown is the most yacht-like and graceful warship in the British Navy. Originally intended for an armoured cruiser her design was altered during the course of construction. She was completed at Pembroke in 1896, and engaged by Maudslays. An innovation of armour distributions was marked in this vessel, inasmuch as she was the first British warship to be built with an inclined protective deck beneath the waterline, on the French plan.

The following are the official details of the Renown:—Displacement on normal loadline, 12,350 tons; length between perpendiculars, 380 ft.; beam, 72 ft.; draft, 27½ ft. On an indicated power of 12,000 horse, forced draught, the ship has touched 19 knots, her contract speed being 18 knots. Her complement on her last commission was 674 officers and men.

The fighting value of the Renown is not relatively very high. She is belted with Harveyised steel 8½ inches thick; but her gun positions are not effectively protected. Her armament consists of four 10-inch guns of an obsolete pattern, ten of the earlier pattern 6-inch quickfirers, twelve 12 pounders, 20 smaller guns, and five torpedo tubes (two submerged). The cost of the vessel was £746,247, or half the cost of the latest battleship class.

The Renown's chief claim to distinction lies in having served as flagship to Sir John Fisher when he was Commander-in-Chief in the Mediterranean. She still goes by the sobriquet of Jackey's Pet in the Fleet, and doubtless the First Sea Lord still retains the memory of the affectionate pride he took in this graceful warship when she bore his last sea flag.

On November 19th, 1900, she entered upon this memorable commission under the command of Captain Arthur Farquhar, C.V.O. Sir John Fisher frankly fell in love with her from the first in a manner which only a sailor can sympathise with, and the Renown was not long in showing signs in his pride in her. The after bridge was removed to just above the topmast, thus lengthening the quarter-deck into the most spacious promenade in the British Navy, a distinction it still retains. Topmasts of extra length were fitted to give her a rakish appearance aloft. Many internal improvements were carried out, the Admiral's quarters and ward-room being transformed into most luxurious interiors. Nor was the fighting worth of the ship overlooked, various changes in the disposition of the guns being effected which distinctly enhanced their collective powers of aggression.

The Renown is the fastest vessel in the British battle fleet not excepting the nineteen-knotters of to-day. Early in her career she established a record that has never been beaten, running home from Bermuda to Plymouth at a sustained sea-speed of over 15 knots, and this most of the way with two propeller blades entirely knocked away, and a third bent by contact with some sunken wreckage.

Our representative was on board the Renown yesterday afternoon as she lay berthed in the south dockyard at Devonport. In the cheerless grey of a wet afternoon, the ship did not look particularly spick and span, yet the eye could not but dwell with pleasure upon the matchless symmetry of Jackey's Pet. Dockyard hands were at work upon her, but they were merely carrying out sundry repairs laid down in a defect list.

An officer of the Fleet Reserve stated that he had heard the ship was to be taken up to convey the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, but that no official instructions had yet been received to carry out any structural alterations in the ship's internal accommodation. In any event, it is not deemed probable that much alteration will be regarded as necessary, since the berthing and living arrangements of the vessel are exceptionally spacious and good.

The choice of the Renown for this mission in preference to chartering a liner like the Ophir is highly commended. In the first place, it is felt to be more compatible with Royal dignity that a State journey should be made in a State warship, and the navy appreciate the honour. Secondly it will be far more economical, a sordid feature not altogether without claims to attention. And, finally, the voyage will certainly be made as rapidly and as comfortably as it could be by a liner.

It is interesting to recall that the present Renown is the sixth British warship to bear this name, the first having been the noble French sloop Renommée captured by the Nonsuch frigate off Gibraltar in 1651.

12TH APRIL 1905.

Rangoon Gazette.—A meeting was held here this evening to consider the question of celebrating the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the city. The meeting was called by a few prominent Native citizens. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice, presided, and there was a large attendance, but the proceedings were of a formal character, and consisted only of the passing of a resolution appointing a Committee.

14TH APRIL 1905.

Rangoon Gazette.—The Standard writes:—When the Prince and Princess of Wales land at Bombay, the Western gate of India, the eastern equivalent of winter will be just commencing. Bombay has no really cold weather, but the mornings and evenings of October, November and December are pleasantly cool, and a refreshing sea breeze blows from the west. "Urbs prima Indis," as Bombay styles itself, is at its best at this season of the year, and with its noble architecture and the wealth of colour the native loves to sport, it gives to the visitor's first glimpse of Oriental splendour a lasting impression of magnificence.

After Bombay has had time to pay its homage the Royal tourists will take train at the Victoria terminus of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway and journey to Delhi, 282 miles to the north-east. The time occupied by a fast train is 28 hours and on the way the famous city of Agra with its marvellous mausoleum, "The Taj Mahal," is passed. Delhi is a large fortified city on the west bank of the Jumna, and was, at one time, the capital of India. The original city is supposed to have been founded about the year 50 B. C., and the present comparatively modern one in the year 1640. Delhi was one of the chief centres of the Sepoy Revolt in 1857, and was captured by General Wilson after a four months' siege. During the Royal visit a Durbar, on a scale of magnificence likely to outshine even that of 1903, will be held, and then the visitors will journey on to Lahore, where it is probable the great review of troops will be held.

Lahore, the capital of the Punjab, is a twelve hours' run from Delhi, and is one of the most famous cities in India. All that is architecturally beautiful there dates from the time of the Moghul Emperor. From A. D. 1763 the Sikhs had possession of the city, but with the rest of the Punjab it was, after the battles of Ferozeshah and Subraon, annexed by the British in 1846. The most interesting thing to be seen in Lahore is the celebrated gun Zamzama, a huge weapon made in India in 1761. It was left behind at Lahore by Ahmad Shah after the battle of Paniput, being too unwieldy to take back to Kabul, and has been immortalised by Rudyard Kipling's "Kim." It was in Lahore, by the way, that Kipling spent his early years, and where he wrote his first books.

From Lahore, the Royal party are to pay a visit to Kashmir and this will probably include a visit to Rawalpindi, the Aldershot of India. Here the weather will be bitterly cold, and the splendid range of snow-clad hills which skirts its eastern boundary will give quite an arctic colouring to the scene. From Rawalpindi to Peshawar is a journey of only a few hours, and here a visit to the Khyber Pass is a matter of certainty. Back from Kashmir to Calcutta will involve a tedious railway journey of 1,600 miles, occupying over 50 hours.

At Calcutta the City of Palaces, the Prince's principal duty will be the laying of the foundation stone of the Victoria Memorial. This will eventually be the most handsome and most costly of all tributes to the memory of the late Queen-Empress. It is to take the shape of a huge museum and scientific institution, standing in an ornamental park of some 30 acres—a site on the Maidan at present occupied by the Presidency goal. The weather at Calcutta in November and December can be best compared to that of England in spring.

From the capital the Royal visitors will entrain for Hyderabad (Deccan), a journey of 987 miles, occupying some sixty hours. Here they will be received with great pomp by the Nizam, who is reputed to be the wealthiest of the Indian Princes. Since 1799, the State of Hyderabad has been under the protection of the British Government, which is represented by a Resident.

Mysore, the next place to be visited, is about 500 miles further south, and on the direct railway route. Here again the honours will fall to a Native Chief, known as the Maharaja, one of the most enlightened of Indian rulers. The return journey will probably include a visit to the pretty hill station of Bangalore and thence a ten-hour run will bring the Royal party to Madras where they will probably embark, after having journeyed more than four thousand miles by rail and visited all the chief places of historical and sentimental interest.

Rast Gaftar.—While the male citizens of Bombay are busy considering the best way of according a warm and cordial welcome to the Royal guests, the ladies of Bombay do not appear to be remiss in the duty they owe, particularly to the Princess of Wales. Ten representative Indian ladies have issued invitations among members of their own sex to gather together to-morrow afternoon at Mazagon Castle, the historical mansion of Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, where it is their intention to consider what steps should be taken to welcome the advent amongst them of Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales. The note of invitation is signed by Lady Alishaw, Lady Goolbai Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Mrs. Luxmeebai Chandavarkar, Mrs. Rahat Bibi Budrudin Tyebji, Lady Dinbai Dinshaw

Petit, Lady Savitribai Bhalchundra Bhatvadekar, Begum Mauntazeham Nusrulakhan, Lady Dhunbai Cowasjee Jehangir, Lady Manekbai Hurskiondas, and Mrs. Mogheebai Gordhandas Tejpal. A more representative provisional committee could not have been formed. We believe that as usual the principal burden of detailed arrangements will have to be borne by Lady Dhunbai Readymoney, who has organised and brought to a successful termination many such functions. A majority of the committee are purdah ladies, and Lady Dhunbai, in co-operation with Lady Jamsetjee and Lady Dinshaw, may be expected to organise a movement which would not only be approved of and supported by the ladies of Bombay, but which would also be at once pleasing and agreeable to the Royal pair, especially the Princess, in whose behalf special functions will have to be formulated and carried out. Lady Jamsetjee, whose intelligence and loyalty cannot easily be surpassed by any of her associates, will preside at the meeting to-morrow. Her Ladyship is known for her originality of ideas and breadth of culture, and it goes without saying that the suggestions and recommendations made by her would be unanimously agreed to. We wish every success to the provisional committee of Ladies, who have important duties to fulfil both towards the Indian ladies in general, whose representatives they are, and the Royal couple, who should be accorded at the gate of India a reception which could not be excelled in any part of the country.

Advocate of India.—On Tuesday evening a meeting of the General Committee was held in Bombay under the chairmanship of Sir Lawrence Jenkins. A committee was appointed to draw up a programme for the celebration of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. Another question referred to a proposal to commemorate the visit in some permanent and tangible form. Sir P. M. Mehta suggested that a museum in the Crescent would be a fitting memorial. Bombay required, he urged, such a fully equipped institution. The meeting practically adopted the proposal. It will be considered by the Committee and laid before a public meeting.

26TH APRIL 1905.

Rangoon Gazette.—Regarding the Indian tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales next winter, the arrangements will be very similar to those in connection with the visit of the present King, but upon a considerably smaller scale, as Their Royal Highnesses appear to be bringing out a staff of only about eight persons in place of the twenty-four who accompanied His Majesty. Details of the tour are not yet settled and it is not the case, as has been stated, that visits to Ahmedabad, Baroda, and the Phulkian States have been arranged for. All that can be at all confidently predicted at present is as follows:—Their Royal Highnesses will be received, on landing at Bombay, by the Viceroy, Lady Curzon, and by a number of Chiefs and Princes. The Viceregal party will afterwards return to Calcutta, while Their Royal Highnesses will proceed direct to Rajputana and thence to the North-West Frontier, Amritsar and Lahore being taken upon the way up, and Jaipur, Bikanir, Patiala, Jammu, and Kashmir being included. It is not yet settled whether a run up to Simla will be part of the programme, nor is this probable. On the way back to Delhi, Agra, Lucknow, and Benares will be visited, Their Royal Highnesses being also shown a camp-of-exercise, probably at Delhi. Christmas will be spent at Calcutta, where the Viceroy and Lady Curzon will receive the party. Their Royal Highnesses will be at Calcutta in time for the usual State Ball and Drawing Room, and probably also for the levée, but it is not the case that any investiture ceremony has so far been arranged. From Calcutta visits will most probably be made to Darjeeling to see the North-East Himalayas in winter, and into Nepal for a tiger shoot. The South Indian tour will be in February, Madras, Bangalore, Mysore and Hyderabad being most probably included.

28TH APRIL 1905.

Bengalee.—According to an English paper, a Royal visit to India means more than meets the ear. When His Majesty the present King-Emporer visited this country thirty years ago, he brought with him £40,000 worth of presents for distribution among the Princes of India. In return he received presents worth £500,000—some of them ranging in value from £5,000 to £30,000, notwithstanding the issue of express orders strictly limiting each individual gift to £2,000. The visit thus cost the Princes of India the not insignificant sum of £460,000 or about rupees seventy lakhs in presents alone, to say nothing of other expenses incidental to the reception of royalty, which must have also reached a very respectable figure. The individuals to whom the Royal visit to India proved a veritable windfall were the Bond Street jewellers who obtained from India orders aggregating nearly forty lakhs of rupees. We know that the fiat has gone forth that no ceremonial presents should be offered to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their approaching visit to India, but we also remember how the order, issued thirty years ago, limiting each individual gift to £2,000, had been honoured, as a rule, in the breach, rather than in the observance, and history, it is said, has a knack of repeating itself.

4TH MAY 1905.

Advocate of India.—Since the announcement of the fact that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and the Princess of Wales are to pay a visit to India next cold weather the press and news agents are busy with publishing details about the preparations being made in both England and India. At a banquet given the other day at the Royal Academy, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales expressed satisfaction at the prospect of learning something of Indian art of the past and was glad that His Royal Highness would be called upon to lay the foundation stone of the Victoria Memorial at Calcutta. Good many such functions may be expected to take place to give His Royal Highness a pretty good idea of Indian arts. To the colonies Prince George went as the Duke of Cornwall; to India he comes as the Prince of Wales, the immediate heir to the British Sovereign.

Mysore Herald.—The News of India, the new paper which has just been published in Simla, understands that the Prince and Princess of Wales will receive Lord and Lady Curzon on the Renown in Bombay Harbour on arrival, and that there will be a procession of launches to the shore, amidst salutes from the war vessels in harbour.

Their Royal Highnesses will, it is understood, stay seven days in Bombay, during which various festivities will take place. The paper continues, if Baroda is visited at all, the Royal party will pay a flying visit to Ahmedabad, and then tour through Rajputana.

From thence a line will go on towards Northern India and the Frontier, taking 16 Phulkian States, Amritsar and Lahore en route. On the return journey, Delhi, Agra, Lucknow, Benares, etc., will be visited. A Durbars for the Punjab Chiefs may be called at Lahore, whilst at Agra the Rajputana Chiefs will assemble. The Prince's Camp at Agra will be pitched on the same historical battle plain on which his august father encamped at Delhi: there will be a grand military display in which over thirty thousand troops will take part.

Throughout the tour, the local authorities will arrange matters and the Viceroy and Lady Curzon will only receive the Royal visitors to Bombay and then return to Calcutta, and receive them again in the Xmas week at Calcutta, where there will be an investiture and one or two State functions, such as a levée, a Drawing Room and a State Ball.

As far as we can gather, the Native States to be visited will be Hyderabad, Mysore, Baroda, Jaipur, Bikanir, Patiala, Jammu and Kashmir, Gwalior and Benares as well as Nepal. From Calcutta a flying trip to Darjeeling may be arranged, as also a visit to Madras, Bangalore, Mysore and Southern India and Hyderabad en route for Bombay.

It is also said that Simla will be visited for two days.

10TH MAY 1905.

Madras Mail.—It has been decided says a home paper that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will on no occasion take precedence of the Viceroy during his visit to India. It was represented how very important it is that the continuity of the King's representative should be observed, and how very injudicious it would be to replace him even for a ceremonial occasion. When the Prince holds a Durbar or levée the Viceroy will not be present.

Pioneer.—The coming visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to India inclines the student to reflect how heirs to the throne were treated in ancient days. That a Prince of the Blood Royal should altogether decline to receive presents will be regarded as an innovation by all, and by many as a dereliction of duty or a temporary abdication of kingly functions.

Without moralising let us relate an amusing instance of the rapacity with which the Great Moghuls used to compel the oblations which were so dear to them. Jehangir in his own memoirs relates how his favourite son Parver came to visit the capital Agra.—

"All the distinguished dignitaries of the empire" were to meet the young Prince on foot. "Not much less than twenty thousand distinguished individuals" escorted him in consequence. Then the Imperial parent relates how he sent him a cineture of diamonds, an sigrette and chaplet of pearls together worth ten lakhs of rupees. But this was not all. "I intimated that every individual person of my court of whatever degree desirous of evincing his attachment to me, each according to his ability, should make a present of some value to the Royal Prince, and by an account subsequently laid before me it appeared that he received on this occasion in consequence of this intimation in gold and jewels, horses and elephants, the value of 200 lakhs of rupees," about two millions sterling. This however was not all. The Royal Prince had to make an oblation to his father. This was a "superb present," and the narrative waxes fulsome in details, culminating with the value of the filial offering as the magnificent sum of 400 lakhs.

"On my part throwing round his neck a chaplet of pearls worth 10 lakhs, I raised him from the order of 10,000 to 30,000 horses." In other words the Imperial father spent himself 20 lakhs in gifts to his beloved son. Under his orders all the people in the empire who could give anything raised altogether 200 lakhs for the poor Prince, who then gave his rapacious parent 400 lakhs.

Such were the little ways of the Great Moghul, while the poor Prince who is coming from Britain is not permitted to give or take one rupee. Yet no doubt it would be quite possible for a Royal fisherman to catch another whale with a similar sprat.

Englishman.—A meeting of delegates from the Provisional Committee appointed to make preliminary arrangements for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales was held at the rooms of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on Monday evening, the 8th instant. The Maharaja of Darbhanga took the chair on the invitation of the President of the Chamber.

A sub-committee was appointed to make all the necessary arrangements for a public meeting to be called at as early a date as possible by the Sheriff: The Chairman of the Corporation and the Commissioner of Police were to be asked to join the sub-committee. It was arranged that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor should be invited to preside at the public meeting.

Indian Daily News.—A preliminary meeting of citizens of Madras was held yesterday evening at the office of the Madras Corporation to make arrangements for according a reception to the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of the visit to Madras. The Hon'ble Sir S. Subramania Iyer, Officiating Chief Justice, was in the chair. It was unanimously resolved to request the Sheriff of Madras to convene a public meeting of citizens at the Victoria Hall on the 26th instant to concert measures for a fitting reception of Their Royal Highnesses. The Officiating Chief Justice will preside as Sheriff at the meeting. The Hon'ble A. J. Yorke, seconded by Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar, will move at that meeting that the citizens of the Madras Presidency resolve to present an address in a suitable casket and give a public entertainment to Their Royal Highnesses on their visit to Madras. A large representative committee will be appointed to draw up address and make the necessary arrangements.

Native States and United India.—The intimation that has been received that for a month to come the programme of the Prince's visit will be held in suspense has not improbably been suggested by the widespread calamity in the Punjab. Should the prevailing scarcity in several parts of the country deepen into famine, a change of programme may be thought both desirable and necessary. But if the Viceroy would set aside his notions of barbaric splendour and oriental display and rest content with the deep-seated loyalty of the people of India to welcome Their Royal Highnesses, we do not see why the visit should be deferred. It is necessary that the Prince of Wales should visit India at least once, and if the visit should take place at a time when the season is not quite propitious, it will not be altogether disadvantageous to India. To defer the visit on account of circumstances in India while His Royal Highness can otherwise undertake the trouble of a voyage to India will be an unwise procedure.

Rangoon Gazette.—At a meeting of delegates from the Provisional Committee appointed to make arrangements for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, a sub-committee was appointed to make all the necessary arrangements for the public meeting to be called at an early date by the Sheriff. The Lieutenant-Governor will be invited to preside.

12TH MAY 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The Military Secretary to the Viceroy, in reply to an enquiry on the subject, writes:—"I have to inform you that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will only accept caskets from Municipalities or public bodies. The gift of caskets by individuals, however exalted, is contrary to the orders which have been issued by the direction of His Royal Highness."

A preliminary meeting of the citizens of Madras was held last evening at the office of the Madras Corporation to make arrangements for according a reception to the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to Madras. The Hon'ble Sir S. Subramania Iyer, Officiating Chief Justice, was in the chair.

It was unanimously resolved to request the Sheriff of Madras to convene a public meeting of the citizens at the Victoria Hall on the 26th instant to concert measures for a fitting reception to Their Royal Highnesses. The officiating Chief Justice will preside at that meeting, and the Hon'ble Mr. A. J. Yorke, seconded by Sir V. Bhashyam Iyengar, will move that the citizens of the Madras Presidency resolve to present an address in a suitable casket and give a public entertainment to Their Royal Highnesses on their visit to Madras. A large representative committee will be appointed to draw up the address and make the necessary arrangements.

Madras Mail.—Now that Their Royal Highnesses intend visiting India it is the bounden duty of every citizen, be he rich or poor, to give them a fitting reception and commemorate the great event by a monument worthy of the guests and the host. Public meetings in some of the important towns have already been convened and the leading citizens have begun to take real interest. There is no doubt that the reception will be as grand as possible. Their Royal Highnesses will no doubt be impressed with the loyalty of this vast dependency and carry the good news to our illustrious Emperor.

When His Majesty the King visited India 35 years ago the people did not commemorate that great event by a monument of permanent nature, nor did the Government perpetuate it by a concession suitable to the occasion. Here a "Prince of Wales Choultry" and there a tope is nothing when compared to the occasion. Will not the people and the Government now join hands and immortalise the present occasion with something permanent and useful? Lord Curzon is a practical man with a sympathetic heart, and if he catches the idea once he is sure to accomplish it.

It is an undisputed fact that India needs industrial education. Cannot the people and the Government contribute largely and establish an institution where industries, I mean important industries, are taught? Can there be a better demonstration of loyalty? I hope those concerned will give their best consideration to this. If the Government will not approve of this, and if other Presidencies do not co-operate, let the Madras Presidency perpetuate the event by founding an institution, however modest it may be, where at least some of the industries are taught by Japanese experts who will be satisfied with moderate salaries.

North China Herald.—As yet the tour has not been quite fixed, and the native potentates are in a perfect fever to have their territories receive the honour of a visit from the Heir Apparent. This, in many cases, has been refused, but the Rajah of Travancore has thrown out a bait in the shape of his beautiful shooting reserve—the Cardamom hills—which is too tempting to be refused. This vast stretch of undulating forest country forms a part of the famed Western Ghats, and is still the haunt of the elephant, bison, deer, tiger, and panther, while on the higher precipices the ibex still survives.

Whatever loyal sentiments may animate the bosoms of the inhabitants of the capital, at the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses, is tempered by the tremendous rise in house rent, which is already a serious drain on the incomes of residents in the more desirable localities. Besides wealthy globe-trotters who take up the accommodation in the hotels, a number of Indian Princes will be present in Calcutta. The latter are willing to pay enormous sums for the use of houses during their stay. Some Maharajas take up four or five houses, and the rents obtained from them for a period of two or three weeks are large enough to prevent a landlord from letting his house for a whole year at the usual rent. Many people are finding it almost impossible, therefore, to obtain the requisite house-room for the next year, there is a difficulty in getting leases renewed, and the boarding-houses have raised their rates enormously.

Speculators are taking up all the leases they can get in hopes of sub-letting at a profit.

Pioneer.—An influentially attended preliminary meeting of the citizens of Madras was held yesterday evening at the office of the Corporation to make arrangements for according a reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their approaching visit to Madras. The Hon'ble Dewan Bahadur Sir Subramania Iyer, C.I.E., occupied the chair. It was unanimously resolved to request the Sheriff of Madras to convene a public meeting of the citizens at 5-15 p.m. on Friday, the 26th instant, to concert measures for a fitting reception for Their Royal Highnesses. The following draft resolutions were also passed to be placed before the public meeting for consideration:—

"That the citizens of the Madras Presidency have resolved to present an address in a suitable casket, and give public entertainment to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to Madras.

"That a committee be formed with power to add to their number, to form an executive committee to frame an address, to make all necessary arrangements in connection with the reception of, and the public entertainment to, Their Royal Highnesses, and to collect subscriptions for the purpose."

Rangoon Gazette.—A preliminary meeting of the citizens of Madras was held last night at the Municipal Offices to make arrangements for according a fitting reception to the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to Madras. The Hon'ble Sir S. Subramania Iyer, Officiating Chief Justice, was in the chair. It was resolved to request the Sheriff of Madras to convene a public meeting at the Victoria Public Hall on the 26th instant when resolutions will be moved: (1) That the citizens of Madras present the Prince with an address in a suitable casket; and (2) give a public entertainment to Their Royal Highnesses. A committee will also be elected.

Indian Daily News.—It has been stated that, in view of the Prince of Wales' visit to Calcutta, considerable improvements will be made to Government House. We are able to correct this rumour, writes Indian Engineering, and to say that on the contrary little is proposed to be done this year as regards structural alterations, and that attention is to be devoted to interior finishing and furnishing in order that Government House may be rendered fit for the reception and accommodation of its Royal guest. It has often been pointed out how unworthy the south gate entrance-way to Government House is, and we would urge as one of the various improvements being carried out on the maidan the desirability of doing something this season to provide more dignified and suitable gateway.

Madras Mail.—Arrangements are being rapidly pushed forward for the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India next October. Their cabins on board the battleship Renown, which will take them to India under the command of Captain the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt, will soon be in readiness for final inspection. Following the precedent of the troopship Serapis, which carried King Edward to India in 1875, the Renown will probably be repainted white, with a broad band of Royal blue stretching from bow to stern. Her spacious cabins are to be redecorated throughout, and the steel decks of the Royal apartments will be covered with layers of cork and soft carpets.

Advocate of India.—Following in the wake of Bombay and Calcutta, Madras has also begun to move in the matter for according a grand reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and the Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to Madras. For this purpose a preliminary meeting of the citizens was held on Tuesday night. The Hon'ble Sir Subramania Iyer, Officiating Chief Justice, was in the chair. It was resolved to request the Sheriff of Madras to convene a public meeting at the Victoria Public Hall on the 26th instant, when resolutions will be moved: (1) That the citizens of Madras present the Prince with an address in a suitable casket; and (2) give a public entertainment to Their Royal Highnesses. A committee will also be elected. Other towns are to follow suit only when they come to know if they are likely to be blessed with Royal presence in them. We think Lucknow is almost sure to be so blessed. More certainly Delhi and Agra.

Pioneer.—The forthcoming visit of the Prince of Wales to India, writes Mr. J. Beatty to the Daily Express, recalls the fact that it is thirty years since King Edward became personally acquainted with the Empire of the East over which he now rules.

King Edward, who was only thirty-four years old at the time of his visit, had long wished to travel in India. The suggestion that he should do so was originally made by Lord Canning to the Prince Consort, who took it up warmly. Other Indian statesmen approved the idea, knowing what a good political effect it might have if judiciously executed.

Sir Bartle Frere was fixed upon as the man best fitted to undertake the management of the tour, and it is only in the 'Life' of this distinguished statesman, compiled by Mr. John Martineau, that the inside history of the visit has ever been told.

For six or seven months before the start Sir Bartle Frere was kept busy with continual interviewing and letter-writing. The first difficulty that arose had to do with the expenses of the tour. The Indian Government were to pay the travelling expenses in India. The House of Commons passed a vote of £60,000 for the personal expenses of the then Prince and his suite, in spite of the opposition of certain members who could not see that the visit had any more significance than a magnified Lord Mayor's Show.

This sum of £60,000 Sir Bartle Frere, who would have to make it suffice, and was to be responsible for the way in which it was spent, pronounced to be inadequate. Unless, he said, the amount were increased to something like £100,000 the Prince would be unable to give presents suitable to his rank and to the occasion.

Though the presents the Prince received were, according to an established rule, to be handed over to the Government, it had been stipulated that he should pay out of his own grant for those which he gave, and this alone would absorb more than half of the £60,000.

As no more money could be asked for from Parliament that session, it was suggested that, as it would not do for the presents the Prince gave to be less valuable than those he received, an order should be issued limiting the value of what the Indian Chiefs were to offer.

The matter was allowed to stand until the Prince reached Bombay, when to Sir Bartle Frere's relief, Lord Northbrook obtained another £10,000 from the Indian Treasury for the presents' fund.

Among other things, Sir Bartle Frere had to make arrangements with the special correspondents of the newspapers. He desired to give them every facility for obtaining information without interfering with the Prince's privacy.

There was an erroneous idea apparently that seven or eight correspondents would be allowed to go out to India at the public expense on the Serapis, the Admiralty troopship, which was fitted out to carry the Prince. Swarms of editors and special correspondents personally interviewed Sir Bartle Frere in their endeavours to be included among the mythical seven or eight.

"They seem never content with a refusal in writing," Sir

Bartle wrote to Lord Salisbury at the time. One very intelligent young gentleman, after a very long argument, seemed nearly nonplussed, when a very bright idea struck him.

"I had suggested he should always go on ahead and wait the Prince's arrival at Calcutta, Bombay, etc. 'No, Sir, on reflection I see that would never do. It would give me the best view of the Prince's arrivals, but not of his departures, and that is the really important part. You see, it is certain that attempts will be made to assassinate him and probably as he is leaving some place. Now, if I had gone on ahead when the attempt was made, I am sure it would kill me.'

"Kill you?" I said, rather interested in his very loyal feeling.

"Yes, Sir, it would kill me. I am sure it would. I have never been beaten yet—never failed to be present at the most interesting moment, and if anything of the kind were to happen when I had gone on a head, it would kill me at once."

As showing the anxiety of some people to intrude upon the private life of the Royal Family, certain persons and associations in Scotland and elsewhere thought it their special duty to address the Prince as to the manner in which he ought to spend his Sundays during the tour. It had already been arranged, however, that the Sundays should be kept as in England—as days of rest, so that Sir Bartle Frere was able to convince the petitioners that intervention was unnecessary.

Bombay was the first place where the Prince touched Indian soil, the natives awaiting his arrival "with an indescribable amount of awe which fascinates and attracts them in a way we can hardly realise."

The impression made by the Prince was remarkable:

"He told Major Henderson, after the first day or two," wrote Sir Bartle Frere, "that he wished to talk to the visitors, and not to be kept to the official silent pantomime; and the result was at once apparent. Even Henderson confessed that His Royal Highness had found his way to the hearts of the Chiefs, even if he infringed the dusty rules of Durbar etiquette."

The constant round of Durbars, banquets, balls, picnics and other festivities was a great tax even upon the strongest constitution, but the Prince came through unscathed. "No one," wrote Sir Bartle Frere, "stands work, heat, damp, or exposure better than His Royal Highness, and few stand them so well." The staff, it is interesting to recall, were almost worn out.

The political results of the Prince's visit were completely successful.

"The marks of approbation and regard," wrote Lord Napier of Magdala, "which the Prince has shown towards the native army are politically of the greatest value, and have greatly delighted it."

There was, of course, great disappointment at places which the Prince had not time to visit, and it sometimes found curious expression. "My heart and soul," a native of Sind wrote to Sir Bartle Frere, "is in such a degree anxious that, if I had possessed a charm, I would have made myself a bird, or made myself an electric telegraph, and would have presented myself before the gentlemen."

16TH MAY 1906.

Times of India.—The arrangements for a tour in India contemplated by the Heir-Apparent of the British Throne are now filling the thoughts of many great dignitaries at home and in this country. Fortunately for those charged with the responsibility of providing for the safety and comfort of His Royal Highness, ample precedent may be found in the visit of his august father, now just 30 years ago.

Looking back to the corresponding date of the year 1876, we find that the general public were in possession of just about as much information as they are now. The Prince of Wales' visit had been fixed for November, but no official announcement had been made, and it was, not till July that the Houses of Parliament were approached on the subject of a grant. After an animated debate, initiated by Mr. Fawcett in the role of a friend of India the amounts voted were £52,000 for the cost of the voyage and movements of the Fleet, and £60,000 towards personal expenditure, of which latter sum £30,000 was considered debitable to the Indian Budget. The Prime Minister, Mr. Disraeli, laid special stress on the fact that His Royal Highness was not proceeding to India as the representative of the Queen but as the Heir-Apparent of the Crown. The financial question having thus been adjusted, the appointment of the suite quickly followed.

Sir Bartle Frere, General Probyn and Dr. Fayrer were names that guaranteed His Royal Highness being kept fully informed as to Eastern customs and manners, while the Press was represented by the well known war correspondent Dr. W. H. Russell and the artist Mr. Sydney Hall. The rest of the suite were chosen almost entirely from the Prince's own friends. The Duke of Sutherland, Lord Sheffield (the head of the household), Colonel Ellis (equerry), Mr. Francis Knollys (Private Secretary), Lord Alfred Paget, Canon Duckworth, the Earl of Aylesford, Lord Carrington, Colonel Owen Williams, and Lord William Beresford completed the entourage.

On the 11th October, in the presence of a large crowd, the Prince and suite left Charing Cross. Travelling via Calais Paris was reached the following morning. Here visits were exchanged with the French President, and on the morning of the 16th His Royal Highness embarked on the Serapis, then lying off Brindisi.

On the way to the east, Greece, Egypt and Aden were all visited in turn, and high festivals were held on these occasions. At Bombay, the city was en fête and all arrangements completed to accord a fitting welcome to the Heir to the Throne. This satisfactory stage had not, however, been reached altogether in peace. Questions of procedure greatly exercised the minds of dignitaries, military, naval and civic, and the flinty road of precedence was not trodden without the bruising of many feet. Admiral Macdonald, commanding the East Indies Squadron, marked his strong resentment of the table of precedence as enunciated by His Excellency Sir Philip Wodehouse, the Governor of Bombay, by declining for himself and his officers an invitation to attend the Governor's levée. Once launched into the fray, the gallant Admiral hit all round and a terrible rumour was current to the effect that once the Royal Standard was flown in Bombay Harbour, the Fleet would accord salutes to none but Royalty not even the Viceroy of India. But before the eventful day the saluting question was amicably settled.

On the very morning of the arrival of the Serapis at Bombay a blow was dealt at the military in an order that limited the wearing of cocked hats to the Viceroy's staff. But we need not pause to discuss this not very important point. The Royal Yacht Osborne dropped anchor off the Apollo Bunder at 1-30 A.M. on the 8th November 1875, heralding the advent of the Prince at 9 A.M. At 7 A.M. the first signal guns were heard announcing the approach of the Serapis. At 8 o'clock a Royal salute was fired and at a quarter to nine the vessel, with the Royal Standard at the main, was seen slowly making its way between the two lines of the Flying Squadron, which with yards fully manned were greeting the Prince with mighty guns and ringing cheers.

Just after 9 o'clock the Serapis dropped anchor off the Dockyard and the first to proceed on board were General Samborne, Major Sartorius and Major Henderson, who were to accompany His Royal Highness throughout the tour. These officers were shortly afterwards followed by deputations from the Viceroy and the Governor of Bombay. At 3 P.M. the Viceroy, Lord Northbrook, and Sir Philip Wodehouse started in a launch for the Serapis. Before the Prince disembarked, Dr. Russell says:—"There was some curiosity to observe in what order the Prince and Viceroy would take their seats, but according to marine views, whether by accident or not, Lord Northbrook unquestionably gave precedence to his guests, for he stepped on board the launch first, and remained standing until the Prince had descended the companion and had taken his place beside him in the stern of the boat."

Meanwhile a lane reaching from the Serapis to the landing stage at the Dockyard had been formed by boats sent from the men-of-war. At 4 P.M. the Fleet fired a Royal salute, and immediately after a launch with the Royal Standard at the stern vigorously rowed by British tars, swept into view. The boats' crews saluted with their oars, guards presented arms, bands burst forth into the National Anthem and amidst the roar of batteries, Royalty in a Field-Marshal's uniform, covered with orders and wearing the ribbon of the Garter, stepped ashore at the Dockyard.

Accompanied by the Viceroy and a numerous suite, His Royal Highness walked up the stage to the large space allotted to the members of the Corporation. Here the address was delivered by Mr. Dosabhoj Framji, the Chairman, and after replying, the Prince turned to inspect the Guard of Honour. Then slowly proceeding up the slip, he greeted Sir Salar Jung, the Minister of Hyderabad (who seemed somewhat uneasy at the absence of the Nizam), the little Gaekwar, the young Maharaja of Mysore and a host of lesser Native Chiefs. At this point Major Henderson was commissioned to explain to the Princes and Chiefs the satisfaction it gave the Prince to meet them and with this the opening ceremony was brought to a close.

By this time the head of the procession had advanced nearly a mile and at 4-30 P.M. as nearly as possible, the Prince of Wales entered his carriage. The Royal procession was formed as follows:—

(On horseback.)

Assistant Quartermaster-General, Bombay District.

The route taken by the procession was viâ Mombadevi Phydonce, Jamsetji Hospital, over Byculla Railway Bridge and thence to Government House, Parel, where a salute of 21 guns was fired by the Horse Artillery, after which the troops returned to their quarters.

Tuesday, the 9th November, the birthday of the Prince of Wales, was a day full of ceremonial. It commenced with the reception of the great Native Chiefs at 10 A.M. A little before that time the Prince entered the Throne Room at Government House, and on the stroke of the hour the Maharaja of Kolhapur, the first to arrive, drove up. Each Chief was received separately and to each was accorded the special degree of ceremony to which his rank entitled him. This was mainly marked by the carpet at which the visitor was greeted, the Prince meeting those highest in rank at the extreme edge, gradations being made to suit each particular case. The Raja of Kolhapur was followed by the Maharajas of Mysore, Oodeypur, and Cutch; the Gaekwar of Baroda (accompanied by Sir Richard Meade, a distinguished soldier and diplomatist and father of Colonel M. J. Meade, the present Resident at Baroda), arrived soon after and then in procession Sir Salar Jung, Minister of Hyderabad, the Maharaja of Idar, Meer Ali Murad of Khairpur, the Nawab of Junagadh and many others. Immediately after the conclusion of the reception of the Native Chiefs, the Viceroy paid his visit and had a lengthened interview with His Royal Highness, which brought the time to nearly 2 P.M.

In the evening all Bombay was brilliantly illuminated in the Prince's honour and a Royal procession, though more informal in character than that of the previous day, again drove through the town, starting from Government House about 4.30 P.M. The Prince's route was announced to pass along Parel Road by Mombadevi, Kalbadevi, the Esplanade Main Road, past the Queen's statue, between the Post Office and the Public Works, by the Floral Fountain, Rampart Row, by the Secretariat and into Churchgate Street. Thence round the Elphinstone Circle west side, Town hall to Bazaar Gate Street, Esplanade Road to Crawford Market and Sheikh Memon Street, into Mombadevi again, then back to Government House. The route was subsequently changed, and as His Royal Highness visited the Squadron and landed at the Mazagon P. and O. Pier, they proceeded thence to join the nearest point on the route.

The first Royal levée ever held in this country took place on Wednesday, the 10th. At a quarter to five His Royal Highness and suite arrived at the Secretariat Building, accompanied by His Excellency the Governor, Sir Bartle Frere, and others, preceded and followed by bodies of Hussars. Over six hundred presentations were made. The crush was great and the heat intense. The manner of reception somewhat varied from the usual custom. Only the Chief Justice and the Commander-in-Chief were allowed the privilege of entering by the Grand Stairs, while Members of Council, Judges of the High Court, Civilians and Military and Naval officers had to ascend to the first floor by the side entrance on the west side. Out of the large array of Europeans who were presented at the levée, we can only trace the names of eleven who are still in India. They are: B. Branson, Herbert G. Gell, D. E. Gostling, Walter Hughes, H. C. Kirkpatrick, James H. Latimer, A. K. Oliver, William Pendlebury, F. Yorke-Smith, Dr. Sidney Smith, and Surgeon T. S. Weir. It is interesting to note in this connection, that the Hon'ble Mr. Walter Hughes is now in point of service the most senior representative of the Public Works Department now in India and is the last of the "Stanley Engineers." Among native names may be noted: Amirudin Tyabjee, Budrudin Tyabjee, Chubildas Lalloobhoy, Dosabhoy Framjee Hurkisondas Narrotumtas, J. M. Cursetjee, M. B. Barbhaya, M. C. Murzbun, Pheroze Shah M. Mehta, Thackersey Mooljee, and Vijbhucandas Atmaram.

From this ceremonial the Prince drove straight to the School children's Fête, where over twenty schools had collected to receive him. After receiving several addresses and witnessing a small display of fireworks, His Royal Highness left for Government House.

On Thursday, one of the most successful entertainments given in honour of the Prince took the form of a dinner to the soldiers and sailors, and was held on the green in front of the Secretariat. Some 2,000 men sat down to the feast, and His Royal Highness looked in at about 4.30 P.M. and drank to their healths. In addition to this His Royal Highness took part in two other ceremonials the laying of the foundation stone at the Prince's Dock, which was performed with masonic ritual, and the receipt of the address of the senate of the Bombay University. At night he attended a ball given in his honour by the members of the Byculla Club. The cards of invitation to this ball bore the words:—"To meet the officers of the squadrons in attendance on His Royal Highness." The Prince arrived at the Club at eleven, and stayed until after 2 A.M. He took in to supper Mrs. Gibbs, the wife of the then President of the Club.

His Excellency Sir Philip Wodehouse issued a large number of invitations for a trip to the caves of Elephanta in honour of the Prince of Wales on Friday afternoon. At 5 o'clock His Royal Highness drove up, accompanied by His Excellency the Governor and six gentlemen of his own suite, embarked in the steam yacht May Frere. The remainder of the visitors then proceeded in the Gogo, the Emblant and the Elphinstone. Of the party who went on this trip the only two now in India appear to be Mr. H. G. Gell, the present Commissioner of Police, and Mr. C. H. B. Forbes. The others present included the late Captain (afterwards Sir Henry) Morland, the late Mr. C. W. L. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Graham, Mr. (now Sir) F. Forbes Adam, Mr. J. M. Maclean of the Bombay Gazette, the late Mr. Grattan Geary (then of the Times of India), Commander (afterwards Admiral) Bosanquet (who recently was in command of the East Indies squadron), Lord Charles Beresford, and Captain (afterwards Admiral) Tryon, who went down with the ill-fated battleship Victoria. The dinner was laid in the great cave which was of course brilliantly lighted up, while the other caves glowed with red and green fires. In spite of the novelty of the scene the entertainment was in a sense marred by the heat and smoke of the fireworks. At 9 P.M. the signal to return was given, when every ship in harbour was seen to be brilliantly decked with lights and flags. As the Royal party approached each ship blazed out with changing lights, whilst volumes of rockets and bombs were rapidly discharged, making the scene wonderfully impressive. The May Frere dropped anchor opposite the Bunder, and His Royal Highness, accompanied by his suite, landed at the Dockyard, to the disappointment of the immense crowd which had assembled on the Bunder to witness the landing.

On Saturday, the 13th November, the day fixed for His Royal Highness's visit to Poona, arrangements had been made for a special train to be at Parel Station. At 10-30 A.M. a detachment of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Volunteers arrived at the station, and at 10-45 the pilot engine, in charge of Mr. Pendlebury, the District Traffic Manager, came up. At 11 o'clock precisely the Royal train arrived, in charge of the General and Assistant Traffic Manager. It consisted of 15 vehicles. Next to the engine was a van for the Prince's personal luggage, next a brake in which the officials in charge of the train rode, then a second class carriage for the office clerks and domestics of His Royal Highness and His Excellency the Governor of Bombay. Then followed ten saloon carriages, two of which were reserved for the Prince, who was accompanied by Sir Philip Wodehouse, the remaining carriages accommodating the suite.

Shortly after 11-30 A.M. the Royal party drove up and after complimenting the Great Indian Peninsula Volunteers on their appearance and a short conversation with the Railway officials, the Prince entered his carriage and the train moved off.

On Tuesday, November 16th, His Royal Highness and suite returned by special train from Kirkee to Bombay. The stations ~~or route~~ were kept clear of the public while the Royal train passed through. On his return to Bombay His Royal Highness presented new colours to the 21st Bombay Infantry (the Marine Battalion), which was commanded at the time by Colonel Carnegie, the father of the officer who was acting in command of the Regiment when it recently left Bombay. Afterwards there was a firework display on the Back Bay Reclamation, the whole of the arrangements being entrusted to Messrs Brock. The same evening a ball was given at Government House, Parel, by the Governor. In addition to the names we have already given as being present at the other functions, it may be noted that those present at the ball, who are still in India, included Mr. C. H. Byrne, Mr. R. Baumbach and Mr. F. C. Rimington. During his second stay in Bombay, His Royal Highness was taken round to many local places of interest by Mr. Frank Souter, the then Commissioner of Police, who drove with him to the Towers of Silence, the Walkeshwar Temple, the Hindu Cremation Ground, the Crawford Markets, and the European General Hospital. In the evening His Royal Highness gave a dinner to about fifty gentlemen on board the Serapis, in acknowledgment of his royal and hospitable reception by the European residents of Bombay.

On Thursday night he went to Baroda, and returned again on the following Wednesday morning, when he went on board the Serapis. Later in the day His Royal Highness landed once more and drove to Girgaum House, the residence of Sir Mangaldas Nathobhoy. The object of this visit was to witness the marriage of the two sons of Sir Mangaldas. His Royal Highness wore on this occasion the undress uniform of a Field-Marshal. An interesting memento of his visit still exists in the grounds of the house in question, consisting of two immense stone elephants supporting a large platform, which was erected to commemorate the occasion.

Afterwards he drove to Government House, Parel, once more where, in the grand drawing room, the honour of knighthood was conferred upon Mr. Frank Souter, the Commissioner of Police. At 5 o'clock that evening the Serapis left for Goa escorted by the Flying Squadron. Such briefly is a record of the first visit paid by a Prince of Wales to Bombay, though we have omitted to refer to several of the minor functions.

Civil and Military Gazette.—It is stated that the Prince and Princess of Wales will stay at Delhi in the Circuit House which was occupied by the Viceroy and Lady Curzon during the Durbar. Their Royal Highnesses will be the guests of the Lieutenant-Governor during their visit to Delhi, and there will be a big gathering of Punjab Chiefs at Delhi. The actual details of the tour in India are still being worked out, and the final programme is scarcely likely to be settled for some little time.

The actual dates for the military manœuvres and grand review at Delhi, in which between fifty and sixty thousand troops will probably be engaged, are not yet settled, though it seems probable that they will be fixed for days between the 3rd and 13th of December. The operations, it is understood, are not likely to last more than five days, and, as has been before stated, the Prince of Wales will be Lord Kitchener's guest during that time.

20TH MAY 1905.

Times of India.—A London wire states that the Daily Telegraph of the 19th instant says:—

The following will accompany Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to India: Earl and Countess Shaftesbury, Mr. Derek Keppel, Colonel Beatson, Sir Charles Cust, Mr. and Lady Eva Dugdale, Mr. Godfrey Faussett and Sir Walter Lawrence.

No confirmation of the statement can be obtained at Simla.

21ST MAY 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—It is gratifying to note, says the Indian Spectator, that the promoters of the movement to raise a memorial at Bombay, commemorating the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, have decided to give the city a museum. With a pilot like Sir L. Jenkins and an engineer like Sir P. Mehta, the museum may be taken as safely landed through the temporary squall which threatened its passage. A well-equipped museum has been felt as a want since Lord Reay's time, and we are glad the want is about to be supplied by the present worthy successor of that scholar-statesman.

Pioneer.—With the re-assembling of Parliament and the opening of the Royal Academy, the London season has commenced. Moreover, Wednesday brought ten hours of bright sunshine to assure us that Spring was here and light up the picture of London full again—the capital of the Empire no longer vegetating, but beginning a new period of life. If at the Academy dinner on Saturday His Majesty's Ministers were conspicuous by their absence, and there was no Premier to entertain the company with delusive philosophy, the Prince of Wales was present, and what is more, he devoted part of his speech to his contemplated visit to India. "Naturally," he said, "the Princess and I are looking forward with keen interest to our visit to India next winter. We shall have ample opportunities of realising the wonderful works of art created by India in the past. While in that country I hope to have the pleasure of laying the foundation-stone of the Queen Victoria Memorial Hall at Calcutta, and I shall be proud to be thus associated with the first great architectural work which India, under the British Crown, has inaugurated. I believe it is hoped that some day the galleries of this vast building may contain historical pictures by British artists. I trust, therefore, that this memorial to our late loved Sovereign may be a further means of more closely knitting together the Mother Country and the great Continent of India in the happy but powerful bonds of art." The other speakers were the President—who announced that the Prince would preside over a committee to raise a memorial to the late Mr. G. F. Watts—the Duke of Connaught, Admiral Sir Edward Seymour, Sir William Huggins and the Bishop of Ripon.

22ND MAY 1905.

Indian Daily News.—It has been decided that the Prince and Princess of Wales will shoot in the Nepal Terai as the guests of the Maharaja and the Minister of Nepal. The camp will open in the last week of February, and will last over a week.

25TH MAY 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Brigadier-General Stuart Beaton, who is now in London in connection with the forthcoming Indian tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales, will probably precede the Royal party to Bombay and be entrusted with the duty of making all arrangements for the tour so far as seeking the co-operation of the Native Princes is concerned. The General is to be relieved from all military duty until the close of the visit, and to be returned as on leave and attached to the suite of His Royal Highness.

Indian Daily News.—A meeting of the special sub-committee appointed to make arrangements for the public meeting to be called by the Sheriff in connection with the approaching Royal visit was held in the rooms of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on Monday. A letter was read from the Private Secretary to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to Maharaj Kumar Tagore intimating that His Honour would be able to preside at a public meeting on the 1st of July, and it was accordingly decided to fix that date for the meeting. Draft resolutions were submitted to the meeting, and the list of speakers was provisionally settled. Provisional lists of the proposed General Committee and the Executive Committee were also framed, and it was decided to call for subscriptions to the Reception Fund as early as possible.

Mysore Herald.—That the 13th Madras Provincial Conference consisting of representatives from the different parts of the Madras Presidency, records its heart felt rejoicings on the intended visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to India, which is calculated to be of immense benefit to the Indians in particular, and begs to approach His Imperial Majesty Edward VII of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of all the British Dominions beyond the seas, King, Defender of the Faith and Emperor of India, to tender its humble and sincere thanks for having given opportunity to the Indians to pay their loyal respects to His Majesty's son and their future Emperor, personally.

Madras Mail.—The proposed visit to India of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales towards the end of this year, brings to mind the loyal reception given exactly 30 years ago to His Majesty the King-Emperor, when he visited this country as Prince of Wales. The following retrospect of His Majesty's tour in South India may serve to awaken pleasant recollections in those who witnessed the Royal celebrations and give the younger generation an idea of the festivities and rejoicings which marked the visit.

The first place in the Madras Presidency which was visited by the Prince was Bepore, at that time the western terminus of the Madras Railway. On the morning of the 29th November 1875, the Serapis arrived there from Bombay, with her escort of warships, and anchored a couple of miles out, just within view of the railway station. It had been arranged that the Prince should proceed from Bepore to the Annamalai and Peermad Hills for big game shooting; but reports of cholera along the routes which the Prince would have had to take were brought by Mr. Robinson, Mr. MacGregor, Mr. Logan and Dr. Houston, the District officials of Malabar, who went on board the Serapis and reported. Accordingly, the intended trip had to be abandoned, to the great disappointment of His Royal Highness and the people in those parts. But during the day the Prince had a run up the Bepore river in a launch for a little shooting and returned in the evening to the Serapis, which left at once for Cloombo.

After a week's stay at Colombo, His Royal Highness arrived at Tuticorin in the Serapis, on the morning of the 10th December. He was suitably received and, after landing, passed through the town, receiving a cordial welcome from the people. At Maniachy Junction, a deputation of about 6,000 Native Christians, including a large body of clergy and catechists and 1,000 school boys and girls, awaited the arrival of the Prince, who was received by Bishop Caldwell and Bishop Sargeant, the two veteran Missionaries, surrounded by a considerable number of English clergy. Bishop Caldwell read an address of welcome from the Native Church of Tinnevely, giving an account of the progress of Christian Mission work in that district, to which the Prince made a gracious reply. His Royal Highness then handed to the representatives from each of the schools, mango and banyan seedlings to be planted in their respective gardens in memory of his visit.

The railway journey was then resumed and at Koilpatty, where a brief halt was made for breakfast, the Prince was met by the minor Zemindar of Ettiyapuram. A little before 5 p. m. Madura was reached. Here the Prince was conducted in a grand procession from the station to the Teppakulam Bungalow, which was fitted up for his Royal Highness's visit. Before dinner the principal personages in and around Madura were received, the most conspicuous amongst the Rajas being the Tondiman of Pudukotta, who showed the Prince a most interesting book consisting of letters, despatches and correspondence between Clive and others and his ancestors relating to the stirring times of Hyder Ali and Tipu. The morning of the 11th December was devoted to public functions and sight-seeing. Of course, a visit was made to the historic palace of Tirumal Naik. At the entrance to the Palace, in the Public Hall, the Prince was received by the Trustees of the great temple and a large body of Zamindars: a public address of welcome was read by Mr. S. Subramania Iyer (now Sir S. Subramania Iyer, Acting Chief Justice,) who was a leading Vakil, Municipal Commissioner and a Trustee of the temple. After replying to the address, the Prince inspected the Palace, over which he was conducted by Mr. Subramania Iyer. In one of the rooms the Prince had an interview with the widowed representative of the Chief of Sivagunga who had just then won an appeal to the Privy Council against the Government of India. It was the Empress who had given her justice, said the Rance, and she must see her son and thank him. She had brought the treasures of her house and her son and heir "to express what she felt and to offer everything she had to the Shahzada." The great Meenakshi temple was then inspected, after which the Prince left for Trichinopoly. During his brief visit to Madura the Prince opened the Madura-Tuticorin extension of the South Indian Railway.

At Trichinopoly addresses, pandals, flowers, triumphal arches, guards of honour, officials in uniform, streets decorated with extraordinary richness and taste, awaited the Royal arrival. The Prince drove to the house of Mr. Webster, the Collector, and after launch, he drove through the principal streets of the town and then across the river to the temples of Srirangam, where he was received and shown round with due honours. Returning to Trichinopoly in the evening, he visited the old Palace of the Nawabs of the Carnatic and received an address from the public, after which the principal Zamindars and people were presented. A deputation from Tanjore—which the Prince was unable to visit—was then introduced and presented an address; and Mr. Thomas, the Collector, introduced the leading citizens. At night the Prince witnessed the grand illuminations of the Trichinopoly Rock and the tank at its foot. On the 12th December Trichinopoly was left for Madras, via Erode. At Karur a few minutes' stay was made and the Prince graciously addressed a few words to the native officials who had prepared the platform very prettily. At Erode the Collector and other District officers of Coimbatore, with a guard of honour of Her Majesty's 43rd Regiment, Band and Colours, were in attendance. After dinner the Prince continued his journey to Madras.

At Royapuram Station, which was then the terminus of the Madras Railway, the Duke of Buckingham, the Governor, and a brilliant assemblage of the heads of departments, Military and Civil officers and Native Princes awaited the Prince's arrival on the morning of the 13th December. By 6-30 A.M. the platform was crowded with gay uniforms and glittering costumes here and there relieved by a sombre swallow tail. The Maharaja of Travancore was beautifully dressed in a coat of gold brocade, and wore in his turban a plume of white feathers, and on his breast the diamond star of a Grand Commander of the Star of India. The Prince of Arcot was simply dressed and distinguished by a plume of white feathers. The Raja of Cochin and the Maharaja of Vizianagram also looked well and made a fine appearance. The Raja of Jeypore (Vizagapatam) and Pittapore and the Jaghirdar of Arnee were also present. There were many more Rajas and Zemindars, among whom were the Rajahs of Karvetnagar, Kalahasti and Venkatagiri. The train, with the Royal party, arrived at 8-10 A.M., the Governor approached the Royal saloon and out stepped the Prince, the picture of good health and happiness. He greeted the Duke of Buckingham as an old friend in a hearty manner and the Duke then presented to him the Commander-in-Chief, the Chief Justice, Bishops Gell and Fennally, the Chiefs of Travancore, Cochin and Vizianagram, the Prince of Arcot and a few others. A few minutes were spent in introductions, and then the Prince led the way to the entrance door, continually bowing and smiling as he walked along. The Prince and the Governor entered the latter's carriage; but before the carriage left Mr. Burrows, the President of the Municipal Commission, presented an address of welcome on behalf of the inhabitants of the City and Presidency of Madras, to which the Prince made a gracious reply.

The procession into the city was led by Captain Kenny-Herbert, the Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, followed by a detachment of the 16th Lancers. Then came a Staff Officer, R. A. the Brigade Major, a Staff Officer, the Officer Commanding Royal Artillery, the Quartermaster-General, Brigadier-General Raites, C.B., Commanding Centre District, and the Adjutant-General. These officers were followed by a detachment of the Governor's Body-Guard, which preceded seven carriages occupied as follows:

First Carriage.—Mr. Sydney Hall, artist, in the suite of the Prince of Wales; Mr. Albert Grey, Private Secretary to Sir Bartle Frere; Mr. W. H. Russell, Honorary Private Secretary to the Prince and Captain G. Gordon, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor.

Second Carriage.—Lieutenant FitzGeorge, Extra Aide-de-Camp to the Prince of Wales; the Reverend Canon Duckworth, Chaplain to the Prince; Captain the Lord Carington, Aide-de-Camp to the Prince, and Captain F. A. Aylmer, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor.

Third Carriage.—Lieutenant the Lord Charles Beresford, M.P., R.N., Aide-de-Camp to the Prince, Major R. W. Sartorius, C.M.G., V.C., Major B. Williams and Major E. C. R. Bradford, the last three on special duty with the Prince of Wales.

Fourth Carriage.—Colonel Owen Williams, Commanding Royal Regiment of Horse Guards; Surgeon-General Fayer, Physician to the Prince; Mr. Francis Knollys, Private Secretary to the Prince, and Lieutenant-Colonel Arthur Ellis, Equerry to the Prince.

Fifth Carriage.—Major P. D. Henderson, Political Officer; General Probyn, C.B., V.C., Equerry to the Prince of Wales; Major-General S. Browne, C.B., V.C., on special duty with the Prince, and Captain G. R. Hadaway, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor.

Sixth Carriage.—The Earl of Avlesford; Major-General the Lord Alfred Paget, Clerk Marshal to the Queen; Lieutenant-Colonel J. Michael, on special duty with the Prince, and Captain P. J. Hankin, R.N., Private Secretary to the Governor.

Seventh Carriage.—The Lord Suffield, Head of the Household of the Prince; the Right Hon'ble Sir Bartle Frere, G.C.S.I., K.C.B., the Duke of Sutherland, K.G., and the Hon'ble Mr. W. Hudleston, Chief Secretary to Government.

These carriages were followed by a third detachment of Lancers; and then came the Royal carriage, which was occupied by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, with the Governor on his left hand and the Prince's Equerry in attendance on the opposite seat. The carriage—a large English landau painted blue, with the Duke of Buckingham's coat-of-arms on the central panels—had the hood down, but His Royal Highness was partly protected against the sun by a large State umbrella covered with cloth of gold, and fixed into a socket in the floor of the vehicle. On the right of the carriage rode a Native Aide-de-Camp to the Governor, the Commander of the Governor's Body-Guard, and the Inspectors-General of Police, and on the left side rode a Native Aide-de-Camp of the Commander-in-Chief, the Officer Commanding a Squadron, 16th Lancers and the Commissioner of Police. The Royal carriage was followed by the Adjutant and a detachment of the Governor's Body-Guard and a detachment of Native Infantry.

Then came the following noblemen and others in carriages:—His Excellency the Governor of the French Settlements in India, with the Master Attendant, Madras, and an Aide-de-Camp; the Maharaja of Travancore (with escort of two troopers); the Raja of Cochin (with escort of two troopers); the Chief Justice of Madras, the Commander-in-Chief, Madras (with staff and escort); the Lord Bishop of Madras (with domestic Chaplain); the Roman Catholic Bishop; the Members of Council; the Hon'ble W. R. Robinson, C.S.I., and the Hon'ble Mr. R. S. Ellis, C.B., the Prince of Arcot (with escort of two troopers); the three Puisne Judges of the High Court; the Maharaja of Vizianagram and his son; the Additional Members of Council; the Nawab of Banganapalle; the Maharaja of Jeypore (Vizagapatam); the Zamorin of Calicut; the Raja of Cherikat; the second Raja of Calicut; the Raja of Kaduttanad; the Raja of Waluvanad, the Raja of Venkatagiri, the Zamindars of Kalahasti and Karvetnagar, the Jaghirdar of Arnee, the Zamindar of Pittapore, the Zamindar of Attiappuram, the ex-Nawab of Masulipatam; the carriage of Her Highness the Nawab Begum (with escort of two troopers); the Consort of Her Highness the Princess of Tanjore; the Dewan to the Zamindar of Bobbili; the brothers of the Jaghirdar of Sandur; the Zamindar of Vallur; the Members of the Board of Revenue; Secretaries to Government; the two Surgeons-General; the Inspector-General of Ordnance and Magazines; the Commissary General; the Judge Advocate-General; the Chief Magistrate; the Sheriff of Madras; the President of the Municipal Commission and three Municipal Commissioners.

The procession was followed by a detachment of Lancers.

After the procession left the station it proceeded along Thumbu Chetty Street which was, of course, thronged with an immense crowd of natives, all the house tops, balconies and windows, indeed every available inch of space, being occupied. The golden umbrella held over the Prince's head was an excellent idea as it served to attract the eyes of all beholders and relieved many doubting minds. Mr. W. H. Russell, the historiographer of the tour, referring to this umbrella, writes:—"It is not always easy even for those who are familiar with European visages to make out the principal person in a public procession. The Duke of Buckingham, whose attention to details caused the whole Madras visit to be so successful, seized on the Oriental idea of having an umbrella as a special means of identifying the Prince, and thereby gratified thousands of people." The street being narrow, the spectators had a good view of the Prince. Emerging from Thambu Chetty Street, the procession passed under a triumphal arch and turned to the right into the Esplanade Road, where it passed under several fine arches formed in the shape of an old castle. The sight on the Esplanade Road was really beautiful, when the scarlet uniforms and fluttering pennants of the Lancers were set off against the dark green background of the triumphal arches.

From the south-western corner of the Fort, on the crest of the glacis, the view was remarkably pleasing. On the extreme right appeared the Lighthouse, with streams of flags from the basement to the capital, and the lantern crowned with a staff from which waved a large scarlet flag. The roofs of several of the more prominent houses facing the Monument and Lighthouse Esplanades were liberally decked with the flags of all nations, with bannerets and streamers of varied hues. From the point where the Madras Law College now stands to the Wallajah Bridge, along the Fort Glacis Road, about three-quarters of a mile in length were two dense lines of natives dressed in holiday attire. Each roadside was skirted by banners and bannerets waving from Venetian posts of different heights. Close to the Wallajah Bridge were tiers of seats provided by the Government in a very liberal manner for hundreds of subordinate and minor officials. One of the most striking scenes on the route of the procession was the gathering of schools on the galleries erected between the Wallajah Bridge and the Munro statue. Nearly 14,000 children with their teachers were here accommodated. The galleries were erected under the direction of the Municipal authorities at a cost of about Rs. 5,000. The children sang "God Bless the Prince of Wales" as the Royal procession approached and drew up in their presence. Almost every school in the city, from the Primary up to the Collegiate grade, under Native, Missionary and Government management, was represented. As the procession began to move again, the entire assembly of children broke into a cheer and afterwards sang the National Anthem, all standing.

On the arrival of the party at Government House His Royal Highness was conducted up the grand staircase by His Excellency the Governor, the suites following. The ladies of the Duke of Buckingham's family and the members of his staff and suite were presented to the Prince who introduced his officers and suite to the Governor. After a short stay in the grand drawing room the Governor conducted His Royal Highness into the suite of apartments set apart for his use. They were those usually tenanted by His Excellency the Governor, and were specially furnished and decorated by Messrs. Deschamps & Co., all the articles of furniture bearing the Prince of Wales' plume and motto. After breakfast, the Prince, having put on full uniform, orders, etc., proceeded to the Audience Chamber to receive the private visits of the Chiefs. The Maharaja of Travancore, the Raja of Cochin, the Prince of Arcot, and the Raja of Vizianagram were among those who were received.

At 1 o'clock in the afternoon a levée was held by the Prince in the Banqueting Hall, and it was attended by every European and native who could obtain access to it. The throng was very great and the doors were closed before all the gentlemen whose names had been received could find their way to the presence. Later in the evening the Prince went out for a drive and inspected the pier in the Madras Harbour.

The Royal suite of 30 gentlemen, the Governor's party of 13 ladies and gentlemen, the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, the Hon'ble Messrs. Robinson, Ellis and Hudleston, and the Right Reverend the Bishop of Madras and Miss Gell formed the dinner party at Government House that night. A brief reception in the drawing rooms followed the dinner.

The Prince of Wales, who had driven out over-night, spent a quiet day at Government House, Guindy, on Tuesday, the 14th December, the anniversary of his father's death. In the early morning he visited the racecourse and witnessed the training of the horses who were to run on the following morning. He left Guindy in the afternoon and returned to Government House, Mount Road.

On the morning of the 15th December, there were races on the Guindy course which the Prince attended. It was calculated that the races were witnessed by 50,000 people. The Prince, on arrival on the course, was met by the Stewards and was conducted by Mr. Hunter Blair to the place reserved for him. The races began at 7 A.M. and the programme included five events, Cups being provided for each by the Raja of Karvetnagar, the Raja of Cochin, the Raja of Venkatagiri, the Raja of Vizianagram, and the Maharaja of Jeypore. The most interesting event was the struggle in the Sandringham Steeplechase, when Mr. Thaffie's Artaxerxes snatched the prize (given by the Maharaja of Jeypore) from all the cracks, and "when the jockeys ran under the approving eye of the Prince of Wales." It was nearly 9-30 A.M. before the races were over and the Prince returned to Madras.

At 3 P.M. in the afternoon the Chancellor, Vice-Chancellor and Fellows of the University of Madras, capped and robed, proceeded to Government House to present an address from the Senate to the Prince. They were received at the entrance and conducted to the Audience Chamber. The Commander-in-Chief, the Bishop of Madras and other ex-officio members of the Senate were present. The address, which was read by Mr. Justice Innes, gave a sketch of the progress and labours of the University since its foundation in 1857. The Prince made a short reply.

After the Senate retired a deputation of the Freemasons of the Presidency presented an address, giving expression to their satisfaction at welcoming so distinguished a member of the craft and stating that the craft in Madras was flourishing. The Mysore Commission, including Mr. Gopaliah, Head Sheristadar, and Mr. T. Ananda Rao (son of Sir Madhava Rao)—who is still in the Mysore service to-day—were next introduced and presented an address expressing their regret that the Prince could not visit Mysore. Next followed a deputation from Coorg which presented an address and offerings of Coorg knives and dresses. A deputation from Coimbatore headed by Mr. Wedderburn, the Collector, Colonel Wilkieson, R.E., Mr. Venkitachalm Pillai, etc., also presented an address to which the Prince made a sympathetic reply.

The afternoon was occupied in making return visits. The Prince, who wore the uniform of the 10th Hussars, drove to Egmore, escorted by Cavalry and attended by his suite and returned the visit of the Raja of Cochin. From Egmore, escorted by three of the Princes of the Carnatic and Hyder Jung, the Prince drove to the residence of the Prince of Arcot. Among the presents made by the Prince of Arcot was a sword which had once belonged to the Nawab Wallajah. The third and last to receive a return visit was the Maharaja of Travancore, "whose offerings were curious and valuable." The Princess of Tanjore next paid a visit to His Royal Highness at Government House and expressed in English her pleasure at seeing her "Royal brother."

At 4-30 P.M. the Prince laid the foundation stone of the new Harbour Works, which forms a very visible and permanent memorial of a visit to which must be ascribed the commencement of so many useful works. The Governor and the ladies of his family, the Members of Council, the Military and Civil authorities, assisted at the ceremony, which is described as having been exceedingly well managed and impressive. On the way back to Government House, the Prince paid a surprise visit to Fort St. George in heavy rain. He walked round St. Mary's Church and examined the memorials it contains of brave soldiers and others who have made the mark in the annals of the Presidency. He was also conducted to the grave of Lord Hobart, the late Governor. He next visited the Arsenal and inspected the many interesting relics there.

There was a State Banquet at night at Government House, which was followed by a reception, to which His Excellency the Governor had invited all persons on the Government House visiting list to meet the Prince of Wales. A Military Officer appeared by order in full uniform, and a few Civil Servants and some members of the Prince's suite wore diplomatic dress. The Prince and the Duke of Buckingham were in evening dress.

As soon as His Royal Highness had entered the Banqueting Hall, which was brilliantly illuminated, the amateurs of the Philharmoni Society sang an "Ode of Welcome", the music for which was composed by Monsieur Stradiot. After staying in the hall for a short time, the Prince left it to witness the fireworks, which commenced about three-quarters of a mile off on the other side of the Island, opposite the south wall of the Fort. The exterior of the hall was brilliantly illuminated. In addition to the numerous lights there were three well-executed transparencies, the Royal Coat of Arms in the centre of the lights in front and the Prince's plume on each of the parapets flanking the main entrance.

On Thursday night, 16th December, the Prince attended a Ball given in his honour by the members of the Madras Club. The Prince arrived about 11 o'clock and was received at the foot of the Grand Staircase by Colonel Shaw Stewart, the President of the Club, and the members of the Reception Committee. His Royal Highness gave his arm to Mrs. Shaw Stewart, and ascended the stairs—which were guarded by a single file on each hand of troopers of the Governor's Body-Guard in uniform, and entered the large dancing room (in which the bulk of the 650 persons invited had congregated) and walked down the centre of the room, followed by the Governor and the Royal and gubernatorial suites, the bands playing the National Anthem. The Prince then returned to the dancing room to open the Ball. To Mrs. Shaw Stewart naturally fell the honour of being the Prince's partner in the opening quadrille. His Royal Highness and Mrs. Shaw Stewart had for their vis à vis an Austrian Prince and Lady Mary Grenville, and the Duke of Buckingham and Mrs. Robinson had for their vis à vis Sir Bartle Frere and Lady Anna Gore Langton. The Prince danced quadrille, lancers, and waltzes and honoured several ladies with his hand. He did not leave the Club till 3-45 A.M. The unequalled success of the Ball was attributed to the exertions of Mr. Olway Mayne, Major Hunt, Colonel Cadell, Mr. Hunter Blair, Captain Hallet, Mr. Munsie, Dr. Furnell, Mr. Best, Mr. Elwin, and Mr. Macfadyen.

His Royal Highness also lunched informally with Colonel Shaw Stewart, R.E., the President, and about a dozen other members of the Club on Friday, the 17th December. Accompanied by several of his suite he arrived at the Club at 1-45 P.M. and remained there for two hours and a half.

Later in the afternoon the Prince attended a School-children's Fête in the People's Park, where he had an opportunity of seeing in all their finery several thousands of children. An address was presented and a band of children sang "God save the Queen." From the People's Park the Prince drove to the Island, where he was received by the Commander-in-Chief, Sir P. Haines and his staff, and witnessed a general parade. When the parade was dismissed, the Prince returned to Government House and thence drove to the residence of the Commander-in-Chief, whom he honoured with his company at dinner.

About 10 P.M. the Prince attended by Sir C. Staveley, drove along most magnificently illuminated roads to the Pier, where the Duke of Buckingham and a great concourse had been awaiting his arrival to witness the illumination of the surf. Seats were placed for the Prince, the Governor, his family and suite, etc., out of reach of the spray. Southwards, where the rollers swept up to the roadway, rows of natives facing seawards, with blazing torches and blue lights, lighted up an ocean of turbans. Massoulah boats and catamarans lay in the rollers till the time came for setting fire to the lights, which were to burn in and to illuminate the water.

To quote from Mr. Russell's graphic description of this:—

"First there were fireworks on board the Osborne, Serapis and Kaleigh. . . . Presently appeared from afar seawards many flames, dipping and rolling amid the waves, drifting landwards like fire-ships. These multiplied. Occasionally lights flashed right through the rollers from the other side. Suddenly the lines of back massoulah boats and catamarans from the beach dashed into the surf like a squadron of cavalry. With the wildest yells they charged the serried ranks of the foam-crested breakers, which seemed to be mounds of flame. . . . Men will never see any spectacle more strange—nay awful—than the illumination of the surf. It was exciting grand, weird and beautiful."

At 11 P.M. the Prince attended a native entertainment, the scene of which was the railway station at Royapuram, which had been converted since the Prince's arrival into a vast theatre, 800 ft. x 250 ft., decorated with great splendour and richness. Many thousands of Indians, including Chiefs and Europeans, were present. A deputation of native gentlemen presented the Prince with an address, enclosed in an exquisite gold casket, on the top of which was a finely-worked tiger. It was late at night when the Prince returned to Government House from the entertainment.

On the morning of Saturday, the 18th December, the Prince drove from Government House to the meet of the Madras Hounds opposite the Royal Artillery Mess at St. Thomas's Mount, where he arrived at 6-15 A.M. He was met by Mr. Lodwick, the Master, and introduced to the members of the Hunt Committee, present—Major Pigott, Captain Hallet, and Mr. Jones.

There was a field of 50 persons awaiting the Prince's arrival. The morning was delightfully fresh and the anticipation of a good run was not disappointed. The old covert behind the Mount was drawn, and a jack having been found, sped away in fine style and made good use of a rather heavy and swampy country. The pace at times was exciting, but the numerous paddy fields all under water stayed progress. But the jack, after a seven miles' run for life, was run into and killed, the Prince being well up. On returning to the Mount His Royal Highness took tea and was driven to Government House, Madras, which was reached before noon. Among the field, besides the members of the Committee, were Messrs. Shephard, Mayne, Watson, Stevenson, Wilson, Symonds, Turner, Tasker, and some others.

After lunch the party inspected the native presents, which were laid out in a tent in the compound of Government House.

On the evening of 18th December the Prince left Madras for Calcutta by the Serapis, a distinguished gathering being present at the landing stage to bid him farewell.

Madras Mail.—A public meeting of the citizens of Madras was held at the Victoria Hall yesterday evening to concert measures to accord a fitting reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, on the occasion of their visit to this city.

The Sheriff read the notice convening the meeting, and declared it open.

The Hon'ble Mr. H. A. Sim, in proposing that the Hon'ble Sir S. Subramania Iyer do take the chair, said:—

We need a very special Chairman here to-night. We are met to consider how best we may welcome the son of our Sovereign and the heir to his Throne; and though, on such a subject, here in this old and loyal Presidency of Madras, there can be no possibility of discord, I am sure we all feel that on a special occasion, on an occasion which will appeal so strongly to the traditional loyalty of this land, we should place in the chair one who in himself will visibly embody the sentiments we feel to-day; one who in the universal regard which he inspires will represent that unanimity which now inspires us; and one who by the high rank and station which he holds will suggest the honour we wish to pay our future Sovereign. We are fortunate in finding such a one ready to our hand, and I will ask you, therefore, to allow me, without further words, to propose him to you as your Chairman of this evening. I propose the Officiating Chief Justice of Madras, the Hon'ble Sir Subramania Iyer.

The resolution was seconded by the Raja of Venkatagiri, and carried.

The Hon'ble Sir S. Subramania Iyer, having taken the chair amidst applause, addressed the meeting as follows:—

Gentlemen,—As you have already been informed the business of this meeting is that we may in due time concert measures for giving a fitting reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during their forthcoming visit to this city. Even if the visit were prompted by curiosity alone on the part of our Royal visitors, it would be our bounden duty to give them a most hearty welcome. But this is not a mere pleasure trip, it is not for the mere purpose of sight-seeing that Their Royal Highnesses are coming to India. It was, as you know, her late Majesty the Queen Empress Victoria, of beloved memory, who, if I may say so, introduced the custom of the Heir-Apparent to the British Throne visiting this part of the British Empire. Considering the deep interest which she always took in this country and its inhabitants, and in directing her dear son to go to India she had, I believe, special objects in view. The tour in India was, I believe, made partly on the recommendation of Lord Canning, one of India's wisest Viceroys, while he was still in India. You may, therefore, take it for granted that the visit of the Prince of Wales to India was projected on those grounds of statesmanship and keen political insight which ever attended Her Majesty's glorious rule. The visit had a twofold object so far as I understand. One was to give to the many hundred millions of Her Majesty's Indian subjects an opportunity of seeing with their own eyes, on their own native soil, their future Sovereign, and of testifying to their loyalty, devotion and attachment to the British Crown, under which the inhabitants of this country live in the enjoyment of peace and prosperity, and security and justice unknown to their predecessors in historic times, and unexampled in the annals of the Government of diverse races by a nation alien to them.

Great interest is taken by the people of this country in seeing and knowing their Sovereign, or their future Sovereign. In illustration of that I may refer to certain remarks which the author of the semi-official account of the tour of 1875-76, made with reference to the time when our present Emperor, in his capacity as Prince of Wales, entered the City of Bombay—"I am not sure if I have seen him after all," exclaimed a Chief at Bombay, "and I have travelled 600 miles merely to get a look at the Shahzadah!" Another Chief said to the Minister of a Native State:—"Think what a way I have come to see the Prince! Think what distances we have journeyed, and yet we are only permitted to gaze on his face for a moment!" "Very true," replied the Minister, "but just think what a way the Prince has come to see you!" This observation of the Minister implied not only the truer appreciation of the situation, but pointed to the other object which was kept in view when the tour was projected. No one needs to be told of the value of the eye, with its quick observation, in assisting the other faculties in the acquisition of knowledge, and of its power to impress the mind. Even the most patient study of the recorded descriptions of a country and its people, prepared by experts, could not produce the same impression that an actual stay, even for a short time, in the country, amidst the people would. It is to give to the future Sovereign of India an ocular knowledge of the country and its people, so far as circumstances permit, that the tour was projected; the object also being to ensure to us the many advantages which direct knowledge on the part of the Sovereign is sure to produce.

Following the wise precedent set by his august mother, our Emperor has thought fit to command the Heir-Apparent to come to India. You will thus see that in coming here at the Royal behest, Their Royal Highnesses are only discharging the high duty that has been laid upon them. It is therefore absolutely incumbent upon every one to make the welcome that we give them the heartiest and the warmest that it is in our power to give. The subject is one that does not require any strenuous appeal to evoke the utmost enthusiasm throughout the length and breadth of the land. If any such appeal is necessary, I may say that it will be supplied by the eloquent speeches of the gentlemen who are to follow me. There is one more matter to which I may refer. It is not our intention, in organising this meeting, in any way to interfere with other bodies, such as the Corporation of the city, the Senate of the University or any others, from showing their loyalty in a way that seems best suited to their purposes and circumstances. Our object is to try to make the reception a united one of the people of the whole Presidency including, of course, the inhabitants of Madras. In this we only wish to follow the precedent set on the last occasion, when I see from the address that it was presented on behalf of the city of Madras and the inhabitants of the Presidency of Madras, presented, if I may say so, with perfect propriety by the official head of the Corporation of the Capital City. (Cheers.)

There is one word more before I call upon the gentleman who is entrusted with the moving of the first resolution. With reference to how we acquitted ourselves on the last occasion, the writer of the semi-official account to which I have already referred, has recorded:—

"Though there was no lack of courtesy and kindness, in all these Eastern lands, yet it is but just to say that the reception given by Madras could never be forgotten and will be remembered for ever as one of the most pleasant memories of the Prince's tour." It is needless to say that on this occasion also we shall, I have not the slightest doubt, acquit ourselves with equal credit. (Applause.) I feel extremely honoured at the prominent position which you have been kind enough to assign to me to-day, and I am naturally reminded of the position—humbler it is true, but yet one of much distinction—I occupied thirty years ago, when I was allowed by the kindness of the people of the district from which I came to present to our Emperor—then the Prince of Wales—the address voted by the people of the district in the ancient capital of Madura. This is a stroke of good fortune for which I am very much obliged to you. With these few words I now call upon the Hon'ble Mr. Yorke to move the first resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. Yorke moved the following resolution:—

"That the citizens of the Presidency of Madras resolve to present an address in a suitable casket to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and to give them a public entertainment on the occasion of their visit to Madras."

In doing so he said:—

Sir Subramania Iyer and Gentlemen.—The resolution which I have the honour to propose will commend itself, irrespective of anything I can say, to all who are fond of this Presidency, and would, therefore, wish that it should come to the front to properly fulfil its public duty whenever a call comes to it. In this case, Madras, as the capital city, has to speak for the Presidency as a whole on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to this out-lying portion of the Empire. It is obviously meet and proper, and in accordance with time-honoured custom, that on such an occasion we should greet Their Royal Highnesses with an address of welcome, properly casketed, to assure them of the love and loyalty felt by Madras towards the Royal House under whose beneficent rule we are enjoying the great blessings of peace and prosperity. Our King-Emperor's self-earned proud title of Edward the Peace-maker sufficiently indicates a chief source and guarantee of the first of these blessings, while the second is surely founded upon the full measure of individual liberty enjoyed by us all under just laws impartially administered. Undoubtedly, with those prime needs secured as a basis, any country ought to prosper, and, if we wish to realise that we are doing so, we have only to compare the Madras and India of to-day with the Madras and India of 1875, when we last had the honour of a visit from a Prince of Wales. If we make that comparison, we shall find, I think, abundant evidence that, in spite of occasional set-back from drought or disease, surely, if slowly, an edifice of material prosperity is being built up around us worthy of its foundations.

In agriculture we can point to an enormous increase of production, thanks chiefly to the extension of irrigation, not only under daring projects such as completed at the Periyar, as sanctioned in the Punjab, and as contemplated on the Tungabudra and elsewhere; but also, consequent on the better preservation of tanks and minor channels, throughout the country, under the watchful care of Government. In industry, we can see a marked increase in the number and size of mills, factories and presses in connection with all sorts of products. While, among new industries, I may mention mining, which 30 years ago was practically non-existent, but is now an established, flourishing industry, producing gold, coal, manganese and other minerals on a large and increasing scale. This productive activity is supported by the growth of banking, both European and Indian, and by the increase of transport facilities, by tramways and railways in all parts of the country. Their ever-increasing earnings, no less than the enormous growth of India's import and export trade, evidence her progress and prosperity, during the period under review. I will not trouble you with actual figures, they are accessible to whoever will look into the trade statistics annually published. Reference to imports and exports naturally brings me to the subject of the main sea-gate of our Presidency, the Madras Harbour, and it is interesting to recall that its first stone was laid just 30 years ago by the then Prince of Wales, our present King-Emperor. The vicissitudes through which it has since passed are common knowledge, so that I need not particularly refer to them. Suffice it to say that, if it has greatly suffered from mistakes, well, it is easy to be wise after the event. However, thanks to Government taking a generous, broad-minded view of the case, Madras has been relieved of most of the loss consequent on past mistakes, and I may say that I fully share the opinion now generally held by expert and layman alike, that the plans as now finally decided on for the completion of our Harbour are, humanly speaking, bound to prove successful; so assuring us at no distant date landing and shipping facilities never yet known on this coast. The effect of this may be far-reaching if it results, and it well may, in placing Madras practically, as geographically she should be, on the mail route between Europe and the Straits Settlements and further East. Should that happen, a great impetus ought to be given the development of Madras, since it would then be on one of the high-roads of the world instead of up a side alley, so to speak. Our trade with the Straits Settlements, Java and Japan is already an increasing one, and we may reasonably hope that closer relations in that direction will be favoured by our happy alliance with Japan.

Now, I would like to say a word on that alliance, which I consider is one of the most epoch-marking events of late years. It is of special significance to us in India, as demonstrating or emphasising the fact that even wide differences of race need be no barrier to voluntary, deliberate, joint action where there is essential community of interests. No one can doubt, who studies the history of India and the history of the British Empire, that essentially their interests are now identical. That fact becomes clearer and clearer if we study the history of Russia, of Finland, of Poland and of Central Asia. That study makes one realise that the dangers which Japan is at present so bravely facing are practically those from which India is now only protected by her connection with the British Empire. To strengthen that connection, and thus fortify the Empire against possible risk of shame to England and misery to India, should, therefore, be the object of every one of us, and this object we can best attain by fostering our sense of patriotism, of Imperial patriotism, by every means in our power. Japan here sets us a fine example, which we cannot too closely follow. Her national strength has been declared to arise from her people's reverence for great men and great things, due, it is declared by one who knows them well, to their being carefully educated from their earliest youth in principles of honour, duty, kindness and, above all, of patriotism. Gentlemen, may we cultivate and develop our Imperial strength on noble educational lines like those. May our united admiration for our gallant far Eastern allies strengthen the bonds of sympathy between East and West—between India and England. They are parts of a grand Empire presided over by one whose tactful ability to further the best interests of the Empire prove him a worthy successor to his great and beloved mother, our first Queen-Empress. Let us now foster and proclaim our Imperial patriotism by assuring his son, our future King-Emperor, and his Royal spouse, that we loyally love their family, that we deeply value the Imperial tie which their visit signalises, and rejoice in being members of the freest, the greatest, the most glorious Empire that this world has ever known.

Rai Bahadur P. Ananda Charlu in seconding the resolution, said that Hindus were a Sovereign-loving people (Cheers) They were so by tradition, they were so by their religion, they were so by the teachings of their forefathers, and they were so by the deep-seated instincts in them. That being so, it became their duty, their paramount duty, to welcome, in a fitting manner, their future Sovereign. He was the son of their present Sovereign and the grandson of one of the best Sovereigns who ever reigned, and on the paternal side also, a grandson of one who inspired his son with Sovereign advice so far as this country was concerned. From Queen Victoria downwards they had had kindness. She began it, her son their present King promised it, and they hoped it would be continued in the degree in which it had been promised by their future Sovereign. There was no doubt it would be, and it ought to be. So far with regard to according a welcome to the Prince; but there was the Princess also. In this country custom always gave precedence to the lady before the lord. It was therefore their duty to welcome not only the Prince but equally, if not more warmly, the Princess. Both of them would be here in our midst very soon. He hoped and trusted that when the Prince and Princess of Wales went away the historian would say that Madras had given them that warm and enthusiastic reception which, as had been referred to by the Chairman, had been recorded of the time when their present Sovereign visited Madras as the Prince of Wales. With these words he had very great pleasure in seconding the resolution.

The Hon'ble Nawab Syed Mahomed Sahib Bahadur, in supporting the resolution said :—

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I consider it a great honour to associate myself with this resolution. On an occasion like this, when we are about to resolve that a loyal and respectful address of welcome be presented to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on behalf of this Presidency, it is fitting that I should be permitted to recall the close personal relations that have existed between the Royal Family on the one hand, and the people of this country on the other, since India passed to the Crown in (1858). Her late Majesty the Queen Empress Victoria, of revered and beloved memory, took the most kindly and sympathetic interest in India and its people; the very first blessing which Her late Majesty was generously pleased to confer on this country being, as you all know, the famous Proclamation. Her Majesty learned the Hindustani language on purpose to read and write it, and her Indian attendants were her most trusted servants. When His Majesty the King-Emperor, then Prince of Wales, visited India 30 years ago, the proposal had the cordial approval of his illustrious mother. Those of us who can recollect the Royal visit of 1875 will easily recall the extraordinary display of loyal enthusiasm that was then witnessed. Later on, more direct relations were established between the Royal Family and this country, when His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught came out as a soldier to India, and was appointed to the Meerut Command in the eighties. Subsequently, the Duke was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army, and he made many Indian friends, by whom he is still remembered with sincere loyalty and admiration. At the great Coronation Durbar held at Delhi, the King-Emperor was graciously pleased to depute his brother, the Duke of Connaught, to be present as his direct representative, besides his official representative His Excellency the Viceroy. And now, the great honour that this country had in 1875 is about to be repeated. Next to the King and nearest to the Throne stands the Prince of Wales, the Heir-Apparent to the vast, worldwide and mighty British Empire, and, as we all know, His Royal Highness will visit India in the coming winter. It would be superfluous for me to say how joyfully this news has been received in India, and how movements have been set on foot at every place Their Royal Highnesses are likely to visit to give them a suitable reception. It is but meet and proper that we should also receive Their Royal Highnesses in a manner befitting their exalted position, and I would therefore strongly support the resolution now before you, and I am quite certain that it will be carried with great enthusiasm.

The resolution was put to the Meeting and carried unanimously.

Mr. Eardley Norton proposed :—

"That a general committee, with power to add to their number and to form an executive committee, be appointed to frame the address and to make all the necessary arrangements in connection with the reception, and for the entertainment to Their Royal Highnesses and to collect subscriptions."

[A full list of the members of this committee will appear in Monday's issue.]

The speaker said that it was felicitous and appropriate that their President at that night's meeting, for the purpose of making arrangements for welcoming the son, should be the same person who 30 years ago had presented the father with an address of welcome at Madura. During that period of 30 years they had been also able to witness a very appropriate and singular rise in his own fortunes, and although the same person was there to welcome the son as had welcomed the father, still, he now filled a far more distinguished position, by virtue of his eminence, than he did 30 years ago. It was not necessary for him to say much on the resolution. The previous speakers had dwelt on the many excellences of the Royal Prince, in colours which would stand the test of time and truth. Before he proceeded to read out the names of the Committee he would like to make a reference to three points which seemed to him to require some special stress, and to afford special reasons why they in Madras should offer a genuine, hearty and well thought-out welcome to the Prince of Wales. Casting their eyes back over a short number of years they could recollect that the Prince was the grandson of that gracious Queen who, in her long and historic reign, had earned for herself the special gratitude, not only of her Indian subjects, but of every Englishman who believed in her wise and generous administration—of that great Queen who had given them the great Proclamation of 1858, which was a piece of statesmanship all the more laudable and valuable because it had been given to them without any request on their part, and had come to them immediately after the stress and horrors of the Mutiny. There had then been a school of statesmen who believed that clemency was not the proper thing for the natives of the country. She did not accept that theory, but placed her seal upon the Charter of their liberties, which would serve to keep her memory fresh and green in their minds. Another circumstance which was specially connected with the approaching visit, was the fact that the Prince's father, His Gracious Majesty the King-Emperor, had earned for himself the name of "The Pacifier" of the Continent, if not of the whole world, and at the present moment—in fact ever since he ascended the British throne—he had been engaged in the great triumphs and festivities of peace, going through the Continent and elsewhere, everywhere seeking to brush aside the horrors of war and to prove that the happiness of mankind could be best achieved by kindness, by peace and the arts of peace. Those among them who believed that the triumphs of peace were not less glorious than the victories of war would strongly echo the wish that the Prince of Wales would agree with the present King when, in the fulness of time, he came to ascend the Throne, that the wisest, most prudent and abiding course of working in this world was to try to foster a feeling of good will between nation and nation, and thus to attempt to keep them bound together in eternal chains of goodwill and love. There was one other circumstance which also made a special welcome to the Princess of Wales all the more important. She had made herself most distinguished, most beloved, and had endeared herself to all by her personal graces and charm. She had done much to consolidate good-will in her capacity as the daughter of a great Sea-King, and had bound together in the bonds of fraternity and good-feeling, the English and many of the other nations of the Continent. The Prince of Wales was already bound to walk in the footsteps of his father. They ought to receive him and offer him a most hearty welcome, and they could give expression to no more suitable or loyal parting wish than that he should, as he had inherited them in the fulness of his own time, endeavour to carry out the duties sketched for him alike by his grandfather, father and mother.

Mr. Norton then referred to the large number on the Committee and pointed out that as members of the Committee they would soon be called upon and were bound to contribute towards the expenses of the reception. They would require a very large sum of money. In 1875 members of the Committee were divided into two classes. A full blown committee member paid Rs. 50 and had special privileges of admission to all places and functions, and one who paid Rs. 25 had fewer privileges but it was open to such to pay Rs. 50 and be transferred to the higher class. If some such scheme was adopted again, there would be a desirable spirit of emulation amongst members of the Committee created. If a fitting reception was to be given they would have to be extremely generous with their subscriptions. There were three great sources of raising money. The non-official Members of the Legislative Council, by virtue of their position, would have to give very large subscriptions; the second source was the mercantile community, and the third the Vakils, who also should all contribute liberally. He had no doubt that in due course an executive committee would be appointed, and that it would appoint a Secretary, but he would suggest that Mr. P. M. Sivagnana Moodelliar be appointed Secretary to the Committee.

Raja Sir Savalay Ramaswamy Moodelliar seconded the resolution.

The Hon'ble Mr. C. Muthukumaraswamy Moodelliar, in supporting the resolution, said that the Rajah and Zamindars talked of organising a separate entertainment to Their Royal Highnesses. He hoped that they would give up that idea and join the rest of the Presidency.

The resolution was put to the meeting and carried, nem con.

Mr. H. K. Beauchamp proposed a vote of thanks to Sir S. Subramania Iyer for presiding, which was seconded by the Hon'ble Mr. V. C. Desika Chariar, and carried.

A subscription list was opened in the room and a sum of Rs. 4,000 was promised.

Pioneer.—It is expected, we understand, that the work on the Allahabad Victoria Memorial will be completed before the beginning of next cold weather. The authorities had hoped that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales would be able to unveil the statue, but it appears that it has been definitely decided not to include Allahabad in the programme of the Royal tour.

Madras Mail.—The public meeting at the Victoria Hall yesterday evening to concert measures for according a fitting reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to Madras next January was in every way a success, and augurs well for the success of the reception ceremonies themselves in due course. In the absence of His Excellency the Governor it fell to the lot of the next person in the official precedence list, the Officiating Chief Justice, Sir S. Subramania Iyer, to preside at the meeting, and right worthily did he fulfil his duties. In this connection it is interesting to recall the fact that it was the proud privilege of Mr. S. Subramania Iyer (as he then was) to present the address from the second city of the Presidency, Madura, on the occasion of the visit of the present King-Emperor thirty years ago. The resolutions that were proposed and passed at yesterday's meeting were, it will be seen, of a more or less formal character, and they were moved and seconded in eloquent speeches by the Hon'ble Mr. A. J. Yorke, Mr. Ananda Charlu, Mr. Eardley Norton, the Hon'ble Nawab Syed Mahomed Sahib, and others. The real work of organising the reception and entertainment of Their Royal Highnesses, of collecting subscriptions and of devising ways and means, will be done by the Committee, or rather by the Executive Committee, which will have to be appointed. Of one thing we may be sure, namely, that no effort will be spared to give a most loyal, hearty and impressive reception to Their Royal Highnesses. As Sir S. Subramania Iyer remarked, the writer of the official account of the Royal visit of 1875, bore special testimony to the impressiveness of the reception and celebrations in Madras; and there is every reason to hope that Madras will acquit herself with equal credit on this occasion. It is not necessary now to suggest the different forms that might be given to the celebrations, as these will be proposed and considered in due course by the Committee; but we would suggest that special and separate measures should be taken by the ladies, European and Indian, of Madras to give Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales a women's welcome. In Bombay the ladies have already made a move in this direction.

Madras Mail.—Sir,—In your account of His Majesty's visit to Madras thirty years ago you do not mention the function at Perambore, of which I had special charge, and on which the Madras Railway Company spent much money. At this time, this arrangement to give the Royal party their early tea quietly just outside Perambore before they entered Madras officially was thought a great deal of, as the party could not otherwise have obtained refreshment until they got to Government House, the hour fixed for arrival there being so late in the morning. The Royal train from Erode arrived at Perambore at about 6 A.M. Out in the open, nearly opposite to the Locomotive Superintendent's house on one side and the Railway Perambore Works on the other; a special temporary platform was erected next to the main line. On this platform early tea was provided; the tea tables were furnished with the best silver plate, crockery, glass, and linen procurable. The tables were covered with tea cakes and other good things of a quality fit for a King, and it was here in the cool of the morning, and away from the throng, that the Noble Lords and others who accompanied His Majesty had their early morning meal. His Majesty the King had his tea in the carriage and thus it happened that it was the first "Madras Man" who saw and greeted His Majesty on his entering Madras. If His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales again reaches Madras by train, a similar arrangement may have to be made again.

Pioneer.—Brigadier-General Stuart Beaton, who has been sent home on special duty in connection with the Royal tour in India, will return early in July, and various arrangements for the visits of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Native States can then be proceeded with. It is the preliminary work in these cases that is of most importance, for a tour runs smoothly when every detail has carefully been planned out beforehand. The reception which Their Royal Highnesses will get at the hands of the Chiefs honoured with visits are certain to be of a princely kind, both as regards ceremonies and the lighter functions connected with a Royal tour. In some instances sport, in the nature of big-game shooting, will be an item in the programme, and the arrangements for this must be completed well in advance. The shoot in the Nepal Terai will, in particular, be made one that should prove a record in every way.

Rangoon Gazette.—We are enabled to state that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will arrive in Rangoon on January 13th remain here for three days and in Mandalay for two days, returning to Rangoon by river and embarking from here on the Renown.

Hindu.—On the motion of Mr. Sivagnana Mudaliar, seconded by Mr. W. S. Venkataramanjulu Naidu, the Corporation resolved to present an address of welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival at Madras. The Corporation also sanctioned a sum of Rs. 1,000 for the preparation of the casket and the address, and a Committee, consisting of the following Commissioners, was appointed to draft the address and to choose the casket :—Mr. N. Subramanyam, Mr. W. S. Venkatramanjulu Naidu, Mr. W. Ure, and the President.

The meeting then terminated.

31st MAY 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—It has been decided that such public bodies as may be accorded the honour of addressing Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during the Royal tour in India can present ceremonial gifts.

Rangoon Gazette.—A meeting was held at the Town Hall yesterday evening, with Mr. Harvey Adamson in the Chair for the purpose of making preliminary arrangements for the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales. There were present some Government officials and the leading members of the mercantile community of Rangoon. Amongst other proposals, Illumination, Address, Finance and Entertainment Committees were suggested. A list of 120 members was drawn up comprising representatives of the various communities in town, who are to be asked to co-operate in the scheme. It was proposed to have a ball on one of the two evenings to be spent by the Royal Visitors at Government House. The Gymkhana Club, the Pegu Club, the Boat Club, and other public bodies are to be asked to co-operate in making the reception a fitting one. The draft resolutions are to be submitted to the public meeting to be held at the Jubilee Hall on the 15th June, when definite proposals will be recorded to give Their Royal Highnesses fitting reception in January next.

Madras Mail.—At the conclusion of the Municipal Meeting this morning there was some informal discussion in regard to the proposed visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Bangalore early next year, and in this connection the advisability of having the Queen Victoria Statue unveiled by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was discussed. It was thought best to defer the matter to a general meeting of the subscribers to the statue.

Pioneer.—At a meeting of the Corporation of Madras held on 29th May, the Commissioners passed a resolution to present, in a suitable casket, an address of welcome on behalf of the city to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit next January. This will be separate from and in addition to the combined address to be presented on behalf of the people of the Presidency town and of the Presidency generally, arranged at a public meeting a few days ago.

United India and Native States.—When Emperor Edward in his capacity as Prince of Wales entered the city of Bombay it would seem some one of the 'Chiefs' said 'I have seen him after all.' Another 'Chief' is said to have remarked 'I have travelled 600 miles merely to get a glance at the Shazada.' Who could be these 'Chiefs' that had travelled 600 miles? Within 600 miles of Bombay we have none of the 'tribes' and 'clans' who have their 'Chiefs.' Surely the Kathiawar Princes cannot be designated Chiefs by us Indians?

Amrita Bazar Patrika.—We are given to understand that an influential committee has been formed to make arrangements for the proposed meeting at the Town Hall to consider the steps to be taken to accord a reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their approaching visit to Calcutta. The meeting will take place on Saturday, the 1st of July, under the chairmanship of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor. We wish His Honour had nothing to do with the movement, for his connection with it would go in officializing it in a measure and robbing it of its purely popular character. But since it has been settled that His Honour would preside at the meeting, all we have to urge is, as we have done more than once, that the funds raised in this connection be not spent on mere tamashas, but be utilized for some useful and permanent public works which will be more fitting to perpetuate the advent of the Prince to this country than mere displays.

Englishman.—On the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Calcutta during the coming winter, the Corporation, besides presenting an address of welcome in a casket, will present the Princess with a very rare and valuable coloured pearl necklace. The necklace has been selected at a cost of £1,000 by a special committee of the Corporation from the Collection of the Dholpore State Jewels. I understand that an assurance has been received that the gift will be accepted. A Special Committee will be appointed at Wednesday's meeting of the Corporation to draft the address of welcome.

Advocate of India.—We are sure the proposal about requesting His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to open the Congress Exhibition has simply to be thought a little calmly to be pronounced out of court. His Highness will not be at Benares in December. His Royal Highness does indeed come with the set purpose of seeing with his own eyes the wonderful land of India and knowing a little of Indian art and civilisation, and the ostensible object of getting firsthand knowledge of India and her people under Western civilisation. While the glories of British Rule and the gaudiness of Indian Princes and Chiefs shall dazzle his royal eyes, this will be, no occasion for "the feast of reason and flow of soul!" The best thing for the Congress to do is to join the popular movement of giving a hearty welcome to the Royal guests. This can be done by a message from the President. The welcome from the Congress will surely be an all-India affair and much more representative than any that may be organised in any Presidency Town.

Advocate of India.—The Prince and Princess of Wales are now hard working students of Indian subjects. We are told both have studied a good deal of literature about India and its people; they are having free conversations in England with people who know the country. This secondhand knowledge they mean to verify on the spot during their sojourn in the cold weather. As to the sights that they wish to see, we are told, the North-West Frontier has a strange fascination for the Prince, equally with all members of the royal family, perhaps, in the case Prince George, because of its unlikeliness in craggy undulations, sandy dunes and narrow files offering a varied hue under the rising or the setting sun to the extensive even waste of blue waters not yielding to a variety of scenes in morning or evening,—the erstwhile home of the royal 'salt.' Agra, Delhi, Lucknow, and other historic towns will satisfy the archaeological and antiquarian curiosity of the august guests. The laying of the foundation-stone of the Victoria Memorial in Calcutta and the manœuvres near Delhi will be the great events of the tour. The wish of the Prince to see something of the life of the Indian sepoy will be gratified by a few visits to some cantonments. But what about the set purpose of the tour as given out—to learn something about the life, hopes and fears, aims and ambitions of the varied races inhabiting India and Burma? In the tumult and hurry of the events—receptions and levies; dinners and Durbars—we are almost sure Their Royal Highnesses will have to be contented with being practically mere dumb shows or speaking the Anglo-Indian official mind and hearing apke-waste Indians but never Indians of independent but responsible views on matters affecting the interests of India and her people. Is it too much to hope that Their Royal Highnesses should study at least the Report of the last Indian National Congress? Let Sir Pherozshah Mehta make a present of a copy to each of Their Royal Highnesses before they leave the English shores.

Madras Mail.—As it is nearly thirty-five years since the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg, better known as Prince Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh, visited Madras, it may interest many of our readers to learn something of the treatment that he met with here, especially as we are shortly to have a visit from another Royal personage, his nephew, the present Prince of Wales.

He arrived at Calcutta in H.M.S. Galatea, of which he was the Commander, towards the end of February 1870, and proceeded by way of the North-West Provinces to Bombay, where he embarked in the British India Steam Navigation Company's steamer Deccan, and steamed down the West Coast to Beyport, where he was received by the Hon'ble Mr. R. S. Ellis, C.B., Chief Secretary to the Government of Madras; Mr. A. McCallum Webster, Collector of Malabar; Colonel Fordyce, Military Secretary to the Governor; Mr. R. B. Elwin, Agent and Manager of the Madras Railway; Mr. H. E. Church, Traffic Manager; Mr. W. J. Collinson, Locomotive Superintendent, and Mr. G. K. Winter, Telegraph Engineer—all of whom are now dead—as well as by Major (now General) J. H. M. Shaw-Stewart, Consulting Engineer, and others. He was conveyed in a special train, in which he occupied the Governor's saloon to Royapuram, where he arrived at 6-30 on the morning of Tuesday, the 25th March. He was cordially greeted there by Lord Napier, the Governor of Madras, and by Lady Napier, as well as by M. Boutemps, Governor of Pondicherry (a godson of the Emperor Napoleon III), and the Maharaja of Travancore. The Guard of Honour was under the orders of Major-General Sir Rowland Smythe, K.C.B., an Aliwal hero, who commanded what was then the Centre Division of the Madras Army.

The Duke made a State entry into Madras, and was accompanied, among others, by the Members of the Executive and Legislative Councils, the Judges of the High Court, the Raja of Pudukotta, the Zamorin of Calicut, the Nawab of Banganapalle, the Jahirdar of Sandur, the Zemindars of Ramnad, Venkatagiri, Kalastry, Arni, Karvetnugger, and Punganur, the members of the Board of Revenue, the Municipal Commissioners, and the guests of the Governor. Instead of passing along the First Line Beach, the cortège passed through the less breezy, but more characteristic Thumboo Chetty Street, which traverses Black Town from north to south, and which had been cleaned, swept, and decorated for the occasion. The houses on each side of this interesting thoroughfare were crowded at every point, and the people were packed as thickly as circumstances allowed in the narrow space between the walls of the houses and the roadway. Then was the Lighthouse Esplanade reached. From that point the journey was easy to the Island, and the procession halted near the Munro Statue, where 9,000 school children were assembled in galleries erected for the purpose. Led by Mr. J. T. Mayne, the organist, the choir of St. George's Cathedral, commenced to sing the National Anthem, and were soon joined by the whole body of school children. Then followed a great burst of cheering, and the procession moved on, and duly reached Government House. Here a large number of ladies and gentlemen were gathered together, and military officers in uniform not a few. Breakfast followed in due course.

At noon the Duke received at Government House the Addresses of the general community and of the Chamber of Commerce of Madras. Replying to the former, he said:—"In your city I bring to a close a visit to India which will be among the most memorable epochs of my life and during which I have had the privilege of receiving so many satisfactory proofs of the loyal devotion which the people entertain for the Queen. And replying to the latter he remarked:—"The spirit of contentment and hopefulness which animates your Address deserves my warm approbation, and it pleases me especially to observe that you do not desire to impress upon me the relative commercial importance of your capital so much on the improving prosperity of her large native population." He also expressed the hope that the Home authorities would approve of measures being taken to secure a safe and commodious harbour at Madras, which may "add one more to the number of those achievements which English skill and English energy have successfully accomplished."

On the night of the 22nd March the Governor held a reception at the Banqueting Hall in honour of the Duke, when a large number of presentations, both of ladies and gentlemen, were made to His Royal Highness. Azim Jah, the Venerable Prince of Arcot, was one of the most noticeable figures in the group of Native Prince on this occasion. On the following night Lord and Lady Napier gave a Ball at the Banqueting Hall, in honour of the Duke, and it proved to be one of the most brilliant functions of the kind that had ever been witnessed in that historic and handsome edifice. The Maharaja of Travancore, Prince Azim Jah, and many Rajas and Zemindars were present. The Duke danced with Lady Napier, Miss Garstin, and Miss Macdonnell. Lady Napier proved an incomparable hostess; and the courtly dignity of the Governor inspired his guests with admiration. On Thursday night, the 24th, a magnificent entertainment was given by the native community on the Esplanade in honour of the Prince. A pandal, 200 feet long by 120 feet broad, was erected for the purpose, and when decorated, native fashion, was marvelously beautiful. It was lighted by very numerous chandeliers and Argand lamps, and the open space around was most effectively illuminated by 20,000 small oil chattles. An Address from the native community was read by Mr. Vencatasamy Naidu—a particularly handsome dubash, of whom the Queen subsequently took some notice when he visited Scotland. The Prince in his reply expressed his sincere thanks for the enthusiastic reception that had been given to him. "The privilege," he remarked, "which it is my good fortune to enjoy in being the first member of the Royal Family of England who has visited India is one of which I shall always be proud." He added:—"I leave your hospitable shores with keen regret, but it is no small consolation to me to reflect that I take my departure accompanied by your hearty good will and wishes. I shall always look back with pleasure to my too brief visit to Madras. I can never forget the kindness and hospitality of the inhabitants, to whom I now bid a reluctant farewell."

On the following night a Ball was given in the Duke's honour at the Madras Club, and proved a splendid affair. On Saturday, the 26th, the Duke spent a comparatively quiet day, but took the opportunity to visit several public institutions under the guidance of his host. On the following morning, he embarked in the Galatea, every honour being shown to him on his way to the Pier, and while he was crossing the anchorage in the Galatea's cutter. The visit proved a grand success from start to finish, and formed, as was said at the time, one of the most gratifying events in the social history of this Presidency.

Indian Daily News.—General Stuart Beaton has had so much to attend to in London that he will not arrive in India as early as he is expected. He is now timed to reach Bombay by S.S. Caledonia on Friday, the 23rd instant.

Madras Mail.—Special saloon railway carriages are being built at Ajmer for the use of the Prince and Princess of Wales next winter. They are intended, primarily, for the metre gauge lines in Rajputana, but are to have interchangeable wheels to enable them to be conveyed upon the broad gauge from one metre gauge railway to another.

Rangoon Gazette.—Under instructions received from Major Strickland, Commissioner of Mandalay Division, an ordinary meeting of the Mandalay Municipal Committee was called by Count Calderari, Secretary of the Municipality, on Friday, to consider what arrangements should be made for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their visit to Mandalay. The main object of the meeting was to sanction a suitable allotment of funds for expenditure. Mr. Lutter, Government Advocate, thought that the Municipal Committee should sanction Rs. 5,000. It will be remembered that on the occasion of Lord Curzon's visit a certain sum was sanctioned, and whether that amount was fully spent or not, it was the opinion of some that the welcome and entertainment provided were scarcely worthy.

The preparations for the Viceregal visit were rather hurried over. The reception pandal was not what it should have been in regard to comfort and accommodation. Mr. H. N. Hirjee at Friday's meeting remarked that the issue of tickets of invitation to those entitled to be present at the reception pandal as well as to representative citizens ought to be in the hands of the Municipal Committee, and not as on the occasion of the Viceregal visit, when much dissatisfaction was felt. This led to the President enquiring how and by whom were the invitation tickets issued before. Maung Tha Nyo, A. T. M., the Akunwun, informed the President that the tickets were issued under the orders of the Deputy Commissioner and himself as Secretary to the Reception Committee. In regard to sports, such as pves and boat-races, the entertainment will be very much in the fashion of what was accorded to Lord Curzon. The general meeting has yet to be called. It is hoped due notice will be given and a suitable time fixed upon, such as a Saturday evening, when most business men will be able to attend. Arrangements should be made to make the public meeting a representative one. The drawing up of the address has been entrusted to Mr. McCallum, the Vice-President of the Mandalay Municipality, Mr. Hirjee and a Burmese gentleman.

Indian Daily News.—When His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales visits India in the coming cold weather he may be expected to take very considerable interest in the working of Indian Hospitals, and we shall not be surprised to hear of His Royal Highness desiring to visit the principal hospitals at the big cities in India which are to be included in the Royal tour. His Royal Highness recently paid a surprise visit to the London Hospital, and it was not until he had been all through the various wards with Sir Frederick Treves that the identity of the Royal visitor leaked out. By the patients the Prince was supposed to be a medical man; and some of them had a conversation with him without recognising his identity. The advantages of such an inspection are obvious. Nothing can be got up for show. The treatment of the sufferers is exhibited in all its details just as it goes on from day to day, and the visitor has every opportunity of judging for himself how the King's desire for the comfort of his sick subjects is being fulfilled. By the time the inspection was over the students had all come to know their visitor, and gave him a farewell which was in striking contrast to his reception. The Prince went first to the lupus ward where the Finsen Light in which the Queen is greatly interested was displaying its beneficent effects.

Pall Mall Gazette.—It is believed that the Prince and Princess of Wales will begin their voyage to India at Genoa, travelling overland to the Italian port. Presumably, if this route be chosen, it will be in order that the Princess may avoid the stormy waters of the Bay of Biscay. Captain the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt, on commissioning the Renown, is to be given the rank of Commodore, second class, and will hoist his broad pennant on September 1st. About October 8th the Renown will leave Portsmouth, calling at Gibraltar, and proceeding thence to Genoa to embark her Royal passengers. Such, at least, is the programme as at present mapped out. When the refit of the Renown is completed the Prince and Princess are expected to run down to Portsmouth to have a look over the ship. Some members of the Royal suite are to be accommodated aboard the cruiser Terrible, which is now fitting out for the purpose.

Muhammadan.—When Society, now on the Blue Hills, is back in towns—that is, next cold season, which embraces the remnant of one year and the beginning of the next—life in Madras will be crowded with events—the chiefest of which will be the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to our town. Against this coming, thought has to be taken—hence the Sheriff's meeting recently held at the Victoria Hall where speeches were made, preliminaries were settled and Rs. 4,000 promised—a nest egg which will draw enough of money for our reception of the Royal pair, an event to be written in red letters.

In the first instance, hospitality to a guest is involved: one who cometh to us, should always be made welcome. But the intending visitors are no ordinary persons—they are the son of our King and that son's consort, and as they are Royal, our reception of them should be right royal; and we hope that so it may be, our purses opening wide in response to the appeal for means. It is not necessary to affirm our loyalty and to elaborate the reason for it, as it goes without saying. It is enough for us that the Prince is the son of our King, and as those in the past welcomed the father so will we living in the present welcome his Royal son whom, with his consort, King Edward is sending to see this great land and its divers and diverse peoples.

We owe these tours to a Happy Thought of our late good and great Queen who saw in them no mere empty pageant but a deep political meaning and a bond binding the hearts of the people to the Throne and consequently to the Empire of which it is the splendid symbol. There will be of course, as the officials share in it, the ball and the reception and in the popular—well what? Illuminated public buildings, and streets and pyrotechnics come in; but after that, what? that is the question. When the Duke of Edinburgh came, it was a nautch held on the 'maidan,' where the High Court buildings now stand; when, after the lapse of some years, the Prince of Wales came, it was the nautch over again—a gorgeous Oriental spectacular display, held in the Royapuram Railway Station, the prosy platforms of which were, by the deft fingers of Tanjore artists, metamorphosed into a mammoth bower of gold and tinsel paper—a scene greatly enjoyed by the august visitor and giving him a view of one of the trends and tints of Indian social life, in which the nautch is a deep-rooted perennial, asserting itself in all forms of ceremonial. Most probably, then—if the purists do not prevail—a nautch we shall have, the majority of the contributors to the Reception Fund being Hindus, presumably.

Passing this by we would suggest a Fair in the People's Park—a monster fête, far outpassing all that have been, and where the concentrated multitude may have a chance of a satisfying view of the Royal guests, who will be asked to visit the scene. But as this is an intrusion on the province of the managing committee, who will take arrangements in hand, and we are still too long away off from the visit to discuss details, we close with an expression of our unbounded satisfaction at the prospect of meeting our Royal guests face to face—a feeling shared by the entire Muhammadan population which, if less demonstrative, because it has not been as yet broken in, so to speak, into the procedure associated with public movements, is not one whit less loyal to the wearer of the English Crown than—and will welcome the Heir-Apparent with as warm an enthusiasm as—the rest of His Majesty's lieges.

Indian Daily News.—The adjourned third ordinary monthly meeting of the Corporation of Calcutta was held yesterday afternoon in the Council Chamber of the Municipal Office, and there were present, besides the Acting Chairman, Mr. C. F. Payne, about twenty-five Commissioners. The meeting was not a very lively one, the items considered being mostly of a formal character. One of the items was to appoint a Special Committee to draft an address of welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to Calcutta, and to select a suitable casket for its presentation. At a previous meeting of the Corporation held on the 7th March last, it was decided to provide Rs. 20,000 in the Budget for an address and present to Their Royal Highnesses and appoint a Special Committee to select a suitable present. The present has already been selected, and will cost Rs. 15,000. The available balance for the address and casket is Rs. 5,000.

The Acting Chairman proposed that a Special Committee, composed of six members besides the Chairman, be appointed. The Committee would consist of the following gentlemen:—Mr. J. G. Apcar, Mr. Shirley Tremearne, Hon'ble Babu Nalin Behari Sircar, Mr. E. M. D. Cohen, Moulvie Seraj-ul-Islam, Mr. R. H. M. Rustumjee, and the Chairman. The motion was put to vote and carried.

Rangoon Gazette.—A public meeting was held at the Jubilee Hall last evening to make arrangements for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, in January next. Mr. Justice Harvey Adamson was in the Chair and the meeting was attended by about three hundred and fifty gentlemen of the various communities in Rangoon. It was decided to take steps to suitably receive and entertain Their Royal Highnesses, and to present an address, and the various sub-committees appointed were to be asked to decorate the streets and illuminate the Dalhousie Park in honour of the visit. An Arrival Sub-Committee, an Address Sub-Committee, Streets Decorations Sub-Committee, Illuminations Sub-Committee, Finance Sub-Committee, and Entertainment Sub-Committee were formed, and the Port Commissioners and the Municipal Committee were to be asked to contribute towards the fund to be raised for the purpose of the reception and entertainment of Their Royal Highnesses.

Indian Daily News.—The forthcoming visit of the Prince of Wales to India recalls the visit paid by the King when Prince of Wales in 1874-75. The following special correspondents, according to the Westminster Gazette, represented British newspapers on that occasion:—Dr. Russel. The Times. Archibald Forbes, Daily News. G. A. Henty. The Standard. J. Drew Gay, Daily Telegraph. —Major, The Echo. Geo. Wheeler, Central News. Wm. Trant, several provincial papers and The Times of India. Of these, Forbes, Henty, Gay, and Major are dead; Mr. Wheeler is in the Privy Council Office, and Mr. Trant is now practising as a barrister in Regina, Canada. The newspaper artists included Mr. Simpson of the Illustrated London News, who is dead, and Mr. Herbert Johnson, who represented the Graphic.

Madras Mail.—A meeting of the members of the Prince of Wales' Reception General Committee (Madras) was held this morning at the Victoria Public Hall.

On the motion of Mr. Beauchamp, seconded by Mr. M. Venkatasawmy Naidu, the Hon'ble Sir S. Subramania Iyer was voted to the chair.

Mr. P. M. Sivagnana Moodelliar, the Honorary Provisional Secretary, then read letters and telegrams from the following gentlemen, sympathising with the movement:—

The Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor, the Maharajah of Bobbili, His Highness the Raja of Pudukkottah, the Raja of Venkatagiri, and the Zemindar of Ettiyapuram.

The Raja of Pudukkottah promised to subscribe Rs. 1,000.

Mr. P. M. Sivagnana Moodelliar proposed the addition of several names to the General Committee.

The motion was duly seconded and carried.

Mr. S. D. Pears moved, and Dewan Bahadur V. Krishnama Chariar seconded, that the Hon'ble Sir S. Subramania Iyer be elected Chairman of the General and Executive Committees.—Carried.

The Hon'ble Sir S. Subramania Iyer moved, and Mr. H. K. Beauchamp seconded, that Messrs. H. C. King, Mahomed Suftur Hussian, and the Hon'ble Mr. V. C. Desika Chariar be appointed Honorary Secretaries.—Carried.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. C. Desika Chariar moved and Mr. G. Narayanaswamy Chetty seconded:—"That the General Committee do now proceed to elect by ballot an Executive Committee of 30, including the Chairman and Honorary Secretaries, with power to fill vacancies to form sub-committees of themselves and others, to frame the address and to make all the necessary arrangements in connection with the reception and entertainment, and to collect subscriptions."

Some of the members present thought that it would be very difficult to ballot for the Executive Committee out of such a large Committee, and that it would be better to propose names and vote upon them.

The Chairman said that he had drawn up a representative list with some care and he would read out the names to the meeting.

Mr. Beauchamp said that Sir S. Subramania Iyer's selection was sure to be acceptable to all, and if the names were read, the meeting might adopt them.

Sir S. Subramania Iyer said that he would read his names and anyone might suggest other names if they desired. The list, read out, was then carried unanimously:—

Rao Bahadur L. D. Swamikannu Pillai moved that Messrs. Arbutnot & Co. be requested to act as Honorary Treasurers.

Mr. N. Appusundaram Pillai seconded the motion, which was carried.

The proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chair, proposed by Mr. W. E. Clarke.

18TH JUNE 1905.

Morning Post.—A Rangoon correspondent, writing under date 12th instant, says:—"We are having a lot of rain here and it is pretty cool. We are all very excited about the plague. It is really nothing at all compared with the havoc the disease is making in the Punjab and Northern India, but the people here were so anxious to keep it out—and did keep it out—that now the plague has really put in an appearance there is a tendency to magnify the danger."

Ancient my remarks on the plague published in my last week's notes a correspondent from Simla writes as follows:—

"Adverting to your remarks in last week's paper anent the alarming increase of plague, it is a matter for grave consideration whether the visit of the Prince of Wales will not intensify the scourge. Though the fact is sedulously suppressed it is undoubtedly true that the assembly at Delhi in 1903 was the cause of the alarming impetus in plague we have since witnessed. Every district in India—whether plague-infected or not—sent its thousands to the Coronation Darbar with the inevitable result that the terrible malady was disseminated far and wide and into areas previously immune. Is it intended that the fatal error of 1903 shall be repeated in 1905? If so, the blood of the victims must be upon the heads of those who, with the awful crime of 1903 yet unexpiated, deliberately arrange the details for another gathering. There is, however, yet time to avert the evil by asking His Royal Highness to defer if not to cancel his visit, and by devoting the money allotted for his entertainment to the eradication of the fell disease."

There was, there is not the slightest doubt, more than one fact "sedulously suppressed" in connection with the 1903

Darbar; but whether the Darbar was responsible for the spread of plague I do not know. I should think it very likely however. There will however be no gathering at Delhi in 1905 on anything like the scale of two years ago—that's a comfort anyhow. It is true also that the pestilence under hot weather conditions now shows a greatly lessened mortality bill; but no one has the slightest reason for supposing that it will not revive again towards the end of the year and during the cold weather. In fact according to Dr. Creighton's gloomy forecast India is likely to be more heavily stricken with this fell and obstinate disease than ever.

Whether the presence of the plague should be held of sufficient importance to serve as a valid reason for the postponement of the visit of His Royal Highness is, no doubt, a question on which people will hold various opinions. It certainly is a remarkable instance of the profound want of earnestness which underlies modern civilization that we find Municipalities voting thousands of rupees of the tax-payers' money for illumination, fireworks and so forth, while a like expenditure on account of plague suppressive measure is too often conspicuous by its absence. Personally there is, in my humble opinion, something intensely incongruous in the conjunction of a special season of darbars, and junketings and tamashas of sorts and a plague-stricken land. One does not need to be an out and out supporter of the "no more cakes and ale" doctrine to see this.

On the other hand, the Royal visit at a time when India is sorely stricken must be taken as an indication that our future King—Emperor regards the Imperial duties of his high station towards this great dependency as not lightly to be ignored even though the sickness which killeth in the noonday stalks the land. It is not the Prince of Wales's fault that he will be followed by the trail of the tamasha whithersoever he goes. Left to himself I have no doubt he would like to visit India incognito as he visited a London Hospital the other day. Politically I regard the visit of considerable importance. Afar the King is an abstraction. Seen by the eyes of thousands and thousands as His Royal Highness will be he will appeal to the sense of the native as the concrete embodiment of the kingship which to kingship succeeds. And that I think will be good. And should the visit of His Royal Highness only be coincident with a decreased plague mortality, the Native of India would infallibly see in his presence a wonder and a sign. So mote it be. But even making all allowance for the long arm of coincidence this I suppose is too much to hope for. We must fight the fell disease by means of skill, courage, science and a hope that knows no faltering.

Punjabec.—The Municipal Committee of Delhi has, for the present, allotted Rs. 10,000 to be spent in connection with the coming Royal visit. Of this amount a sum of Rs. 500 will be spent on the address of welcome to be presented to the Prince and the Princess of Wales, while the silver casket, enamelled with gold, in which the document will be enclosed, will cost Rs. 1,000. Rs. 2,000 will be expended on repairing and ornamenting the road between the local railway station and the Circuit House, where the Royal guests will be accommodated. The Government has ordered the addition of two more rooms to the House at the cost of over Rs. 3,000. The fireworks to be displayed on the occasion will cost Rs. 3,000, and Rs. 1,000 will be spent on illuminating the city. Another Rs. 1,000 will be spent in sweets to be distributed to the students of the various local schools and colleges.

The members of the Municipal Committee are also collecting money among themselves to feed the poor for two days consecutively in honour of the visit.

Blackburn Northern Daily Telegraph.—As the Prince of Wales desires to see what real fighting in India would be like, Lord Kitchener is arranging that military manoeuvres on an altogether unprecedented scale shall be held during the forthcoming Royal visit. The manoeuvres will be continuous, and will, in the main, represent a series of movements with great battles for the conquest of India. The Prince is anxious to see a certain amount of night work during the active operations, and he will probably accompany Lord Kitchener and his staff to a camp some miles from the head-quarters camp, where the Princess and the bulk of the party will remain. Lord Kitchener's view is that the ordinary manoeuvres, which take the form of a grand review, or a series of day operations, are meaningless, although they may be "brilliant" and impressive to the spectator.

Manchester Guardian.—I believe that the form of the military display in India during the visit of the Prince of Wales has been to some extent determined by a consideration of what would be most effective for the natives. The Prince has been much interested in the plans, and it was thought that as a mere pageant a review would not be likely to make the visit all that it might be in their minds. The great point that has been aimed at, I am told, is that the manoeuvres should be continuous, and they will go on by night as well as by day in the effort to produce war conditions. Several officers of distinction in India will be attached to the Prince, and he and the Commander-in-Chief, with a small staff, will camp every night at some little distance from head-quarters. No doubt there has also been in the drawing up of the plans an idea that in this way the Prince would be brought nearer to the army and would be more seen of the men than at the distance and in the formality of a review. At the same time one sees in a rather emphatic way the tendency which has already been noticed in some of the King's recent military inspections to see the men at work and to get away from the artificial affair that a review must always be.

Englishman.—Letter to the Sheriff of Calcutta from 500 most respectable residents of Calcutta.

We, the undersigned, request you to convene, at an early date, a public meeting in the Town Hall, in order to afford the residents of this Province, and the citizens of Calcutta, an opportunity of expressing their satisfaction at the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Calcutta, and to enable them to consider what steps should be taken to offer a loyal and enthusiastic reception to Their Royal Highnesses.

In compliance with the above requisition I do hereby convene a public meeting of the residents of the Province of Bengal and the citizens of Calcutta to be held at the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Saturday, the 1st July next, at 5 P. M.

E. CABLE, Sheriff of Calcutta.

20th June 1905.

Native States and Northern India.—The Raja of Pudukota contributes a sum of Rs. 1,000 towards the expense of an entertainment which the people of Madras propose to give the Prince and Princess of Wales. Why should the Raja go out of his way to finance a scheme in which the people of his State have no voice?

23RD JUNE 1905.

The Morning Post.—The Civil and Military Gazette learns on high authority that on the occasion of his forthcoming visit the Prince of Wales will hold a Provincial Durbar at Lahore and a Native State Durbar at Jammu. It is probable that a Grand Imperial Durbar will be held at Delhi, and an Imperial or Provincial Durbar at Calcutta.

Times of India.—At their meeting yesterday, the Bombay Municipal Corporation considered the question of adopting measures to give a suitable welcome to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit to this country. The Hon. Sir P. M. Mehta presided.

Sir Bhalechandra Krishna moved:—“That the corporation do vote a loyal address of welcome to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their approaching visit to India. (2) That a committee composed of the councillors named be appointed to draft the address and to suggest, in co-operation with the Commissioner and after consultation with Government, if necessary, the manner in which it should be presented. (3) That on the recommendation of the standing committee, the corporation will be prepared to sanction the necessary outlay for illuminating the address and for a suitable casket to contain it, and for any other necessary expenses in connection with the address.”

Sir Bhalechandra said:—The proposition that I have now to submit to the Corporation for approval is a very pleasant and agreeable one, and hardly needs from me any words to recommend it for your acceptance. The long-hoped-for event—full of promise and hopes for our future—will become an accomplished fact before the year is out, and it is in the fitness of things that we—the citizens of the “urbs prima in India” should adequately rise to the height of the occasion and prove ourselves worthy of the great city of which we are all so proud (hear, hear). India will witness in a few short months the presence amongst us of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and it will be our proud privilege to accord them the very first welcome on their arrival on Indian shores. It is hardly necessary for me to dilate on the utility and importance of such Royal visits. To us Indians the King is but the embodiment of all that is good and noble, and the presence amongst us of our future Emperor cannot but serve to stir our hearts to their inmost depths, and call forth feelings of genuine loyalty and affection to the throne. We Orientals yield to none in our sentiments of loyalty to our Sovereign, and the more we afforded occasions for the display of those sentiments the better it is for the interests of the rulers and the ruled. Besides evoking sentiments of loyalty, such royal visits serve to bring the members of the Royal family into personal and actual contact with the subject races of India, and enable them to acquaint themselves at first hand with our hopes and ambitions, our needs and aspirations. It was such noble sentiments as these that prompted the late Queen-Empress of India to send out her royal sons to convey to us her message of sympathy and love. It is like a stroke of genuine statecraft on the part of our present King-Emperor that prompts him to send out to us their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to intimate to us that India holds no mean corner in his noble heart, and engages no small portion of his affections. It is but meet that we two should evince our sentiments in a manner worthy of ourselves and worthy of the Royal family. It is now thirty years since Bombay as the gate of India had the precious and unique privilege of according the very first welcome to the then Prince of Wales and now our King-Emperor. Now we are once again afforded a similar opportunity to exercise that highly cherished privilege to welcome amongst us the Prince of Wales our future King-Emperor—with his royal consort. Such occasions are but few and far between, and the more reason it is therefore that we should fully realise the importance of the occasion and perform our part of the duty in a manner which will unmistakably demonstrate the fact that we are no less inspired with sentiments of genuine loyalty to the King-Emperor than those who enjoy the proud privilege of being nearer His Majesty's person and Throne. I am, therefore, confident that you will accord your unanimous approval to the proposition which I have the pleasure to place before you. (Applause.)

The Hon. Mr. Ibrahim Rahimtoola, in seconding the proposition, said he agreed with the sentiments that had been so eloquently given expression to by Sir Bhalechandra Krishna. It would be their proud privilege to offer the first welcome to Their Royal Highnesses and he was sure that this city would accord a welcome which would benefit the proud position which it occupied in this country. (Applause.)

Dr. N. N. Katrak, in supporting the proposition, said it was well known that her late Majesty Empress-Victoria had a great love for India and in order to give practical proof of her regard she was graciously pleased to send her son and heir, the present King-Emperor, to this country to have a personal experience of the Indian people. The experience then gained by the then Prince of Wales had been of such great use to him as King-Emperor, that the people of India now reaped the benefit of that experience in various shapes at his hands. His Majesty the King-Emperor following the noble precedent of his late mother had thought fit to send his son to this country, so that he might also be benefited by personal experience of its people. They hoped that the experience which His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales would now gain would stand him in good stead whenever he was called upon to rule over them. It was the duty of the people on this occasion to justify their appreciation of the benefits they had received from the Royal Family by giving Their Royal Highnesses such welcome as might ever remain green in his memory. (Applause.)

Dr. N. H. G. Sukhia said the proposition was wanting in one most important respect, and it was this that the occasion being a unique one all the Councillors should be allowed to sign the address. He thought by calling upon every number to sign the address they would be in a position to show that they each and all wished from their heart to accord a loyal welcome to the royal visitors, and that it was not true, as had been alleged in some quarters, that some of them were merely lip loyal and not truly loyal. Dr. Sukhia then said that though Bombay called itself the first city in India, it had lagged behind Calcutta and Madras in the point of voting a sum to celebrate the visit. As they knew, the Calcutta Municipality had already sanctioned a sum of Rs. 25,000. He thought they should also adopt measures in that direction. He then moved an amendment, adding the following words to the second clause of Sir Bhalechandra's proposition, "and what measures should be taken and what amount should be contributed by the Corporation to suitably celebrate in Bombay the auspicious occasion of Their Royal Highnesses' arrival in this country and to consider the advisability of having the address sealed as usual and signed by all Municipal Councillors on this unique occasion."

Mr. Joseph Baptista seconded the amendment.

The Hon. Mr. G. O. Dunn said that it seemed to him that instead of each member being called upon to sign the address it would be infinitely better to say that the address was passed with the unanimous vote of the Corporation. It was possible that some members might not be present in Bombay at the time of signing the address, and such an omission was likely to lead one to imagine that it was not voted unanimously. (Hear, hear.)

The Hon. Ibrahim said it was better and more fitting that the President should sign the address on behalf of all members. (Hear, hear.) As to the other point raised by Dr. Sukhia. Mr. Ibrahim said that it was intended that when the public movement, that had already been set on foot, decided upon certain steps in connection with the celebration of the visit, the Corporation would contribute a sum of money towards it. (Hear, hear.) The same practice had been followed on the occasion of the King's Coronation.

The amendment was then put to the vote and lost by a large majority. The proposition was then unanimously carried.

Alhaq.—The announcements that are being made from time to time in newspaper columns about the proposed movements of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during their coming Indian tour in winter next are received by the public with great interest, and preparations are being enthusiastically made everywhere to give a fitting reception to the Royal Visitors. No other people can surpass Indians in loyalty and devotion to their Sovereign and it is not difficult to imagine the great enthusiasm and the keen interest with which the people whose well-known characteristic has been to attach a certain amount of divinity to royalties, have been looking forward to the approaching visit of the future Emperor and Empress of India. The few dissentient voices that are being heard at short intervals from quarters pessimistic about the financial aspect of the question should not be supposed to express the feelings of the public, because the very quarters from which they emanate are indicative enough of the non-public character of the views expressed. Some of the papers, especially the Congress organs, have got into a habit of criticising Government measures in a manner calculated to discredit the British Government in the estimation of the public, but such criticisms represent the views of only the discontented few. The mere fact of Mohamedans who form a large and important section of His Majesty's Indian subjects having as a nation openly dissociated themselves from the Congress movement should be enough to convince one that the views expressed by the Congress papers could not be those held by Mohamedans and others having nothing to do with that movement. To those who have inherited the habits and traditions of devotion and attachment to their Chiefs, such as whom we find in a very great majority among the Sindhis and Baluchis around us, no price would appear too great which would bring them face to face with their future Sovereign, and enable them to behold the one whom they consider to be God's shadow on earth. Nor could any reasonable man grudge the expenses to be incurred in consequence of Their Royal Highnesses' visit to India, for the manifold advantages that are expected to accrue from this visit will amply recompensate all the troubles that will be taken to make The Royal trip a pleasant and successful one. If the rulers and the ruled are brought together closer; if they are given an occasion to more directly know each other; if the presence of the royalties passes a fresh current of loyalty among the subjects and inspires the masses with that love which Royal presence in India usually inspires; and if the Prince of Wales finds opportunities to acquire an intimate knowledge of a very important part of the British Dominions, and becomes personally acquainted with the general condition of a devoted population; no one will deny that the event occasioning all this would be productive of immense good.

It will be interesting to learn that Their Royal Highnesses are also looking forward with keen interest and eagerness to their visit to this interesting, historical and romantic land, for at the last annual banquet of the Royal Academy, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales said:—"Naturally the Princess and I are looking forward with keen interest to our visit to India next winter. We shall have ample opportunities of realising the wonderful works of art created by India in the past. While in that country I hope to have the pleasure of laying the foundation stone of the Queen Victoria Memorial Hall at Calcutta, and I shall be proud to be thus associated with the first great architectural work which India, under the British Crown, has inaugurated. I believe it is hoped that some day the galleries of that vast building may contain historical pictures by British artists. I trust, therefore, that this memorial to our late loved sovereign may be a further means of more closely knitting together the Mother Country and the great continent of India in the happy and powerful bonds of art." It will therefore be seen that the idea of "more closely knitting together" England and India has been prominently occupying His Royal Highness' mind and a Prince of his views will find many opportunities of making the union between the two countries closer, coming nearer home, we cannot but feel proud at the honour done us by selecting Karachi—the capital of Sind, as a departing seaport for the Royal Visitors to leave for Home on completion of their pleasant tour. The pleasure has been really great which this prudent selection has afforded to the people of this province who are mostly Mohamedans and whose loyalty was testified in most unmistakable terms in the period so far back as 1857 by Sir Bartle Frere, the then ruler of the Province. They are anxiously looking forward for the time when they think they shall have the pleasure of seeing and expressing feelings of genuine loyalty to the Heir-Apparent to the British throne. But considering over what may probably prove in the end to be a cause of disappointment to the masses we take the liberty of commending to the favourable consideration of the authorities the following recommendation made by the Indian Ladies' Magazine while writing on the subject:—

"In this connection we should like to suggest that those who have the charge of the arrangements connected with the Royal Tour should make a point of giving the masses, the working and poorer classes and especially the women and children of these classes every opportunity of having a sight of their future Sovereigns. It is generally the privileged and richer classes that have the opportunity of seeing over and over again any distinguished visitors that come to India, whilst the working classes are scrupulously excluded from such privileges. Why should this be so in the case of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses? They should try and form an idea of 'Actual India,' of India as it is with its teeming millions that live and die without any adequate idea of the benevolent Government under which they live. To them the Government is represented chiefly by the harsh tax-gatherer and the over-bearing village official. A glimpse to them of the gracious rulers, whose subjects they are, will serve as a political education of the greatest consequence. The above suggestion if accepted and acted upon in Sind will produce a very favourable impression upon the Zemindars."

Praja Bandhu.—It is rumoured that in commemoration of the forthcoming visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to this country a substantial reduction in the salt tax will be made by the Government of India. If this rumour turns out eventually to be true, there is not the least doubt that it will give great satisfaction to the poor portion of our countrymen, for it cannot be denied that the recent reduction in the tax in March last has on the whole given a certain amount of relief to those most in need of it, although it is not unlikely that in a few small and out of the way hamlets this may not have been the case. This however is not the fault of the Government. In view of the fact that not only the use of a certain quantity of salt is absolutely necessary to keep a human being in a healthy condition, but its use in certain proportions is necessary for a vigorous and healthy growth of vegetable life; it has been often urged in the past that the tax on salt should be altogether abolished. The present somewhat heavy price of salt does not permit the poor portion of our people to make a free use of it and preserve their normal health, and the low vitality thus brought about is one of the reasons why so many of them readily succumb to various diseases. It is therefore urgently necessary that if it be not possible to altogether abolish the salt tax, a substantial portion of it at least should be remitted. And since no occasion would be more opportune than that of the visit to this country of our future Emperor for a boon like this, we trust the Government of India, especially in view of the large Budget surpluses of recent years, will avail of this opportunity of commemorating this visit in a way acceptable to the large mass of the people of this country.

Hindu.—The magnetic influence of the personality of our great King-Emperor is felt, if somewhat vaguely, by the millions in this country as a most beneficent one. There are many at this moment who have had the good fortune to see His Imperial Majesty when as Prince of Wales he visited this country thirty years ago and the message which His Majesty sent to this country at the time of his Coronation was instinct with deep affection and solicitude for the welfare of all classes of his subjects in this country. A fresh proof of that regard for their wellbeing is shown by His Majesty in having deputed the Heir Apparent to the Throne to make a visit to this country and to obtain, as we trust and believe, some reliable knowledge of the conditions of life prevailing in this distant part of the Empire. Under such circumstances, there is very reason for the intelligent portion of this country to cherish a feeling of loyal affection for their Sovereign and to devoutly wish for many happy returns of this his birth-day.

Rangoon Gazette.—Major-General Beatson, who has been to England with reference to the Prince of Wales' tour, arrived in Bombay in the Caledonia this morning. He informed the Times of India representative that the arrangements now awaited the approval of the Viceroy after which a public announcement would probably be made.

World.—The Prince and Princess of Wales will find their time during their visit to India next cold weather fully occupied if they attend all the functions which are being prepared for them. All the big towns, and many of the smaller ones, are expecting to have the light of the Royal countenances shed upon them, and are busy preparing addresses of welcome together with the magnificent caskets to contain their expression of loyalty. I hear that General Beatson is coming out from home next month as the Royal avant-courier in order to make the final bundhobust. One of the most pleasant features of the tour should be the shoot in Nepal which the Maharajah will give. Nepal is very carefully preserved, and is tabu' to the Englishman in search of something to kill.

Indian Daily News.—The Prince and Princess of Wales will visit Jammu in the first week of December.

Advocate of India.—A local contemporary recently published a resumé of the notable occurrences which happened in Bombay during the visit of the Prince of Wales thirty years ago, and, in alluding to the scene at the Dockyard said: "The Prince, slowly proceeding up the slip, greeted Sir Salar Jung, the Minister of Hyderabad, who seemed somewhat uneasy at the absence of the Nizam." According to the official historian-grapher of the tour, Salar Jung's apprehensions concerning the reception of the Hyderabad deputation were not manifested on the day of the Prince's landing, as he was the first person in that notable assemblage presented to the Heir Apparent by the Viceroy, but at Government House, on the day after, when paying his State visit. "Then," remarks Sir William Russell, "few words passed, but the Minister seemed diffident. His reserve may be accounted for by the apprehension that he would be regarded as a person non grata on account of the inability of the young Nizam to appear, but there was nothing in the manner of His Royal Highness which gave any outward sign of displeasure."

The story of the events which resulted in the Nizam's absence from Bombay on the memorable occasion forms a curious illustration of the official sophistry which Lord Northbrook's advisers persuaded him to adopt towards the leading Indian State, and is worth recalling in these days of pleasant and unembarrassed relations between the Suzerain Power and the Protected Princes, with which Lord Curzon has replaced the vanished policy of mistrust and suspicion. The Indian Princes will again assemble in Bombay a few months hence to offer to the Heir Apparent the same devotion and loyalty as that which so greatly impressed his father, but on the present occasion the spectre of coercion will be absent from the gathering as we may accept it as a moral certainty that the Viceroy will not substitute compulsion for persuasion in the case of any ruler who is unable or unwilling to take part in the pageant. Thirty years ago, however, other counsels prevailed, and because Sir Salar Jung, who was then co-regent and practically ruler of the Deccan State, declined to permit the young Nizam to proceed to Bombay, he was accused of disloyalty and other odious faults, which were said to have eclipsed the splendid characteristics of the statesman who in the days of the Mutiny had been acclaimed as the Saviour of Southern India. When the Viceroy's invitation reached Hyderabad, the Nizam, whose age was then nine, was in delicate health, and it was considered by his medical advisers that the fatigue of the journey and the excitement incident thereto would be highly prejudicial to him, and they recommended that the visit should not take place. Their opinion was also supported by the Residency Surgeon, and another controlling factor in the situation was the pronounced reluctance of the Prince's mother to allow him to leave Hyderabad. The reasons against the journey were stated by the Minister in a letter to the Resident, who, presumably acting on instructions received from Calcutta, refused to accept them as a valid excuse for the Nizam's absence, and pressed for a reconsideration of the matter. Salar Jung, however, relied upon the medical opinion he had submitted, and declined to take the responsibility of contravening them and compelling the Prince to go to Bombay. There then ensued a correspondence in which official acerbity displayed itself in its most disagreeable form, in which accusations were made which caused pain and dismay to the recipient of them though they failed to move him from his determination to do what he believed to be his duty towards the prince. After this most unseemly display of official pyrotechnics it was arranged that Hyderabad should be represented at Bombay by the Minister, accompanied by a deputation of nobles, and Salar Jung, fresh from his experience of official amenities in the Deccan, may well have had doubts concerning the nature of his reception by the Prince. These, as we have seen, were speedily dispelled by the courteous and gracious audience at Pare, the reason for which is apparent from a previous page of Russell's book. A few days before the arrival of the Serapis at Bombay his diary of the voyage contains the following entry: "The correspondence between the Resident of Hyderabad and Sir Salar Jung, a copy of which had been sent us from England, was read and discussed among the old Indians, and I think there was only one opinion expressed respecting the taste and tone of despatches which intimated that the Resident believed the reasons assigned for the Nizam's inability to go to Bombay were fictitious and that the Dewan had some secret purpose to serve in asserting that the journey would, according to the physicians, be dangerous to the life of the boy who is delicate and nervous and who has never yet been separated from his mother." Although Sir W. Russell diplomatically confines his account of the perusal of the despatches and the comments thereon to the "old Indians" of the suite, there is little doubt that the Prince himself read them too, and was equally impressed with their extraordinary character. For it is an open secret that very shortly after his arrival in Bombay he questioned Lord Northbrook concerning the methods which had been used to induce the Indian Princes to meet him, with special allusion to the procedure adopted at Hyderabad as disclosed in these despatches. This revelation of the Prince's knowledge of what had happened had most disconcerting results on the political section of Indian officialdom, which had been fairly outmatched in the game of politics by the Hyderabad Talleyrand. But they made him pay toll for his transient success as during the next five years, until, in fact, the arrival of Lord Ripon, with instructions to reverse his predecessor's policy in most respects, Salar Jung was made to feel the full weight of official obloquy, and it was only during the last three years of his life that he was restored to favour. The Prince of Wales formed a warm friendship with him, based in the first instance on his disapproval of the inconsiderate treatment Salar Jung had met with in the controversy over the Nizam's visit, but rapidly extended on other grounds as he succumbed to the personal magnetism the Minister never failed to exercise over those associated with him. Members of the Prince's suite were subsequently sent to Hyderabad with an invitation to Salar Jung to visit England in the following year, and the records of his brief sojourn in London afford ample evidence of the differentiation between the Indian officials of the period and Englishmen untinted by the traditions of red-tape or by suspicions begotten of Salar Jung's desire for the restoration of Berar, for the latter was the primary cause of the Hyderabad political imbroglio of thirty years since.

Hindu.—The Princess of Wales has written a letter accepting address from the Bombay Indian ladies. The local Times London correspondent gives currency to a rumour that the Indian ladies declined the offer of European ladies to join in the movement of the address.

Indian Daily News.—The Mysore Government have sanctioned one lakh of rupees for Khedda operations in connection with the approaching visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Mysore in February next. Rs. 25,000 of this is to be utilised for the purchase of two (Kumsi) elephants. Mr. Muttiah, the officer in charge of the Government game preserves in Mysore, and Mr. Srinivasa Rao of the Forest Department have been entrusted with the operations.

It is proposed to ask the Prince of Wales to unveil the Victoria Memorial Statue here which has just arrived from Mr. Brock, the sculptor, from London.

Indian Daily News.—The question of the number of Press correspondents eligible to accompany the Prince of Wales on tour is under consideration. In 1875, when King Edward, as Prince of Wales visited India, only two journalists were permitted to travel with the suite, one was Sir W. H. Russell for the Times, and the other was Mr. Sydney Hall, artist. All the leading Newspapers of the world were represented by fourteen special correspondents, who paid their way throughout India, the only concession on the part of Government being that they had free railway passes over the whole line of the tour.

Hindu.—A meeting of the members of the Feeding of the Poor Sub-Committee (Madras) was held on Wednesday evening at the office of Messrs. King and Jesselyn. It was resolved that the feeding of the European and Eurasian poor be undertaken by the Friend-in-Need Society; that of the Mahomedan poor at Triplicane by the Moslem Association in Triplicane at Black Town by the Mahomedan Literary Society, and at Mylapore by the Mahomedan Poor House. It was also resolved to request the following institutions to undertake the feeding of the poor:—Washermanpet Dharma Annasala, the Dharma Annasalas at Royapuram, Muthiyalpet, Black Town, Pursewalkum, Chintadripet, and the Triplicane Annadhana Samajum; and also the Dharma Annasala at Sembium, Perambore. The Secretaries of these institutions will be written to enquire whether they will undertake this work.

Hindu.—A representative meeting of the ladies of Surat invited by Ziaulniss Ladli Begamsaheb, was held at her palace, under her presidency, on Wednesday evening, to consider what steps should be taken to show their loyalty and devotion to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales and our future Queen-Empress. Most of the leading ladies of all nationalities were present. After the President's speech and the proposal of the resolution, which was seconded by Mrs. Westropp, the following committee was appointed to settle how to show their sense of devotion to their Royal visitor: President, Ladli Begamsaheb; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. Westropp, Bismilla Begum, Shajadi Begum, and Mrs. Hervey; members, Nagarsethani, Mrs. Cowasji Eduljee Mody, Mrs. Bomanji Naoji Vakil, Mrs. Thekordas Mathuradas, Mrs. Burjorji Nasserwanji, Mrs. Naginchand Zaverchand, Mrs. Siamwala, Mrs. Ghelabhai Jagjwandas, Doctor Rukhmabai, and Mrs. Kothawala, with Mrs. Kalabhai as Secretary and Mrs. Jacob as Treasurer, with powers to do the needful and to add to their numbers. A hearty vote of thanks was proposed to the President, and after partaking of light refreshments and the distribution of flowers the proceedings terminated.

Hindu.—A meeting of the members of the Casket and Address Sub-Committee was held on Thursday last at the office of the Hon'ble Mr. H. A. Sim, C.I.E., in the Board of Revenue.

The following Resolutions were adopted at the meeting:—(1) That Mr. H. K. Beauchamp be requested to draft the Address and that the same be circulated to the Members of the Sub-Committee. (2) That a casket be procured at a cost not exceeding Rs. 5,000, and that designs be called for, a premium of Rs. 250 being offered for the one which may be accepted by the Sub-Committee.

An advertisement will be published calling for designs for the casket, and the designs will be required to reach the Honorary Secretaries not later than the 31st proximo.

Indian Spectator.—The Committee appointed in May last year by Lord Lamington to report on the necessity for and the nature and scope of a museum in Bombay has submitted its report, after consulting the superintendents of similar institutions in other parts of India and persons in Bombay whose opinions were entitled to weight. That the Committee would emphatically assert the need for such an institution was no more than what any one would have expected. That need was felt and expressed thirteen years ago. It was at that time estimated that a museum would cost 5 lakhs of rupees at the start—building, furniture and specimens included. The estimate of Lord Lamington's Committee is double that amount, and the scheme includes three institutions—a Museum of Arts and Archaeology, a Science Museum and a Public Library. It is recommended that the maintenance of the museums should be undertaken by Government, and that in addition to the salaries of gazetted officers an annual recurring expenditure of Rs. 30,000 should be provided for at the outset. This is not an extravagant demand in comparison with the expenditure incurred by Government in Calcutta and Madras on account of similar institutions. The idea is that the Museum is to subserve the purposes of instruction and not of amusement. The need for an Archaeological Museum has long been felt in Bombay. There is valuable material all over the country, which is neglected and allowed to disappear, because there is no proper place where it can be preserved. We have a Natural History Society, an Art Society, an Anthropological Society and a Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, who would only be too glad to be accommodated in a palatial building on the Crescent. The Committee recommend that at least 5 lakhs should be secured before any building operations are undertaken; if this amount is to be raised by public subscriptions, and if the foundation stone is to be laid by the Prince of Wales, it is evident that there is no time to be lost. The Committee, however, add the very discouraging remark that the opening of a public subscription would not result in amounts being promised which would be of material assistance! Practically the Government is asked to come forward with the necessary funds. Will the Government make provision for the undertaking in the budget which is to be shortly presented to the Council, and get the plans and the estimates and all preliminaries ready as early as possible, so that the Prince of Wales may be enabled to lay the foundation stone of the Museum?

Madras Mail.—In accordance with a resolution adopted at the Sheriff's Meeting held in the Victoria Public Hall on the 28th May, subscriptions are now being invited for the purpose of presenting an Address in a suitable casket to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and for giving them a public entertainment on the occasion of their visit to Madras. It is estimated that at least Rs. 80,000 will be required, and subscription lists are being circulated with a request that gentlemen desirous of subscribing will enter their names and the amount of their subscriptions therein. It is requested that the subscriptions be paid to Messrs. Arbuthnot & Co. on or before the 31st proximo.

Madras Mail.—Recently I reported that the Darbar had sent an invitation to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to include Travancore in their South Indian tour. I hear that it is practically settled that the request cannot be complied with. His Highness the Maharaja will, in all probability, visit Madras at the time of the Royal visit to Madras, so that His Highness may pay his respects to the Her Apparent.

Pioneer.—Various reports have appeared as to the Prince of Wales holding Imperial Darbars during his visit to India. This is absolutely incorrect, as no such ceremonies will take place on a large scale—a very sensible arrangement.

Times of India.—A meeting of the provisional executive committee of representative citizens of Bombay, formed for the purpose of making arrangements in connection with the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to India was held, last evening, in the Municipal Council Hall, the Hon'ble Sir Lawrence Jenkins, the Chief Justice, presiding.

The Hon'ble Sir P. M. Mehta said the task to which the committee had to apply itself was what had been done in the rest of India and what had been done on a previous occasion when the King-Emperor Edward VII visited India as Prince of Wales, namely, to call a public meeting for the purpose of arranging what should be done for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and for commemorating their visit to this city. On the former occasion when the King-Emperor (then Prince of Wales) came to Bombay, a public meeting of the citizens of Bombay was held under the presidency of—he thought—the then Governor of Bombay, supported by the leading official and non-official members of the Bombay community. Resolutions were passed at that meeting to commemorate the visit; and now they had to follow that example. At this meeting they would have to pass Resolutions appointing committees to carry out certain objects that would then be mentioned. On the last occasion when the committee met, acquiescence was indicated to a proposal to commemorate the visit by means of a public museum. The Chairman said he should use a stronger word than "acquiescence," and suggested the word "approval." Since then, as most of the gentlemen present must have seen, the Bombay Government had published the report of the committee appointed to consider the question of founding a public museum in Bombay. That committee pointed out what outlay would be required for founding the museum and how the upkeep of it should be made. In Calcutta and Madras the Local Governments contributed very largely to the foundations and the upkeep of the museums there, and he hoped the Bombay Government would follow their examples. But still it would remain for the public of Bombay to co-operate with the Government and subscribe largely and liberally to fund that might be raised. He had no doubt that the Bombay public would respond to the call in a generous and liberal manner. (Hear, hear.) It would be necessary, therefore, to so formulate one of the resolutions to be proposed at the public meeting as to include the foundation of the public museum as one of the means to commemorate the visit. He proposed that this provisional executive committee be authorised to make arrangements for the purpose of holding a public meeting in the Town Hall by a requisition to the Sheriff of Bombay with a view to take measures to celebrate and commemorate the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and to indicate in the Resolution that the suitable way of commemorating that visit would be the foundation of a public museum in the city of Bombay. (Applause.)

Sir Hurkisondas Nurrotumdas seconded the proposition.

Mr. T. W. Cuffe suggested that if it were intended to place the proposal for a public museum before the public meeting, it was desirable to formulate some alternative proposal with a view to put before that meeting in the event of the proposal for the public museum not meeting acceptance. In his opinion the proposal to build a public museum had not aroused any very great enthusiasm among a considerable section of the Bombay community, and that being so the subscriptions might possibly be largely affected. The Chairman said that at the last meeting when this matter was discussed suggestions of all kinds were very earnestly invited. There was then a unanimity of feeling in favour of the museum scheme. Of course, it was not yet too late for other suggestions, and he imagined that if any other proposals were to be made, they should have them now rather than that they should be made before the public meeting. He thought they should try to be unanimous about such proposal.

Mr. Cuffe thought there were various things that would appeal to all classes of people.

Sir Pherozeshah pointed out that the programme of celebrations would be divided into two parts, one of which would include celebrations of a permanent character and the other of temporary kind. The latter would take the form of fireworks, fairs, illumination.

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Russell said, that having regard to what had fallen from Sir Pherozeshah, namely, that it was desirable to erect a building, and possibly three buildings on the Crescent in front of the Sailors' Home, and what had fallen from Mr. Cuffe with regard to the possibility of not getting funds for that purpose, a scheme had occurred to him which might get over the difficulty as to funds. He was willing to admit that it was a gigantic one, but it was not an impossible one, but was one worthy of consideration in connection with the commemoration of the Royal visit. It was this. The Government were going to remove all the buildings from the present dockyard, and they would thereby throw open a large space of ground to the east of the present Town Hall. In his opinion the Town Hall was an almost useless excrescence in Bombay, and so also was the enormous tank in front of the mint. His suggestion was to clear away the Town Hall and fill in the tank, and use that land for the purpose of putting up public buildings. There would be a magnificent throwing open of the city to the sea, and the new roadway which would thus open up might be called "the Prince's Highway." He thought they would be able to raise an enormous sum of money from the ground rents of land which they would let out for buildings, and thereby they would get funds for the "Prince's Town Hall and Museum," which it was proposed to found. His next suggestion, which would also redound to the advantage of the city, would be to take away another most hideous excrescence in Bombay, namely, the Church Gate Street.

As no other member rose to address the meeting, Sir Pherozeshah, in reply, said he would go one step better than Mr. Justice Russell and say that he would remove not only the buildings from the Church Gate Street, but all the buildings from the whole city of Bombay. (Laughter.) He was sorry that the Hon'ble Mr. Dunn was not present at the meeting, but he might inform Mr. Justice Russell that the Government had created the City Improvement Trust for the purpose, which he had enumerated and he might well communicate his scheme to that body. The question regarding the Church Gate Street had been considered more than once, and they had been told that the destruction of that street would involve an expenditure, not of lakhs but of crores of rupees, and even after that the opening would not be a large one. He thought in considering the measures for the commemoration of the Royal visit their hopes and ambitions should be somewhat curtailed, and they should think of a scheme which might be practically carried out within a reasonable space of time. As to the museum scheme he might say it included a library, a town hall, an art gallery and a lecture hall. Mr. Cuffe had remarked that the scheme was not likely to excite much enthusiasm, but he ventured to say that there was a strong feeling in favour of the museum and thought the time had come when a great city like Bombay should not be without a museum, which all the big cities in the Empire, and certainly which Madras and Calcutta possessed. He repeated there was a strong feeling in favour of it, and that feeling had been very much emphasised since His Excellency Lord Lamington had on a public occasion given the outlines of a scheme for a permanent museum in Bombay. (Hear, hear.) So far as one could say, he thought if such a proposal were placed before the public meeting it would be received with very large approval. It was very difficult to think of any other way of commemorating the visit of Their Royal Highnesses. There might be gigantic schemes as pointed out by Mr. Justice Russell, but it was difficult to carry them out within the limited means at their disposal.

The proposition was then put to the vote and carried unanimously.

3RD JULY 1905.

Pioneer.—It is now definitely settled that the Prince of Wales will lay the foundation-stone of the Victoria Memorial Hall during his visit to Calcutta early in January.

With reference to the Prince of Wales' visit to Kashmir during the forthcoming Indian tour, the Resident in Kashmir, Colonel Pears, officially announced at the Birthday

Banquet held at Srinagar on the 26th June that His Royal Highness was expected at Jammu on the 6th December, and would probably make a week's stay. Jammu is an essentially oriental city, and its quaint old-world character should greatly interest the Royal visitor. Moreover it contains the palace built for his father, then Prince of Wales, on the occasion of the last Royal tour thirty years ago.

Daily Express.—Viscount Kelburne, R.N., has been appointed to H. M. S. Renown at Portsmouth (Captain the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt), and will accompany the Prince and Princess to India in the capacity of first lieutenant of that battleship.

Pioneer.—With regard to the forthcoming Royal visit to India, we learn that the King has shown the greatest personal attention to the tour programme and the general arrangements. From the earliest discussion of these, His Majesty has concerned himself with a number of the details; and his wonderful memory serves him well in all matters of this kind. Thus in one instance he was quick to point out that the hour suggested for a particular ceremony might be rather late considering the short twilight in India during the cold weather. The Prince and Princess of Wales themselves are keenly interested in their future journey, and all that it will reveal to them. They are determined to do everything in the most thorough manner, and to this end they have studied a good deal of literature bearing on India and its people; while from those who know the country they are eager to acquire every kind of information: Their Royal Highnesses are naturally attracted by the prospect of seeing India and Burma with their varied races, their historical cities, monuments and temples. The North-West Frontier has already exercised its strange fascination over their minds, and their visit to the Khyber, the Bolan, Quetta and New Chaman is not considered the least notable feature in their programme. Their glimpse of Afghanistan, at this particular phase of the Middle Eastern Question, should leave its impressions, though it will be only a fleeting one. The laying of the foundation-stone of the Victoria Memorial Hall at Calcutta seems likely to be the great public function of the tour, and this ceremonial is one which the Prince is eager to undertake, for the memory of the "Great Queen" is dear to her grandsons. Their Royal Highnesses while in Calcutta will examine the collection of arms, pictures, manuscripts, etc., that have already been got together and are now temporarily housed in the Indian Museum. The Prince has expressed himself particularly anxious to see as much as possible of the native army, several regiments of which bear his name; and wherever possible he will visit cantonments for this purpose. At the manoeuvres about Ballabgarh, south of Delhi, His Royal Highness will be the guest of Lord Kitchener, and he will witness all the principal operations, spending two nights in outlying camps so as to learn all that is being done. On the third day will be the grand march-past, when some 50,000 or 60,000 troops will pass the saluting flag—a record for India. The tour promises to be a very successful one, and the knowledge that Their Royal Highnesses are full of pleasant anticipations as to the experiences awaiting them is sure to create a reciprocal interest in their movements in this country among all classes.

Times of India.—At their monthly general meeting held this afternoon the Municipal Committee, Rangoon, voted Rs. 15,000 for entertaining Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales upon the occasion of their visit to Burma next January.

In connection with the visit of the Prince of Wales to Mysore extensive elephant capturing operations are being arranged.

His Royal Highness is to be asked to unveil not only the Victoria Memorial Statue in Cubbon Park, Bangalore, but a statue of the Maharaja's father in Curzon Park, Mysore City. An industrial school being established by the Mysore Government may also have its foundation stone laid by His Royal Highness.

Madras Mail.—To-day we are able to publish the first official programme of the visit to India of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. The programme gives little more than the bare dates of arrivals at and departures from different places, and it is issued with the warning that the arrangements are liable to modification. The local programmes containing details of the ceremonies and entertainment at each place, will be issued later. The arrival in Bombay is fixed, it will be seen, for the afternoon of Thursday, November 9th, a most auspicious day, seeing that it is the King-Emperor's birthday. To us in Madras the most interesting dates are those relating to Southern India. As we anticipated some time ago Their Royal Highnesses will reach Madras by sea from Rangoon presumably in H. M. S. Renown, escorted by other warships. The date fixed is Wednesday, January 24th. The ceremony of arrival here will therefore centre at the harbour, and the Reception Committee will no doubt make special arrangements to have the whole harbour and its surroundings as well as the shipping in port dressed with flags and gaily decorated for the occasion. The harbour and sea face of Madras lend themselves most effectively to a display of the kind; and we may be sure that from the Customs House and old High Court at one end, along the North Beach Road, past the new High Court and the Fort, to Chepauk Palace at the other end, there will be a couple of miles of the gayest and noblest perspective.

In Madras itself Their Royal Highnesses will remain only five days, the first of which, Wednesday, January 24th, will be the day of arrival, and the last of which, January 28th, will be a Sunday. The number of evenings for ceremonies and entertainments will therefore be four only, and the programme will have to be a somewhat restricted one. From Madras Their Royal Highnesses will go on to Bangalore and Mysore, where, we believe, a shooting and kheddah camp will be arranged; then on to Hyderabad, where, we believe, there will be some more big game shooting; and after that to the North of India again. Some disappointment will be felt at Their Royal Highnesses not being able to include any of the Southern and West Coast Districts and Native States in their tour; but apparently it has been found that there will be no time for visits to Tanjore, Madura, Trichinopoly, Cochin, Travancore, etc., in view of the extended tour in Northern and North-Western India which is to be got through before the departure of Their Royal Highnesses from Karachi on March 19th.

Madras Standard.—Only two days ago we reproduced from the Bengalee our contemporary's remarks regarding the feeling in the Indian community in Calcutta about a purely Indian reception and entertainment to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. Our contemporary said that such a feeling is widely prevalent. It is now confirmed by what the Indian Nation says. "We cannot conceal a desire, however," writes the Indian Nation, "to see the Prince having a reception and entertainment under exclusively Indian auspices. Such a desire, we have reasons to believe, is shared by several leading members of the native community. The native community will hardly do justice to its own feelings if it has not an opportunity of organising a special reception. The Prince also, we presume, will be pleased with an entertainment got up in a predominantly Indian style and offered as a special mark of honour by His Majesty's Indian subjects. A special Indian reception organised by the British Indian Association. was offered to the Prince who is now King Edward VII and was graciously accepted by him. The place was the Belgachia Garden of the Paikpara Raja's. Particulars of the entertainment will be found in the newspapers of those days, especially the Hindu Patriot. The Indian community would be doing at once an honour and justice to itself if it followed the precedent of 1875; and the Viceroy would be doing a graceful act in permitting such a demonstration and advising the Prince to accept an entertainment at Indian hands. We have no doubt the feelings of an earlier day will prevail alike in the breast of the Indian community and the authorities, and the Indian demonstration will be as much of a success as it was in the past. Several of the old leaders have passed away, but some yet remain, and younger men may come and take the place of the elders. The Prince should be in a position to leave the town with the same feelings towards all classes that his father carried away thirty years ago." Certainly the Indian Nation would not have written this if there was not ample warrant. But whether the proposal would be acceptable to the Anglo-Indian community or not we have no means of knowing.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The following is the itinerary of the tour of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales as at present arranged. All the details, however, have not yet been finally settled, and the various items of the programme are liable to modification:—

Arrive in Bombay November 9th (afternoon). Bombay, 9th to 15th; Ajmer, 16th and 17th; Udaipur, 18th to 20th; Jaipur, 21st to 24th; Bikanir, 25th to 27th; Lahore, 28th to December 1st; Peshawar, December 2nd to 4th; Jammu, 5th; Delhi, 7th to 10th; Commander-in-Chief's camp, Delhi, 11th to 15th; Agra, 16th to 19th; Bhurtpur, 20th and 21st; Gwalior, 21st to 25th; Lucknow, 26th to 28th; Calcutta, 29th to January 6th; Darjeeling, January 7th and 8th; Calcutta, 9th; on boardship, 10th to 12th; Rangoon, 13th to 15th; Mandalay, 16th to 18th; on the river, 19th and 20th; Rangoon, 21st; on boardship 22nd and 23rd; Madras, 24th to 28th; Bangalore and Mysore, 29th to February 7th; Hyderabad, February 8th to 15th; Ellore, 16th; Benares, 18th and 19th; Nepal, 20th to March 2nd. (After leaving Nepal Their Royal Highnesses will probably visit Simla and some other places.) Quetta, March 12th to 16th; Karachi, 17th to 19th; depart from Karachi, 19th, March.

Daily Express, London.—It has now been definitely arranged for the Prince and Princess of Wales to leave London for their tour in India on Wednesday, October 18th, and to join H.M.S. Renouen at Genoa two days later.

Their suite will leave Portsmouth in the battleship on October 10th, Their Royal Highnesses being accompanied on their departure from London only by an equerry and the Prince's Private Secretary.

The landing at Bombay should take place on Thursday, November 9th, the King's birthday, and also the date of His Majesty's landing in India thirty years ago.

Two or three officers of the Indian Army will be attached to the Prince's staff throughout the tour.

Indian Daily News.—The Chairman laid on the table a letter No. 1109-T.M., dated 14th June 1905, intimating that the Government of India have no objection to the proposal of the Corporation to present an address of welcome, together with an article of jewellery to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during their forthcoming visit to Calcutta.

The letter is as follows:—

"In continuation of paragraph 2 of my letter No. 1578-M., dated the 25th March 1905, I am directed to say that the Government of India have informed the Lieutenant-Governor that they have no objection to the proposal of the Corporation to present an address of welcome together with an article of jewellery to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during their forthcoming visit to Calcutta."

After some discussion, it was ultimately ordered to be recorded.

Madras Mail.—The Government of Mysore have made a contract with Messrs. C. T. Brock & Co., the well known Crystal Palace pyrotechnists, for a special display of fireworks to be given at Mysore during the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in February next.

Times of India.—Now that the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales may be looked for in little more than four months, the programme of their tour through India, which has now been published, will be scanned with deep interest by the Indian public generally. Contrasting it with that accomplished thirty years ago by His Majesty the King, it will be seen that many changes have been made. Baroda, Goa, Ceylon, Cawnpore, Rannagar, Allahabad and Jubbulpore, all of which were visited on the last occasion, have been eliminated from the present programme. Several additions have, however, been made, and if all that is contemplated is carried out, the energies of the Prince and Princess of Wales will certainly not have been lightly taxed. At the time of the last Royal visit Burma was not of course included, for only since then has Upper Burma become a British possession, but now both Rangoon and Mandalay are to be honoured. Hyderabad also, perhaps the most typical native city of India, will be given an opportunity which His Highness the Nizam will fully appreciate of welcoming for the first time the Heir to the throne of the British Empire.

Udaipur, with its beautiful surroundings, Quetta, with its fast-growing cantonment, and Bikanir, in the desert, are all down in the programme. Karachi too is to be congratulated on the recognition of its growing importance. Nepal, which is included in the list, does not of course mean that Their Royal Highnesses purpose a journey to Khatmandu, but merely that the Prince will be shown sport in the Terai, as was His Majesty the King. The wondrous caves of Ellora will be viewed during the visit to His Highness the Nizam, immediately after a lengthened stay of some ten days at Bangalore and Mysore. The programme is so full, so much has to be got through, that one is tempted to hope that some consideration will be shown in regard to the strain that all this entails on Their Royal Highnesses, and that at any rate in Bombay, too many functions will not be crowded into the very limited time available. Her Royal Highness is not what is generally known as a good sailor, and may not unreasonably be expected to require some days for the effects of the voyage to wear off.

Times of India.—The following, it is understood, will be the Prince of Wales' staff for his Indian tour:—

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS'S HOUSEHOLD.

Sir Walter Lawrence, Chief of Staff.
Brigadier-General Stuart Beatson, Military Secretary.

Indian Daily News.—The preparations for a public meeting of the leaders of the Indian community for making arrangements to give the Prince and Princess of Wales a truly Royal reception in the beautiful grounds of Belgachia on strictly Indian lines, are fast maturing, says Capital, and a public announcement on the subject may be expected next week. The plans for the reception are to be on a scale of magnificence never hitherto equalled in the province on similar occasions in the past.

8TH JULY 1905.

Nottingham Express.—India is already preparing for the approaching visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales, although Their Royal Highnesses are not due to reach Bombay until November 9th. The excitement, however, is not confined to India, and it is scarcely a matter for wonder that, even at this early date, an enormous number of visitors, not only from this country but from the United States, are preparing for a trip to our Indian Empire. There is no doubt that the number of people who will witness the festivities in connection with the Royal tour will far exceed the numbers present in India at the time of the great Delhi Durbar. The bookings for Calcutta and Bombay are already enormous, and the Peninsular and Oriental Company will run two intermediate boats to cope with the abnormal traffic. Calcutta expects the largest number of visitors on record, and the authorities are already taking steps to solve the question of accommodation for India's visitors. The Government House there, though a very large one, will not be large enough for those who will be in the suite of the Prince and Princess, and it is probable that a "canvas town" will be erected for them.

The itinerary of the Prince and Princess of Wales will be a most gorgeous pageantry even for India, the land of magnificent spectacles. Between November 9th and the month of March 1906, the Royal party will, in tourist language, "do" India very thoroughly for the time at their disposal. It is thought probable that a man-of-war will be placed at the disposal of the Royal party for the voyage. The arrangements are not by any means definitely settled, but they are rapidly approaching completion, and General Beatson is on his way out to India to put the finishing touches to the programme of the Royal itinerary. Six days will be spent at Bombay, after which the Royal visitors will proceed via Ajmer, Jaipur, and Lahore to as far north as Peshawar, at the southern end of the famous Khyber Pass. A somewhat longer stay will be made at Delhi, the centre of military India. Agra, Bhurtpur, Gwalior, and Lucknow, with their beauties and their inspiring memories, will also be visited, and Calcutta will naturally have a claim on the Royal visitors. Gay Simla, Benares, the city of mosques, snowy Darjeeling, and a score of other places with their weird and magnificent sights will all be included in what will doubtless be the most brilliant Royal progress ever seen.

Tribune.—We print in another place the itinerary (which is of course subject to change and revision) of the forthcoming Royal tour in India. His Royal Highness arrives at Bombay on November 9th and leaves our shores on 19th March 1906. During this brief period His Royal Highness, it appears, is resolved to "do" the country thoroughly and see all the "lions." He will visit all principal places of interest, whether religious or historic, and miss no Native State of importance. In Rajputana, Bikaner, Jaipur and Udaipur will be honoured by His Royal Highness's visit. Why has Jodhpur been excluded? An honour which is done to Mewar and denied (though unavoidably) to Marwar must be galling to the latter. Besides, is not the gallant and loyal Sir Pratap, the beau ideal of a Rahtor Chief, a son of Marwar? His Royal Highness comes to Lahore on November 28th and leaves on December 1st. We hope the splendours of his august father's visit to our capital will be repeated. No Punjab State will be visited. His Royal Highness is due at Jammu on the 5th December. At Delhi His Royal Highness will stay from the 7th to 15th December, Agra and Lucknow will both be visited; why has Allahabad, the provincial capital, been excluded from the list? The longest halt will be in Nepal from 20th February to 10th March, no doubt for purposes of sport in the Terai. At Calcutta at a grand public meeting of Indians and Europeans combined, last evening, a general committee was formed and an executive committee appointed to make necessary arrangements for the reception of our future Emperor. We understand that arrangements are also in progress for a purely Indian reception, as was given on the visit of His Majesty when Prince of Wales. This is an idea which deserves encouragement.

It speaks volumes for the innate loyalty or rather devotion for the Royal person (to express the true sentiment) which is characteristic of the Indian people, that in Calcutta, where the leaders are practically crushed down under the heavy sense of wrong caused by the Partition scheme, the meeting held in connection with the forthcoming Royal visit was highly successful and fairly enthusiastic. At the end of the meeting Sir Andrew Fraser, who presided, announced that a sum of Rs. 89,736 had been already subscribed towards the Reception Fund, of which Indians had contributed Rs. 68,736 through the British Indian Association, while Europeans had come up with Rs. 21,000 through the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. When such is the beginning, there is little doubt that the amount will considerably increase during the four months yet remaining before the visit. Ample indications were offered at the meeting that the two communities were prepared to work cordially together for making the reception worthy of the capital of the Empire. Among the movers and seconders of the resolutions were the Maharaja of Darbhanga, Sir Gooroo Dass Banerji, Mr. Justice Chunder Madhub Ghose, and Mr. A. Choudhry on behalf of the Indians, and Sir Francis Macleann (Chief Justice), the Hon'ble Mr. D. M. Hamilton, and Mr. G. H. Sutherland on behalf of the Europeans. His Highness of Darbhanga said: "I have only to emphasise the fact that our welcome will be both loyal and enthusiastic. Our loyalty is of no recent growth; our enthusiasm is a necessary accompaniment." Sir Gooroo Dass Banerji, in supporting the resolution for the appointment of an executive committee, expressed the hope "that while imitating the magnificence of Nature, the committee will see its way towards arranging things so that the necessary transitory fervour of the joyous occasion may leave behind some bright work of usefulness to man to commemorate the auspicious visit of Their Royal Highnesses." Mr. A. Chowdhry struck a melancholy chord. He was sure his countrymen would give a hearty welcome to Their Royal Highnesses, although only on the previous day they had read an announcement in the papers which had filled the country with "deep sorrow." Sir Francis Macleann, with his characteristic chivalry, drew attention to one unique feature in the coming visit. It was that "for the first time in the annals of the British Empire Europeans and Indians will hand in hand be able to pay the welcome in India to the Princess of Wales." The idea of organising a purely Indian reception is, we are glad to learn, growing apace.

Statesman.—A public meeting of the citizens of Calcutta, European and Indian, was held in the Town Hall on Friday evening to arrange for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their approaching visit to Calcutta. The hall was full.

The Hon'ble Mr. Cable, Sheriff of Calcutta, declared the meeting open.

Maharaja Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore proposed that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal should take the chair.

The Hon'ble Prince Asif Kader Syud Wasif Ali Mirza, of Murshidabad, seconded the motion.

The motion was put and carried unanimously.

The Lieutenant-Governor's Speech.

Sir Andrew Fraser, having taken the chair, explained the objects of the meeting. He said:—

Sir Francis Maclean, Maharajas, Nawabs, Rajas, and Gentlemen,—I thank you for the courteous manner in which you have invited me to take the chair on this very interesting occasion. I know that the business of this meeting cannot be very short, and therefore I shall not detain you with many introductory words. The object of the meeting as convened by the Sheriff of Calcutta, is a two-fold object, namely, to give the citizens of Calcutta and residents of this province an opportunity of expressing their satisfaction at the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Calcutta; and, secondarily, to enable the citizens and residents to consider the steps to be taken to offer a loyal and enthusiastic reception to Their Royal Highnesses. I am glad to be identified with you in expressing our satisfaction at the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses. Her Majesty Queen Victoria, whose memory is beloved in this country, sent her eldest son, our present King, to see this great dependency of the British Crown in which she took so real and affectionate an interest. Our gracious Sovereign has not forgotten his own visit to this country and the impression of it has certainly not passed away amongst the people of India. His Majesty is now sending his son with His Royal Consort to visit India in his turn. We rejoice to think that Their Royal Highnesses will thus become much more intimately acquainted with the country and the people, and with their interest, and that thereby the ties of affectionate loyalty that bind this country to the throne of England will be strengthened.

As to the second object of the meeting it will be impossible for us, of course, at the present time, to settle details. It is always impossible to settle details at a public meeting and in connection with Their Royal Highnesses' visit this is especially true. Their Royal Highnesses' tour through India must of necessity be too brief for all that they would like to see and for all that the people of India would like to show them in the course of that tour. You have no doubt all seen the tour programme in the newspapers. It will involve hard work and unremitting toil, though I trust it will also involve infinite satisfaction and pleasure to Their Royal Highnesses. Their visit to Calcutta is very brief. We recognize the reasonable necessity for this, though we should certainly like to have detained Their Royal Highnesses longer amongst us. Under these circumstances, we must recognise that the details of their programme in Calcutta must be quietly and carefully considered. It is necessary not only to fix suitable items, but also to secure them a place in the programme, with reasonable regard to the time at the disposal of Their Royal Highnesses and the demands which it is possible to make on their kindness and energy. What I understood therefore to be the intention of this meeting is not to arrange details, but to appoint a large and representative Committee which will make proposals as to the means to be adopted to show the enthusiasm of our welcome to Their Royal Highnesses, and will endeavour to arrange through the Government of India with Their Royal Highnesses to have these proposals accepted and included in their programme. I am confident that in regard to these matters we are all of one mind. I may say that nothing is required from me, or from any one else, to stir up the enthusiasm of this meeting or the people generally. I shall therefore detain you no longer, but leave the business of the meeting to proceed.

The Resolution.

Sir Francis Maclean, Chief Justice of Bengal, said:—Your Honour, Maharajas, and Gentlemen,—After the speech to which we have just listened from the chair, I feel that the field left for subsequent speakers is very limited. And when I come to my own particular and most pleasurable task, I am reasonably conscious that when I have read the resolution I have done almost all that is necessary. The resolution speaks for itself: let me read it:—

“That a loyal and enthusiastic welcome be accorded by all classes of the community to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their approaching visit to Calcutta.” A loyal and enthusiastic welcome? Can the poorest dullard in India suppose that Their Royal Highnesses will not receive such a welcome? (Cheers.) We all remember the splendid reception afforded to the Prince and Princess when they visited the Colonies. Are we to imagine that this great dependency, the brightest jewel in the British Crown, intends to be second to the Colonies in its expressions of loyalty and of welcome? The answer is “No.” It may very well be, gentlemen, that at times you complain of and you criticise the doings of this Government and of that. It is, of course, within the range of possibility—though I find it very difficult to contemplate it—that even the High Court is not so ideal a working machine as you could always wish. These things, gentlemen, may very well be, but my residence in India has convinced me that deep down in the heart of the Indian people is an absolute sense of loyalty to the British Crown. The Royal House of England has endeared itself to the British people: their never ceasing sympathy with their sorrows and with their joys, the readiness with which they ever come forward to assist in times of calamity and of trouble, their eager and unremitting efforts in the great cause of charity, have endeared them to the people of the British Isles: they have endeared themselves to the people of our Colonies and the coming visit will endear them to the three hundred millions of their future Indian subjects. Many of you will remember the visit of his present Majesty, when Prince of Wales. His Majesty, as I read from apparently well-informed sources, has not forgotten that visit, taking the greatest interest in the forthcoming visit of his son. Few, if any, can ever forget a visit to India, with its peeps into a great historic past, with its present association of the East with the West. But, gentlemen, there is one unique feature of this coming visit. For the first time in the history of the British Empire the European and the Indian will, hand in hand, bid welcome on Indian soil to a Princess of Wales. (Cheers.) To the Prince as to the Princess, let it be a great one. Calcutta is the capital of India: nay, more—the capital of the East. In that welcome Calcutta must play a part second to none; and therefore I say, again, let the welcome be a great one! (Loud applause.)

The Maharaja of Darbhanga, in seconding the resolution, said:—Your Honour and Gentlemen,—I feel that the resolution which has just been so appropriately moved by the Chief Justice stands really in no need of a seconder. There is not, I am convinced, one single inhabitant of Calcutta or of the province who is not in hearty accord with the terms of that resolution. Loyal and enthusiastic is the welcome we have long ago made up our minds to extend to Their Royal Highnesses upon their approaching visit to us; and we have hailed the announcement of that visit with all the more satisfaction because it indicates that the sympathetic interest in India and her peoples which endeared the late Queen-Empress to her

Eastern subjects has not ceased with her death, but is being handed on through His Majesty King Edward to those who in the fulness of time will rule over the Empire. Speaking as I am privileged to do on behalf of the Indian community I take pleasure in publicly testifying to the respectful appreciation with which we look upon the repeated manifestations of that sympathy and interest which His Majesty and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales have so often honoured us with. It makes us feel that although we are of different race and blood we are not deprived on that account of our share of Royal favour and Royal attention. We like to think that His Majesty the King-Emperor cherishes the pleasantest recollections of his visit to us nearly thirty years ago; and we are determined that his son and daughter-in-law shall carry away with them equally happy memories of their introduction to our land and our people. It does not fall within my province to-day to dwell upon the form that our welcome here in Calcutta is to take. That has been left to another occasion. I have only this afternoon to emphasize the fact that our welcome will be both loyal and enthusiastic. As I have already said, both these adjuncts are already present. Our loyalty is of no recent growth; our enthusiasm is a necessary accompaniment of that loyalty, and I venture to prophesy that Their Royal Highnesses will find no deficiency in either the one or the other when they honour us with their presence a few months hence. We are all anxious to see the Prince and Princess, and to make them fully comprehend that India's feelings of attachment to the Royal family are as sincere and profound as those of any other part of the Empire. With these words I desire to second the resolution.

The Maharaja of Cossimbazaar briefly supported the resolution, which was then put and carried unanimously.

The Maharaja-Dhiraj of Burdwan in a few words moved the second resolution, which ran as follows:—"That in order to carry out the above object a general committee be formed of noblemen and gentlemen, with power to add to their number."

Mr. Justice Ghose in seconding this resolution said: In response to the call that has been made upon me I do not intend to say more than a word or two, nor is it necessary that I should do so, for the resolution now before you is but the necessary consequence of the other resolution which has already been carried by acclamation by this great assembly. It seems to me that if we accord, as we must accord, to Their Royal Highnesses an enthusiastic welcome, it is necessary that a strong and representative committee, a committee representing all sections of the community and all the principal associations in Bengal, should be formed in order to give effect to the resolution that has already been passed. The names of the noblemen and gentlemen mentioned in the list placed in your hands are a sufficient guarantee that the great object that we have in view will be carried out by them, and therefore without detaining you any further I second this resolution.

Mr. A. Chaudhuri in supporting the resolution said: Your Honour and Gentlemen,—An announcement was made yesterday by Renter which has been received with deep sorrow in this country. We hope it is not correct, but whether correct or not, happily, we are able to dissociate this occasion from matters concerning the internal politics of the country and we are able happily to accord our most loyal welcome to Their Royal Highnesses. I have therefore much pleasure in supporting this resolution.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously. Mr. D. M. Hamilton moved the third resolution, which ran as follows:—"That an executive committee be appointed to arrange the necessary details." He said: Your Honour and Gentlemen,—It is perhaps hardly necessary for me to add anything to what has already been said, but, as a member of the mercantile community, I should like, just in a word, to re-echo the sentiments to which Your Honour and the other speakers who have preceded me have given expression. We all know the excellent results, commercial as well as political, which have followed the visit of the King-Emperor to France and other countries and we may expect like results to follow the visit of Their Royal Highnesses to this great country, which is still foreign to our people at home. If there is one country in the world in which the personal element counts for much it is India. Without friendly living, personal intercourse between the East and the West, the two can never get to know each other or understand each other's aspirations. We therefore look forward to the Royal visit believing it will strengthen the tie of loyalty and affection which means more in the building of the Empire than guns and ammunition or even army administrative reform.

Nawab Syed Ameer Hossein seconded the resolution.

Sir Guru Das Banerjee in supporting the resolution said: Your Honour, Maharajas and Gentlemen.—I do not think it necessary to say much in support of the resolution that has just been proposed and seconded to commend it for your acceptance, for it is an eminently practical resolution which must be adopted to give effect to your first resolution. The executive committee you are going to appoint will, I am sure, do its best to make every arrangement worthy of the approaching grand and unique occasion and in keeping with the best traditions of this classic land and of the loyal people that inhabit it. I will only express the hope that while imitating the magnificence of nature as it very properly should in the long-famed gorgeous East, the committee may see its way towards arranging things so that the necessarily transitory splendour of the joyous occasion may leave behind some lasting bright work of usefulness to man to commemorate this auspicious visit of Their Royal Highnesses.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously.

The Maharaja of Sonbursa moved the fourth resolution, as follows:—"That the executive committee be empowered to raise subscriptions to carry into effect the purpose of the foregoing resolution."

Mr. W. T. Grier, Master, Calcutta Trades' Association, seconded the resolution. He said: Your Honour and Gentlemen,—I have been asked to second this resolution and I do so with great pleasure as I am sure the object to which the money collected is to be devoted is one which commends itself to all loyal subjects of the British Crown. The large sums already promised are indicative that the duties of the executive committee will not be very arduous. This, you will admit, should be the case, as the decoration of the city on a historic occasion like this is in these days one of the few opportunities we have of expressing our loyalty. It therefore affords me much pleasure to second this resolution.

Rai Sita Nath Roy, Bahadur, in supporting, said: I assure you, Sir, it is no official pressure, no lip loyalty, no desire to please the powers that be, but an ingrained and deep-seated sense of attachment and devotion to the Throne, a spontaneous feeling of loyalty, that animate and unite us one and all in offering a hearty welcome and in according a befitting reception to one who in the fulness of time will be called upon to rule over this Empire; and I dare say a corresponding degree of enthusiasm, zeal and earnestness will not be found wanting in any one ordinary class in carrying out the objects of this meeting, in furtherance of which we are assembled here. As for the Hindus, they are proverbially loyal: loyalty and attachment to the Sovereign are sentiments ingrained in their very constitution. It is their Shastras which enjoin divine reverence to the Sovereign irrespective of his caste or creed, for the accepted belief among them is, that it is the divine essences that go up to form the constitution of a Sovereign and hence from time immemorial the same reverence as is due to the Divinity itself has always been shown to the Sovereign. There is another injunction of our Shastras which lays down that a guest is to be received and treated as a divine being, so whether as our guest or as our future Sovereign, we are under a double obligation to receive and entertain His Royal Highness and his gracious Consort in a manner befitting their high rank and position and befitting our own proverbial loyalty. While there is a perfect unanimity of feeling as to the propriety of our welcoming His Royal Highness in a right Royal way, of entertaining him in a princely style, it is desirable that all loyal subjects should come forward to contribute, each according to his means, such sums of money as would not only suffice to cover all expenses of entertainments, but leave a decent surplus behind. I must not be taken amiss in echoing the universally expressed opinion among my countrymen, that any balance left over after meeting all expenses of suitable entertainments should be devoted to some work of permanent public utility with which the honoured name of the illustrious Prince should be connected to commemorate in a permanent way his visit to this country. With these few words I beg to second the resolution.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously. Mr. G. H. Sutherland proposed that a hearty vote of thanks be accorded to the Lieutenant-Governor for presiding on this occasion.

Mr. A. F. M. Abdur Rahman seconded the vote of thanks.

Mr. R. H. M. Rustumjee supported the resolution on behalf of the Parsee community.

The resolution was put and carried unanimously.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor in responding said: It is with a feeling akin to bashfulness and humility that I have to inform you that this resolution is "that a hearty vote of thanks be accorded to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor for presiding on this occasion." I may say in one word that I have been very much touched and impressed by the kindly words with which this resolution has been proposed. I have received several letters and telegrams of apology for absence from this meeting as, for example, from my friend the Maharaja Bahadur of Cooh Behar, who is unfortunately at present in the doctor's hands, and from other noblemen and gentlemen throughout Bengal, who are detained from similar pressing reasons. I have also had placed in my hands a list of subscriptions already received. Altogether I am glad to inform you that over Rs. 86,000 have already been subscribed. I thank you again for the courtesy with which you have thanked me for my presence in the chair on an occasion which has been to me one of so great an interest and pleasure. I am requested to announce that a meeting of the executive committee will take place on Tuesday at 5 o'clock.

The meeting then separated.

Standard.—The Prince of Wales' progress through Rajputana, concerning which further details have been given in a Simla telegram, will certainly not be the least interesting part of his Indian tour. It will take Their Royal Highnesses to some of the most romantic scenery in all India, and among a people whose history, mythical and authentic, is a thrilling record of gallant endeavour and patriotic devotion. Ajmer is British territory, and has its memories of Mogul Emperors as well as of Rajput princes. In the gardens by the lake, Shah Jehan drove to take the air in a State coach presented to him by King James I. Here also a famous Jain temple; and as oriental scholars, within the last few years, have started a new theory concerning the Jain religion, we may hear something new about this curious cult. But Udaipur, the capital of Mewar, which the Prince will also visit, is the most famous place in Rajputana; and the Rana, who rules the State, boasts of a higher lineage than any ruling prince in the world. In the beautiful palace, built of marble on an island in the lake, by Juggat Singh, princes and chieftains of the Sisodia Rajputs, Colonel Todd tells us, were wont to seek recreation "exchanging the din of arms for voluptuous inactivity."

It has been suggested in India that the Prince of Wales might like to celebrate the tercentenary of the death of the great Mogul Emperor, which occurred in October 15th, 1605. Fatehpur Sikri, where Akbar built a palace, and held his court, is not mentioned in the summary of the Royal itinerary telegraphed from Simla; but Their Royal Highnesses are pretty certain to go there, and even if there is no formal celebration of the date, the memory of the greatest Asiatic sovereign who ever ruled in India is not likely to be forgotten. Akbar was the contemporary of our own Queen Elizabeth, and of Henry IV of France; but Colonel Malletson, one of his biographers, rightly contends that he need not shrink from comparison, even with these.

Madras Mail.—A meeting of the members of the Prince of Wales' Reception General Committee was held yesterday evening at the Victoria Public Hall. Sir S. Subramania Iyer, K.C.I.E., in the chair. There was a large attendance.

The Hon'ble Mr. Desika Charriar, one of the Honorary Secretaries, read a letter from Rai Bahadur Krishnadoss Bulamkundoss, regretting his inability to attend the meeting, but sending a cheque for Rs. 1,000 as his subscription towards the fund.

The Chairman said that the principal business before the meeting was the addition of certain names to the list of the general committee. Many names had been omitted and it was considered an advantage to put in further names. It was also suggested that in order to prevent the general committee being called from time to time for this purpose, the executive committee should be authorised to add such names as were considered necessary. It would be no inconvenience to anybody to add more names, but it would give the committee a claim on them for subscriptions.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. C. Desika Charriar then read the list of names, which were added to the general committee:—

On the motion of Mr. H. K. Beauchamp, seconded by Mr. Ryru Numbiar, it was unanimously resolved that the executive committee be empowered to add names to the general committee.

The proceedings then terminated.

13TH JULY 1905.

Amrita Bazar Patrika.—If loyalty is to be judged by the amount of subscriptions promised to meet the cost of the Royal visit to India, the Maharaja of Darbhanga is the most loyal man in Bengal, for His Highness has subscribed Rs. 10,000. The next loyal man is the Maharaja of Cooh Behar whose donation amounts to Rs. 5,000. Like His Highness of Cooh Behar, Maharaja Tagore, the Maharaja of Sonbarsa, the Maharaja of Burdwan, and the Nawab of Dacca have also subscribed Rs. 5,000 each. So, in the matter of loyalty, Maharaja Cooh Behar, Maharaja Tagore, Maharaja Sonbarsa, Maharaja Burdwan and the Nawab of Dacca stand in the same grade. But how much has the Lieutenant-Governor subscribed? Not only did His Honour preside over the loyal meeting at the Town Hall, but, as the ruler of the province, his position is superior to that of all. He cannot thus afford himself to be beaten in the matter of loyalty by any one. We trust, therefore, His Honour's donation will be larger than that of Maharaja of Darbhanga, and stand topmost in the list of subscriptions. The position of the Chief Justice is next to that of the Lieutenant-Governor. And His Lordship should also subscribe, at least, one thousand rupees more than what has been subscribed to by the Maharaja of Darbhanga, so that no one can dispute his claim as the second loyal man in the province. It will, indeed, not look well if any native of the country is allowed to beat the first two personages in the land in the matter of loyalty.

Englishman.—At the meeting of the executive committee of the Royal Reception Fund, which took place on Tuesday at the rooms of the British Indian Association, it was decided that the reception to Their Royal Highnesses should take the form of an entertainment on the Maidan and that this entertainment should include as many forms of Indian amusements as possible. It was also decided that Calcutta schools should participate in the entertainment and that the surplus funds should, if sufficient, be devoted to some permanent object of public utility. A sub-committee was formed to work out a scheme on the above lines for submission to the executive committee.

Indian Daily News.—The Prince and Princess of Wales, while visiting Peshawar, will probably go up as far as Landikotal.

News of India.—As we anticipated in one of our early issues this season the approaching Royal visit has been arranged by the Viceroy on lines that will be much appreciated by His Majesty the King-Emperor, the Prince and Princess of Wales and the people of India. The education involved will be of immense utility to the Heir-Apparent who will establish a touch with his subjects in this vast Empire and will, like his illustrious father, carry away with him indelible impressions of India and its two hundred million loyal inhabitants. When the King visited India in 1875-76 his tour was one of pleasure. His miraculous recovery from a dangerous illness combined with the then political situation at home, demanded a change. Published accounts of the enthusiastic reception of His Majesty all over this vast Empire quite raised a newborn interest for Great Britain's heir so that, on his return, the nation welcomed him back and idolized him more than ever, as a hero of a thousand and one triumphs, in a strange land. His Majesty's hold now on his own people, and we may add, on the esteem and affection of every nation in the world, promises to equal that of his illustrious mother. When His Majesty visited India the itinerary of the Royal tour was through the length and breadth of Hindustan and rapidly comprised travel, receptions, fêtes and sport. King Edward's health demanded change of scene and abstinence from mental strain. He got all that was necessary, and, thank God, benefited greatly in health. But his illustrious son and daughter come to us at a period when India can show tremendous strides of progress in every branch of civilization, and therefore, at a time, in which the Royal tourists can combine education with pleasure and derive manifold benefits therefrom. The large naval escort will be abandoned, although of course the East Indian squadron will be much in evidence on the afternoon of the King-Emperor's sixty-fourth birth anniversary, when the Prince and Princess will land in India. Those with the King on this date, just thirty years ago, will never forget how His Majesty, accompanied by his big suite, went in a procession of launches, through a line of battleships belching forth Royal salutes, in Bombay harbour, to the Scrapis where he himself cut and distributed his birthday cake to the three or four thousand men of his Navy. The whole stay in Bombay was a busy one, made up of receptions and fêtes. Although the Gaekwar of Baroda is now the only Chief living who entertained King Edward, the omission of Baroda from the Royal tour is a notable feature. But the details of the itinerary are yet not quite complete. From Bombay the Royal tourists will visit Ajmere, a centre in Rajputana full of interest. It is computed that Ajmere is a natural huge fortress and can stand an eternal siege, for its hills protect it and its plateau abounds in cultivation and watershed which can last for ever. It also contains an interesting Mahomedan shrine. From Ajmere the Royal party will proceed via Chittor to Udaipur. It is an historical fact that our Heir-Apparent in making Udaipur the first halt, will meet a native potentate whose blue blood stands single for purity and antiquity in the world. The rulers of Meywar, who occupy the Udaipur Guddee, are looked upon with veneration by the whole of India as Rajputs of holy origin. The present Chief has not travelled much, but he does not permit his orthodoxy, as regards caste and religion, to in any way interfere with his administration, or the many acts of progressiveness with which he marks his rule. From Udaipur the Royal special will carry its precious burden via Ajmere to Jaipur, a city full of interesting mementos of Rajput splendour. The old city, Amber, is where a temple stands and where human sacrifices used to be of daily occurrence at the shrine of the goddess Kali. Sand hills have in the past decade buried cities and capitals and have to be carefully watched, even in the present time. It was in Jaipur that our King-Emperor shot his first tiger. Baits were placed, and on the morning of the shoot it was announced that tigers were seen in another direction. His Majesty therefore went off at once accompanied by the late Maharaja Ram Singh, Sir Alfred Lyall, Sir Edward Bradford, Lord Alfred Paget and Sir Dighton Probyn. All the newspaper men had left very early for the original spot. The King had just mounted to a cross branch on a tree, by an elephant ladder, as a tigress came up looking backwards at the noise of the beaters. His Majesty fired and hit her on the neck and as she turned round gave her the second barrel which sent the bullet obliquely under her tail and pierced the spine. The tigress rolled away like a hare and His Majesty was so excited that he jumped down from the tree and followed her on foot, not thinking that both barrels of his rifle were empty and that he had no cartridges. The Maharaja ran up and exclaimed "Do you want me to be hanged for not protecting you? Look at your rifle. Suppose the tiger is near and come to avenge the tigress?" His Majesty laughed good naturedly and took the rifle from the Maharaja. He went up and saw the tigress lying on a bed of sand, dying. His Majesty gave her quietus and as this shot was fired a leopard sprang over and knocked off Lord Alfred Paget's hat. Strange to say that, when the Duke of Connaught was tiger shooting at Jaipur, as he fired at the tiger from his machan, the bullet ricocheted and tore up the ground under the nose of the Political Agent, Dr. Stratton, who was behind a mound. No one could see the way that experienced Political went, he ran so fast that we could not see his coat tails for dust. Fortunately for the present Maharaja, Sir Swinton Jacob will be in Jaipur during the royal visit to show the Prince and Princess a great deal to interest them. From Jaipur the Royal visitors will go to Bikanir where marvellous Imperial grouse shooting can be got and where one of our most intelligent native Chiefs resides. From Bikanir, Lahore will be reached, the arrival being in the morning at 9 o'clock on the 28th November. A grand procession of elephants will be arranged, the Royal tourists being the guests of Sir Charles and Lady Rivaz and will be conducted in this procession to Government House. There will be a levée, a ball at the Montgomery Hall and a fête at the Shalimar. A flying visit to the Golden Temple at Amritsar may also be included. Leaving Lahore on the 1st December Their Royal Highnesses will arrive at Peshawar on the 2nd, and go to Landi Kotal and the Khyber. The Malik will have an opportunity of presenting their muzzurs. From Peshawar the special will take Their Royal Highnesses via Wazirabad and Sialkot to Jammu, where the Maharaja of Kashmir will entertain them at his new palace and let them see the Lama dance and some cheetah hunting. Delhi will be reached on the morning of the 7th where Sir Charles and Lady Rivaz and probably all the Punjab Chiefs will also meet them. The Circuit House built for Lord and Lady Curzon for the great Darbar will be occupied by the Royal guests. On the 10th the Prince of Wales will go out with his Excellency Lord Kitchener to witness the great field days and will be encamped for three days before coming to the Chief's Camp on the Gurgaon plain the night prior to the march past of 60,000 troops. After the march past and lunch, the new diversion railway will be used and the royal party will arrive in Agra where a camp will be pitched on that great historic plain near the burial-ground where so many of these heroes who fell at that spot are interred. Three days will be spent at Agra, the Rajputana Chiefs here paying their respects. An entertainment at the Dewan Khas, and one at the Taj Mahal, will comprise the festivities here as well as a reception at camp. Sir James La Touche will be the host here. From Agra the Prince will go to Bhurtpore where his illustrious father said the most marvellous duck shooting he ever had was enjoyed. Millions of duck and teal come in clouds over the rafts where one can sit and shoot them. In 1870 it was here that Prince Louis of Battenburg while pigsticking got his spear turned and sent through him. Sir Joseph Fayrer, by prompt surgical aid, helped His Serene Highness out of a most precarious position. From Bhurtpore the Royal guests will go to Gwalior and live in the Jai Bilas palace which was built by the late Maharaja specially for King Edward's accommodation in 1876 at a cost of over 41 lakhs of rupees. A silver bath tub, a gold wash hand set, a silver bedstead and a thousand and one luxuries were thought of by the late Maharaja Scindiah as compatible with the rank of his royal guest. So pleased was King Edward with his reception that he said to the late Maharaja as he bade farewell "Your Highness, I am loathe to leave such a splendid palace, what can I do for you? Sir Henry Daly, who was present, interpreted this. The Maharaja replied "Yes you can. Give me back my fortress." Sir Henry Daly seemed puzzled what to say for a moment, and then with as calm a countenance as he could put on under the circumstances interpreted Your Royal Highness, the Maharaja Scindiah says should opportunity offer he will avail himself of Your Royal Highness's kindness.

After the royal departure some of those present enlightened the Maharaja as to the ingenious interpretation when old Scindiah said "He is a Political officer of very old standing." The Maharaja was so pleased with King Edward's appreciation of his palace that he presented Sir Michael Filose, who built the palace, with a lakh of rupees on the spot. From Gwalior the special train will convey Their Royal Highnesses to Lucknow where many objects of interest will be seen and the usual fete by the Taluqdars of Oude will take place. King Edward while at Lucknow stayed with Sir George Couper, the then Lieutenant-Governor, the suite putting up in camp on the maidan adjoining Government House. It was here that a juggler was taken up at midnight to the Prince's rooms and among other tricks he showed was that of firing off a small cannon by an Indian yellow bird. The noise that the report caused nearly sent Sir George Couper, who was living downstairs, into a fit with terror that something serious had happened and it was not till Lord Suffield personally went upstairs and saw the fun that was going on that matters were calmed down. The Duke of Sutherland and Lord Charles Beresford had put a helmet and military cloak on the poor juggler and walking arm in arm with him on either side had passed the sentries and got the man upstairs. Cawnpore will probably be included in the programme when it is modified, for such a spot full of sad memories of the ghastly mutiny of 1857 cannot be passed over. When King Edward visited Cawnpore, the arrival was at 5 in the evening. After a dinner and levée at Mr. Prinsep's house, the King accompanied by a very large suite, for there were nearly eighty officers with him, drove to the memorial garden. It was a bright moonlight night and very cold. All wore heavy cloaks and swords as they came from the Levée. The King mounted the steps to the top of the memorial well, and then slowly descended to the cover. Dead silence prevailed as the King and his suite reached the spot the clanking of sabres even ceased. The King uncovered. All remained at the salute. With bowed head His Majesty remained for fully five minutes, and then, without speaking, put on his hat and left. His Majesty did not speak a single word during the drive back and it was only when he reached his carriage in the train that he described his feelings to Lord Carrington who had not accompanied His Majesty's party having broken his collar bone at Unao while pigsticking. From Lucknow the royal party will go to Calcutta where the arrival has been fixed for the 29th December. This will enable the Prince to give away the Cup associated with his name at the races, and to open the Victoria Memorial on the 1st January 1906. A drawing room, a levée, a State Ball and a fete at Belgatchia will be the festive functions. The tour to Burmah will be much on the lines of that of Lord Dufferin. Pooy dance at Mandalay will be an interesting sight, as well as the elephants working with timber. Nothing of any importance will take place till Madras is reached, where all the school children will be massed round the Munro Statue and sing "God bless the Prince of Wales" as the royal pair pass on their way the Government House. Mysore and Bangalore and a trip to Seringapatam and the source of the Cauvery river will be full of interest. From the Madras Presidency the Prince and the Princess will come to Hyderabad. It may be fresh in the memory of many how difficult a matter it was in 1875 for the great Sir Salar Jung to overcome the prejudice in the then Viceroy's mind regarding the sudden illness which precluded the young Nizam from meeting the King at Bombay. The Duke of Sutherland however was sent later on, and matters were smoothed over. There is no doubt that the royal party will really meet with a grand reception here and that the Nizam will eclipse everything else by lavish hospitality. The Caves of Ellora will be visited also. We are not at all surprised to see Poona omitted from the list. A flying visit may, however, be made as the royal special passes there. The natives are very superstitious about Poona especially after what occurred to the late Duke of Clarence. All Mahrattas have a curious superstition, which gains strength with every new disaster. On Parbutee Hill there stands a famous shrine, dedicated to Mahadeo. The big idol has a single diamond eye. There is a tradition that it once had two and that the one now missing was gouged out of the socket by the bayonet of a Bombay Fusilier when the British sacked Poona. He was an Irishman, and had no respect for the members of the Mahratta Pantheon. The Gods, however have never forgiven the sacrilege, and the recurring misfortunes in the Cantonment are the result of their anger.

United India.—The programme of the Royal tour has now been published. An examination of this document reveals an important change in the principle of preparing such programme. At the time of the visit of His Majesty the guiding principle was to give an opportunity to the future ruler to acquaint himself with places of historic importance. There was then no attempt made to impress the Royal party with the importance attaching to strategic places, or to misguide them as to the importance attaching to any or all the Native States. Then the programme included Baroda, Ceylon, Cawnpore, Ramnagar, Allahabad, Jubbulpore and others. But the Royal party are now made to think more of Lahore, Peshawar and Jammu! Of the progress attained in Native States under the natives of the country, Their Royal Highnesses will be afforded little or no opportunity to see and judge. But they are to be impressed with the large congregation of "Coolies" in Mysore, with elephant-catching operations and tiger-shooting trips in Mysore and Hyderabad, with the "assistance" that has been squeezed out from the rulers of these States and from Bikaner for Imperial "Transport" purposes, and with the prospect which Nepal presents to all who can think, feel and act "Imperially." This change, though lamentably retrogressive, is strictly in accord with the spirit which rules the country at present; and it would have been a serious disappointment to the critics of the British Indian policy had the old order been allowed to continue.

Rangoon Gazette.—A public meeting, writes our own reporter, was held at the Public Library, Mandalay, on Tuesday evening to consider measures best calculated to give Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales a fitting reception on their arrival in Mandalay and suitable entertainment during their stay. There was a large and representative attendance, quite a record one for Mandalay. Unfortunately no arrangement was made for sitting accommodation. Very many European and Native gentlemen had to stand the whole time, as the chairs in the Library number some two or three dozens only. Major Stickland, Divisional Commissioner, was unanimously voted to the chair. The Chairman thought the only thing to be done was to form a general committee, which could be afterwards made into sub-committees. The Municipality had granted Rs. 5,000 for the reception and entertainment, and the Local Government had supplemented that donation with another sum of Rs. 3,000. The Chairman then in conformity with the wishes of those present drew up a list of representative names, Major Townsend, Deputy Commissioner and President of the Municipality, becoming President of the Committee. Major Stickland impressed upon the meeting that it was not desirable, in the matter of public subscription, that people should give more than their means permitted them to do. At one stage of the meeting Mr. Swinhoe asked how much was collected on the occasion of Lord Curzon's visit, and he was informed that Rs. 3,200 was subscribed, but the actual collections came to only Rs. 2,800 or thereabouts, which money was mainly expended on boat races and pwees. One gentleman wanted to know if the programme of Mandalay's reception and entertainment had to be sent to England, and if there was time. The Chairman replied that if the local programme of arrangements can be submitted to the Local Government by December that would be sufficient. The meeting then terminated.

Their Royal Highnesses, according to published arrangements, will be in Mandalay from the 16th to the 18th of January.

Hindu.—They seem to do things somewhat differently in Calcutta from how they are done in Madras, in connection with the arrangements for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. Nothing is more notable here than the excessive hurry which has hitherto marked the proceedings. We think that Madras might do worse than follow the example of Calcutta and Bombay in some of the measures contemplated relating to the Royal visit. At a meeting of the Executive Committee at Calcutta, held last Tuesday, under the presidency of the Maharaja of Darbhanga, Sir Gooroo Das Banerjee suggested that the subscriptions raised should not only be devoted to amusements, but also to some permanent work of public utility. He said that this principle should be at once laid down, otherwise the entire fund might be spent in meeting the cost of the entertainment.

He further observed that if it were known that some useful works were in contemplation, many donors might pay more than what they had already subscribed. Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee seconded this proposal and strongly urged the necessity of commemorating the visit of Their Royal Highnesses by some permanent work of public utility. He cited the precedent of the Albert Victor Leprosy Hospital for which Rs. 25,000 was raised to commemorate the visit of the late Prince Albert Victor to this country, and which was named after the late lamented Prince.

Babu Moti Lal Ghosh said that he had a better precedent to show that Their Royal Highnesses' visit should result in some permanent good works. He observed that when the present King-Emperor came to Calcutta in the seventies as Prince of Wales, his visit was commemorated by a permanent institution named "The Albert Temple of Science," which was started under the auspices of the Indian league and Sir Richard Temple. This institution not only yet exists, but it has a fund of Rs. 45,000, and is doing useful work. He further said that if any balance were left, the Executive Committee may make it over to the Committee of the Albert Temple of Science. The Executive Committee finally decided that the principle of devoting a portion of the fund, if available, to some useful work should be accepted, and the following Resolution proposed by the Maharaja Dheraj Bahadur of Burdwan and seconded by the Hon'ble Mr. A. A. Apear, President, Bengal Chamber of Commerce, was carried.

"Resolved that in the opinion of the Executive Committee, the reception to be provided for Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales do take the form of an entertainment on the maidan and that the entertainment do comprise as many forms of Indian amusements as possible. It is also in the opinion of the Committee desirable that Calcutta Schools should participate in the entertainment, and if funds permit, the surplus may be devoted to some permanent object of public utility."

It may be mentioned here that a permanent memorial of the Royal visit is the formation of a central Museum in Bombay.

Mahratta.—It may seem ungracious and unchivalrous on our part, but we must say that the action of the Native ladies of Bombay who have decided to organise a reception by the presentation of an address to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales on his arrival in Bombay is a very silly thing. In fact we feel supreme contempt for these weaker vessels who have busied themselves in a thing which cannot possibly concern them. It was of course too much to rough for a section of the Parsee ladies who are always very forward and sometimes simply lose their heads over doing Pooja to the shibboleth of loyalty and social intercourse with Europeans. But we never thought that our Hindu ladies would catch the contagion and join them in such a preposterous proposal as the one of presenting an address to the Prince of Wales. Political formalities are after all very irksome and unpleasant, howsoever necessary; and we wish our ladies had left them to the men to whose lot they fall. There are other innumerable spheres of private and public duties in which our ladies can and may lighten the labours of their husbands. And we for one think that no sensible Hindu husband could view the situation of his wife presenting an address to a European gentleman, however exalted he may be, without feeling that the cup of his own shame and humiliation is destined to be full. We have the highest regard for some of our ladies who have attained high education and who have been devoting themselves quietly and unobtrusively to tasks requiring real public spirit and resulting in real public service. But when we see them engaged in such foolish foppery, such shallow-patedness and such thirst for vain ostentation, we feel very nearly tempted to rue the day on which Western education first implanted in the mind of our society a root of the idea of women freely mixing with men. We know, however, that in this case this particular idea is not at fault. The fault lies with the senselessness of some of our men themselves who have evidently mistaken vain display for really useful work and who by the light of European favour beating upon their face have been blinded even to see that there could be reasonable bounds to our ladies mixing themselves with public affairs. We have, we confess, known in our time instances of grotesque absurdity done in the name of social reform; but the present absurdity is more grotesque than any we have known. It is high time that the so-called leaders of Native womanhood were told to mind their own business. They have certainly far better things to attend to in their own house than to run to the Apollo Bunder to present "loyal" addresses of welcome to the son and the daughter-in-law of a foreigner Sovereign.

17TH JULY 1905.

Times of India.—We understand that statues of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales are to be presented by His Highness the Aga Khan to the Victoria Memorial Hall in commemoration of the Royal visit to India next cold weather. A more appropriate place for the location of the statues could hardly have been selected. The order for the statues has already been placed with an eminent sculptor in England. It is understood that Their Royal Highnesses have graciously accorded permission to His Highness the Aga Khan to place their statues in the Memorial Hall.

20TH JULY 1905.

Ipswich East Anglian.—H.M.S. Renown, which will carry the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, is rapidly being converted into a yacht worthy of the Imperial mission which she will undertake. The huge battleship has been shorn of many of her big guns; her armoured-plated sides hitherto painted a dull and death-inspiring grey, have been painted white; her funnels have been painted yellow; and, in the beauty of her present appearance, her one-time fearful mein is almost forgotten.

21ST JULY 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The Commissioner of Delhi has, by order of the Local Government, despatched murallas to the Nawabs of Lohaur and Patodi, the Raja of Sirmur, the Sardar of Kalsia, and others informing them that the Prince of Wales will grant them interviews, and intimating that they are not expected to offer presents to His Royal Highness.

Hindu.—Your outspoken contemporary of the Bengalee has boldly given utterance to what is an undeniable fact that the announcement that Bengal is to be partitioned has put a strain on the loyalty of the Bengalees which ought to be particularly in evidence at the present time when we are to make preparations for the loyal reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales who will be in Calcutta in December and pay a visit to Darjeeling. When the Government tramples under its august feet the most cherished rights and possessions of the people, how can the people feel grateful to it? It is not in human nature to love and revere one who acts inimically. It was an extraordinary circumstance that the meeting held the other day in the Calcutta Town Hall under the presidency of the Lieutenant-Governor to collect funds for according a reception to our future King and Queen and to determine the manner in which that reception is to be given was thinly attended. It is a fact that many worthy men and men of position and influence, stayed away from the meeting, as they could not, without playing the trick of the damned hypocrite, join the demonstration. A foreign Government is not God Almighty that the subject must exclaim to him, "Even if thou slay me, I shall love and worship Thee." We Indians are a mild people, and we cannot be openly and actively disloyal, but when cruel actions of the Government wound our hearts and distract our minds, we have reason enough not to be demonstrative in our loyalty. Certainly we are not slaves that we should be compelled to do what we have the freedom to do or not to do in accordance with the rules of common liberty allowed to every subject by every civilized State. I am sure the reception to the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bengal will seriously lack in enthusiasm and unanimity if the cruel scheme of breaking up Bengal is carried out.

Indian Daily News.—During the Royal visit to Lahore a grand Ball will be given by the Punjab Government on the 30th November.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will remain an extra day at Delhi with Sir Charles and Lady Rivaz.

The Prince and Princess of Wales will probably attend the Calcutta races on the 30th December and lay the foundation stone of the Victoria Memorial Hall about the 5th January 1906. Their Royal Highnesses will leave for Darjeeling the following day.

Morning Post.—The ruling Princes in the Punjab have been informed that although the Prince of Wales cannot visit their territories His Royal Highness will gladly accord them interviews on his arrival in India.

Indian Daily News.—Eighteen tanks and twenty-five wells are being dug for the supply of water to the army of exercise which assembles at Delhi on the occasion of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales. A sum of Rs. 10,000 has for the present been allotted by the Commander-in-Chief for the work which is being done under the supervision of the Assistant Commissioner of Delhi, about 4,000 coolies being employed on it.

Indian Spectator.—His Highness the Aga Khan's gifts to Calcutta, in commemoration of the forthcoming visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, seem appropriate from the imperial point of view. The donor has evidently taken a larger view of citizenship than Indian citizens generally do. And though we may envy Calcutta its good luck we cannot blame the Aga Khan for enriching what is intended to be the richest collection of national monuments in India. Lord Curzon has done a service to the Eastern capital, which its inhabitants will learn to appreciate hereafter, though personally we should have preferred His Excellency's choice falling on Delhi.

Indian Daily News.—The Prince of Wales will probably hold levee in Calcutta on the 29th December and attend the Proclamation Parade and State Banquet on New Year's day.

Tiger shooting will be arranged for the Royal party whilst in Gwalior. The Prince and Princess of Wales may also stop a day at Bettiah.

Madras Mail.—In connection with the visit of the Prince of Wales, Grand Prior of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, and President of the St. John Ambulance Association, it is proposed to send His Royal Highness on arrival in India an Address showing the progress made in India. The Prince during his stay at Hyderabad will see personally how the work is done at that centre, where the Nizam has shown a strong personal interest in the movement.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will remain an extra day at Delhi with Sir Charles and Lady Rivaz.

Pioneer.—Subject to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor the sum of Rs. 10,000 has been recommended by the Port Commissioners as their contribution towards the expenses in connection with the forthcoming visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales. (Calcutta.)

Hindu.—In response to invitations issued a public meeting to consider what should be done to celebrate the forthcoming visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Bangalore, a representative gathering assembled at the Mayo Hall on Monday last. Mr. P. L. Moore was unanimously voted to the Chair, and he in a short speech explained to the audience the object of the meeting. Mr. O'Shaughnessy moved "that a loyal and enthusiastic reception be accorded by all classes of the community to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their approaching visit to Bangalore. Several speakers addressed the meeting on the subject and the proposition when put to the meeting was carried with acclamation. The meeting then appointed a strong General and Executive Committee. On a list for subscriptions being sent round, a sum of Rs. 3,242 was raised and this included the Municipal grant of Rs. 1,000. The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chair.

27th JULY 1905.

Advocate.—In connection with the forthcoming visit of His Royal Highness to these provinces, no question is receiving more keen attention of all classes of the people than the one as to how best to commemorate the event.

Those who can mark these sense of loyalty by paying substantial subscription are anxious to decide how best to spend their money or more properly—we might say—are desirous to know how the funds which they are asked to contribute are to be spent. The middle classes we mean the poorer section, which cannot contribute but whose loyalty is as genuine as that of the richer classes, are desirous to know how funds contributed by their wealthier countrymen are to be spent in honouring the Prince. This curiosity is natural as the event has roused and will in these Provinces rouse the greatest enthusiasm in all classes of people, and everybody will be interested in knowing what form the memorial in the Prince's honour will take. Such being the state of the public mind, the news will be heard with much delight that a number of leading Taluqdars met in the Government House here on Friday last and expressed a desire to commemorate the visit by founding a Medical College. The decision to which the gentlemen assembled on Friday last have arrived is wise and we can say will meet with general approval throughout these provinces. We do not think there is a single form of memorial which is likely to be received with greater enthusiasm than the one which has been proposed, and it will be everybody's desire to see that the proposal is carried out. Much need hardly be said to prove the urgent necessity of a fully equipped Medical College. Long before the question of finding out openings for the products of our University had become keen, the Maharaja of Vizianagram had come forward with Rs. 2,00,000 for founding a Medical College. Sir William Muir had very strongly recommended that the offer should be accepted, but the Government of India then could not accept it for financial reasons. But the people constantly kept on asking for a Medical College these thirty years. In the Legislative Council and in the columns of newspapers the people had been expressing the desire that the United Provinces should have their own Medical College. Nobody could have expressed the need more forcibly than the Inspector General of Civil Hospitals who in his remarks in the last report spoke of the inadequacy of the arrangements for medical education of the people. The need of a Medical College is one which has been admitted by all classes of people and no more suitable opportunity can there be to found one than the present in connection with the forthcoming visit of the Prince of Wales. With what better memorial can we connect his name than that of a Medical College in our midst? We know the project will be after His Royal Highness's inmost wish; we know what great interest he takes in all philanthropic movements, in all movements intended for the relief of suffering humanity. This is one of the traits which His Royal Highness possesses. We know the interest shown by the King-Emperor in the construction of hospitals for poor patients suffering from tropical diseases; we know full well how generously he turned the gift of some forty lakhs, placed at his disposal by a wealthy trader, for the construction of a hospital for the treatment of consumptive patients. These are a noble record from which the people of the United Provinces may be quite sure that if after all we are so fortunate as to have a memorial in the form of a Medical College, it will appeal strongly to His Imperial Majesty's mind, no less than to that of our guest.

We know we have no millionaires to give away the entire amount needed by one stroke of the pen. Perhaps it will not be possible to raise sufficient funds as to properly endow the proposed College. It may be impossible to get together twenty lakhs of rupees. But in this matter we can look upon Sir James LaTouche's Government for sympathy to the fullest degree. His Government has done so much for the education of the people that we are sure that for this crowning act of his educational policy he will anyhow find means which would be required to maintain an efficient staff. He is believed to be in full sympathy with the movement. If the College be located in Lucknow and get the Balarampur and the Dufferin Hospital attached to it, the cost will be less. In that case we are told the buildings and apparatus will not cost more than six lakhs and this sum is surely not very large for these provinces to collect without difficulty. The Maharaja of Balarampur has already set the ball rolling by his munificent gift. We may expect a substantial contribution from him to raise the Balarampur Hospital to the highest status and to raise its capacity for receiving more in-door patients. For the rest we can look upon rich Zamindari houses of Oudh and the province of Agra. Five or six lakhs to build a few boarding houses and erect the necessary College buildings are nothing for these provinces possessing so many territorial magnates. Only a little heart has to be put in it. The middle classes are poor, but Government servants in the subordinate service and the members of the Bar who can afford to contribute will give their mite. We are sanguine if the official and non-official classes join together the required amount will be forthcoming before 29th December next. We trust a representative committee will soon be found and the matter taken up in right earnest.

Civil and Military Gazette.—It has been darkly hinted in some of the native papers that the Government of India have quietly issued an informal order that the existence of famine is not to be officially recognised this year because the Prince of Wales is coming out. No one but a Bengali editor would either publish to others or admit to himself such a grotesque figment of disloyal fancy, but if anything could possibly lend colour to the invention it would be the painful spectacle which, according to our Madras correspondent's telegram, is being witnessed at present in the capital of the Southern Presidency. The promptest action is called for. It is not in the prevention of starvation, the Government's noblest and greatest undertaking—which in the late famines extended to a scale unexampled for magnitude in the world's history of philanthropy—that the Prince of Wales's visit will strike the least inharmonious note. But the official neglect of starvation, in however small and local a degree, might well produce a sight that would grieve His Royal Highness to the heart.

United India and Native States.—Whatever one might think of the scheme, it is not in keeping with the oriental sense of Loyalty to hold back from the reception which should be accorded to the Prince of Wales. We will not be pleased to see any of our Bengali leaders withdrawing from the movement. As a matter of fact, neither the King nor the Prince is responsible for the partition scheme. It may even be doubted whether they are aware of it. Those who advise our countrymen in the North to show their self-respect by refusing to participate in the demonstration on the occasion of the Prince's visit to Calcutta do not seem to have appreciated the constitutional principles of the British Government. This particular question of the Partition Scheme should not be mixed up with the honours due from us to the Sovereign. India, we are proud to say, has long been famous for its loyalty to the reigning Sovereign. Even when there is cause for the utmost dissatisfaction for the action of the Government we will show it in a constitutional way. It ought never to be forgotten that the King of the British Isles and Emperor of India is a constitutional Sovereign, and not the Czar of Russia. He is bound by the wishes of his responsible ministers and the Houses of Parliament. Any one dipping into Morley's Life of Gladstone will find numerous instances which show that whenever the late Queen Empress and her Liberal Prime Minister had occasion for difference of opinion it was the latter's view which ultimately prevailed. If we take for granted that the King saw that justice was on the side of the people, even then he cannot go against the advice or wishes of the responsible Minister. Herein lies the strength and weakness of British Monarchy. Now that we have thrown some light, the leaders of Bengal should think twice before they yield to the clamours of a certain section of the Press.

Indian Daily News.—We learn from Lahore that the stay of the Prince and Princess of Wales at Lahore will be a busy one. The arrival will be at 3 p.m. on November 28th. Sir Charles Rivaz will present the leading officials on the platform, and as we have already said, a procession will be formed. The Maharaja of Patiala, the Nawab of Bhawalpur, the Rajas of Jhind, Nabha, Faridkot, Kapurthalla, Mandi, Sirmur, Chamba, and Suket, and all the Darbaris will be stationed near the fort to welcome the royal guests. A Municipal address, a State dinner, and a reception of the darbaris at Montgomery Hall, are all included in the first day. The second day will be devoted to receiving the Punjab Chiefs and illuminations at the Shalimar. The third day will be spent in returning visits of the Chiefs, a purdah party, and a ball at the Montgomery Hall. On the fourth day, after visiting the fort and the other places of interest, the royal party will train to Peshawar. The Royal visit to Amritsar, we learn, will probably be on the 8th December, one whole day being spent at this interesting town.

Times of India.—The visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the Punjab will take place during the earlier part of their forthcoming tour in India. The first place visited will be Lahore, where Their Royal Highnesses will arrive from Bikaner on the 28th November.

There is much activity among army contractors and regimental tailors just now in anticipation of the forthcoming Royal visit to India; and a holder of stock in a certain department of army clothing is said to be advancing his price on the ground that the contractors must of necessity come to him if they are to fulfil their time obligations. In many directions regimental supply officers will seek to improve the appearance of their troops, especially if they are likely to be paraded for the inspection of the Prince of Wales; and as the head-quarters staff are making no exceptional grant for this purpose the object will be attained partly by anticipating next year's clothing allowances and partly by personal efforts on the part of the officers chiefly concerned. The accounts that come to hand from India, even from remote stations, suggest that the Royal visit is being awaited with eagerness by the population generally.

Indian Daily News.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will probably visit Pinjore, a Patiala retreat, three miles from Kalka, which abounds in overthrown Jain temples and other relics of Alexander the Great's advance into India. Pinjore gardens are in a succession of terraces with fountains.

The question of the number of Press correspondents eligible to accompany the Prince of Wales on tour is under consideration. In 1875, when King Edward as Prince of Wales visited India, only two journalists were permitted to travel with the suite, one was Sir W. H. Russell for the Times, and the other was Mr. Sydney Hall, artist. All the leading newspapers of the world were represented by fourteen special correspondents, who paid their way throughout India, the only concession on the part of Government being that they had free railway passes over the whole line of the tour.

Tribune.—Allow me through the medium of your most valuable and widely circulated paper to place before the leaders of public opinion in India a proposal for their immediate consideration.

Cursed be the heart that does not rejoice at the approaching visit to this country of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. This is a most solemn occasion, and the solemnity is enhanced thousandfold from the fact that it is once and only once in his life-time that a future Emperor of India visits his largest dependency. The loyal feelings of millions upon millions of India forced to remain pent up for long intervals, burst open their containers on such rare occasions and rise, as they ought to, equal to the emergency. From the haughty prince on his golden throne to the humble worker in the field each is fired up with a zeal and enthusiasm unknown to the Britons themselves. Every prince who has the good luck to entertain Their Royal Highnesses in his own State has already commenced preparations for the suitable reception and entertainment of the Royal guests. Every town of importance which has fortunately been included in the places to be visited by Their Royal Highnesses has also commenced similar preparations. When Native States, Corporations and other public institutions are doing their best in this direction, it seems that the 250 dumb millions are left absolutely in the back ground. The delight of these millions at the happy event knows no bounds and their loyalty to the British throne is beyond question. To them the visit of the future Emperor and Empress of India means the coming of the millennium. I recently talked with a poor peasant on this subject, and he was so much taken with agreeable surprise that he actually danced with pleasure and put my enthusiasm to shame. He told me that the royal visit means the conferring upon them of boons like further reduction of salt duty and remission of land taxes. However such are the hopes entertained by these loyal souls and God only knows how far they are to be realized.

Bombay being most fortunate will have precedence of all the Indian towns in welcoming Their Royal Highnesses as there it is that the Royal feet will first touch the Indian soil, when hundreds of addresses of welcome will be presented to Their Royal Highnesses. Again it will be the Bombay Corporation that will have the unique distinction of presenting its address of welcome first of all. When the public bodies are so eager to eclipse one another in the expression of their loyal feelings the dumb millions are left helpless to themselves. Will no one come forward and give utterance to their feeling of loyalty and devotion to the British throne? I beg to propose that precedence in this matter be given to those whom it is due, and without doubt it is due to the people of India as a whole. An address of welcome on behalf of these people should be the first thing to be presented to Their Highnesses after their landing at Bombay, and let every other welcome follow the people's welcome.

The National Congress is gradually getting a representative character, and so far as the present goes, there is no public institution here which represents the Indian people so well or better. It is therefore the most solemn duty of this institution which it owes to the people as well as to the British throne, to represent the people most suitably on this occasion. A deputation of select men from each province should be formed, and it should be the duty of this deputation to present the people's address of welcome to Their Royal Highnesses at Bombay.

I know funds will be needed to give this proposal a tangible form. Let every leading newspaper open a subscription list and I hope money will pour in like rain.

I have some other suggestions to make in connection with this proposal, and I hope to make them in my next letter.

30TH JULY 1905.

Pioneer.—The arrangements for the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales do not admit of a stay in any of the Native States of the Punjab, though the Chiefs of Patiala, Bhawalpur, Nabha, and Jind were all anxious to entertain Their Royal Highnesses.

Pioneer.—The Calcutta correspondent of the Hindu says that many men of influence and position stayed away from the recent Prince of Wales Reception Meeting at the Calcutta Townhall, "as they could not without playing the trick of hypocrites join the demonstration. We are not slaves that we should be compelled to do what we have the freedom to do or not to do in accordance with the rules of common liberty allowed to every subject by every civilised State."

1ST AUGUST 1905.

Indian Daily News.—We understand that Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey are likely to secure the order for the casket which will contain the Address the Corporation will present to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and that the work of engraving and illuminating the Address will be entrusted to Chevalier Ghilardi, who was lately employed in the Calcutta School of Art, and who, we understand, has been entrusted with the supervision of all the decorative work, which will be carried out for Their Royal Highnesses' visit.

The Royal tourists will have a very busy time in Calcutta, although an investiture darbar, a feature in 1875, will not be repeated. The detailed programme of the tour in Calcutta is not yet fully worked out, but it is anticipated that on the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses on the 29th December the presentation of the Municipal address and jewels will be made in the Throne Room at Government House. At night will be a Levée; on the next day there will be a State visit to the races; on Sunday the 31st the Royal visitors will attend service at the Cathedral and then go up to Barrackpore. On Monday morning, the 1st January, will be the proclamation parade and a State banquet. On the 2nd there will be a reception by the Princess of Wales; on the 3rd the town will be illuminated; on the 4th a dinner, and probably a native fête; on the 5th the laying of the foundation stone of the Victoria Memorial; on the 6th the Royal visitors will leave for Darjeeling.

Madras Mail.—A number of the leading taluqdars of Oudh have expressed a desire to commemorate the forthcoming visit of the Prince of Wales to the United Provinces by the foundation of a Medical College.

Surrey Gazette, Guildford.—Already the people of India are looking forward with eager anticipation to the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales, which is to extend from November to March. It is true that when we speak in this regard of the people of India we must do so with some limitation, because the population of the country numbers 300 millions, and that which is true of the vast Empire of Russia is true of India also, that events of great moment may pass without any news of them reaching the peasants in remote villages. But at the same time, it is the intention of Their Royal Highnesses to see as much of India as they can, and with this resolution, and four months in which to accomplish it, there will be opportunities for a very large proportion of the millions of India to welcome the son and daughter-in-law of him who is to them the Emperor, who visited the country himself in 1875, and feels the deepest interest in any project for the welfare of his Indian subjects.

The company which is familiarly known as "The P. and O" is reported to have stated that the number of berths booked in its steamers is so large that people who wish to have a choice of cabins should lose no time in making their arrangements. Old travellers will say that they have heard the same kind of thing from the steamship companies and when they went on board have found a third of the berths vacant; but, in any event, there is every reason to believe that the number of bookings is exceptional, and it is even suggested by some who are in a position to form an opinion, that the number of European visitors to India will equal the enormous aggregate of the Delhi Durbar, when it was found necessary to erect miles of tents in the outskirts of the city in order to accommodate the crowds who desired to witness the brilliant spectacles which formed part of the durbar ceremonial. So far as can be gathered from the reports which reach us, there will be no lack of splendid pageantry on the occasion of the Royal visit to a people who delight in magnificent spectacles, and would be little impressed by such Spartan simplicity as attends, say, the tour of a President of the United States. Some economists may perhaps deprecate the expenditure of a large sum of money on mere display but, apart from the Native State, which counts for something, there is much to be said for the view that such expenditure is a good investment for the people of India. The visitors from Europe will spend in other parts of the country, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the interest which is manifested in such ceremonies induces many other Europeans to go to India, where they expend money upon native products. But perhaps even more advantageous to India than the circulation of European gold will be the increased knowledge which visitors from Britain will acquire concerning the life and character of the people of that Empire, and the conviction which must force itself upon the mind of the traveller, that India can be made even a more potent source of strength to Britain than she is at the present moment. It may even be—and one hopes sincerely that it may be so—that some of those who are attracted to India by the Royal visit will set themselves to solve, if only in some small measure, the grave problem which has long pressed upon India, the removal of a large portion of the population from dependencies upon the soil and the transfer of their energies to manufacturing industries. In that respect India furnishes a singular contrast to England, where the problem is considered rather to be one of getting people to remain on the land; but there can be no doubt of the fact to which reference has frequently been made that one of the great needs of India is more manufactures, so that the people may be less dependent upon the one industry of agriculture with its possibilities of failure and attendant famine.

2ND AUGUST 1905.

Newcastle Daily Journal.—When Captain the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt hoists his broad pennant on the battleship Renown at Portsmouth for the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, Commander Godfrey M. Paine, who served in this battleship as a lieutenant when she was Admiral Sir John Fisher's flagship in the Mediterranean, will be the chief executive officer, and Viscount Kelburne, the eldest son of the Earl of Glasgow, who is himself a retired naval captain, will act as first lieutenant. Both these officers will probably obtain a step in promotion on the return of the Renown, the former becoming captain at thirty-four years of age and the latter a commander at thirty-two.

3RD AUGUST 1905.

Hindu.—A correspondent writes:—The Mysore Government have sanctioned the expenditure of one lakh of rupees for Khedda Operations in connection with the approaching visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales. While the visit of an august personage like the son of King Edward VII. should not be received in too prosaic a manner, a native Raja spending one lac of rupees of his people's money—people whose average income is not even 1-20 of the countrymen of the guest proposed to be entertained with tamashas of this kind, is an act of sinfulness for which the offender will be answerable before the Bar of Heavenly judgment if not down below as well. We do not mean to say that the Mysore Maharaja is the first, the only or the gravest offender in this respect. We only take this opportunity to declare to the world that no King should consider himself the absolute owner of his public purse and should think five hundred times before he spends one cash on items of expenditure that do not benefit his native people who, it is clear, are indissolubly wedded to famine and pestilence, while their political representatives, i.e., the Native Kings are shining in unconscionable splendour.

Mahammadan.—A very successful Public Meeting was held in the College Hall, Vellore, under the presidency of Mr. R. C. C. Carr to concert measures for the participation of the North Arcot District in the Reception to be offered by the people of the Presidency to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their visit in January. A gathering representative of the entire District assembled. A large District Committee was appointed, with Mr. Carr as Chairman. A smaller Executive Committee of twenty-one members was also constituted, with the Revd. W. I. Chamberlain and Khan Bahadur Muhammed Habibullah Sahib, as Chairman and Secretary respectively. Sub-Committees were further constituted for the Divisions of Chittoor, Vellore Ranipet and Arni with the following Chairmen:—Messrs. B. C. Raghavyya, Chamberlain, Kenny and Farrar, respectively.

The meeting also resolved to take advantage of this occasion and of the offer of the Victoria Memorial and Coronation Funds Committees, to place the balance of their funds collected in their District at the disposal of the meeting for this purpose, to invite subscriptions also towards the erection of some monument or building in the North Arcot District commemorative of the visit of the Prince of Wales to the Presidency. The proposal which received the approval of the meeting was to erect a memorial in the District of the connection with India of the Queen, the Emperor and the Prince. It was decided that each subscriber should indicate the amount of his donation to be given to each object, the Presidency Reception and the District Memorial.

4TH AUGUST 1905.

Madras Mail.—General Beatson has been in Mysore and Bangalore for the last two days making preliminary arrangements for the Royal visit to Bangalore. He leaves for Ootacamund to-morrow.

The following are the proceedings of a meeting of influential Hindus and Muhammadans which took place yesterday in connection with the Royal visit:—

1. Resolved that, while being grateful to the Hon'ble the British Resident in Mysore for kindly arranging for the visit to this place of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during the forthcoming tour of the Royal party in India, every endeavour be made jointly by the Hindu and Muhammadan communities of the Station to arrest the spread of plague and keep the town in as healthy a condition as practicable.

2. Resolved that a general Public Meeting of the Hindu and Muhammadan inhabitants of the Station be held at a very early date in the hall of Rai Bahadur Narainsawmy Moodliar's High School, when the object will be explained in Hindustani, Telugu and Tamil, the vernacular languages chiefly current in the Station. At this meeting, the beneficial effects of inoculation against the plague, and the proper disinfection of plague-infected houses; will be recommended, and the necessity for the maintenance, in an efficient manner, of the sanitary condition of each and every house will also be pointed out. The meeting should be called by a wide circulation of notices signed by the respective heads of the Hindu and Muhammadan communities.

3. Resolved that a Committee, with a General Secretary, be formed at the proposed General Meeting with a view of seeing that active steps are taken in order to give effect to the measures that may be decided upon at the General Meeting, and that this Committee meet for the present at least once a month, at the place and time fixed by the General Secretary, to receive reports of the progress, made during the period and to consider further measures, if any, that may then be brought forward.

4. Resolved that the Mahamandoo of the Hindu community be asked to arrange for the measures decided upon being adopted in the several parishes, and that the Kazi be also desired to take similar action in regard to the localities where the poorer classes of Muhammadans reside.

5. Resolved that a vote of thanks be passed to the Chairman for his able conduct of the meeting.

Pioneer.—The Local Government has sanctioned a grant-in-aid of Rs. 10,000 from the Port Fund for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in January next.

5TH AUGUST 1905.

Advocate of India.—Arrangements in connection with the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in Hyderabad have been taken in hand. The Faluknama Palace is being thoroughly overhauled and fitted up, regardless of expense, for the occupation of the Royal visitors. The building will be lit up by a brilliant electrical installation, the contract for which is now in the hands of the contractor.

Madras Mail.—It is a happy sign of the times that all the communities whatever creed they may belong to have combined in one voice to give vent to their feelings of joy by means of public demonstrations on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to the City of Madras. Politically, Their Highnesses' presence will reveal to the world that we are capable of acting with unanimity forgetting, for a while, our mutual differences, whatever they may be, when any public occasion should arise like the present one. Whatever might have been thought by outsiders and to whatever harsh criticism we might have been subjected hitherto, for our want of co-operation and combination, the Prince of Wales will, I hope, have the pleasure of seeing with his own eyes that unsatisfactory conditions no longer exist now-a-days, and that we have turned out a new chapter of existence under the new influences brought to bear on us by the benign British Rule. Socially, also His Royal Highness will have the satisfaction of noticing that a bright and glorious chapter has already commenced itself in our physique and morality. For it will be brought home to His Highness, that as a nation, we have made considerable improvements, physically, mentally, and morally, and that our chief social barriers to combination are fast disappearing before the modern forces of action.

Though the spirit of loyalty and devotion to the British Crown has penetrated our hearts through and through and though for its manifestations no outside display may be necessary, for nothing is nobler and more tangible than the feeling felt at heart—yet it is thought better to give expression to our loyal feeling publicly by means of vivid demonstrations. Popularly speaking these demonstrations have their own benefits for they serve as chief proclaimers to the world the depth of loyalty which is felt at our hearts towards our Sovereign's son. It is in this sense and in the desire to follow the time-honoured usage that the educated and wealthy classes have resolved to give a public reception and entertainment on behalf of the City of Madras on the occasion of the Royal visit. It is a matter for satisfaction that the appeal for funds made by the General Reception Committee has found a ready response at the hands of the public, and that about Rs. 18,000 have already been collected. It is hoped that a portion of this large amount and the sums to be gathered hereafter will be utilised by the Committee substantially for building any memorial or fund like the Bombay and Calcutta Cor so large a sum of money upon idle and ephemeral displays.

It is a source of pleasure that several wealthy Zamindars of this Presidency have co-operated with the efforts of the Committee and have made their sympathy take a practical shape by contributing liberally towards the fund. Besides co-operating with the public Zamindars as a body may take some steps to demonstrate on their own account their loyalty in a substantial manner. It is a matter for regret that the Landholders' Association of Madras is labouring under the disadvantage of not having a permanent residence of its own to hold its meetings from time to time. In this respect, it is a regrettable fact, that the aristocracy of Southern India are lagging much behind those of the Bombay and Bengal Presidencies where the Landholders' Association are associated with permanent residences. The advantages of having substantial quarter are too many for narration and of which everybody is well aware. Though it is practicable to hold meetings in some rented or borrowed building whenever any necessity arises, as at present done, yet the lack of a building which necessitates the insufficiency of meetings, will not produce that wholesome "esprit de corps" which is the main object of such associations. At present, attracted by curiosity or business, many enlightened Zamindars are visiting Madras every year more frequently than formerly. Some of them have got their own separate quarters and the others have to go about hunting after rented buildings. As Madras is a city of distances, it seems difficult to meet one another as often as they could wish, though they reside in one and the same place. To create an "esprit de corps" it is of absolute necessity to meet one another as often as possible and this does not appear practicable under any other circumstances. Without the cultivation of the spirit of co-operation and combination which are the requirements of the modern civilised age, it is not possible, in my view, to give expression to our grievances, or to express our opinion upon any chief and abiding question in one conjoint voice. It is owing to this want of unanimity of expression, I presume, that Lord Curzon turned a deaf ear to our request of allowing a seat in the local Legislative Council when representation was made to him during his last visit to Madras. Further the broad angularities of character the spirit of provincialism and isolation for which some of us have been condemned more than once by the public can only disappear by our meeting together frequently so that we may rectify the above mentioned defects by understanding one another more plainly. Without possessing a common platform upon which all the Zamindars could assemble for the consideration of any knotty questions whenever such occasion should arise, we would be living as it were in "water-tight compartments" as Lord Curzon has expressed in one of his previous speeches not knowing our personal views thereon.

Considering the numerous benefits to be derived by means of a permanent residence I think, in my humble opinion, that time has come for raising funds towards the fulfilment of this object to do which I believe the present is the best opportunity that affords itself to us, for in what better way can we bear testimony to our spirit of loyalty and devotion to the Heir-Apparent of the British Crown than by approaching His Highness with a request of laying down the foundations of a residential building for the Landholders' Association, to be named in memory of his visit. If a permanent building were to be erected a sort of club-life might also be associated with it so that the members of the Association might spend their evenings in happy and jovial companionship after the main business of the Association had been transacted. I have thrown out the above suggestion for the deep consideration of the members of the Landholders' Association of Madras, and I hope that steps will be taken at no distant date, if my humble suggestion should receive their favour.

Madras Mail.—The programme of the visits of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales is finally settled. They are to reach our city on the 21st and will stay here for three days. The Royal family of Jaipur has always distinguished itself in history for their loyal attachment towards their Sovereign; and it can be safely concluded from the preparations now going on in the city, that Jaipur will occupy the foremost position in point of splendour and richness among all other Native States. It seems that the public has fully recognised the importance and unique nature of such visits.

Amrita Bazar Patrika.—In the course of the next few weeks the Prince of Wales comes out to India but there is absolutely no stir here. Neither has the royal visit caused any enthusiasm in England. This is not the first time that the heir-apparent to the British throne is paying a visit to India. We still remember vividly how the whole of India and England was absorbed in this subject months before the departure of the former Prince of Wales, now the King of England, for this country. For weeks together the House of Commons was crowded to suffocation when the question of the Royal visit was raised there, and various suggestions were made, both by Conservative and Liberal Members, as to how the Prince could make his stay profitable here.

But though the subject of the visit of the present Prince of Wales was broached upwards of a year ago, no discussion of any sort on this subject, as far as we are aware, has occurred in Parliament or elsewhere up to this time. There is also no stir in India. For this there is an explanation. We hope to be forgiven if we say that in political matters the Bengalis always take the lead in India. But this year they have forgotten that the Prince is approaching; they have no heart for anything. The Partition question has occupied their whole attention.

When the visit of the late Prince of Wales, now the King-Emperor, was proposed, the British public, with the true instinct of the nation, loudly demanded to know first of all who would pay the bill! That was their first consideration, and to an Englishman no consideration is more important than that. The anxiety of the nation was appeased by the assurance that a part of the expenses would be paid by the Indians, and that a large sum was expected from presents, nuzzurs, and so forth. We need hardly say that this shop-keeper's spirit, displayed by the British nation on a great occasion like that, had a very depressing effect upon the ardour of the loyal Indians; for they could not divest themselves of the idea that the object of the Royal visit was not so much to evoke their loyal feelings as to empty the pockets of the well-to-do people of this country.

Though owning the biggest empire in the world, the English people have not as yet been able to overcome the shop-keeper's feeling, which is their national weakness. When three Bengali gentlemen were deputed to Bombay to present an address to Sir Richard Temple, who was then the Governor of that Province, the leader of the deputation sought to persuade His Excellency to accept the address on a certain date. But Sir Richard had made arrangements for an extensive tour in the interior, and he could not break his numerous engagements with the districts without putting them to trouble and inconvenience. So he asked the members of the deputation to wait at Bombay for fifteen days till he returned from his tour.

Though the leader of the deputation had high persuasive powers, yet his eloquence could not make any impression upon the mind of Sir Richard. When every argument failed to persuade the Governor to stay and receive the address, the leader said: "Your Excellency, there is another matter which I am ashamed to mention. We have monthly tickets; they will expire if we are to wait fifteen days more!" And Sir Richard was immediately won! He said, "That is serious," and agreed to break all his engagements with the districts and receive the deputation, because otherwise the three gentlemen would be compelled to purchase tickets again and lose some money.

It was really a matter of surprise to the Indians why the Prince of Wales was sought to be lowered in the estimation of the masses by raising the question of the cost of His Royal Highness's visit to India. Indian landlords, only two decades ago, when going to see their tenants, never demanded their passage expenses though it was generally paid to them by the tenants in various ways. On the other hand, Zemindars who began by demanding it found it difficult in the end to realize even their legitimate dues. Pounds and shillings should have never come into the calculation of the English rulers when such an important event as the Indian visit of the heir-apparent to the British throne was before them for deliberation.

To the credit of Mr. Fawcett and sixty-seven other members of the House of Commons be it said, that they strenuously opposed the idea of throwing the cost of the Prince's visit upon India. And be it said to the discredit of the greatest leader of the Liberal party of the last century, that he (Mr. Gladstone), Mr. Disraeli, and Lord Salisbury (the then Indian Secretary of State) were in the same boat, and arrayed themselves against Mr. Fawcett's motion, which ran as follows:

"That, in the opinion of this House, it is inexpedient that any part of the expenses of the personal entertainment of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, on the occasion of his proposed visit to India, should be charged on the revenues of India."

The illustrious blind member for India urged that the visit of the Prince of Wales was an excellent opportunity to make amends to India for the shabby treatment which she had received when the expenditure incurred on the occasion of the ball to the Sultan was charged to this country. He was sustained in this view by Sir Wilfred Lawson, Mr. Laing, and Mr. Hankoy. But the Premier (Mr. Disraeli), supported by Mr. Gladstone, maintained that India should be gratified at an opportunity of showing her hospitality. Mr. Disraeli indulged in some beautiful sentiments appropriate to the occasion: the Prince said he would be able to study on the spot not only the country but its literature and language! The Prime Minister, however, was inexorable as regards the payment of the cost of the visit by India.

Mr. Gladstone argued that as the India Council was the representative of India, and as the Secretary of State and his Council had decided that India should pay, so it was her duty to do so. So India, according to Mr. Gladstone, was not only represented but represented by the Secretary of State and the members of his Council! Mr. Gladstone might have strengthened his arguments still more by pointing out another body of India's representatives, namely, the Manchester people!

We are not aware how the question of the cost of the visit of the present Prince of Wales has been disposed of. Perhaps the precedent in the case of the former Prince of Wales will be followed on this occasion also. But will he also receive presents and nuzzurs? Then, how has the question of precedent been settled? On the previous occasion the Prince had a second position in Darbars and other functions and the Viceroy the first. This was done on the following ground: India was governed by Viceroys and not by Kings or the members of the Royal family. The heir-apparent to the throne would be here only for a short time and never come again to this country. The position of the Viceroy must not be therefore lowered in the estimation of the public.

But what position will be given to Lord Curzon and Lady Curzon? At the State Dinner to be given at Government House Their Royal Highnesses as the guests of the Viceroy will of course occupy the first seats. But who will take precedence in Darbars if any is held? The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, we think, is bound to give a dinner to Their Royal Highnesses. At least Sir Richard Temple did give one. Now, if Sir Andrew Fraser also gives a similar dinner, who will take precedence—the Viceroy and the Vicereine, or Their Royal Highnesses? We trust Lord Curzon will insist on his rights; for it will look very odd and humiliate him in the eyes of the public if he were given a second seat, while Lord Northbrook occupied the first during the visit of the former Prince of Wales. If, however, the Prince of Wales objects, the best course for His Excellency is to decline the invitation of Sir Andrew and hold no Darbars at all.

Indian Daily News.—Though the suite which the Prince and Princess of Wales are bringing out from Home this autumn is not as large as was that which accompanied King Edward when he visited India, yet the total party to be accommodated will comprise about 120 Europeans in addition to Indian attendants. Extensive arrangements are also being made for Press correspondents, who, it is understood, will be carried free over the Indian railway systems, about a dozen native papers being represented as well as Anglo-Indian and London journals. In all three trains will most probably be made up, the Press correspondents travelling upon the first, the Royal party upon the second, while the baggage and attendants will occupy the third.

Advocate of India.—The Hon'ble Sir Lawrence Jenkins presided yesterday afternoon over a meeting of the provisional committee appointed for the purpose of making the necessary arrangements in connection with the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. The resolutions to be submitted at next Monday's public meeting of the inhabitants of Bombay were drafted and settled, the principal of which was to establish a museum in Bombay in commemoration of the Royal visit. It was stated at the meeting that His Excellency the Governor had consented to be the Chairman and Sir Lawrence Jenkins to be the Vice-Chairman of the general committee to be appointed at the public meeting. Mr. Sassoon J. David, Sir Harkisondas, the Hon'ble Mr. Ibrahim, Khan Bahadur M. C. Murzban, Messrs. James McDonald, Narotam Morarji Goculdas, Kazi Kabirudin, McBain, D. E. Wacha, W. D. Sheppard and Currim-bhai Ebrahim were proposed to be appointed Secretaries of the general committee.

Madras Mail.—A public meeting was held in Tirumulai Naick's Palace, Madura, on Saturday last, under the presidency of Mr. J. Hewetson, District Judge, to consider what steps should be taken by the Madura District to help the movement in Madras to accord a fitting reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

It was proposed by Mr. Sri Seshadri Iyengar, seconded by the Hon'ble Mr. G. Srinivasa Row, and carried, that in response to the requisition for pecuniary help from the Secretaries to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales' Reception Committee in Madras subscriptions be collected in this District and sent to Madras and that a list be opened on the spot.

It was proposed by Mr. A. Rungasamy Iyer and seconded by Mr. T. Jivaji Row and carried, that a Committee, with power to add to its number, be formed to carry out the above purpose, with Mr. J. P. Bedford, I.C.S., as the President and Messrs. A. Upendra Pai and the Hon'ble Mr. G. Srinivasa Row as Honorary Secretaries.

Madras Mail.—The following paragraphs appear in the Indian Social Reformer, a paper published in Bombay:—

A valued correspondent, writing from Madras, says that he learns from one who ought to know that it is proposed to include nautches in the entertainment to be given to the Prince and Princess of Wales when they visit that city. This would be a very retrograde measure, especially in Madras. We print elsewhere some particulars of an important movement set on foot in Madras some years ago, under influential auspices, and it would be a great pity if the effect of that movement had been allowed to die out so soon. Since writing the above we learn that the proposal to include a nautch in the entertainment was adopted in the face of opposition from some members of the Committee. Bombay is not going to hold a nautch nor, so far as we know, Calcutta. Why should Madras alone flaunt its shame in the face of Their Royal Highnesses? Why should it degrade itself and insult its visitors by such an exhibition? Is the nautch a "national" institution, or are the citizens less sensitive in such matters than those of other places?

Is this statement true, or is it not? If not, what are the facts of the case? Why has the Entertainment Committee not published its programme? There certainly have been rumours afloat for some time in Madras that dances form part of the intended programme, and that when one gentleman formally proposed in the Committee that there should be no nautches, he was out-voted. If these rumours are untrue, it is time they were contradicted. One thing is clear, the inhabitants of Madras must protest against the indignity of welcoming their future King and Queen with an institution now so discountenanced as the nautch.

Western Morning News.—In connection with the commissioning of the battleship Renown for the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales in India practically all the appointments have now been filled. Commander Godfrey M. Paine, who served in the Renown during the period when she was flagship of Sir John Fisher in the Mediterranean, will be chief executive officer, and Viscount Kelburne, who has followed in the steps of his father, the Earl of Glasgow, in selecting the Navy as his profession, will be first lieutenant. The latter officer, who served with Admiral Sir John Hopkins in the Mediterranean, was flag-lieutenant to Admiral Jeffries at Queenstown, and for the past three years has been serving in the Alacrity on the China Station, has eight years seniority, and in accordance with precedent should obtain promotion to commander on the return of the Renown to England, when Commander Paine will also almost certainly get a step in rank.

Before Captain the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt hoists his broad pennant as Commodore of the second class in the Renown, he will have relinquished the position of Private Secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty. He has held this position under Lord Goschen, Lord Selborne, and the present Earl Cawdor, since Vice-Admiral Fawkes relinquished it in order to hoist his maiden flag in the original Cruiser squadron. The appointment is a most admirable one, and Captain Hugh Evan-Thomas, who has been in command of the Admiralty yacht Enchantress since May last, has been selected to fill the vacancy. Captain Evan-Thomas will be remembered as Lord Charles Beresford's flag captain in the Channel fleet, in command successively of the Majestic and Cesar, prior to taking up the appointment in the Enchantress, and before that he was in command of the Pioneer in the Mediterranean. It was thought at one time that the Admiralty might have appointed a senior captain or a rear-admiral to this position at Whitehall, but the selection of Captain Evan-Thomas is in accord with the principle on which appointments are now made, namely, that the best officer should be selected, without reference to rank. Experience and ability are the criterion, and in this instance Captain Evan-Thomas, although he has only three years seniority as post captain, had very strong claim to the appointment.

Advocate of India.—The Oudh Akbar has a leader on the proposed Medical College, advocating the founding of a Medical College in the United Provinces to commemorate the visit of the Prince of Wales. So has the Zoonl Kurnein of Badaun. Both the papers discuss the question at some length and observe that the United Provinces cannot wait long for the Medical College which is their crying need and the wealthier classes cannot mark their loyalty better than by supplying this need of their countrymen.

At the meeting of the Standing Committee of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, held yesterday, it was resolved to recommend the Corporation to sanction a grant of Rs. 6,000 to meet the cost of preparing an address of welcome to be presented by the Corporation to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their approaching visit to Bombay, also for the casket to contain the address and for any other necessary expenses in connection with the presentation. It was further resolved to bring this matter as urgent business before the current meeting of the Corporation.

Englishman.—Some interesting particulars have arrived from Simla of the provisional programme of the Prince of Wales' visit to the Punjab. Lahore, as at present arranged, will be the first place of formal arrival in the province, and will be reached by the Prince and Princess of Wales on Tuesday, the 28th November, at the convenient hour of three o'clock in the afternoon. At the railway station the principal officers will be presented. The Royal party will then drive to Government House, by way of the Fort and Anarkali Gardens, in order to afford to the locally expectant multitude a first general view of the Royal cavalcade, and in particular for the benefit of the Punjab Chiefs and Darbaris, who will be assembled near the Fort to greet Their Royal Highnesses. The procession will be stopped to allow the Municipal Committee to present an address of welcome. At eight o'clock a State Dinner will be given at Government House, at which only gentlemen will be present, and after dinner the Prince will drive to Montgomery Hall, where he will hold a formal reception of Punjab Darbaris.

Next morning (Wednesday, 29th November) the Prince of Wales will receive ceremonial visits, with full honours, from the Punjab Chiefs in the following strict order of precedence:—Maharaja of Patiala, Nawab of Bahawalpur, Rajas of Jind, Nabha, Kapurthala, Mandi, Sirmur, Faridkot, Chamba, and Suket. As each chief will have the privilege of making his visit alone the ten visits will occupy the whole time unceasingly between breakfast and lunch. After lunch a visit will be paid to the Dufferin Hospital, and at night there will be a small dinner party, to be followed by a drive out to the far-famed Shalimar Gardens, where gorgeous illuminations will greet the eye.

After breakfast next morning (Thursday, 30th November) the Prince of Wales will ceremonially return the visits of eight of the Punjab Chiefs in the following order of precedence:—Maharaja of Patiala, Nawab of Bahawalpur, Rajas of Nabha, Jind, Kapurthala, Sirmur, Mandi, and Faridkot. In the afternoon the Princess of Wales will graciously attend a purdah party, and later an informal visit will be paid to the Aitchison Chiefs' College. After a small dinner party at Government House a grand ball will be given at the Montgomery Hall; and this will be the most brilliant public function of the whole visit.

After breakfast the next morning (Friday, 1st December) the Prince and Princess will visit the Fort and will probably extend their morning outing to other monuments of interest. A grand garden party will be given in the afternoon, and after dinner the Royal visitors will leave Lahore for Peshawar.

In continuation of the provisional programme of the Royal tour in the Punjab the Prince and Princess of Wales after their trip to the North-West Frontier and to Jammu will arrive at Amritsar on Wednesday morning, 6th December, and after breakfast (in the train) will receive at the railway station the principal local officers, each of whom will be informally presented. From the railway station Their Royal Highnesses will drive to Khalsa College, the centre of Sikh education in India, and, returning to the railway station, will lunch in the train. In the afternoon a drive to the Golden Temple will be the principal event, followed by tea in the Ram Bagh, and the Royal party will leave Amritsar at 6 p.m., dining in the train.

Madras Mail.—A meeting of the Casket and Address Sub-Committee was held at the Senate House yesterday evening. The following were present:—Sir S. Subramanya Iyer (Chairman), Mr. H. K. Beauchamp, C.I.E., the Hon'ble Mr. H. A. Sim, C.I.E., and Mr. H. C. King, and the Hon'ble V. C. Desikachariar (Honorary Secretaries).

It was resolved that Messrs. Sarubai and Sons, of Park Town, Madras, whose design had been accepted, be entrusted with the work of making the casket, as per details furnished by them, with the alterations suggested by the Committee, for Rs. 4,500.

It was resolved that the draft Address, as amended by the Sub-Committee, be placed before a Meeting of the Executive Committee.

Times of India.—The Corporation considered the following letter from the Chairman of the Bombay Improvement Trust, addressed to the Commissioner:—

"I have the honour to inform you that it is probable that arrangements will be made for Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to pass through the completed portion of the Board's New Street Scheme II (Queen's Road to Carnac Bridge) on the occasion of Their Royal Highnesses' second ceremonial drive through the city in November next, and that this opportunity may be taken for His Royal Highness to informally open the street for the public use. The Board are of opinion that, subject to the permission of His Royal Highness being obtained, a suitable name by which the street should be known thereafter is 'Prince's Street,' this name to apply to the 80 feet portion from Queen's Road to the bifurcation beyond Kalbadevi Road and to the 60 feet portion which will continue from the bifurcation up to the Jumma Masjid. Should this suggestion meet with your approval, I have the honour to request that, under section 327 (1) (a) of the Municipal Act, you will be good enough to obtain the sanction of the Corporation to this name being adopted. I am aware that my request is a little unusual as until the street is completed in every respect as provided in section 45 (2) of the Bombay Improvement Trust Act (IV of 1898) it cannot be declared a public street and until such time it will not vest in the Corporation. But the circumstances are also exceptional, and I feel sure that in consideration of this the Corporation will agree now to sanction a name which shall designate the street for all time as a memorial of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses to the city, thus merely anticipating the time when it would be necessary in the ordinary course for the street to be named."

The Commissioner, in his covering letter, requested sanction of the Corporation to the proposal.

The Hon'ble Mr. Ibrahim Rahimtulla proposed that sanction be given. It would be a very suitable commemoration of the ensuing Royal visit to Bombay.

Khan Bahadur Murzban having seconded the resolution it was adopted.

12TH AUGUST 1905.

Englishman.—In connection with the Royal visit to Calcutta it may be mentioned that nothing official is yet known here regarding the dates fixed for the various ceremonies and functions, but it is obvious that the Simla paper is misinformed regarding the native fêtes on the Maidan. Only one fête will be held, and that, it should be borne in mind, will be a joint affair, subscribed to by all communities. There will be one unique feature in the proposed Reception. In honour of the visit of Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, Indian ladies of some of the highest families, who had never come out from the sacred precincts of the Zenana before, will personally welcome Their Royal Highnesses and take part in the ceremonial. Another unique feature of the demonstration will be, we believe, that ceremonies will be observed which were performed on occasions of Royal Receptions in ancient India during Hindu and Mahomedan periods.

Indian Daily News.—We recently gave an outline of the engagements of the Prince and Princess of Wales in Calcutta. It is now stated that Their Royal Highnesses will be present at the Convocation of the Calcutta University.

Madras Mail.—At a large and influential meeting held in the Town Hall yesterday, Mr. Vijayaragunatha Durairajah, Councillor, presiding, resolutions were passed sympathising with the loyal object of the Madras General Committee and appointing a strong Committee for raising subscriptions towards the general fund; Rs. 200 were subscribed on the spot. Great enthusiasm prevailed.

Modern Society.—A very elaborate gun equipment is being prepared for the use of the Prince of Wales during his Indian tour. Some of the weapons, notably a battery of elephant rifles, will be chosen from the King's gun-room at Sandringham, where they have reposed in state behind glass doors since they were brought home many a long year ago in the Serapis. But the smaller fowling-pieces will be of a newer design, and are being built to a specification furnished by experienced shikaris to the Royal armourers.

His Royal Highness is hoping to get some sport with the water-fowl on the central plains of India, and the arrangements that are being made on the spot have for their object the provision of shooting forays in every branch of Asiatic sport. A taxidermist will be attached to the Royal staff for the purpose of preparing the more important skins as trophies of the chase.

The Royal party is timed to reach Bombay on the King's birthday. The six days allotted to the City of Bombay will be none too long for all that has to be done. The Princess will pay a special visit to the Alexandra College for Parsee ladies, and will convey a personal message of good-will from Her Majesty, who has always regretted that she was not able in earlier years to pay a visit to the gorgeous East. The girls, some of whom are as old as twenty-four, are very clever with their fingers, and are already engaged upon elaborate pieces of golden embroidery, which will be brought home by the Princess. His Royal Highness will also take a turn round the Sassoon Institute, upon which Sir Albert Sassoon, one of the Prince's intimates, spent a large sum of money.

Every day will have its interests, and the first month will be none too long for the slow progress from Bombay to Delhi, where Lord Kitchener will have his full camp in readiness for the great review. The visit is by no means to be limited to a round of sport. The great institutions that have been erected by the enlightened enterprise of the Native Princes within the last generation will be systematically visited, and the Princes themselves will vie with one another in showing the lavish hospitality of the East, none the less because they have been notified by the Viceroy that they will not be expected to impoverish themselves by making costly offerings to the representative of the Kaiser-i-Hind.

Advocate of India.—We are glad to hear that Babu Prag Narain Bhargava proposes to commemorate the visit of the Prince of Wales in a befitting manner. He informed the Government through the Commissioner of Lucknow that he intended to bear half the expenses of a Boarding House to be attached to the local Jubilee School, which will cost about Rs. 16,000. The Government has accepted the offer so liberally made and thanked Babu Prag Narain for his liberality. The Jubilee School was very much in need of a boarding house, and Babu Prag Narain deserves public thanks for removing this want. The funds of the School are not sufficient to meet the requirements.

Bombay Gazette.—A public meeting of the inhabitants of Bombay for the purpose of making suitable arrangements to welcome Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay, and of considering the best measures for celebrating and commemorating their visit to this city, was held in the Town Hall last evening, under the presidency of His Excellency Lord Lamington, who had specially come down to attend it. The meeting was one of the largest ever held in the Bombay Town Hall,—and such even in face of the fact that yesterday was a great Hindu festival. Several hundreds of mill hands, with banners denoting the names of the mills they worked in, with a band playing and the banners flying, were drawn up, under the directions of Mr. Ali Mohamed Bhimjee, on the top of the main stone staircase leading into the Hall where the meeting had assembled. Several of the principal citizens were received with a clapping of hands as they came up on the platform; and a most enthusiastic greeting was accorded to His Excellency Lord Lamington.

Mr. Sassoon J. David, Sheriff of Bombay, read the requisition addressed to him by the leading citizens to call a public meeting, and said he had great pleasure in doing so. He then declared the meeting open, and called upon them to elect their Chairman.

It was then proposed by Sir Jamsetjee Jeebhoy, Bart., and seconded by Sir Hurkisandas Narotumdas, that His Excellency Lord Lamington be requested to take the chair.

His Excellency Lord Lamington, who was very warmly greeted, in addressing the meeting, said: Gentlemen, I accept with the greatest pleasure, though with some diffidence, the honour of presiding over this very great gathering this afternoon. In my experience I may safely say that it is the largest meeting that I have ever addressed in this Town Hall, and it shows how very earnest are the people of Bombay that on the occasion of one of the most important holidays of the greatest section of the community a very large number of people have given up their time to be present here this afternoon. (Cheers.) At the same time it is very proper and very fitting that you should be here, because it is, as you are aware, for the purpose of making arrangements to demonstrate to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales (cheers) when they come to India, the loyalty that pervades the people of this great city. (Loud Cheers.) As you are aware, it is for the first time that either His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales or Her Royal Highness the Princess has ever visited this Empire. And not only that, but it is the very first time in history that the heir-apparent to the Throne has been accompanied on a visit to this land by his Princess. (Cheers.) There can be, therefore, no doubt that the occasion is a most notable one and should be taken full advantage of to be commemorated in a proper and fitting fashion. It is sometimes criticised whether the tours of those who are in a position of responsibility are really worth their undertaking, that they go hastily from place to place, they see nothing of the inner life of the people, and that practically it is money wasted that gentlemen occupying high positions should ever make themselves acquainted with different parts of the country over which they might have administrative duties. I must demur to that statement or criticism entirely. Speaking for myself, I have benefited enormously by being able from time to time to go about and make myself acquainted with the condition of the different localities in this Presidency. (Cheers.) And I will say, for anyone in a position of responsible authority, that by so doing he gains information, that he appreciates more thoroughly the wants and requirements of the people, that he becomes acquainted with those who may be in their different districts holding responsible positions, and that not only is this a strict utility in carrying out his proper functions, but also imperceptibly it has a sympathetic and binding influence with him that pervades thereafter his relations with those different districts that he visits. Well, if that is the case in my position how much more important is it that one in the position of His Royal Highness who, in the natural sequence of events that may take place, may one day fulfil the highest position that a man can fill in this world, that himself should become acquainted with the different portions of his Empire. (Cheers.) And this is not a mere theory, but we are aware that he has already traversed from continent to continent other portions of the British Empire. We are aware that the great Colonial tour resulted not only in giving intense gratification to the people of the different parts of the dominion, but also, as was evidenced by that most remarkable speech that His Royal Highness delivered at the Guildhall, in London, it showed that his tour was taken full advantage of by the Prince of Wales in having given him a full knowledge and appreciation of the condition and feelings of those who are living and inhabiting the outlying portion, scattered throughout the Globe. Therefore, it is only proper, it is only natural, that, having made himself acquainted with the different self-governing Colonies and also in many cases with the Crown Colonies, he should visit this Indian Empire. And this afternoon it is our business to consider in what manner we shall mark our appreciation of the fact that this will be the first part of the Empire that will be visited by Their Royal Highnesses. There is a lengthy programme, of which I see all of you possess a copy, and you will see in this programme roughly speaking what is proposed to submit to the meeting; you will see in the second resolution that there is a mention made of some permanent form of celebrating this Royal visit. For some months past from time to time you may have seen how the idea of having a museum in Bombay has been promulgated, and a Committee was appointed by Government, who fully went into the subject. I should like to take this opportunity of thanking those gentlemen who sat on the Committee for the very exhaustive inquiry that they made into the subject. The report of the Committee, as I can gather, has been generally endorsed and approved of by the Press, both European and Vernacular (hear, hear), and that being so I have no doubt that this afternoon you will accord your approval to the resolution, when it has duly been submitted to you. I am aware that many may say that it is rather waste of money to put it into a museum, and that there are many other wants and needs of the people that require to be attended to, that there are hospitals, that there are the poor and the suffering, and so on. But if one followed that line of reasoning in life, it seems to me if it were carried to its full length of the argument, we shall have nothing but the simplest food and nothing but a moderate amount of clothing. (Hear, hear.) But there is something beyond satisfying the wants of those who are undoubtedly in need and perhaps in distress. It appears to me that it is not a waste of money to erect a building which should be the means of supplying instruction, information, and edification to the minds of those who want to learn. Nor would I put altogether on one side those who are not experts, but who are at the same time desirous of passing a quiet hour in examining some objects of interest and utility that have been collected together. (Cheers.) I think I am justified in saying what great importance is reposed in the minds of some, at all events, in having a central institution of this sort. when I tell you that I had a personal interview with a gentleman, who is well known to you,—I mean Mr. Currimbhoy Ibrahim (cheers)—and he told me himself that he was so much impressed with the want of a museum and that he was so satisfied that it would bring additional prosperity to the City of Bombay materially and intellectually, that he therefore gave me a cheque for three lakhs of rupees for the purpose. (Cheers.) That cheque, I hope, is safe in one of the most important banks in Bombay (laughter) and is already earning a certain amount of interest. But that interest such as it is earning now, when properly devoted to its purpose, will, I am certain—and I am only corroborating the donor's words—carry with it an interest tenfold the amount or hundredfold the amount that it is at present earning. (Hear, hear.) I have also had further support in this direction. I have received a telegram from His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh in which he says:—"I desire to express to Your Excellency my sincere and loyal concurrence in the object of the meeting over which Your Excellency is about to preside in Bombay, for the purpose of arranging for a permanent memorial of the forthcoming auspicious visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. I venture to hold that this is a matter which does not concern the City of Bombay alone, but in which the whole Presidency and the adjacent States should take pride in co-operating with hearty enthusiasm. I, therefore, beg that Your Excellency will permit me to send through you a subscription of twelve thousand rupees towards the proposed memorial. (Cheers.) I trust that the meeting will result in further proofs of the unflinching devotion of India to His Majesty the King-Emperor and the Royal Family." (Cheers.) Well, gentlemen, I think that is a satisfactory start to be made, and I hope it will be followed by other donations from those who are able to afford it. And I want not only their money, but, as those who have been so far connected with the movement know, I have been all through anxious that if a museum is started it should be started with the interest generally of the people of Bombay and the Presidency, it should not only be so started but carried through. Therefore you should one and all as far as possibly lies within you make it a source of pride to you that you should have erected a museum in which may be collected such objects of archaeological, artistic, and industrial interest as may bring it within its walls anxious inquiries and intellectual seekers who may benefit by the connection that may be obtained. Not only that I am no believer in mere waste of money in superfluous adornment, but I believe that what is most truly useful is also most truly beautiful. I believe you will have a building which in its simplicity may be a strict adornment to this noble city. Therefore, I hope that both outwardly and inwardly it may be a visible proof of the greatness of your city. (Hear, hear.) I may say on behalf of Government that, as you know, they were going to give upwards of about two and a half lakhs of rupees to the starting of this scheme. But on Saturday—I make particular allusion to this—as you must have seen in the papers, that a sad accident has occurred to my hon'ble colleague, Mr. Muir-Mackenzie, and his wife. I am sure I may express to him on your behalf our united sympathy; I submitted papers to him only on Saturday and asked him whether as Revenue Member and guardian of the purse he would not allow me to announce that the Government may increase their donation to three lakhs of rupees. I am glad to say that I have got his hearty acquiescence, and I am glad to be able to announce that our funds now stand at Rs. 6,12,000. (Cheers.) Well, gentlemen, that of course is not the sole means of celebrating the approaching visit. However, you will see in the programme another resolution that deals with those celebrations that will take place during the actual visit. I trust that there will be a general approval and the public sanction will be given to whatever form the celebration is decided upon. I see in the Press various suggestions. I know that we like to run our own hobby and pet schemes. I hope the Committee will be able to arrange a programme that will satisfy the public at large. It is impossible to expect on such an occasion that we shall find ourselves in such dull Arcadia as to have no discussion at all. I trust there will be generally a spirit of harmony, and you will unite together in the manifestation of your loyal feelings to Their Royal Highnesses. (Hear, hear.) Well, gentlemen, I have little more to say than to express a hope that this movement, which has been long under discussion, may now drop its nebulous form and this afternoon will acquire a concrete form and will thereafter achieve its destiny in according a fitting reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their first landing on the Indian soil in this port, which is indeed and truly a gate beautiful of the Indian Empire. (Cheers.) I trust that that welcome may be such as will give deepest gratification to Their Royal Highnesses and which will at the same time be marked by such an outburst of enthusiasm, affection, and joyous acclamation as will impress itself on the minds and hearts of the people, and will ultimately have its permanent expression in the noble structure which shall be a source of undying interest to generations to come. (Loud cheers.)

Sir Lawrence Jenkins, who was received with cheers, then rose and said:—Your Excellency, Ladies, and Gentlemen, I have the honour to move "That this meeting has heard with feelings of joy the announcement of the approaching visit to India of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and resolves that the people of Bombay will offer Their Royal Highnesses on their arrival a loyal, hearty, and enthusiastic welcome." (Cheers.) Endowed with all the advantages of a position which enables us to be the first to welcome to India those who come to it from the West, we owe it to ourselves and to our traditions to spare no effort to ensure that our welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, on their entrance into this city, shall be worthy of the occasion (cheers), and by the spirit and temper of our reception to afford them in no uncertain tone their first proofs on Indian soil of the loyalty that is felt throughout the length and breadth of the land to the King-Emperor and the Royal House. (Loud cheers.) If there be one sentiment or topic which above others unites all classes and creeds, it is, I am convinced, this loyalty, and the citizens of Bombay will not, I feel sure, fail in giving it due and ample expression. Bombay can boast of a long connection with the British Crown, not without its touch of romance, and reaching back to close on two centuries and a half, nor is it any new experience for this city to welcome the Prince of the British line. Thus, to name no more, one of Queen Victoria's sons had lived in our midst, and borne with us the heat and burden of the day in service of the State, and just thirty years ago the Scrapis brought to these shores the present King-Emperor, who now sends us his son, the bearer of the title that then was his. But in one respect the coming visit will be unique, for the heir-apparent to the Throne brings with him his Royal Consort, and thus the womanhood of India will be enabled to take a part in the welcome that would otherwise have been beyond their reach. (Cheers.) We are, I feel assured, united in the determination to give to Their Royal Highnesses such a reception that among the brightest of their recollections in the days to come shall be the loyal, hearty, and enthusiastic welcome by the citizens of Bombay. And so I submit with every confidence to this meeting the resolution that I have had the honour to move. (Loud cheers.)

The Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Armstrong, in seconding the resolution, said: I have much pleasure in seconding the proposal that has just been put before you in a very interesting speech by Sir Lawrence Jenkins. Gentleman, on local questions we very often have, and it is quite right that we should have, friendly differences of opinion as discussion is often necessary, but on the question now before us there can, I think, be no difference of opinion whatever; for I feel sure we are all determined to give a most loyal and hearty welcome to His Royal Highness, our future Emperor, and to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales when they land at the Apollo Bunder on the 9th November. (Cheers.) And where, gentlemen, should a hearty welcome be given if not in this City of Bombay, in which we live and of which we have no reason to be ashamed. (Hear, hear.) Although in their travels through India Their Royal Highnesses may visit more interesting towns, none I venture to think will be finer or more beautiful than this city of ours. And yet after all Bombay is not a show city only. It is a town with a vast trade, inhabited by an industrious, a progressive, and an intelligent people, and we are proud of the position we have made for ourselves in the world of commerce. As a port, Bombay is one of the most important in the British dominions and our trade is extensive and steadily increasing. We receive at this port the manufactures of other countries and to them in large quantity we send the produce of Western and Northern India. But we do more than this, for we manufacture largely for our own needs. In this small island, although perhaps in some parts we produce more smoke than is good for us, we employ 100,000 people in our cotton factories; and in the welcome we are now discussing one cannot but hope that those who are benefiting so largely from the extraordinary prosperity of our local mill industry will contribute liberally and generously to any local festivities there may be, as well as to that work in which His Excellency the Governor is taking so much interest, the founding in our midst of an Archaeological Museum, an Art Gallery, and a Public Library, a scheme which on its own merits, apart from the fact that it will commemorate this Royal visit, is in every way worthy of your support. But let us look at the matter for a moment from another point of view. Bombay for the last few years has been sorely tried by famine and by plague and much misery has been caused to the poor of this city. Let us then look forward to this Royal visit as the beginning, as we may surely hope it to be, of a better state of things, and by our loyal greeting let us do all we can to show that although we have been passing through troublous times we are not cast down or despondent, but are hoping that the visit of our future King may inaugurate better times. Let us then give to Their Royal Highnesses an enthusiastic welcome equal to if not superior to that always given by large cities in other parts of the British Empire, whenever Royalty honours any one of them with a visit. For these reasons, gentlemen, and for many others I commend this proposal to you. (Cheers.)

The Hon'ble Mr. Ibrahim Rahimtulla supported the resolution.

Khan Bahadur M. C. Murzban, C.I.E., in supporting the resolution said: Your Excellency, Ladies, and Gentlemen: I esteem it a great privilege to be called upon to support the resolution which has been so eloquently placed before the meeting by the previous speakers. At the same time I feel not a little diffident as to my ability to discharge satisfactorily the duty laid upon me. I am, however, conscious of the fact that the nature of the proposition is such that this large, enthusiastic, and loyal assemblage of the citizens of Bombay requires neither a lengthy address nor an eloquent speech to commend the resolution to their warmest support. The occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales is no ordinary occasion. It will be one which will be recorded in letters of gold in the annals of our city. For next to the Ruler himself we can think of no other personage entitled to our deepest loyalty than the heir to the Throne of England—the future Emperor of India. Therefore, a visit from such a personage and his illustrious consort is no small matter in the concerns of this city. (Applause.) A Royal visit such as the approaching one is ever a matter of the greatest importance and interest to Indians; for, to the Eastern mind, nothing appeals so much as the sight—it may be a mere glimpse—of Royalty, whether it be the King himself or members of his family. The personages who are about to visit us are members of no ordinary Royal family. In the first place they are the grandson and granddaughter-in-law of our late noble and revered Queen Victoria. (Cheers.) They are the son and daughter-in-law of our present King-Emperor, who has at heart the interest of the many millions of his subjects in this country. (Hear, hear.) Bombay will have the honour of the first landing of Their Highnesses in this country, and I have no doubt whatever that the first city in India will be also the foremost in the warmth and splendour of its welcome to the illustrious couple; and here it will not be out of place for me to refresh remembrances of the past: it was my rare good fortune to take an active part in the welcome which was accorded by our city, some thirty years ago, to His Majesty the King-Emperor, who was then Prince of Wales, and I have a very vivid recollection of the loyalty and devotion which the inhabitants of this city exhibited on that occasion. I personally had the honour of being associated with His Majesty, as Junior Grand Warden of Scottish Freemasonry in India, in laying the foundation stone of the Prince's Dock. (Hear, hear.) Bombay is said to be the second city in the British Empire, but it is second to none in its loyalty and devotion to the Crown of England. (Cheers.) In a few months' time the eyes of the world will be centred on Bombay as the first landing place of these illustrious visitors, and I am sure that the citizens will rise to the greatness of the occasion and accord a welcome to Their Highnesses in a manner which cannot be surpassed by any other city in this country. (Hear, hear.) To Their Royal Highnesses we cannot give a welcome warmer than the one we gave to our beloved King-Emperor. That is not possible, but we can certainly, with the increased resources at our command, make the welcome far more splendid. (Cheers.) I have no doubt that the people, with one accord, will be ready and willing to do everything in their power to give the Royal personages a hearty welcome, and I trust and venture to hope, in the presence of His Excellency the Governor, that the Local Municipal Governments will put their hands deep into their purses with a view to make the welcome worthy of the occasion. We also hope to see similar liberality on the part of the citizens. On the day of the landing let the people come out in their tens and in their thousands, dressed in their best holiday attire, to do honour to our illustrious visitors. On this auspicious occasion let us reassert the pledge of our devotion and loyalty to the British Government, which has given promises for the fulfilment of the hopes and aspirations of a great people. With these remarks, Your Excellency, I heartily support the proposition moved by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice. (Loud applause.)

The first resolution was then put to the meeting and carried with acclamation.

The Hon'ble Sir P. M. Mehta, who was received with tremendous cheering, next addressed the meeting. He said: Your Excellency, Ladies, and Gentlemen,—I am entrusted with the task of laying the next resolution before you, which is:—"That in addition to making suitable arrangements for celebrating the joyous occasion it is highly desirable in the opinion of this meeting to take steps towards raising a permanent memorial in commemoration of the auspicious event—such memorial to take the form of a public Museum with Library, Art Gallery, Garden and other adjuncts of popular recreation as far as the funds will permit." I suppose, ladies and gentlemen, that in moving this resolution I am expected to expatiate upon the theme that this is an occasion which deserves not only to be celebrated with rejoicings and festivities at the time, but which also deserves to be cherished and remembered by some permanent handing down of our feelings and impressions regarding it to our children's children, in a manner that would add to the beauty and greatness of our city, an institution both ornamental and useful. (Hear, hear.) It seems to me, however, that it is scarcely necessary to spend many words on such a subject before a public meeting of the citizens of Bombay, whose public spirit, I am vain enough and proud enough to imagine, marches hand in hand with its deep and abiding loyalty, and whose spirit of enterprise is stimulated by a free-handed generosity. (Cheers.) I was reading the other day a report of the proceedings of a public meeting held at Calcutta for the same purpose for which we are assembled to-day, and I was very much struck by an observation then made by the Chief Justice of Bengal. He said:—"It may be, gentlemen, that sometimes you have cause to complain of this Government or that, and it may possibly be, though it is a contingency—which I can scarcely contemplate—that you may have to find fault even with the High Court. Be that as it may, my residence in India has convinced me that deep down in the hearts of the Indian people there resides absolute loyalty to the British Crown." I make bold to say that a greater truth was never uttered. (Cheers.) I have always thought that this is the abundant harvest reaped of that most precious of all gifts bestowed upon the Indian people by English rule, namely, education,—education not perhaps of the very highest or select order, but widespread enough to filter down slowly but surely from stratum to stratum. It is true, as we are always reminded, that the soldier is abroad, and just now, some say, very much so, maintaining and preserving peace and tranquillity from within, and it is said from without, but the humble schoolmaster is also abroad, far more humbly paid and far less brilliantly accoutred, but still in his quiet, humble way transforming the feeling of gratitude for the maintenance and preservation of peace and order into a sentiment of earnest, devoted, and enlightened loyalty. (Cheers.) It has been said, ladies and gentlemen, that after all the loyalty of the Indian people is a different thing from the loyalty of English people to their own natural Sovereign, though after all the English is also a conquered race, and that it is lacking in what may be called the personal element. But I venture to say that after the genuine, spontaneous, and general outbursts of feeling on the occasion of the death of the late revered and beloved Queen-Empress, the equally natural demonstrations with which the accession of his present Majesty were hailed throughout the country, it will be scarcely denied that the personal element has also largely entered into the deep loyalty of the Indian people. (Applause.) The goodness and greatness of the sympathetic womanhood which distinguished the late Queen stirred the heads and minds of the Indian people into a personal feeling of love, respect, and reverence towards her person. (Applause.) This feeling was immensely stimulated and strengthened by the visit of his present Majesty, then Prince of Wales, during which, we may fondly boast, he first displayed those great qualities of head and heart which have now made him perhaps the most popular, the best beloved and admired of European Sovereigns. (Cheers.)

The residence of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught in this country contributed not a little to the same end. It is no wonder, therefore, that we look forward to the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales as one devised in the highest interests of this country. If I may venture to put it in this way, our deep and personal loyalty to the Royal House of England is one of our most valued political assets. Gentlemen, let us always hold fast by it. When the programme of festivities and rejoicings is out, I have no doubt that there will be a large influx of people in this city from the Presidency, and Bombay will be able to accord a most hearty and enthusiastic welcome to Their Royal Highnesses. As to the question of a permanent memorial, I congratulate myself that His Excellency the President has taken the subject under his own wings and has placed before you reasons why you should heartily, spontaneously, and enthusiastically co-operate for the purpose of carrying out the scheme. It was right and proper that His Excellency has placed this subject before you, for I can tell you that the credit of the origination and the idea of the scheme rests entirely with him. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, he has told you only this memorial will be worthy of the occasion; and you will allow me to add that it will also solve the difficult question of utilising the Crescent site. This is a site about which we have been squabbling for a long time, and I do not think that it can be better utilised than for the purpose of locating the museum. The situation is appropriate to the occasion of its surroundings. There is on one side of it the equestrian statue of the King-Emperor. On the south side is situated the Alfred Sailors' Home, a memorial of the visit of another son of our late Queen-Empress. Is it not proper that this museum should be placed in a quarter where there are already records of Royal visits. I understand that we will have another statue of some sort or another, whether an equestrian statue or otherwise, which will be placed in the same locality and which is to be the gift of one of our valued citizens who now occupies the high position of the Sheriff of this city. (Cheers.) I think I need not take up your time in expatiating on the value of providing a permanent museum in Bombay. We have been charged—I do not say untruly or unjustly—that we have always claimed for Bombay that it is the perfection of the cities in the world. We do admit we have faults indeed and we may admit that in the matter of museums Bombay has fallen behind, leave alone the cities of the world, even Calcutta and Madras. Gentlemen, it is time that we should have a museum, and that, with the co-operation of the Government in the manner in which His Excellency has announced to you, the citizens of Bombay will provide a museum worthy of the memory of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. (Cheers.)

The Reverend Dr. Mackichan, in seconding the resolution, said: Your Excellency and Gentlemen,—The reception which you have now accorded to the resolution that has now been moved leaves no doubt as to its enthusiastic adoption by this great and representative assembly of the citizens of Bombay. In seconding the resolution it is therefore not necessary for me to enlarge upon the reasons for the action which it contemplates. Yet I may be permitted to remind you of its special appropriateness to the purpose for which this meeting has been convened. We are met to devise measures for the fitting celebration of an event of imperial importance. After the lapse of nearly a generation India is again to welcome the heir-apparent to the throne, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, who brings with him his Royal Consort. (Cheers.) There is abundant evidence on every hand that the heart-felt loyalty of all communities and nationalities in the Indian Continent eagerly awaits this opportunity of expressing itself, and that the expression will be in all respects worthy of the unique occasion. (Cheers.) In this connection a great responsibility is laid upon our city, which is to have the honour of according to Their Royal Highnesses the first Indian welcome. We all know the importance of first impressions, and, knowing this, Bombay, as we have seen to-day, is resolved that nothing shall be wanting to make these first impressions of India's welcome to the Prince and Princess convey to them every assurance of India's devoted allegiance to the Royal House with which her destinies are linked. (Loud applause.) But there is another aspect in which the Royal visit is to be regarded. I refer to the impression which it is to make on the country which it honours. Those of us who remember the visit of our gracious Sovereign King Edward, when he came to us as the Prince of Wales, and have traced the growth of national sentiment in India during the subsequent years can discern the working of the impression which that visit created in the public mind, and I feel assured that the Royal visit to which we now look forward will be followed by a similar increase of attachment to the person of the Throne. This is a land in which such personal attachments have always played a conspicuous part in the life of the nation, and it is specially fitting that India should enjoy from time to time that personal contact with the ruling House which such visits furnish. But the impression of the Royal visit on India means more and ought to mean more than this. The feelings which it ought to awaken ought not to stop short with the creation of a sentiment; they ought to manifest themselves in concrete results, which will serve as a permanent memorial of the occasion and the sentiment which it has awakened in the mind of the community. The resolution which I have the honour to second calls upon you for an expression in such tangible shape of the enthusiasm for country and city which this great occasion has aroused. It asks you to convert your enthusiasm into certain public institutions by which the life of your city will be permanently benefited and the interests of your country advanced. (Hear, hear.) The objects placed before you in this resolution are not superfluities in the life of any city. A Museum, a Library, an Art Gallery, and the means of healthful recreation which it is proposed to establish on one of the most coveted sites in our city, are in the truest sense among the necessities of life, if you understand that term in any other than the most sordid sense. We are justly proud of the many advantages which our city enjoys, many of them the result of its natural position, some of them the fruit of the enterprise and energy of its citizens. But we are in danger of forgetting and sometimes of being unconscious of our deficiencies. It is necessary that a fresh eye should be turned upon us in order that these deficiencies should be discerned—His Excellency, who has honoured this meeting by his presence and by presiding over it, has brought that fresh eye to bear upon the capital of his province. (Cheers.) He has been quick to point out some of our most prominent defects, not as an unkindly critic, but as one who is prepared to take a leading part in supplying them. It has been the privilege of Bombay to receive from time to time from successive Governors the stimulus of their initiative in regard to important movements, and His Excellency Lord Lamington has by initiating the present movement for the establishment of a Museum and its adjuncts shown that he is keenly alive to the higher needs of the city. We are all too ready to indulge a dangerous complacency in regard to the First City in India. Our modest motto has had the effect of lulling us into a belief in its truth, and to believe such exalted things about ourselves may sometimes impede out true progress. I yield to no one in my attachment to the City of Bombay, in which I have spent the greater part of my life, but I am not blinded by this attachment to some of our manifest defects. We can point to our unrivalled public buildings, to our great docks, to our numberless mills, now throbbing with the pulse of unprecedented prosperity; but we refuse to measure the real greatness of a city by the forest of masts in our docks and harbour, or the forest of chimneys that now covers so great a part of our island. In this capital city of the Presidency, we look for that which shall worthily embody the ideal elements of cultured life and for much of that we look in vain. It is true that we can point to many important educational institutions in our city, and to many associated with the cause of philanthropy and benevolence. But here there are many gaps which remained unfilled, and His Excellency Lord Lamington has placed the city under a deep obligation by calling attention to them and by his appointment of a Committee to report as to the manner in which they might be filled. (Applause.) Surely it is a reproach to our city that there is no place to receive the interesting relics of ancient Indian life and architecture that are being constantly brought to light. A true patriotic instinct should inspire multitudes among you with a desire to preserve and to exhibit for the instruction of the people these memorials of the great epochs in your country's history. There are collections of such things scattered here and there but few know where and fewer still have access to them. It is imperative that the scattered work of a number of useful societies should be gathered to a centre, and such a centre will be found in the Museum referred to in the resolution now placed before you. No less conspicuous is the want of an Art Gallery, in which valuable works of art of historical and intrinsic value may be placed for the instruction and elevation of the people of our city. In Western lands no city of any importance is without these necessary adjuncts of popular culture, and Bombay ought long ere this to have possessed them. Around the buildings which are contemplated in this resolution there will be space for attractively laid-out grounds which will further serve for the recreation of the inhabitants of our crowded city. (Hear, hear.) It is indeed a most fascinating picture that is called up by the thought of the realisation of the proposals now submitted to you and which it is in your power to carry out in a degree commensurate to the importance of the event which you are asked to commemorate. That rather unsightly piece of desert which we call the Crescent, is to be made to blossom as the rose and to unfold to your vision a beautiful garden in which buildings are to arise which will be a new ornament to a city already beautiful, and within which many minds will find the highest form of refreshment. In conclusion, let me add that this is the kind of memorial by which you may most appropriately commemorate the visit of a Prince, who is the grandson of our late beloved Empress Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort who did so much to stimulate the higher side of the life of Great Britain in the century that is past. A memorial of this kind will be in harmony with the traditions which are represented and carried on both by the King and the Prince of Wales. They are in touch with the manifold interests of the great Empire at the head of which they stand. Their names are associated with all the great enterprises of our nation's life, its commercial developments, its philanthropic achievements and its scientific progress. But I think we may claim them as in a special degree identified with that class of intellectual interests to which the proposed Museum and its associated institutions will be devoted. A memorial of such a character as this will not fail to be gratifying to a Prince and Princess (cheers) who have shown by their public acts that they are in profound sympathy with all such movements. The name of the Roman Emperor Hadrian was to be found all over the Roman Empire in the buildings which he caused to be erected in the various places through which he passed in Imperial progress. Surely, we may expect a more fruitful and more significant memorial of the Royal progress through India in institutions suited to the spirit of a better age, called into existence by the people themselves, in their desire to emulate the highest examples of that Western nation to which they are united in the bonds of a common beneficent rule. (Applause.) Gentlemen this resolution means business. It is no mere theoretical proposition to which you are now asked to give your assent. It means that you commit yourselves to a programme of practical benevolence, that you undertake to raise the funds that this memorial demands. In many ways your liberality has lately been drawn upon; but liberality is a virtue that grows by exercise, and Bombay will have ceased to be the Bombay of the past with its conspicuous traditions of inexhaustible liberality if it fails to respond to the call to special generosity which the signal honour of a Royal visit brings with it. (Loud Applause.)

Mr. C. E. Copplestone, in supporting the resolution, said: Your Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen,—It affords me the greatest possible pleasure to rise in support of the proposition that has been so eloquently put forward by Sir Pherozeshaw Mehta, and so ably seconded by Dr. Mackichan, and I am the more pleased that it gives me the opportunity of saying publicly that the scheme propounded has the hearty approval of the European trading community, in whose name I speak as Master for the present year of the Bombay Trades Association. (Cheers.) It is an anomaly that a city of the size and importance of Bombay, which proudly claims to be first in India, should lag behind the capitals of the sister presidencies of Bengal and Madras in the matter of a Museum worthy the name. (Hear, hear.) From my personal experience of the Calcutta Museum, I know that it affords pleasure and instruction to thousands who annually pass through its galleries and examine the priceless treasures they contain, and there is no doubt in my mind that if this proposition is carried to a successful issue and we have a Museum for Bombay, it will afford a like pleasure here and be a source of interest and profit to thousands of this city, and those who visit it annually, and I am convinced that it will prove a most valuable addition to our city and an increasingly useful permanent memorial of a gracious visit which we, as loyal subjects, are anxious to commemorate. (Applause.) It is, however, on the latter portion of the proposition that I wish to say a few words. I read as follows:—"Art gallery, garden, and other adjuncts of popular recreation and amusement." Now, gentlemen, you are all aware that Bombay has been waiting for and has made more than one attempt to establish a Town Band, but so far we do not appear to have struck the right note, to elicit that support necessary to make it a success. What more fitting or better opportunity could we have than this to give to the city that inestimable boon, good music and a continuance of it? What memorial of an auspicious visit could be more suitable or bring more pleasure into the lives of all classes than such a glorious gift? What could be more in accordance with the spirit of this visit than the bringing of joy and happiness into lives that are often so sadly wanting in the elements that make life worth living? Here, gentlemen, is a grand opportunity for some good-hearted philanthropist, who has the power to do it, to confer a benefit on this city which will cause his name to be handed down to posterity as a benefactor in the truest sense of the word, whose name will be remembered with love and affection by the poor of this city long after we, who are met here to-day, are gone and forgotten. I am sure there is nothing we could do that would be more certain to win the approval of Their Royal Highnesses and of our fellow citizens than this gift, and I urge the matter with all the earnestness in my power to the attention of this meeting and the Committee that will be appointed to carry out the resolutions you adopt. In conclusion, I assure you that there will be no more loyal, earnest, and energetic supporters of this proposition than the Trading Community of Bombay.

Mr. Vijbhucundas Atmaram also spoke in support of the resolution.

The second resolution was then put to the meeting and carried with acclamation.

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Tyebjee moved the third resolution for the appointment of a general Committee (comprised of representative men of all nationalities), with power to add to their number, for inviting subscriptions from the public and carrying out generally the object of this meeting. Mr. Justice Tyebjee said: This resolution, as you will observe, is merely a formal resolution and therefore does not call, I am happy to say, for any lengthy remarks from me. I abstain from reading the names of those selected for the Committee, but I assure you that the list will be found to contain the names of all the leading and representative men belonging to the different communities. I do not wish to detain you with further remarks, but I would desire to add one word of my own personal testimony as to the feeling and devotion which have animated all the communities of this Presidency. Speaking as a Mussalman, I may be permitted perhaps to say that there is on foot now amongst the Mussalman community a movement to call a public meeting of the members of their community, neither as a rival nor as antagonistic to this meeting, but for the purpose of helping forward and promoting the same object which this meeting has in view that the Mussalman population takes proper steps and helps satisfactorily the Committee that will be appointed at this meeting, and to see that the Mussalman public buildings and mosques shall be decorated and illuminated in a manner not only befitting the welcome which we all shall tender to Their Royal Highnesses, but also befitting the wealthy Mussalmans who have thrived and are thriving under the British rule. (Cheers.) Let us hope and pray that the elements may be propitious, and that timely and plentiful rain may come down so as to make this place—our beloved India—brimful with prosperity. Let us hope that long before Their Royal Highnesses set their foot on the Indian soil, the cause of all our anxiety will disappear, and after Their Royal Highnesses have really landed in India, we shall rejoice in a plentiful and abundant harvest. (Cheers.) Let us all hope that all traces of distress and grief arising from plague and pestilence may also disappear, and that Their Royal Highnesses may look upon us with our countenances smiling with prosperity and good cheer. (Applause.)

Sir Bhalchandra Krishna, in seconding the resolution said: Your Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution just proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Badrudin Tyebjee. This resolution provides the necessary machinery to carry out the object of the meeting, and when the object is accepted in principle, the machinery follows as a matter of course. The Committee includes most of the leading men of Bombay. It will be aided by very competent Secretaries, who are accustomed to carry out such undertakings with success. The public too are sure to give a hearty response, and we may well look forward to a most joyous termination of the labours begun this evening. Gentlemen, the appeal to give a fitting welcome and reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will not fall in Bombay on deaf or unwilling ears. Any representative of the Sovereign, any member of the Royal House may with confidence count upon receiving an enthusiastic welcome from Bombay. But when the persons to be received stand so near the throne as Their Royal Highnesses, all India will rejoice and will greet the visitors with unbounded joy. (Cheers.) Gentlemen, the occasions of such visits are rare, and they must be commemorated in a manner worthy of the distinguished persons who visit us, as well as of the proud position we hold as Urbs Prima in India. Our citizens know their duty. They have before now given evidence of their loyalty to the Throne in many striking ways. They may therefore be trusted to co-operate with the Committee with hearty goodwill. All organised demonstrations will, however, have to be carried out by the Committee, and the veterans who will form the Executive Committee will, we may be sure, make the demonstrations eminently successful. Many of our citizens may have a lively recollection of 1875 when His Majesty the King Emperor, then Prince of Wales, paid his memorable visit to our city and we had the privilege of Bombay giving the first welcome. A generation has since elapsed, and during the interval there have been numerous occasions of public demonstration and rejoicing, all accomplished with conspicuous success. (Hear, hear.) On the present occasion I am sure Bombay will beat all past record. (Cheers.) There will of course be ceremonial functions, military displays, and the usual forms of demonstration such as arches, flags, fairs, illuminations and fireworks. But on the top of these there is to be a solid permanent memorial of Their Royal Highnesses' visit to Bombay. Gentlemen, you have already pledged yourselves to the function of a public Museum as a memento of Their Royal Highnesses' visit. It is a very onerous pledge you have given and you must now rise equal to the responsibility. A public Museum worthy of Bombay has long been a great want, and we owe it to the initiative of His Excellency Lord Lamington that this want is now about to be supplied in such a happy manner. With promised help and sympathy of the Government and of a distinguished public-spirited citizen, Mr. Karimbhoy Ibrahimbhoy, the success of the scheme is well-nigh assured. (Applause.) But let me remind you, gentlemen, that to make the success an accomplished fact, a heavy duty will lie on you to make a response commensurate with the gravity and importance of the cause. With these few words let me commend the proposition to your unanimous acceptance. (Applause.)

Lord Lamington said Mr. W. D. Sheppard, who was to support the resolution, had sent a telegram saying that he was ill and unable to attend the meeting. Similar excuses had also been received from Mr. Bomonjee Dinshaw Petit and Mr. Adamjee Peerbhoy.

The third resolution was then carried unanimously.

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chandavarkar moved the fourth resolution, that the general Committee be empowered to appoint an Executive Committee for the purpose of carrying out all executive functions in connection with the celebration and commemoration.

Dr. R. Rozario, who seconded the resolution, said the movement had roused feelings of enthusiasm in the Portuguese community of this city, and they all heartily endorsed the movement.

The Hon'ble Mr. Vithaldas D. Thakersey, in supporting the resolution, said: Your Excellency, Ladies and Gentlemen,—I take it that every one of us in this crowded gathering is agreed that we should give to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, on landing on our shores, such a warm welcome as will do credit to this, the second city of the Empire. This visit to India, the Jewel of the British Crown as it has been termed, will remove, we hope, the heavy disappointment experienced when some time ago in the tour of Their Royal Highnesses to other parts of the Empire, India could not be included. One of the chief characteristics of the people of Hindustan is, as you well know, absolute unquestioned loyalty to their Sovereign, but how much stronger, keener and warmer this feeling of loyalty becomes when we have such Rulers as our late gracious and revered Queen-Empress Victoria the Good, and our noble King-Empor Edward the Peace-Maker. (Loud Cheers.) I am, therefore, perfectly convinced that this city will accord to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, such a reception as will not only testify to our absolute loyalty and devotion to the British Throne, but may favourably revive in the mind of our Royal Sovereign the pleasure which he himself derived from his auspicious visit to this country thirty years ago (Cheers), and will also afford to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales subject for present gratification and most pleasing retrospection in years to come. In giving to their Royal Highnesses an eminently hearty and honourable reception, we will do ourselves the greatest honour. I am sure that the Executive Committee to be appointed will spare no pains to fulfil to the utmost the strong unanimous desire of the Bombay public to make it a reception worthy of the occasion. (Applause.) I have, therefore, the greatest pleasure in supporting the resolution which has been proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chandavarkar.

The fourth resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. James MacDonald, moving a vote of thanks to the Sheriff of Bombay, Mr. Sassoon J. David, said: There are doubtless good reasons why the resolution which has been allotted to me should permit of no departure from the stereotyped conventional terms of the formal proposition which tenders to our worthy Sheriff the hearty thanks of this meeting for the trouble he has had in convening it. I trust, however, you will allow me to understand in it an earnest expression of sincere congratulation upon his recovery from his severe illness, fortunately in happy time to participate in those coming events of which this meeting is the bright foreshadowing. On this understanding I beg to move that the cordial thanks of this meeting be conveyed to the Sheriff for the trouble he has had in convening it. (Cheers.)

Mr. J. A. D. McBain seconded the resolution, which was carried with acclamation.

Sir D. M. Petit moved that the best thanks of the meeting be accorded to His Excellency Lord Lamington for having kindly taken the chair. Sir Dinshaw said:—Before a meeting is dissolved, it is a rule that a vote of thanks should be passed to its Chairman. But the vote of thanks that I have to ask you to pass to the Chairman of this evening's meeting is not the customary conventional vote of thanks but a genuine and sincere expression of our gratitude, not only for the great trouble His Excellency has taken to come over to preside at to-day's function, but for the much valued and esteemed sympathy that His Excellency has evinced towards the movement we have just set on foot. By carrying into effect the resolutions we have just passed we will not only perpetuate in a befitting manner the visit to our city of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, but we will also solve the difficulty of utilising in the best possible way the Crescent site. (Cheers.) But above all we will have an institution the want of which we have often felt and the absence of which has been to Bombay a great shortcoming. That shortcoming will now be soon removed, and we will have a Museum let us hope worthy of our city, worthy of the proud motto it bears and worthy of the great name it is going to be connected with. But we can hardly hope to carry out such an ambitious programme without the valued help and co-operation of the head of the Government of our Presidency. By extending to us this help and co-operation His Excellency Lord Lamington has laid us under a deep debt of gratitude for which we will always feel thankful to him, and will always remember him as the Governor in whose regime an urgent want of the city was supplied. (Loud applause.)

Mr. Currimbhoy Ebrahim seconded the resolution, which was put to the meeting by Sir P. M. Mehta and carried amidst prolonged cheering.

In acknowledging thanks, His Excellency said: Sir Dinshaw Petit, Mr. Currimbhoy Ebrahim, Gentlemen, I thank you for the great enthusiasm with which you have received the resolution that always concludes a meeting, and I also have to thank those speakers who have dwelt upon really the very insignificant part that I have played hitherto in this movement. And again let me repeat that I do not wish to play anything but a very insignificant part in connection with the Museum. But I want the living interest of the people of Bombay. For myself, I do not care how beautiful a building is, whether church, temple or museum. Unless it represents the embodiment of human interest and human life, to me it is mere stones and mortar and represents nothing worthy of memory. And, gentlemen, allusion has been made, and I think it is a hopeful sign of the interest that will be taken, to the throngs of people that pass through the galleries of the museum at Madras. Even the one, not very splendid museum, at the Victoria Gardens, as I have been told, is visited on holidays and other days by people in considerable numbers. I only say this to prove that it is a very distinct want that we are this afternoon seeking to supply. May I say, in connection with Their Royal Highnesses that I think you will find them guests who will fully repay what you can do for them. I have mentioned what has been the effect of their tour to the Colonies and what an effect His Royal Highness' speech had upon the British public at home, as well as upon all those who dwelt in the far-off Dependencies. And I can also assure you, you will find Her Royal Highness one who will take a most active interest and will desire to crowd as far as possible into her sojourn in this country, every opportunity to acquire information about the people, no matter of what sect, and also whose sympathy will show itself in her very look. (Cheers.) That I know by experience, because I have myself seen Their Royal Highnesses when they toured in Australia. And as regards those celebrations of an evanescent character, I am confident that nothing will delight Their Royal Highnesses more than the picturesque adornment that this city can exhibit on an occasion like that with its crowded streets, and I am bound to say, its enthusiastic multitudes, and also by the very simple way of decorating the city by showing brilliant embroideries and such like articles which cannot be surpassed for effective decoration in my mind, and of which I have a personal recollection from the occasion of my own first arrival in your midst. But however evanescent may be the character of illuminations, or whatever fête may be devised by the Executive Committee, I am confident that we must not look upon those celebrations as strictly evanescent. They will sink into the minds and hearts of the people who will ever look back on them with considerable fondness. One word with regard to the site of the Museum—the Crescent. I am very glad to think that on the Committee who sat to consider the question of the Museum was Mr. Dunn, the Chairman of the Improvement Trust, and I am very glad to see that he is present here this afternoon, because I think it is very ample security that we shall have no difficulty in the acquisition of that site for the object we have in view. (Laughter.) I once again thank you for your cordial reception, and I earnestly hope and thoroughly believe that this meeting is the earnest of an enthusiastic welcome to Their Royal Highnesses. (Loud Cheers.)

The proceedings then terminated. As His Excellency

Lord Lamington was leaving the Town Hall the Band played the National Anthem, the banners of the mill hands waved briskly, and His Excellency left amidst peals of cheers.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The publication in these columns of the programme to be observed during the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Lahore draws the following comment from the Times of India:—

If it is fairly typical of the routine proposed during the stay of Their Royal Highnesses at the other principal cities of India, we should think that the Royal visitors will soon long for the time when they can once more embark at Karachi, and flee from a land where they are overwhelmed with functions and festivities. So far as we can gather, hardly a single hour of the visit to Lahore is left without its appointed "pleasure." Surely those who are responsible for arranging the details of the tour might realise that the object of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses is enjoyment as well as duty? The kind of revels which Lahore projects may be very gratifying to the dignitaries of the Punjab, but will hardly be welcomed in such thick profusion by Royalties already sated by an incessant round of ceremonials. Is it not possible so to arrange the Royal tour that the august visitors may, while participating in all necessary functions and performing all formal and prescribed duties, nevertheless obtain a little leisure for themselves. If the Lahore programme is a fair specimen of what is in store for them, we can hardly conceive a more appalling experience, when there is added to it the fatigue of incessant railway journeys.

What the Times of India apparently overlooks is that the approaching Indian tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales is a visit not to India but to the Government of India, and that hosts usually have the privilege of disposing of their guests' time. If the Times of India should question this interpretation of the forthcoming event, we may have in clear proof of it the facts that the Government have carefully refrained from consulting public opinion here on the proposed arrangements, or from admitting public counsel to any sort of discussion of the details; that the Royal tour is even now nominally as close a "secret" in official circles as if it were another Mission to Afghanistan; and that the programme lately published in these columns is still kept securely locked in private drawers in Simla offices and labelled "Confidential," as if it were a monsoon forecast.

16TH AUGUST 1905.

Bombay Gazette.—Although we may have wished the Royal visit deferred until India has more recovered from the effects of plague, famine and Coronation festivities, we must now make the best of it—even if the rains fail and we again suffer from scarcity. The visit is to be paid, and within the next few months. There can be no question as to the wisdom of our future King-Emperor making himself personally acquainted with the different parts of the Empire over which he will one day be called upon to reign. As Lord Lamington observed, on Monday afternoon, he himself has benefited enormously by being able from time to time to go about and make himself acquainted with the condition of the various parts of his presidency. And His Excellency assured the meeting in the Town Hall, that for any one in a position of responsible authority to do so was to gain information, to appreciate more thoroughly the wants and requirements of the people, to become acquainted with those who may in their several districts be holding responsible appointments, for this not only enables him to carry out his proper functions, but imperceptibly binds him in sympathy with the people and places he has visited. If that is true of a provincial Governor it is much more so of a future ruler. We have had a number of Royal visits within recent years, including the present Tsar and Prince George of Greece as well as Princes of Austria and Russia. It is not long since we had one from the late Duke of Clarence, then Prince Albert Victor and second in line of succession to the Crown. But we have now the Heir-Apparent, so that the occasion eclipses the visit of any other Royalty since that of the present King in 1875. The people of all communities throughout the country appear to realise this point, and there seems to be every disposition to signalise the event in a fitting manner. As Sir Lawrence Jenkins remarked, in one respect the coming visit will be unique, for the Heir-Apparent to the throne brings with him his Royal Consort, and thus the womanhood of India will be enabled to take a part in the welcome that would otherwise have been beyond their reach. The womanhood of India will not be slow to avail itself of the opportunity and has already made progress in this direction, having discussed the preliminaries almost months before the manhood began to move.

Monday's meeting served to demonstrate the enthusiasm of the native population, one noteworthy feature of which was the presence "en masse" of the operatives of sixteen cotton mills. The European community was not very strongly in evidence, but the hour was the most inconvenient that could possibly have been chosen, even if the day had not been one of counter-attractions. The tone of the Europeans was "Let whosoever will settle the matter. We will join in when we are wanted." But they were well aware that the outward and visible signs of rejoicing were sure to take the same form as on past occasions, and that the scheme of a perpetual memorial was already cut and dried. It is a matter for congratulation that a definite proposal was ready to hand to put before the meeting, for although that gathering was convened in order to devise means for celebrating the visit, nothing but confusion could have resulted from the discussion of an unlimited number of proposals. To secure unanimity in advance was an excellent idea, and had it not been done we might have found ourselves in a position similar to that in connection with the Victoria Memorial, with our funds carried off for the enrichment of Calcutta, and Bombay left without a memorial of any kind, except perhaps of such a character and of such dimensions that not one man in a thousand could give a correct answer as to what form it took. We are glad Lord Lamington took the opportunity to discountenance any proposal for the building of hospitals and the like. They are for Governments and Municipalities or for private charity, and can in no way—in this country where each caste and creed must have its own institutions—be regarded as a people's memorial of any person or anything. Far more appropriate would be the erection of a triumphal arch, as suggested by a late lamented citizen, which besides being a thing of beauty would have materially interfered with the traffic, and have thus brought home to every passer-by not only the intention with which it was erected, but also that with which it was not.

We should approve the Museum idea, apart from the many good purposes a museum is calculated to serve, if only because it will once and for all dispose of the so-called Oval site. We have been threatened with all sorts of undesirable structures on that magnificent piece of land, and there might have come a time when it would be devoted to temporary segregation huts on permanent plinths or some equally objectionable purpose. But from that, at all events, we may now consider ourselves safe. From the report of the Committee which considered the subject, some time ago, we cannot gather much as to the manner of edifice they would erect, but it is proposed to be in three distinct blocks connected by corridors so as thus to offer as little resistance as possible to the admission of light and air to the premises in rear of it. Lord Lamington made only brief reference to the buildings or buildings in his speech on Monday. He is reported to have said: "I am no believer in mere waste of money in superfluous adornment, but I believe that what is truly useful is also most truly beautiful. I believe you will have a building which, in its simplicity may be a strict adornment to this noble city. Therefore I hope that both outwardly and inwardly it may be a visible proof of the greatness of your city." It is not quite clear what his Excellency means. But nothing is certain that the outward appearance of the building must not have resemblance either to that of Government House, Parel, or Government House, Malabar Point—both truly useful but scarcely truly beautiful—but be in keeping with the many magnificent buildings in close proximity to the site. If we are to build a memorial at all more money than that already subscribed will be required. Mr. Currimbhoy's contribution is liberal; that of Government is paltry. More still will be necessary for its endowment; but first of all we must be assured that the "truly useful, therefore truly beautiful, building" shall be one worthy the purpose for which it is proposed and the second purpose which it will also serve—the commemoration of the visit of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Bombay city and the five years' administration of this presidency by Lord Lamington.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Sir,—Would you kindly allow me space to suggest with reference to the Royal visit at the end of November and the grand Durbar and other functions which are contemplated between the 28th November and 1st December in the capital of the Punjab, that if Government would graciously declare the 30th November and 1st December general holidays—the 28th and 29th November already being gazetted holidays—it would give Government officials, Indians especially, an opportunity of running into Lahore from all parts of the Province to see their future Emperor and to show their loyalty.

Freeman's Journal.—Only the impending visit of the Prince of Wales to India is understood to have staved off the immediate resignation of the Viceroy. It would have been a good thing for the country, and possibly the Prince, if Lord Curzon had retired before he sanctioned the fatal policy of the partition of Bengal. The squabble between himself and Lord Kitchener was a trifling affair. Anglo-Indians say that the humiliation put on the Viceroy's office as a result of that squabble was dangerous, as lessening the awe in which it was held by the natives. But one is disposed to suspect that these Anglo-Indians have exaggerated ideas of the awe they inspire in the wily Hindoo. At any rate, the whole resources of the Government of the Bengal Presidency must now be brought to bear to save the Prince of Wales from being made a party to a political demonstration. No Anglo-Indian can recall anything like the excitement and indignation that this foolish policy—engendered as usual in the Englishman's utter want of imagination or sympathy with the sentiment of any other race—has provoked, and it is very likely that the Viceroy will be compelled to abandon it.

It is commonly stated that the Princess of Wales detests these Imperial tours. She is a bad sailor, and suffers agonies aboard ship, and naturally lutes being separated for such long periods from her children. But she fulfils her duty with as good a grace as possible, while with the Prince of Wales any expression of the King's wish is law. There never was a more obedient son. The condition of things as between the Heir-Apparent and the Sovereign in the present and the late reign are curiously reversed. Then the Queen lived a remote, secluded life, and every public function was performed by the Prince and Princess of Wales. It was a frequent cry that it was very hard on the Prince of Wales to have to do the work. But events have shown that he played that part con amore. In fact his indomitable energy in doing all his own work now that he is King, is understood to be something of a grievance with the Princess of Wales. She is a clever and ambitious woman, as eager as the King himself to play the regal part. But she is cast completely into the background. The opening of country cattle shows, or of provincial railway stations and such like, is the share of the Prince and Princess of Wales nowadays in Royal functions. The King takes all the big plums himself—and his appetite for them seems to grow with what it feeds upon.

Liverpool Courier.—Now that the French Fleet have left Portsmouth the attention of the dockyard officials will be directed to the next pageant at the historic naval arsenal. Two months hence the Prince and Princess of Wales will sail from Spithead in the battleship Renown, with a fitting escort on their visit to our great Eastern Empire. The Renown has done a similar duty before, taking the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to India on the occasion of the Durbar, when the King was proclaimed Emperor. The vessel, which twice acted as the flagship of Admiral Sir John Fisher, has been specially chosen because of her roominess and because she is such an excellent sea boat—quite as good as the Ophir, in which Their Royal Highnesses made their memorable tour to the "King's dominions beyond the sea." The sailing of the Renown and the attendant warships will be a great day for Portsmouth. The King and Queen will be there to say au revoir to their son and daughter-in-law, and a large number of members of the Royal Family will attend. His Majesty, who will remember the good results which emanated from his trip to India thirty years ago, may confidently look for equal blessings to follow from the present journey.

Times of India.—The public meeting held in Bombay on Monday afternoon to consider the arrangements for the forthcoming Royal visit, was in many ways a remarkable gathering. The exceptional enthusiasm that marked the proceedings was no mere conventional demonstration. It was unquestionably spontaneous and sincere, and it afforded one more proof—if proof were needed—of the genuine and sincere attachment which the people of this country feel towards the King-Emperor and the members of the Royal Family. Intelligent foreigners often ask whether the natives of India are really loyal to the British Raj. They are confused and puzzled by the discordant notes that greet their ears as they pass through India. They hear from native orators fierce criticism of the measures of Government. They hear much talk of the gulf that divides the rulers and the ruled. They see crowds of loquacious Bengalis, for instance, assembling to protest passionately against the projected partition of their province. They see swarms of Congress delegates gathering in Bombay to denounce what they are pleased to call the iniquities of an unsympathetic Administration. They turn to the native papers, and find many of them full of virulent abuse of a Viceroy, or violent articles which may begin by attacking some unpopular measure, but generally end by wholesale denunciation of British rule. They ask themselves whether a country which presents so many obtrusive symptoms of disapproval can be loyal at heart to the British Crown? At first sight the proposition may seem paradoxical, but most experienced Englishmen who have lived for a considerable time in India, have rightly come to the conclusion that these surface manifestations are nevertheless perfectly consistent with a deep and fervent loyalty towards the Throne. And the reason will not long be hidden from those who care to seek it. From time immemorial, the people of India have been accustomed to personal rulers, without the intervention of representative governing bodies and institutions. They desire and they understand a personal embodiment of the Administration, in whose name all governing acts are performed. They are willing and anxious to accord personal veneration to the monarch set over them, to an extent which men of the Western world sometimes find it difficult fully to appreciate. The Government of India is to them always more or less a nebulous thing; even a Viceroy is only the delegated representative of someone else; the officials who make and enforce this law and that are not clothed in the purple, or imbued with the majesty of Royalty; but the King-Emperor—at last, when his name is spoken, they are conscious of a ruler who fulfils their sentiments, their aspirations, and their ancient traditions.

We speak, of course, less of the comparative handfuls of highly educated men in the great cities, than of the masses of the people. Those who have been brought closely into touch with the highest Western influences are as a rule amply loyal too, but their loyalty is usually reasoned acquiescence and approval. With the bulk of the people it is instinctive, the outcome of centuries of habit. To accord respectful homage to their personal ruler is part of their customs and their modes of thought. Whenever opportunity offers they gladly give expression to their genuine and heartfelt devotion to the monarch of the Throne. Hence it is that though controversies may rage, though there may be discontent here and dissatisfaction there, intense loyalty to the King-Emperor and the Royal Family springs spontaneously to the surface. It strikes the truest and the clearest note to be heard in India to-day. It is, we verily believe, the one sentiment which the whole country holds in common. In no mere formal spirit of convention do we say that King Edward and the Royal Family are the real links who bind India to England; but the links are golden, and not of iron and steel. No one who was in Bombay at the time of the death of her late Majesty the Queen-Empress Victoria, can have failed to form a deep and abiding impression of the extraordinary signs of real grief that were shown upon that sad occasion. Bombay was a city of mourning, and the feeling was manifested even by the very humblest. No onlooker, again, can fail to have been struck by the genuine and joyous zeal shown by the members of the various native communities in the preparations for the forthcoming Royal visit. The intense interest everywhere displayed, the increasing signs of pleasurable anticipation, the evident determination to offer a splendid welcome, are being revealed in ways easily recognised by those able to discriminate between the native communities when they are in earnest, and when they are only "making believe." These things are no mere expressions of lip-loyalty; they spring from deeper and truer feelings; and what is happening in Bombay is only an index of the general attitude of the whole country towards the expected Royal visitors. There may be occasional exceptions; there must be in every country; but we believe that the bulk of the people of India cherish a large and heartfelt loyalty towards the King-Emperor and the members of his family. They have known no other rulers; they were all born subjects of the Royal House; and most of them have, in greater or less degree, feelings of personal devotion not inferior to those which every loyal Briton holds towards the Throne.

The striking success of Monday's meeting is a happy augury of the hearty spirit in which Bombay intends to celebrate the Royal visit. Nothing will be left undone to make the occasion memorable in the annals of the city; no effort will be spared to offer to Their Royal Highnesses a warm and enthusiastic welcome when first they set foot upon the shores of India. But Bombay hopes to do more than greet the distinguished visitors, and to offer them entertainment during their stay here. Led by His Excellency the Governor, who was the real originator of the project, the city hopes to create an imposing permanent memorial of the Royal visit. Upon the waste space known as the Crescent site, a handsome pile of buildings will be reared, which will contain a museum, library, and an art gallery, surrounded by public gardens, which will at once be an ornament to the city and a centre of educative influence. The Bombay Government have generously led the way in providing funds by voting three lakhs towards the project; and an example has now been set to the citizens of Bombay by Mr. Currimbhoy Ebrahim, who, not to be outdone, has with striking munificence himself given a sum equal to the Government contribution. Mr. Ebrahim, as a prominent millowner and the pioneer in various commercial enterprises, has long held an honoured position among the merchants of Bombay. As a philanthropist, his establishment of the Khoja Orphanage, and his support of other benevolent institutions, has earned him the gratitude of his own community. And in offering such a magnificent contribution towards an institution largely educational in its purpose, he has only followed on a larger scale the policy he has been quietly pursuing for many years by developing, at his own expense, facilities for the education of the youth of Cutch and of Bombay. We trust his public-spirited example may be widely followed, and that there will be no difficulty in raising funds sufficient not only for the creation of the proposed institution, but for its subsequent maintenance. The admirable telegram sent by His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh, too, with its handsome donation of Rs. 12,000, was not only couched in a welcome and appropriate vein, but contained a suggestion which we hope may bear fruit. His Highness pointed out that the project was one which did not concern Bombay alone, "but in which the whole Presidency and the adjacent States should take pride in co-operating with hearty enthusiasm." It may be hoped that others among the Princes and Chiefs under the political control of the Bombay Government will emulate the example set by the senior ruler in Kathiawar.

One portion of Lord Lamington's speech should be carefully noted by all who are engaged in discussing a scheme in which so much interest is felt. His Excellency replied to the criticism, which has been heard in more than one quarter, that the city has greater needs than a museum and an art gallery. He rightly pointed out that if we were to follow that line of reasoning to its logical conclusion, we should never do anything to satisfy and fulfil the higher ideals of life. If, in short, we are to wait until every other need of every person has been amply provided for, we shall never make a beginning at all in the directions which the proposed institutions represent. Properly conceived and maintained, the projected buildings and their contents should form a valuable stimulus to the intellectual and artistic side of the life of the city, which is sadly in need of development. But perhaps the best answer to criticism of the kind indicated is the overwhelming approval accorded by Monday's meeting, and the almost unanimous satisfaction with which the scheme has been greeted by the public and the press.

Bombay Gazette.—Last evening the members of the General Committee, appointed at the Town Hall on Monday, met in the Corporation Hall for the purpose of appointing an Executive Committee. The Hon'ble Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chief Justice, presided.

The Hon'ble Sir P. M. Mehta proposed that an Executive Committee be appointed with power to add to their number.

Sir Bhalehandra Krishna seconded the proposition, which was carried.

Sir P. M. Mehta said there was one other question which he thought might be laid before the General Committee. It was whether the General Committee desired that they should themselves decide or leave the Executive Committee to decide the character of the festivities and feasts which were to be undertaken. Generally these celebrations took the form of illuminations, public fair, children's fêtes, etc.

The Chairman said his own feeling was that the gentlemen present being just now somewhat unprepared they would not be in a position to decide upon the precise details. He thought if anybody had any suggestion to make he might submit it to the Executive Committee, and the latter, he was sure, would be too glad to consider it.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. O. Dunn proposed that the Executive Committee should formulate a programme and submit it to the General Committee for approval or modification as it should think fit.

Sir Hurkissondas Nurrotumdass seconded the proposition and it was carried.

The Committee then adjourned.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The Princess of Wales, who is Vice-Patroness of the National Association for Providing Female Medical Aid to the Women of India, will visit a number of the Dufferin Fund hospitals during the Royal tour in India.

Nawab Muhammad Ali Khan, Quazilbash, of Lahore, has been elected president of the executive committee of the newly established Zemindar Conference. At a recent meeting of the committee, it was resolved to obtain Government's permission to present an address of welcome to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales on behalf of agriculturists in the Punjab.

Daily Mail.—When early in December the Prince of Wales goes from Delhi to the Commander-in-Chief's camp outside the city, he will have an opportunity of seeing a military assemblage which, for magnitude and quality of fighting material, will eclipse anything that Aldershot or Salisbury is capable of providing.

About 60,000 of the flower of the forces in India will be assembled, and for five days Lord Kitchener will put his men "through their facings," not only in the stereotyped review business but in military operations generally. During their stay at the camp the Royal party will be the guests of the Commander-in-Chief.

News of India.—The arrangements notified by the Government of India in connection with the press representatives during the forthcoming visit of the Prince of Wales, present a marked contrast to the casual way in which correspondents were treated during the tour in India of our present King.

So far from recognising that it would be well to do all that was possible to facilitate the work of these gentlemen, their very presence appeared to give umbrage to those who were responsible for the arrangements at the onset. Nor were any facilities granted in respect of travelling accommodation or admission to various functions, until the Royal Guest had given a much-needed hint.

On the present occasion it has been recognised that, to enable the correspondents to fulfil their onerous duties with satisfaction to themselves, to their employers and to the expectant public, it is essential that they should receive the treatment they have a right to expect.

The tour is not a mere round of pleasure, and it is important that every public act of the Royal personages should be well and correctly chronicled.

In these circumstances everything done on behalf of those who have such momentous services to perform is of assistance in ensuring the success of the tour. The arrangements now referred to have been most carefully thought out. They will enable the correspondents and artists to do justice to their theme, and to devote the whole of their energies to the work in hand, and the result will, there can be no doubt, fully compensate for any trouble that may be involved.

It is clear that this satisfactory state of things is due to the initiative of Lord Curzon, who in this, as in all other things, shows that his knowledge of detail is in no degree less than his mastery of administration.

Muhammadan.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales are soon to visit India, the brightest gem in the British diadem, the pivot on which the island empire revolves. On hearing these happy tidings she has been transported with joy, for she is going to meet and see her future Lord and his Royal Consort. The teeming millions of India, though they are composed of different nationalities, speaking different languages, professing different religions and aspiring after different aims, have unanimously expressed their joy in the most loving terms, as if they all have only one mind. May prosperity attend on the most august personages, the Royal guests, and fortunate India, the loyal host.

A few days ago, the official announcement of the programme of the tour was made public. It disappointed us greatly. From it we see that their Royal Highnesses are going to grace only some privileged towns with their presence. For example, in the Madras Presidency, Madras and Bangalore are the only towns that are so fortunate. Even Travancore which enjoyed this proud privilege on a previous occasion is made to forfeit it this time. If Travancore is not omitted, the people of the districts of Tinnevely, Madura, Trichi, Tanjore, etc., will have an opportunity of seeing the Prince and Princess, either on their way to Travancore or back from it. They are now deprived of a great happiness. What have they done that they should be so ostracised? Is it that Madras and Bangalore are selfish, and that they think that if these smaller towns are to be honoured with a visit, they will lose their dignity? Or is it for the atrocious crime of their not being either political or geographical centres? We think it is attributable to the latter.

It is only fair that some satisfaction should be made for this privation which they cannot afford to undergo. If any arrangement is made to recognise this we shall be glad to hear it. If not Madras will do very well to invite three representative members from each district, one from the Hindu community, one from the Muhammadan, one from the Christian, and allow them to give Their Royal Highnesses a separate reception. If this be done each district will feel that some reparation has been made to it. Each community will consider it a high honour and cherish it much. The Royal visit will make a lasting and indelible impression in the minds of the people, and its influence will be widely felt. It will on the whole, be considered complete. The object of the visit which is not that Their Highnesses come here as tourists and sight-seers, but to strengthen with mutual love the golden bond of union between the ruler and the ruled, will be gained as well.

In conclusion we hope that the Madras Government will consider this and make it feasible, that the districts of the Madras Presidency will gladly participate in this opinion and press for their right of representation, and that Madras herself will come forward to strongly support this, and show her unselfishness, generosity and love towards the district towns, her sisters.

United India.—We are glad to see that the people of Bombay are going to erect a permanent memorial in honour of the Prince of Wales's visit to Bombay. It is to take the form of a public Museum with a library, art gallery, garden and other adjuncts of æsthetic culture. The project is estimated to cost 10 lakhs of rupees. Towards this more than 6½ lakhs have been subscribed already, and the remaining sum will, we feel no doubt, be subscribed by the people. This is as it should be. On such an occasion as the visit of His Royal Highness, the people must enjoy themselves in some fun and folly. No one will dispute that. But to spend all you collect in fun and smoke as in our midst is to misuse the money. That wiser counsel has prevailed at Bombay is a matter of sincere pleasure to us.

Madras Mail.—A meeting of the Executive Committee was held at the Senate House yesterday evening with the Hon'ble Sir S. Subramanya Iyer in the Chair. The following Resolutions were passed:—(1) That the following names be added to the General Committee:—Mr. G. S. T. Harris, the Kumara Rajah of Bobbili, Mr. M. Yoonus Sait, the Reverend W. T. Chamberlain, Mr. A. H. Deane, the Rajah of Nilambur, Mr. C. H. Morgan, the Reverend J. Lazarus, the Sultan Ali Rajah of Cannanore and Mr. H. T. Keeling. (2) That Messrs. Harris and Keeling be put on the Decoration and Illumination Sub-Committee and the Reverend J. Lazarus on the School Children Committee. (3) That the draft Address submitted by the Casket and Address Committee be accepted. (4) That the Entertainment Committee be requested to provide, in the entertainment and fireworks enclosure, sitting accommodation for subscribers and separate accommodation for distinguished visitors; subscribers being divided into three classes, class (a) paying Rs. 50, class (b) paying Rs. 25, and class (c) paying Rs. 15.

To ensure accommodation being provided, applications for tickets should be made, accompanied with remittances, to the Honorary Secretary before the 1st November, 1905. The Committee cannot guarantee accommodation to those that apply later than the above date. To those who have already subscribed, credit will be given to the extent of the subscriptions already paid by them up to a maximum of Rs. 50.

Standard.—The first-class battleship Renown, in which the Prince and Princess of Wales are to make their journey to India, is to be out of the dockyard hands at Portsmouth Dockyard by the first week in September. After undergoing trials, the ship will proceed to Genoa, to embark the Prince and Princess and their suite on October 8th.

Captain the Hon'ble H. Tyrwhitt, now private secretary of the First Lord of the Admiralty, is to have command of the Renown during the voyage, and he will hoist his broad pennant as Commodore of the Second Class about the middle of September. Commander Godfrey M. Paine, who is now in command of the Renown, will be the principal executive officer. He served in the ship when she was Sir John Fisher's flagship in the Mediterranean, and most of the other officers are also to continue to serve during the tour.

A large number of workmen are at present employed in preparing the after part of the ship for the accommodation of the Prince and Princess. All the officers, including the Captain and Commander, have given up their cabins, and these will be utilised for the suite and Royal servants. Additional cabins are also being constructed, and some of the smaller ones enlarged by two being thrown into one. The six-inch guns have all been landed, and so have most of the lighter guns, only sufficient of the latter being left on the ship for saluting purposes.

The casemates thus vacated have been made into very commodious cabins for the officers. One has been allotted to the Captain, with an annexe to it for his sleeping apartment. The Commander has another for his cabin, and the remainder have either been set apart for the other officers or else fitted up as smoking-rooms. The Admiral's cabins, or, rather, apartments aft on the main deck will be converted into drawing and dining rooms for the Prince and Princess, and there is a stern walk opening out from the former.

Just forward are the Prince of Wales's sleeping cabins, with his valet's room. The suite have also been accommodated on this deck, each one being provided with a large apartment which opens out from a large corridor. A suite of rooms on the starboard side of the upper rooms is being prepared for the Princess of Wales's exclusive use, and will constitute boudoir and sleeping apartments. The scheme of decorations for the Royal apartments will be white and gold.

Standard.—The stately elegance with which His Majesty's battleship Renown is being equipped for her voyage to the Indies—whither, like the Scrapis thirty years before, she will carry the heir to the Throne—may be the only visible sign in this country of the preparations that are being made for the Royal tour; but in the cities of Hindustan, in the Deccan and the South, on the North-West Frontier, and along the eastern waters of the Irrawaddy, everything is being got ready to give Their Royal Highnesses a fitting and splendid reception. The princes and the people of India, the civil officials, and the Army, will spare no pains to ensure the success of the visit. Nor need it be doubted that, travelling under the fairest auspices, the Prince and Princess will discover an inexhaustible interest in what they are to see of the Indian Empire. Short, too, as their stay in the land must be, the great development of railway communications has made it possible and easy to include within the programme an almost bewildering variety of spectacles and experiences. An endless assortment of races, and almost every creed that has ever been preached in Asia, will be represented among those who offer their homage to the son of the King-Emperor. Maharatta Chiefs whose forefathers rode and plundered with Sivaji, the Cossacks of India, as John Malcolm called them; Rajputs like the Maharajas of Jaipur and Udaipur who trace their lineage to the earliest days of the Aryan invasion; Sikh princes like Jilind and Patiala, whose predecessors held their own against Runjit Singh; the young Maharaja of Mysore, whose ancestors ruled the State before it was usurped by Hyder Ali and Tippu Sultan; the Nizam, premier prince of India, the successor of warrior statesmen who came to India with the Moghuls from Central Asia; Travancore and Cochin, the representatives of an ancient Dravidian civilisation, and many beside will pay their respects to him. Every faith that has been assimilated by Hinduism, from the simplest worship of trees and springs, to the complicated philosophy of post-Vedic sages, will, as it were, be rehearsed in his presence. He will be admitted to the noble mosques of the Mahomedan at Delhi and Lahore; the shrines of Benares and the yet older temples of the South will hear prayers for his welfare. In Burma he will observe the ritual of Buddhism; and in Rajputana he will see something of the Jains. One of the most influential leaders of Islam, who will attend the Royal receptions, is a lineal descendant of the famous old man of the mountains, known to mediæval travellers as the leader of the Assassins. Manifest, also, in interest are the places at which their Royal Highnesses will halt during their progress. Bombay and Calcutta, Agra, Delhi, and Lahore may be as well known, almost to a great many Englishmen as Paris and Berlin; but the marble palaces of Rajput cities, the fortresses of Bhurtpore and Gwalior, the rock-cut temples of Ellora, the flat roofs and thronged bazaar of Peshawar, Quetta, the outpost and bulwark of the Empire towards Kandahar, and Mandalay, the capital of what when the King saw India, was an independent monarchy, would be less familiar. But the whole tour will present an unmatched panorama of diversified colour and historic suggestion; and the royal tourists may well look forward to it with a feeling almost of trepidation at the thought that they must see so much.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Writing about the Calcutta functions during the Royal visit the Englishman says:—Only one fête will be held, and that, it should be borne in mind, will be a joint affair subscribed to by all communities. There will be one unique feature in the proposed Reception. In honor of the visit of Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, Indian ladies of some of the highest families, who had never come out from the sacred precincts of the Zenana before, will personally welcome Their Royal Highnesses and take part in the ceremonial. Another unique feature of the demonstration will be, we believe, that ceremonies will be observed which were performed on occasions of Royal Receptions in ancient India during Hindu and Muhammadan periods.

Mahratta.—It was a very successful meeting which was held in the Bombay Town Hall on Monday last. The gentry of the metropolis had assembled to consider the steps to be taken to offer a suitable welcome to the Prince of Wales and to perpetuate the memory of his visit to Bombay. There was, in our opinion, nothing remarkable about the speeches at the meeting, though we might make a special mention of the tactful utterances of the Hon'ble Sir P. M. Mehta. We do not feel much concerned with the festivities and rejoicings which the Bombay meeting decided upon and which will, we are sure, be assiduously looked after by a class of public men in Bombay who are specially adapted to that kind of work. We sincerely congratulate the meeting, however, upon its decision to have a permanent memorial to the visit of His Royal Highness in the form of a Museum to be erected on the interesting site on which the last National Congress was held in Bombay. What with the Government contribution of three lakhs and another munificent donation of three lakhs by Mr. Karimbhai Ibrahim and a third but a small donation of twelve thousand by the Nabab of Junagad, the success of the idea of the Museum may be regarded as ensured. Lord Lamington, who shares a large portion of the credit for the realisation in this manner of the idea of this Museum, was naturally eloquent in the speech as Chairman of the meeting, though we might take exception to one part of His Excellency's speech in which he dwelt upon the advantages to the people from the visit to and tour through India by the Prince and the Princess of Wales. His Lordship argued that if the tour of a mere Provincial Governor resulted in his making so much acquaintance with the condition and the requirements of the people, much more so should that of the son and the daughter-in-law of the Sovereign himself. But we demur both to the premises and the conclusion. We cannot admit that such tours as an average Provincial Governor makes really acquaint him with the true condition of the people; and as for the Prince of Wales there is the smallest chance of his getting, owing to his tour, any nearer to the true state of things than if he had never visited this country. At best His Royal Highness may see the great variety of faces and dresses of the Indian people and more particularly of the Indian Princes. He will have perhaps a better knowledge of Indian scenes, landscapes, and architecture; of Indian courtesy and hospitality, of Indian fireworks and sports. But we fear all these will keep His Royal Highness as far from the heart of the Indian situation as ever. We admit that whether any advantages may or may not follow, we have to offer a formal welcome to His Royal Highness when the wire-pullers in India and at Home combine, for the sake of artificial political effect, to induce the Sovereign to send his son on a homage-collecting tour in a conquered country. But we think it is mere waste of breath for any one to say that the Indian people might look to any substantial good results following from the itinerancy of the Prince at least so long as it is arranged on the patent lines of organisation.

Birmingham Daily Post.—Large quantities of material for the decoration and illumination of the cities of India are in course of preparation and shipment, in anticipation of the forthcoming Royal visit. I hear of one prominent importer of glass bucket lamps having already exhausted his stock, and the amount of candle-power that is being provided for the illumination, even of wayside villages, is surprisingly large. In some instances the ingenious device is being adopted of sending out costly installations on hire, the intention being to remove them from place to place according to a programme which will leave ample time for their re-erection at a point farther on in the Royal itinerary before the appointed day. The Chinese community in Burma intends to produce some remarkable effects in the way of flying dragons and the like; and lavish designs in fresh flowers are spoken of for triumphal arches in some of the cities of Northern India.

Englishman.—The next item of business (in the monthly meeting of the Corporation of Calcutta) was to confirm the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Special Committee appointed to select a suitable casket and to prepare the address for presentation to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, held on the 26th July 1903, and to adopt the recommendations contained in their report. The Committee examined all the designs received and recommend the Corporation to accept one of the three designs submitted by Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey at a cost of Rs. 4,000. The four corner panels should represent (1) Shipping on the Hughli, (2) the Ochterlony Monument, (3) the High Court and (4) Government House, the Corporation Coat of Arms being placed in the centre panel and the inscription on the corresponding panel on the reverse. The Committee further recommend that Chevalier Ghilardi, late of the Calcutta School of Art, should be entrusted with the work of preparing an illuminated address on vellum, and that he be paid Rs. 1,000 for the work.

The Chairman moved that the Minutes be confirmed.

Moulvie Seraj-ul Islam seconded the motion.

Mr. Cotton suggested that the four panels should represent the Victoria Memorial Hall, Fort William, the Ochterlony Monument and the Outram statue.

Mr. Bertram asked Mr. Cotton to substitute the Town Hall for the Outram statue.

Mr. Cotton agreed to this.

The Chairman proposed that the four panels should represent the Shipping, the Ochterlony Monument, the Town Hall and Kali's temple.

Mr. Apear seconded the motion which was put and carried after which the Minutes were confirmed.

After disposing of some formal items of business, it being near 7 o'clock, the meeting adjourned for a fortnight.

Indian Daily News.—A correspondent writing to a Bombay paper about the arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales on the 9th November, says that the day "will be about the 11th day of the month of Ramzan, which is a fasting month of the Mahomedans, so it will not be convenient for the Mahomedans of Bombay, and elsewhere in India, to join in or attend the several functions which are being arranged, during the month of Ramzan." He therefore suggests that Their Royal Highnesses should postpone their arrival for at least twenty days.

Madras Mail.—A correspondent writes:—At the instance of the Prince of Wales' Central Reception Committee, at Vellore, a meeting of the leading officials and merchants of the place was held in the Board Middle School, Arni, on Wednesday, the Rev. W. H. Farrar, of the American Industrial Mission, presiding. The gathering was large. Mr. Farrar explained in English the object of the meeting, his remarks being translated into Tamil by a leading merchant. It was resolved that a strong sub-committee should be formed to collect subscriptions for helping the parent Committee at Vellore, as also to raise a local memorial in the shape of a Town Hall, which is sorely needed. As much as Rs. 200 was subscribed on the spot.

Pioneer.—Sir,—In reply to "One who was there" in your issue of the 16th instant, I may say that my suggestion was that the Volunteer contingent should be sent to take part in the review before His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and not to participate in the manoeuvres round Ballabgarh. Volunteers could not be spared from their work long enough to go through the manoeuvres, not to mention the fact that the various Volunteer corps would derive no instruction from only 6 per cent. of the actual strength of each corps taking part in them. Therefore as in the case of the Delhi Durbar of 1903, let the Volunteer contingent be sent for the review only.

Civil and Military Gazette.—We have received the following communication:—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales have been graciously pleased to accept a ball to be given by the Province at Lahore on the 30th of November 1905. The ball will take place in the Montgomery Hall, Lahore, and all gentlemen on Government House List are invited to become subscribers. The Punjab Club will be approached with a request that accommodation be provided for visitors to Lahore on the occasion to as great an extent as may be possible, and it is possible that a civil camp may be arranged for. In the case of gentlemen not in the service of Government, as in the case of Government officials in civil employ, the subscriptions will be calculated at a uniform rate for each subscriber. The military will, at their own request, arrange their own rates of subscriptions as regards their total share of expenses on a sliding scale. Gentlemen entering their names as subscribers are requested to mention the names and addresses of ladies of their families to whom they wish cards of admission sent. It is proposed to invite as guests gentlemen stationed or resident in the North-West Frontier Province who may express a wish to attend the ball. The names and addresses of gentlemen subscribing should be sent in to the "Honorary Secretary, Punjab Ball Committee, Simla," as soon as possible and not later than October 10th. Any further information required will be given on application to the Honorary Secretary, Punjab Ball Committee, Simla. (Signed) A. A. Irvine, Honorary Secretary, Punjab Ball Committee, Simla.

India.—A Simla telegram to our morning contemporary says that owing to the cessation of the rains over a widespread area and probable scarcity, considerable doubts are being expressed in official circles as to the possibility of the Royal visit being deferred. In any case, it is stated to be probable that the proposed programme may have to be altered. In connection with the holding of the Ballabgarh camp of exercise the main difficulty is said to be that wells are even now running short of water in the area marked out for the manoeuvres. This is in consequence of the failure of the monsoon in the Gurgaon district.

Morning Post.—Owing to the cessation of the rains and the probable scarcity of water in several parts of the country doubts are expressed as to whether the present programme of the Prince of Wales's tour will be feasible. The preparations for the Delhi manoeuvres have in the meantime been suspended.

Times of India.—Sir,—It has been announced that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will land in Bombay on the 9th November, and all India is looking forward with joy to the coming event. The Mahomedans of this country yield to no other community in their loyalty to the Royal family, and it seems a pity that this auspicious occasion should have been so arranged as to fall in the month of Ramzan. The Mahomedans are very anxious to take part in all the demonstration of loyalty, but this oversight on the part of the authorities creates great difficulties.

During the month of Ramzan the time of the Mahomedans is pretty much occupied from 3 p.m. till about 11 p.m. and then from 3 a.m. till about 5 p.m. The person fasting begins to feel its effect generally after 3 p.m. Fast is broken at about 7 p.m. The first eating and the prayers go on till about 10-30 p.m. After that a man must retire to enable him to get up at about 4 p.m. to partake of some refreshments to take him through the day. Now the fêtes and other functions will begin either in the afternoons or evenings. This means that the Mahomedans will be practically barred from joining the same. Permit me to say, sir, that as the authorities have committed an initial error they should try and rectify it while yet there is time. If Their Royal Highnesses delay their departure for about twenty days all will be well. RASIM AH PAKKAN.

23RD AUGUST 1905.

Catholic Herald of India.—Bombay is going ahead of sleepy Calcutta. Active steps are being taken there not only to offer the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival a loyal, hearty, and enthusiastic welcome, but also to raise "a permanent memorial in commemoration of the auspicious event, such memorial to take the form of a public museum with library, art gallery, garden, and other adjuncts of popular recreation." Mr. Currimbhoy Ebrahim has contributed a cheque for Rs. 3,00,000, making now 6½ lakhs, towards establishing a museum. Besides the Sheriff, Mr. Sassoon David, has promised to present the city with a statue of the Prince.

Six lakhs and a half shows well against the one lakh collected in Calcutta. It is true, Bombay is not in the throes of a Partition Scheme as Calcutta is reported to be. But we suppose those who hold in their hands the leading strings of the agitation have common sense enough to see and make the difference between a protest and loyalty, and will not work against their own interest by trying to dissuade intending subscribers from contributing towards the expenses of the festivities and especially towards the raising of a permanent and beneficial memorial in commemoration of the visit.

The fact is, we believe, that the Committee in connection with the event has been appointed rather late and that most of the members are men who apparently belong to a dozen or so of other committees of sort. Whatever it be, it seems to us that a little more activity would be a good thing; there is not so very much time left for necessary preparations, and yet definite schemes or arrangements are not ready.

Pelican.—The Prince and Princess of Wales are to embark upon the Renown on their voyage to India in October. The Renown is to be elaborately fitted up, the provision of suitable apartments for the Prince and Princess and their servants necessitating the officers turning out of their quarters. Among other things, a very elaborate doctor's shop is to be provided and there are to be several different sorts of baths, a huge refrigerating apparatus, and a large library.

Pioneer.—It seems possible that the Royal visit to India may be affected by the serious outlook in the provinces where the rainfall has been deficient. No decision, however, is likely to be come to until two or three weeks hence, by which time the monsoon will be closing and an accurate estimate of the agricultural position will be possible. Good rainfall within the period mentioned would materially modify the present rather gloomy estimate of the situation.

Pioneer.—Sir,—Allow me the liberty of asking you to publish in your valuable columns a few words regarding the proposal of establishing a Medical College at Lucknow in honour of the coming visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and the Princess of Wales. After reading your comprehensive leader on the subject, which appeared in your issue of the 5th instant, there remains nothing to be said about the necessity and the usefulness of the proposed scheme or the fitness of the occasion when loyalty to the Crown could be best coupled with charity to the public in general. It is scarcely necessary here to discourse upon the loyalty we all feel towards our illustrious Royal Family, a loyalty which has undoubtedly received a strong impetus from the benevolent motive of the King Emperor in sending the Heir-Apparent to this country. We are all sincerely conscious of the obligation we are laid under and would be only too glad to mark our gratitude by a fitting memorial to the occasion. I think that the proposal of establishing a Medical College will meet with general approval, especially because it will afford an opportunity to the humblest subject of His Majesty to contribute his mite towards it. The only thing I venture to suggest in this connection is that time is speeding away, and the proposal having met with universal acceptance, measures should at once be taken in hand to give it a practical shape. The Barons of Oudh, to whom the credit of the origin of the proposal is justly due, should, as soon as possible, fix a date for a general meeting to be held at Lucknow to which might be invited all the Taluqdars, Zemindars, and other public-spirited gentlemen of these Provinces. Sub-committees might then be formed for each district or division to collect subscriptions from all who desire to give expression to their loyalty in a manner so eminently conducive to the good of the public. Such a procedure, I daresay, will afford the widest scope for enlisting the hearty support of all who have any sympathy for the proposed scheme. Indeed I cannot think of any other course which would ensure the success of this very noble idea.

It is a pity that the Agra Province has not the good fortune of possessing a representative association like the British Indian Association or the Taluqdars of Oudh. The want of such a useful body has been badly felt on many an occasion by all those who care to deal with public questions. The same is being badly felt on the present occasion. Might I not suggest the landholders of the Agra Province see their way to discussing the proposal of having a representative association on the occasion of the meeting which I respectfully suggest should be immediately held at Lucknow on the invitations of the Taluqdars of Oudh?—MD. MOZAMMIL-ULLAH KHAN. Bhikampur (Aligarh District).

24TH AUGUST 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette (Lahore).—The Prince of Wales will arrive here by special train at 8-30 A. M. on the 7th December, and will be received at the railway station by the Lieutenant-Governor, the Commissioner of the Division, the Deputy Commissioners of Delhi, Karnal, Umballa, Hissar and Gurgaon, the Nawabs of Maler Kotla, Pataudi, Loharu and Dujana, the Sirdar of Kalsia and others. His Royal Highness will drive straight to the Town Hall through the Chandni Chauk and receive an address of welcome from the Municipal Committee, all the Municipal Commissioners, Honorary Magistrates and other leading residents of the city being present on the occasion and receiving the honour of presentation to the Heir-Apparent to the British Throne. On the conclusion of this function the Prince will drive over the Dufferin bridge to the Circuit House, where he will be the guest of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor. The same day he will visit the city in the evening, inspecting the Fort, the Jumma mosque and certain other buildings. In the night His Royal Highness will attend a ball to be given in his honour. The following morning he will see the old cantonments and buildings of the Moghal period, granting interviews to the Native Chiefs at 11-15 A.M. The Nahan State also is in the Delhi Division, but its ruler has obtained Government's permission to pay his respects to his future liege-lord at Lahore. The proposed illumination of the city will come off on the night of the 8th, when there will also be a display of fireworks. On the 9th the Prince will receive the Provincial Darbaris in the Division, and a feast to the poor will be given on the same day, when also 100 prisoners will be released.

Daily Mirror.—Few people who read that H.M.S. Renown was to take the Prince and Princess of Wales out to India have any idea of the amount of work that is required to turn a huge battleship into a Royal yacht. The cost of the work is enormous. In the first place all the heavy guns have had to be landed, and most of the lighter ones have also been taken ashore, only sufficient being left for saluting purposes. This is necessary to provide room. However luxuriously a captain may be lodged on board a man-of-war, his quarters will not do for a Prince or Princess. Enormous space therefore has to be provided. The Princess's boudoir and sleeping apartments, beautifully decorated in white and gold, take up a large part of the ship. The sleeping cabin for the Prince and his personal attendants make an almost equal demand. The Admiral's apartments have had to be converted into drawing and dining rooms, and all the officers including the Captain and Commander have had to give up their cabins for the suite and the Royal servants. Where are the officers to sleep? They will be stowed away into cabins formed from the casemates of the evicted big guns. Gipsy-like as the arrangements sounds the officers will be very comfortable.

Indian Daily News.—In response to an invitation from the Executive Committee on the Royal Reception Fund (Calcutta) a public meeting of the residents of Scaldah and its neighbourhood was held on Tuesday evening in the Bar Library room of the Scaldah Police Court. The meeting was attended by several influential residents of the locality besides the members of the local bar. Mr. R. A. N. Singh, the Deputy Magistrate, occupied the chair, and in a brief address referred to the loyalty of Indians to their Sovereigns who, according to their religion, was regarded as the incarnation of God. He felt confident that the meeting would readily and worthily contribute towards the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. Mr. Singh headed the subscription list with Rs. 100, and about Rs. 500 was subscribed on the spot.

Leicester Post.—I find among those who are making preparations for the visit of the Prince of Wales to India some serious anxiety owing to the reports about the famine. At present everything is going on smoothly, but if the trouble should become much more ominous it would be a question whether the Prince would go through with his project.

Manchester Courier.—No change will be made in the arrangements for the Indian tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales. They remain entirely unaffected by the situation created by Lord Curzon's resignation. The only difference is that the duty of receiving Their Royal Highnesses will devolve on the Earl and Countess of Minto instead of on Lord and Lady Curzon. There is a possibility, it is true, as a telegram from a well-informed Indian source foreshadowed a few days ago, of the Royal itinerary being varied in certain particulars, but these alterations, if carried out, have no relation whatever to the change of Vicereignty. The Prince and Princess have laid their plans to travel overland to Genoa, whither H.M.S. Renown, which is to be their floating home on the passage out and back, is to proceed in due course to await their embarkation in the second week of October.

Times of India.—The following letter addressed by the Municipal Commissioner of Bombay to the Corporation, under date August 22nd, will be considered by the Standing Committee of the Corporation this afternoon: "I have the honour to draw the attention of the Corporation to the fund which has been opened at the Bank of Bombay in connection with the approaching visit to this city of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

"The object of the fund is to provide money (1) for the building of a permanent museum on the Crescent site and (2) for the decorations which will welcome the Prince and Princess.

"The erection of the museum and its attached buildings will cost between 10 and 20 lakhs and 6 lakhs have been already contributed towards it, 3 lakhs by Government and 3 lakhs by Mr. Currimbhoo Ebrahim. The museum is an institution selected as a fitting memorial of the long-looked-for visit of Their Royal Highnesses by a committee on which the Corporation was strongly represented. It is an institution which should prove of great and lasting benefit to the city and seems to me an object to which the Corporation as representing the ratepayers of the city may most properly be invited to make a substantial donation.

"The illuminations and decorations and other celebrations such as the popular People's Fair will also require a considerable sum to finance and probably cost not less than Rs. 1,00,000. These celebrations will be undertaken in honour of the Prince and Princess and will at the same time give great enjoyment to the masses of our City's population. I think, therefore, that the City's representatives should agree to contribute liberally towards them.

"Our cash balances stand at the moment at a little over Rs. 21,00,000 with no immediate revenue liabilities threatening them. The City can therefore safely spare a very large sum in order to show in a material and lasting form its affection for the future occupants of the British Throne.

"I have accordingly the honour to recommend to the Standing Committee and the Corporation that a total grant of Rs. 3,00,000 be made to the Royal Visit Fund, not less than Rs. 2,50,000 to be devoted to the building of the Museum and the balance to the Fund required for illuminations and decorations, the fund to be provided by a special grant from surplus cash balances.

"I would further request that the matter may be treated as urgent and that the Chairman of the Standing Committee be asked to bring it before the Corporation at their next meeting as urgent business."

Truth.—Various items of information have appeared in the papers lately with reference to the preparation of H.M.S. Renown for the conveyance of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India. Virtually it would seem that this ship is being converted temporarily into a luxurious yacht. It is the custom on such occasions to treat a warship in this way, but it is one of those official customs which are utterly opposed to expediency and common sense, and I am at a loss to understand the reason for it. A large liner could be chartered for the purpose, would require no alteration beyond a little furnishing, and would be far more convenient for the occupation of a Royal party than a converted man o' war. Taking into account the enormous expenditure on first dismantling and afterwards reinstating the battleship the cost would probably not be greater, and even if it were, there is to be set-off against it the fact that by the present arrangement the Navy loses one of its strongest vessels for the best part of a year, and an emergency might easily arise in that time which would make this loss a serious matter. In fact, the withdrawal of such a ship from the naval service for that time can only be justified on the assumption that we are keeping up more battleships than are likely to be required at short notice.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Writing in the Parsi the Indian Ladies' Reception Committee to welcome the Princess of Wales in Bombay a Parsi Lady says:—I understand that the committee has been able to collect a fair amount and has decided upon the form their present to Her Highness is going to take. I might say that was very nearly settled at the first meeting. It's going to be an Album with water-colour sketches of 20 different types of Indian women, with a short one page history of each type. For instance, of the four Hindu figures, there will be a Brahmin lady of the Deccan, a Ghati of Malvan, a Marvari woman, and a Vania dame. The types will be representative of the Presidency only—not all India—that would mean nearly a hundred figures, without being all comprising. The cover of the Album is to be in embossed silver with a group of ladies welcoming the Princess in Hindu style with ses. The sketches inside will be from life. The work is entrusted to the well-known Parsi artist, Mr. Pithhawalla. Could not a lady artist have done that as well? The Album will make a very appreciable and acceptable gift, only one would have the sketches really good. Our painters often miss the central effect in figure painting. They give too much effect to dress colouring.

Pioneer.—A Press communiqué gives a provisional programme of the arrangements for the forthcoming Royal visit. On the 9th November the Viceroy arrives in the early morning (the arrival being public) and drives to Government House. At 12 noon H.M.S. Renown arrives at Bombay. The Naval Commander-in-Chief goes on board at 3-30, the Viceroy, Governor, Members of Council and Chief Justice following later. After the presentation of the Chiefs on the Apollo Bandar Their Highnesses will drive through a part of the native city to Government House. The Viceroy will be present at dinner departing at midnight.

10th November: 9-30 A.M.—breakfast; 10-30 A.M., visits from Chiefs to His Royal Highness; 2 P.M., lunch; 4-30, Their Highnesses drive through the native town and open a new street en route; 8 A.M., banquet, followed by a levée at the Secretariat and a pardah party at Government House.

11th November: 10 A.M.—His Highness return the visits of the Chiefs; 4-30 P.M., Their Highnesses lay the foundation stone of the museum and visit the dockyard and flagship; 8 P.M., dinner, followed first by a reception of native Chiefs, and then a more general reception.

12th November: Rest.—In the evening Their Royal Highnesses will attend Divine service at the Cathedral.

13th November: 10 A.M.—His Royal Highness returns the visits of the Chiefs; 4-30 P.M., Their Royal Highnesses lay the foundation stone of the New Dock and call at the Yacht Club; 8-40, a quiet dinner followed by the Byculla Club Ball.

14th November: 10-30 A.M.—reception of lesser Chiefs and other interviews; in the afternoon a drive to the Apollo Bundar, and a trip by steam launch to the Elephanta Caves; private dinner and departure.

Another Press communiqué says that during the tour the custom with regard to dress on all official occasions and at all entertainments when Their Royal Highnesses are present should be the same as on similar occasions when the Viceroy is present.

26TH AUGUST 1905.

Pioneer.—In connection with the approaching Royal visit to this Province, the Mysore Government have deputed two special officers to make the necessary arrangements for the reception, etc. Colonel Jones, Military Secretary, will have charge of the Royal camps; and Mr. Puttana Chetty, Deputy Commissioner, will see to the general arrangements in the civil and military station. The arrangements are very backward, only a few rupees having so far been subscribed to the reception fund. The natives are agitating for special sanitary measures, so that Bangalore may be free from any epidemics during the Royal visit.

28TH AUGUST 1905.

Times of India.—A preliminary meeting of the leading members of the different sections of the Mahomedan community of Bombay was held on Saturday evening in Moozafarabad Hall, Grant Road, to adopt measures in connection with the approaching visit to this city of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. There was a large attendance.

On the motion of Khan Bahadur Abdul Razeeq Curass, seconded by Khan Sahib Goolam Hussain Rogay, Mr. Mahomed Hussain Hakim was called to the chair.

Sayed Muinuddin, Deputy Educational Inspector, proposed that a general public meeting of the Mahomedans of Bombay should be held to voice the feelings of the community with reference to the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to this country, and that the Hon. Mr. Justice B. Tyebji be requested to preside on that occasion.

Kazi Ismail Kazi Mahomed Forbundari seconded the proposition, which was carried with acclamation.

Sayed Muinuddin next proposed that all arrangements in connection with the holding of the general meeting be carried out by the honorary secretaries (Messrs. Currimbhoy Adamji Peerbhoy and Fazulbhoy Currimbhoy Ebrahim) and the leading signatories to the circular convening this meeting, under the supervision of the Anjuman-i-Islam.

Kazi Ismail Kazi Mahomed Forbundari seconded and Khan Sahib Rogay supported the proposition, which was agreed to.

The Chairman then read a letter from the Hon. Mr. Justice Tyebji to the honorary secretaries expressing sympathy with the object of the meeting and wishing it success.

The proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chairman, who was garlanded and presented with flowers.

29TH AUGUST 1905.

Times of India.—At the adjourned meeting of the Bombay Municipal Corporation held yesterday, consideration was given as urgent matter to the letter of the Municipal Commissioner recommending the sanction of a grant of Rs. 3,00,000 from the surplus cash balance to the Royal Visit Fund. The Hon'ble Sir P. M. Mehta presided.

Dr. K. E. Dadachanji moved: That in the circumstances stated in the Commissioner's letter, dated the 22nd instant, received with the Standing Committee's resolution, dated the 24th instant, sanction be given to a contribution of Rs. 3,00,000 being made to the fund started for celebrating the approaching visit to this city of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, to be apportioned as follows: (1) not less than Rs. 2,50,000 to be utilised for the building of the museum; (2) the balance (i.e., a sum not exceeding Rs. 50,000) to be utilised for the festivities to be held in connection with the Royal Visit. That in consideration of this grant being made by the Corporation the Commissioner be requested to arrange with Government that the Corporation shall be represented on the managing committee of the museum by at least two elected members and that if the museum buildings should include a public hall, that hall shall always be available for any lawful public purpose, subject to such regulations as may be made by the body entrusted with the management of the museum.

Dr. Dadachanji said he did not think his proposition required many words from him to commend it for the approval of the Corporation. He thought the call made upon their purse on this occasion was one which rendered it necessary for them to respond liberally. It was a call of loyalty, which must always take a supreme place amongst the variety of calls upon their purse. Out of the three lakhs of rupees that were to be voted two lakhs and a half were to be used in connection with the museum scheme, and the balance would be devoted to the funds for the festivities. He was sure these festivities would not only be welcome to Their Royal Highnesses but would also afford great amusement and recreation to the masses. The museum, which was intended to be erected, had been a long felt want in this city. It would be useful equally to the students of history and archaeology as to the merchants of this city, and he trusted that the Corporation would pass the proposition unanimously.

Sir Hurkissondas Nurrotdmas seconded the proposition.

Mr. Jehangir B. Petit thought it should be understood that the Corporation would not be called upon in future to contribute to the recurring expenses of the museum, and that their present contribution of Rs. 3,00,000 would be considered final. It was gratifying to notice that the Standing Committee had taken care to put in conditions with regard to the Corporation being represented on the managing committee of the museum and the use of the hall for lawful and constitutional purposes.

The Commissioner said with reference to the future policy of the Corporation with regard to the museum after it had been erected he might say that he had studiously avoided making any reference to that question. The reason why he did so was that he knew the feeling of a large number of Corporators on the subject, and he thought it would be better to leave the question open. His own opinion was that the Corporation would not be able to evade their obligations in the matter. He had, however, abstained from asking them to say that they would be willing to give any guarantee or to devote any portion of their funds for this purpose. As to the question of the representation of the Corporation on the managing committee, he was glad to be in a position to assure the Corporation that their wishes would be granted, and they would be allowed to appoint two representatives. On the question of the public hall he had had a conversation the previous day with His Excellency the Governor, who might claim to be an expert on the question of public museums. His Excellency's views were that a museum was not a proper situation for a public hall. The question as to what buildings should be erected would depend upon the sum of money that would be collected, and it would be a matter for the Committee to decide subsequently whether a public hall was to be built or not. If such a hall was built, then the wishes of the Corporation would be put before the Government, and he trusted, would be acceded to. That was all that he thought he need say. He would merely add that to show his personal interest in the matter. His Excellency the Governor had promised a sum of Rs. 1,000 to the fund.

The proposition was carried.

A meeting of the Anjuman-e-Habab of Bombay was held yesterday afternoon in Chukka Street, under the presidency of Khan Saheb Kazi Mahomedally Murgay, Kazi of Bombay, when it was resolved to co-operate in the movement to be organised by the Mahomedan community for celebrating the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. It was further decided to hold a feast in honour of the occasion and to send a message of congratulation to His Majesty the King-Emperor on the 9th November, which is the birthday of His Majesty.

Times of India.—In connection with the forthcoming Royal visit we learn that a very handsome casket is being made to the order of the Bombay Corporation for presentation to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the work having been entrusted to Messrs. Barton, Son & Co., of Bangalore, jewellers and silversmiths to His Excellency the Viceroy, His Highness the Maharajah of Mysore, His Excellency the Governor of Madras, etc. The same firm is also preparing a magnificent album which is to be presented to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales by the Indian ladies of Bombay. The album is to have massive silver covers, and will contain a selection of water-colour sketches depicting fourteen types of Indian women and an illuminated address in six different languages.

Civil and Military Gazette.—In referring lately to the ridiculous secrecy which has been thrown over the official arrangements for the forthcoming Royal tour in the Punjab, we pointed out that the inference to be drawn from all this jealous reticence at Simla was that the Prince and Princess of Wales are paying a private visit to the Government and not a public visit to the people. We are now authorised to make the following reassuring statement:—When Mr. R. E. Younghusband, Commissioner of Lahore Division, was in Lahore at the beginning of this month, he consulted a number of gentlemen there regarding a proposal to appoint a Reception Committee in connection with the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Lahore in November next. The general feeling was that it was desirable to appoint a Reception Committee, but that it was useless to take any steps to appoint such a committee at this time of the year. Mr. Younghusband has since been in communication with the Punjab Government on the subject, and it has been decided to convene a public meeting as early in October as is consistent with the presence of a fair number of representatives of Lahore society and to appoint a Reception Committee. In the meantime a small number of gentlemen, representatives of the official and non-official community, both European and native, have been asked to form a small sub-committee in order to work out a scheme of street decorations and illuminations and an estimate of its cost, and to obtain other information which will be of interest to the public and of use to the Reception Committee.

Madras Mail.—A public meeting was held in the Coronation Hall, Wandiwash, on the 28th instant. Mr. R. Nagasudram Iyer, B.A., B.L., Divisional Officer, presided. The object of the meeting, as explained by him, was two-fold, one was to collect subscriptions towards helping the District Memorial at Vellore to perpetuate the visit of Their Royal Highnesses to Madras and one to send money to the General Fund in Madras. Two lists were opened for this purpose and a sum of Rs. 104 was subscribed on the spot. A Committee, with the local Union Chairman as President, was formed to collect sub-Times of India.—At the monthly meeting of the Anjuman-i-Islam, Bombay, yesterday, the principal matter on the agenda was in reference to the forthcoming visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The following letter, dated 26th July, from the Hon. Mr. S. W. Edgerley, in reply to one from the Hon. Mr. Justice B. Tyebjee, was read:—

Dear Mr. Tyebjee,—In reply to your letter of the 22nd July 1905, regarding the desire of the Anjuman-i-Islam of Bombay to present an address of welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their arrival in Bombay, and the request that Their Royal Highnesses may honour the Anjuman Schools with a visit, I am directed to say that His Excellency the Governor regrets that the programme of Their Royal Highnesses is already over full, and that it has been necessary to decide that His Royal Highness will receive addresses only from the legally constituted representatives of the city; that is, the Corporation. I am, therefore, to express His Excellency's great regret that he is unable to further the loyal wishes of the Anjuman.

The letter was recorded.

Mr. Haji Yushuf Ismail proposed that in honour of the auspicious arrival in Bombay of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Bombay Anjuman-i-Islam premises be splendidly illuminated. There was some difference of opinion in the meeting on this point and some gentlemen held that the proposal was likely to come in antagonism with the general meeting of Mahomedans to be called. Mr. Haji Yushuf thereupon withdrew his proposition.

31st AUGUST 1905.

Practical Teacher.—It is just thirty years ago that King Edward, then Prince of Wales, visited that great portion of the Empire over which he now rules, and to-day his son is making a still more extended tour in India. It may be well, therefore, before we describe the scenes and incidents of the present visit, to ask why these Royal visits should be made. In the first place, we must remember that India forms no inconsiderable part of our Empire. Its area is one-seventh of the total area of the Empire, but its population includes three-quarters of all those who live beneath the British flag; moreover, the British Government is a greater power in Asia than it is in Europe. The Prince, who will one day be at the head of the Empire, may most fittingly learn by personal observation something of this great portion of it. There is also another side to the matter: the natives of India are governed by the officials sent to India, but they do not have much opportunity of feeling or showing loyalty to an English ruler. The Viceroy, who may come for a few years, rule in ways frequently unappreciated, and then go away again, does not stand to them in the place of a Sovereign to whom they feel allegiance is due. We could scarcely expect that the great mass of the native population would feel that devotion to an English ruler which the English feel to their King; but the visit of the Prince has already called forth such a strong feeling of personal loyalty and such an enthusiasm as was certainly not expected. This feeling is of great importance in making possible the good government of India, and the tour of the Prince thus has a great and beneficial influence.

Apart from any official aspects of their visit, the Prince and Princess will have a most interesting and valuable journey in that country, because it contains scenes so strange to English eyes and so infinitely varied. One writer who has spent many years in travelling through all parts of India always refers to it as a continent, and that description has much truth in it. Its area, including the Native States under British supremacy, is more than one and a half million square miles—that is, over thirty times the area of England, or about that of all Europe excluding Russia. Its population is about three hundred millions—that is, nearly ten times the population of England, or rather more than that of all Europe excluding Russia.

But the contrasts both as regards country and people which India has within itself are greater and far more impressive than any which can be found in Europe. All kinds of scenery, almost all types of climate, and many different races of mankind are represented in India. Let us look at some of the more striking features of the country. The map shows that its northern boundary is the Himalaya mountain range, a gigantic mass which no European mountains can approach in size or grandeur. With twice the average height of the Alps, it extends without a break for a distance equal to that from the Bay of Biscay to the Black Sea. The peaks, gorges, and glaciers of the Alps seem utterly insignificant beside those of the Himalayas. This range is flanked on either side by more broken and lower mountains running southwards, which are on a scale more like that of the Alps, and contain passes which form "backdoors" to India.

The inward-facing slopes of these three systems comprise great tracts of mountainous territory included in the Indian Empire, and look down upon still greater tracts of lowland. As the mountains of Europe offer no parallels to the mountains of India, so the lowlands of Europe offer no parallels to those of the great, almost semicircular, area which sweeps round from the Arabian Sea to the Bay of Bengal. The Thar of the west is a typical hot, dry, and sandy desert, and the Ganges delta of the east is a hot, reeking swamp, while the country between embraces every variety of steppe, grass-land, and fertile fields. The peninsular part of India is mainly a tableland, rising from a fairly wide coastal plain in the east by a broken edge of varying height; this Deccan plateau increases in elevation towards the west, and culminates in the forest-clad Western Ghats. These mountains reach a height of from 2,000 to 6,000 feet, and present an unbroken front to a narrow coastal plain, thus suggesting the "landing-stairs" from which their name "Ghats" is taken. In this southern region again are found all types of country, from bare rocky uplands to lowlands covered with dense tropical vegetation.

The peoples of India vary no less. India has suffered from invasion after invasion till it is a veritable museum as regards races, languages, and religions. Here again all Europe presents no contrasts so great as those to be met with in a few square miles of this land. The peoples may be divided into three main racial divisions, but each of these may be subdivided again and again, and there has been such mixing and blending that no map can adequately express their present distribution. Yet it is necessary for us to have some idea of these peoples, and how they came to be living side by side, or we shall not be able to understand many of the scenes of this land.

In the wildest part of the hills and jungles of the centre of India are to be found the descendants of the oldest inhabitants of the country; these Kolarian tribes, as they are called, now form but a very small portion of the population, as they have been displaced from all but a few remote regions. They are rather lower in the scale of humanity than the Dravidians, who came next, but very long afterwards, and now form about one-fifth of the total population. The Dravidians are a backward race, small in stature—they have even been described as dwarfs—and they themselves have been driven before other races who invaded India from the north-west; hence they are to be found almost entirely in the Deccan and mainly in the south-western portion of the peninsula.

They have crossed the Palk Strait to Ceylon, but the southern part of the island is inhabited by a totally different people, the Singhalese.

The races who gradually displaced the Dravidians in Northern India are more akin to the English—they are the Aryans. They first invaded the country about two thousand years B.C., but wave after wave of conquest followed, and also gradually the hot, enervating climate of India altered the appearance and character of these races, so that at the present time they differ very much from the other Aryans who have been settled in temperate regions, such as England, for thousands of years. The Aryans form the chief element of the people of the north-west part of the Deccan, the semicircular plain of the Indus and Ganges, and the mountain districts of the north-west. They amount to seventy-five per cent. of the population, and in general are the finest peoples of India in regard to appearance, physique, and mental characteristics, although we must not here fall into the too common error of supposing these peoples to be alike throughout the country. The effeminate Bengali is proverbially contrasted with the stalwart Sikhs from the Punjab and the warlike Rajputs from Rajputana. But there is still another race, akin to the Chinese, which is found in Burma and the hill countries between the Ganges and Thibet. This is the Mongolian race, but it only includes about three per cent. of the population.

These widely differing nationalities have their counterpart in the widely differing languages. There are nearly eighty tongues spoken in various parts, and it is said that about forty of these can be heard in the bazaar of Bombay. The differences in language have been one of the greatest factors in preventing the unity of the people; common action against invaders is practically impossible for this reason alone, and the differences in religion make union still more difficult.

The religions of India do not correspond to the races, and they are as difficult to define and mark out upon a map. Perhaps the easiest way to understand their distribution is to look at their history. The earliest inhabitants of the country had no religion worthy of the name; but the Aryans, who called themselves Hindus, developed a religion which had several good features, but later became greatly corrupted. They held the belief that the souls of living animals and men passed at death into the bodies of other animals or men according to the way in which the first life was lived. The soul of a good man would pass into the body of a man of higher rank, and the soul of a bad man into some animal of a low kind.

Several centuries before Christ, when this religion had become very degraded, a teacher who was afterwards called Buddha taught that the Hindu beliefs and superstitions were in many instances wrong and horrible, and he showed in his own life a noble example of virtue, purity, and love. His followers, with the aid of a great king who lived in the eastern part of the great plain, made his teaching the basis of a religion which spread over much of India and thence to neighbouring countries, where it is still very important. But the Buddhist religion was checked and almost exterminated by a revival of Hinduism, and to-day in India Buddhism is found almost solely among the Mongolian race. The modern Hindu religion is really a loose mixture of degraded beliefs, superstitions, and social customs, but it is professed by three-quarters of the people.

The religion which comes second to it in point of numbers is Mohammedanism. This was introduced by the Arabian conquerors who came into India a little while before William I conquered England. Two great waves of invasion followed this, and a descendant of a conqueror from Tartary assumed the title of the "Great Mogul" at Delhi when Henry VIII was our king. His successors ruled at Delhi till Queen Victoria became Empress of India; but meanwhile separate states and kingdoms had been formed in all parts of the country. Also many of the Hindus had become more or less Mohammedan in religion, although they retained many of their old customs and ceremonies.

Thus although there has often been bitter enmity and conflict between Mohammedan and Hindu, the social arrangement of "caste" is almost universal. The Hindus are divided into four great caste divisions: the Brahmins or priests, the warriors, the traders, and the labourers. These divisions are again subdivided, so that there are in all over thousand well-marked castes, as well as those unfortunate people who have no caste at all, and are called Pariahs. The Brahmins number some twenty millions, and form a priesthood which lives upon the workers, as a rule exerting a great and baleful influence, for they represent and perpetuate the worst features of Hinduism. The warrior caste, as one might imagine, includes some of the finest specimens of manhood, for example, the Rajputs; but the days are gone when India was the happy hunting-ground of the soldier of fortune. The coming of the English has meant the pacification of the land, to the great advantage of most of the people, but there is little room, save in the native army, for the warrior.

The trading caste, above all, has benefited by the change. The merchants have literally prospered and grown fat, for wealth to a Hindu means the ability to gorge on sweetmeats and similar dainties. The money-lending community have caused a serious problem, for many of the lowest caste, the labourers, who are mostly agriculturists, are under their heel.

The labourers form the large majority of the people of India, and exist in wretched poverty; misery is their lot, and starvation or fever is frequently their end. India is stated to be the poorest country in the world, and indeed the average income is something like thirty shillings a year. The mass of the people are patient, submissive, industrious in a quiet kind of way, and have no idea of improving their position or advancing in any direction. The caste system settles the trade of a man, and his sons and grandsons must follow the same calling. The caste distinctions are most strict, and to a Western mind quaint and even ridiculous. A man "loses caste" if he eats with one of a lower caste, or has his food cooked by or near one of a lower caste; the food, too, must be of a certain kind—the flesh of cows or of pigs is forbidden. The Hindu must not touch an inferior, and touching the garments or coming in the shadow of an inferior is a very serious matter; also, especially at festival times, caste-marks are painted on the forehead. The prohibitions, punishments, and ceremonies of the caste system seem endless and quite baffling in their complexity, as every European who has to deal with natives finds to his cost. The government of the country is very difficult because of these strange features of native life, and it must be borne in mind that the Europeans themselves are "out caste" and unclean from the Hindu standpoint.

Now to return to the subject of the present tour: two more points are worthy of our attention before we follow the Prince through the country. We may ask: "Why is this time of the year chosen for the visit?" The answer depends upon the great peculiarity of the climate of India—its monsoon character. In the summer, the land of India and the great landmass of Asia behind become very greatly heated; the weather is unbearably hot in the first place, and also currents of air from the ocean are set up, which bring to most parts very heavy rains. This would altogether spoil a visit, but the coming of the rains nevertheless gladdens the hearts of the people, for on this summer rainfall they depend for their harvest. Sometimes these monsoon rains fail, and then we hear of terrible famines, for the country is almost entirely agricultural, and when harvests fail there is no other way in which the people can get a living. An Indian famine is a fearful thing, and when it occurs, although the English officials do their utmost to afford relief, the suffering and mortality can scarcely be realized by us in our more favoured land.

During his tour the Prince will see much that his father did not see thirty years ago. Railways have been so greatly extended that many places that could not then be visited can now be reached in comfort; the boundaries of the land have been extended; there are many other evidences of British rule which will be inspected, and as an instance we may mention the great irrigation works whereby land previously useless for lack of water has been rendered fruitful soil.

As the presentation map shows, the Prince landed at Bombay, the Gate of India, and the meeting-place of East and West. This is the entry to India for most of the immigrants; the magnitude and convenience of the harbour can be seen from the plan of Bombay, and it must be added that it is the only good harbour for shipping on this part of the coast. The city is a babel of tongues and a kaleidoscope of strange features and strange dresses, which at times form a bewildering blaze of colour in the brilliant sunshine. Besides the sufficiently varied inhabitants of India, one here sees specimens of the races of all Asia, from Jews of Baghdad and fierce Afghan horse-dealers from the west to the less common immigrants from the Malay region and China in the far east. The traffic of the streets is as varied; side by side are European carriages and Oriental palanquins, while carts drawn by bullocks with humps are obstacles to motor-cars and bicycles.

The buildings present a similar contrast between Eastern and Western life. The railway station shown in the illustration is certainly among the greatest and finest in the world. It seems typical of the British occupation, for the railway is one of the chief factors in that transformation of India which is in progress. The other great public buildings are similarly suggestive. Besides the Government buildings, there are the University buildings, for the wealthier natives must have their sons educated in Western style, and also the Law Court, for the people seem to delight in litigation, and the native Bar is the refuge of the many educated natives who cannot obtain an appointment under the Government. The broad, imposing thoroughfares are worthy of any city in the world, but so close is East to West that in places one needs but to cross a street and one is in a part of the native town—one has gone at a step from England to India. Here the houses are often mere huts, with roofs of plaited leaves, and the twisting narrow streets are filthy and malodorous, packed close with humanity of all shades. "Teeming" and "swarming" seem the best adjectives to describe the population of the poorer native quarters. There is little privacy in the native life; men sleep, dress, and wash in public, and, as the illustration shows, the barber plies his trade in the street wherever he may find a customer.

A very interesting feature of Bombay is the Parsi community, of Persian origin, who have settled mainly in Bombay and have in many cases grown exceedingly wealthy. They have a distinctive dress, or if they have adopted European clothes, at least retain their headgear, which has been described as "a linoleum helmet, something between a Prussian grenadier's and a flypaper man's." The "Towers of Silence," where they place their dead, are on the extreme western coast; their position is shown on the plan of the town. On the top of the towers are platforms on which the bodies are placed, to be eaten almost immediately by numbers of horrible vultures which are always waiting.

The Parsis are frequently money-lenders, and both they and other natives are owners of the big cotton mills which are now very numerous. The extreme wealth of such natives and the extreme poverty of the vast majority form one of the most striking contrasts of this city of contrasts. The wealthy native has his motor-car, and perhaps his European chauffeur. Indeed in several ways he is putting the European into an inferior position. You will see that Bombay is on an island; the room for building is therefore limited, and further, much of the ground, especially in the northern part of the island, is merely a reclaimed mud-flat. The wealthy native now desires the higher positions which surround the "Back Bay," and is ousting the Englishman, who usually depends only upon his rather meagre salary, into the lower parts. The Europeans are being crowded into flats, which they rent from the Parsis, and have even had to take to tents.

The poorer native has a very miserable lot. One of the things that horrifies the English visitor is the plague, which is now constantly with the people, and at this time of the year may carry off over one hundred victims each day. The plague mark is to be seen on a very great number of the houses: a red circle with the date of the dread visit of Death painted in it.

The rapid spread of the plague and the difficulty of combating it, are easily understood after a visit to some of the great tenement houses. These are storey upon storey high, unlike the houses elsewhere in India, again, because of the limited amount of suitable ground on the island. In spite of the efforts of the municipality, these rabbit warrens are a mass of small dark rooms with earthen floors, where light and ventilation are considered of no account.

This is an unpleasant picture, and one turns with relief to the brighter aspects of the city. The Prince's visit came just upon the Festival of Lamps. All the town was then illuminated, every Hindu house having its light in honour of the goddess they commemorate. The temples were gaily lit up and lavishly decorated, the Mohammedans, Parsis, and Jews being in a minority who alone do not rejoice in the festivities. Such occasions have in the past frequently given rise to riots between the Hindus and the Mohammedans; but the British rule, in this as in greater matters, has brought peace, and the native police and soldiers are usually quite able to preserve order among a people who are naturally docile, save when their religious fanaticism causes a rare outbreak.

United India and Native States.—The Bombay Gazette publishes an amusing article in its issue of the 26th instant on the subject of "Princes and Privations." But our contemporary deals exclusively with the privations of those Anglo-Indians who are concerned with the cost of dress which they should wear on the occasion of the Royal visit. The "Gazette" has nothing to say of the "privations" of the Princes, of the Zamindars, and of the rest of the Indian communities who are called upon to pay on all conceivable occasions. Will the "Gazette" have the patience to revise its files to find out how often during Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty the Princes the Zamindars and the Merchants have been directly and indirectly forced "to pay" by means of subscriptions and otherwise? Does the "Gazette" claim access to the Foreign Office files among which are found copies of mandates for the above "to pay". The "privations" of the Anglo-Indian who is called upon to spend a fraction of the wealth he has amassed in this country are only nominal when compared with the torture, physical and mental, to which Indians should submit themselves, firstly to make an exhibition of their loyalty and secondly to escape the frowns of official magnates.

The Civil and Military Station of Bangalore finds it very hard to pay for the shows which are to be got up on the occasion of the Prince of Wales's visit to that station. The highest sums promised are Rs. 300 and come from two well known philanthropists, both of whom belong to the titled class of the Indian communities. But the total subscriptions promised, including the small sums of one rupee, do not exceed Rs. 2,500.

It is a great mistake to influence the poorer classes of people to pay, for to them the small sum of one rupee is of great value.

It is just possible they might wish to deny themselves minor comforts to be able to join in a "loyal" demonstration; but the authorities responsible for the collection must have the foresight to fix the minimum high enough so as to exclude from the extravagant performance people of limited means

1st SEPTEMBER 1905.

Freeman's Journal and National Press.—There is a growing doubt whether the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India will take place this year. Already the programme of the tour has had to be curtailed considerably owing to the outbreak of famine in certain districts, and there is grave fear whether its spread to the other provinces will not necessitate an abandonment of the tour altogether. It is pretty well known that should this happen the Royal visitors will not be inconsolably disappointed. Neither of them is particularly keen on the trip, especially the Princess, who naturally dislikes the idea of so long an absence from her children, and for whom the long journeys and wearisome ceremonies can have but small attraction. It is said that only for the King's strong desire in the matter Their Royal Highnesses would decline to go at all, but it is known that King Edward set much store on the visit, and of course his wish is law on such matters.

At present the preparations for the trip are being proceeded with on the understanding that they will start in October, but it will be no surprise if orders are received any day postponing the visit until next year.

Madras Mail.—A correspondent informs us that Mr. Naina Pillay Marakayar of Muthupet, Tanjore District, a rich merchant and landholder, who has made a fortune in the coal trade in Ceylon, has come forward with a princely offer of Rs. 10 lakh worth of property for the founding of a Muhammadan College in South India on the lines of the Muhammadan College at Aligarh and the Hindu College at Benares. Taking advantage of the approaching visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, he proposes to name his College "The Prince of Wales Islamiah College." The donor proposes that the College should be located at Muthupet. Our correspondent continues:—"Though the beginning will be a small one, arrangements will in due course be made to accommodate 500 boarders. It is also under contemplation to build lodgings for gentlemen who might wish to live at this educational centre for the benefit of themselves, their wards or the College. In the proposed College, the second language will be Arabic, for which the Lubbais and Moplabs, who form the bulk of the South India Muhammadans, have a great aptitude. It is under contemplation to get a Sheikh from Egypt to take charge of the instruction in Arabic. Elementary instruction will also be given in the vernaculars of South India. A European will, of course, be at the head of the English side of the College. All communications giving advice or making suggestions with reference to the proposed College should be addressed to the donor at Muthupet, or to the Deputy Collector of Mannargudi, Mir Sultan Mohideen Sahib Bahadur, to whom the College movement owes not only its inception but also its further development."

2ND SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Express.—In the course of next week H. M. S. Renown, a powerfully armed battleship, will emerge from the dockyard at Portsmouth as a palatial and luxuriously equipped yacht.

The transformed Renown is intended for the use of the Prince and Princess of Wales on their voyage to India.

The vessel has always had the reputation of being one of the most comfortable battleships afloat, and no very extensive alterations, which would be likely to interfere with the future career of the ship in the Navy, have been made.

All the structural work involved in the transformation is now complete, and the task of decorating is proceeding.

The whole of the after-part of the ship, usually occupied by the Admiral, has been set apart for the accommodation of the Royal voyagers, and the officers have, in many cases, had to give up their cabins to the Royal suite. The officers have found accommodation in the casemates, from which the 6-in. guns have been removed.

The dining-room prepared for the Prince and Princess and their suite extends from one side of the ship to the other and is being furnished in light oak. The drawing-room—a magnificent apartment adjoining—is adorned in ivory and gold.

A door in the after-wall gives access to the stern walk, a delightfully cool spot in tropical seas.

The Prince's suite of rooms are near the dining-room, and consist of a bed-room, dressing-room, bath-room, etc., with a room adjoining for his valet. The apartments are comfortably but plainly furnished. Four rooms have been set apart for Her Royal Highness on the starboard side of the upper deck.

The Admiral's kitchen has undergone considerable alteration, and an electric bakery has been added for the preparation of dainty confections for the Royal table. A model laundry has also been provided.

The Renown is painted china white, and special awnings forward and aft have been provided as a protection against the hot sun of the Eastern seas.

Lady's Pictorial.—The Princess of Wales, before leaving for Scotland, spent a day or two in London. While at Marlborough House Her Royal Highness received Prince Mohamed Ali Khan (Persian Minister), who presented her with the Persian Order of the Sun, by direction of the Shah of Persia. The Prince sent several motor cars to Abergeldie, and the Princess has used them a great deal. The battleship Renown will in a few days be out of dock hands, the extensive alterations completed. She will then undergo trials, and will go to Genoa, ready to embark the Prince and Princess of Wales on the 8th of next month. Captain the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt is to command the ship. He is now private secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, and a particularly smart officer.

Illustrated London News.—The Indian mail brings with it accounts of certain provisional arrangements already made in connection with the forthcoming tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales. Their Royal Highnesses are expected to arrive at Lahore on the afternoon of November 28th, and will drive by way of the Fort and the Anarkali Gardens to Government House, where a State dinner will be given in the evening. After this the Prince will receive the Punjab durbaris. The three following days will be devoted to ceremonial visits from the Punjab Chiefs, an inspection of the Dufferin Hospital, a small dinner-party, and a ride to the Shalimar Gardens, return visits to the Punjab Chiefs, a purdah party, a visit to the Aitchison Chiefs' College, another State dinner, a ball at Montgomery Hall, an inspection of the Fort, and a garden-party. In the evening of December 1st the Royal visitors will start for Peshawar. Amritsar will be reached on December 6th, Rangoon on January 13th, Mandalay on January 16th and Prome on January 21st.

Southern Weekly News.—The approaching tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales in India is already arousing considerable interest in the Empire. As yet the programme is not definitely settled, but according to present arrangements the Royal party will reach Lahore on Tuesday, 28th November. Following the official reception, the people will be afforded a first general view of the Royal cavalcade, and the Punjab Chiefs and durbaris will then greet Their Royal Highnesses. The day's rejoicings will conclude with a State dinner, and on the morrow the Heir-Apparent is to receive ceremonial visits with full honours from the Punjab Chiefs. The Prince of Wales will devote the next day to returning ceremonial visits, attending a purdah party, and other engagements, finishing with a grand ball in the evening. A visit to the Fort is planned for the 1st December, and in the afternoon of the same day the Prince and Princess leave for Peshawar. Thence Their Royal Highnesses will travel to Jammu and Amritsar. Continuing the tour, the Royal party will journey to Burma, the visit there extending from 13th to 21st January. It is feared in some circles that owing to the distress in India the projected tour may be seriously deranged.

4TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Mail.—Very shortly there will be a Royal inspection of the battleship Renown, which is to carry the Prince and Princess of Wales to India.

Contrary to the general belief, very little is being spent in preparing the ship for her Royal passengers. Even the present furniture is to remain in the principal rooms. It is handsome furniture, made of mahogany, and skilfully carved. Sir John Fisher put it into the ship when he chose her, a spick and span new vessel, as his flag-ship on the North America and West Indies station, and there it has remained ever since.

Waring's are furnishing the Royal cabins upon a simple but very tasteful plan. Most of the ship's officers have been moved out of their cabins, these being required for members of the Royal suite. As a consequence the 6-inch guns of the vessel have had to be lifted out, and in the casemates thus left vacant the ship's officers will sleep during the voyage.

The Royal apartments are separated from the remainder of the ship by a bulkhead. For the Princess a sleeping-cabin and sitting-room have been made on the upper deck. A covered canvas way runs from there to the gangway leading to the State rooms on the half-deck. The sleeping cabins of the Prince and his personal attendants are situated upon the quarter-deck.

A tour of appalling extent is being industriously arranged by the local authorities in India for Their Royal Highnesses, writes our Simla correspondent.

Every hour is being provided for. The menu for each meal on every day during the three months' tour is being carefully considered. Not a detail, from the texture of the sheets to the size of the serviettes, is to be forgotten.

It is rumoured that Lord Curzon may remain in India until March, in order to entertain the Prince of Wales.

Englishman.—The train that is to have the honour of carrying the Prince of Wales over the East Indian Railway is undergoing continual trials to make it fit down to the smallest nut and screw. The Railway officials are taking no end of pains with it, and if the Prince appears to scheduled time, he will have perhaps the most perfectly appointed conveyance the world has ever seen. If he delays, however, the engine and carriages stand a fair chance of being worn out by continual work on trial trips.

Indian Daily News.—The Bombayites are nothing if not practical, declares the Indian Mirror. Trust them to combine profit, pleasure, and even loyalty and duty. Whilst most of the money to be raised in Calcutta for the entertainment of the Prince and Princess of Wales will be spent for purposes of show, the bulk of the money raised in the same connection in Bombay will be spent for purposes of permanent utility and profits. The Bombay Corporation has voted two-and-a-half lakhs of rupees for the building of a Museum in commemoration of the coming Royal visit, and Rs. 50,000 for festivities in honour of the illustrious guests. This is as it should be, and the example of Bombay ought to be followed elsewhere.

Leeds and Yorkshire Mercury.—Despite the suggestions of some Tory papers the Prince of Wales appears to have the courage to face India in her present distressful condition. The fitting of the battleship Renown which is to carry the Prince and Princess, is nearly completed, and there is shortly to be an inspection of the vessel. The Renown was Sir John Fisher's flagship on the North American and West Indies station, and she is so excellently fitted that comparatively little is being spent in preparing her for the Royal passengers. Waring's are furnishing the Royal cabins, which are separated by a bulkhead from the remainder of the ship. Special provision is being made for a body of newspaper correspondents, who will accompany the Prince on his tour.

Madras Mail.—In view of the lateness of the date by which it would be possible for Lord Minto to arrive in India and undertake the extensive hospitalities connected with the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the question begins to be asked as to whether it would not be best for Lord Curzon, after all, to remain on in India until next March. Lord Minto is not a man of large private means, and to have to begin his tenure by such heavy expenditure as the reception of Royalty involves can hardly commend itself to him especially in a country of so many forms and ceremonies with which he is unacquainted. On the other hand, Lord Curzon has ample means and is not under the disadvantage of personal unacquaintance with the Indian Princes who will assemble to welcome the Heir to the British Throne. The only reason which could be urged as a serious one against Lord Curzon's extension of tenure for the few months of the coming cold season would be that of the delay which such an arrangement would be likely to cause in the introduction of Lord Kitchener's Military Reorganisation arrangements. The scheme has already been so long hung up by the unfortunate differences which have arisen over it, however, that there is now no possibility of bringing it into force in time for the coming cold weather. In fact, we understand that it will not now be introduced before next April. Under these circumstances, an extension for Lord Curzon until next March would make very little difference. Certainly, the most natural arrangement would seem to be for the Home Government to invite Lord Curzon to remain on in India until next March; and rumour already has it that this is likely to be the case.

Rangoon Gazette.—At a meeting of the office-bearers of the Prince of Wales' Reception Committee held at the Town Hall it was decided to suggest the following programme in connection with the reception and entertainment of Their Royal Highnesses:—(a) To receive Their Royal Highnesses in a pandal to be erected on Barr Street between the Strand Road and the river and there to present an address and casket. (b) Their Royal Highnesses to drive to Government House from the reception pandal by the following route:—Strand Road, Phayre Street, Merchant Street, Strand Road, Latter Street, Dalhousie Street, Godwin Road, Halpin Road and Leeds Road. (c) In Godwin Road, north of the Railways, a double pandal to be erected, both sides of the road to be occupied by the school children of Rangoon (between 16,000 and 17,000). A school girl to present Her Royal Highness with a bouquet; a school boy to present some article of Burmese work. (d) On Monday morning the Victoria Memorial Park to be opened by His Royal Highness. (e) On Monday night the Royal lakes to be illuminated. Their Royal Highnesses to proceed by way of Athlone Road, Lake Road, Lake Avenue, Switchback Road, Park Road, Dalhousie Park to the Pavilion. If it can be arranged, Their Royal Highnesses on leaving Athlone Road to drive for a short distance along the barrack hill to obtain a bird's-eye view of the Royal Lakes. Their Royal Highnesses will be received, and will be conducted to the pavilion, where Her Royal Highness will be presented with an album of views of Rangoon. Their Royal Highnesses will then embark on a karawek barge and will be towed by Burmese racing canoes about and across the Lake to the Promontory where the members of the Boat Club will be "At Home." Their Royal Highnesses' departure to be from near the Boat Club by Lake Road, the Victoria Memorial Park, Victoria Avenue, Soolay Pagoda Road railway overbridge to the Phayre Street Station. It was decided that on the night of the illumination of the Lakes only members of the Reception Committee and their families shall be allowed at the pavilion. It was recommended that the Arrival Sub-Committee superintend the issue of tickets to the reception pandal.

At a meeting of the Finance Sub-Committee, the Finance Sub-Committee allotted the following sums to Sub-Committees:—Arrival Sub-Committee Rs. 6,000, Address Sub-Committee Rs. 5,000, Streets Decoration Sub-Committee Rs. 7,500, Illumination Sub-Committee Rs. 25,000, Entertainment Sub-Committee Rs. 6,000, General Expenses Rs. 2,500. Total Rs. 52,000.

5TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Times of India.—Considerable apprehension has existed of late regarding the possible effect of the partial failure of the monsoon upon the approaching Royal tour in India. We believe, however, that it is now practically certain that such failure of the rain as has occurred will not make it necessary to consider the desirability of the postponement of the tour. The majority of the places to be visited by Their Royal Highnesses have either not been affected as all, or in any case not gravely. It is now beyond question that there will be no famine in the Punjab, as the supplies of food there are believed to be ample. Moreover, there is still time for good rain to arrive and greatly change the aspect of affairs in the worst districts; and it is interesting to note in this connection that the native population firmly believe that before this month is out a large quantity of rain will have fallen. It is quite possible that there may be minor changes in the programme of the tour, if distress gets acute in rainless places. It is also highly probable that the Delhi manoeuvres will be abandoned or transferred to some other districts. But it may be taken as beyond question now that the Royal tour will take place.

6TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Indian Daily News.—The following address of welcome, to be approved by the Commissioners this afternoon, will be presented by the Corporation on the occasion of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Calcutta in December next:—

May it please Your Royal Highnesses,—We, the Chairman and Commissioners of the Corporation of Calcutta, on behalf of the inhabitants of this city, beg leave to approach Your Royal Highnesses with a most respectful, loyal and heartfelt welcome on this joyous occasion of the visit of Your Royal Highnesses to the metropolis of this great dependency of the British Crown, and to express to Your Royal Highnesses, and through Your Royal Highnesses, to our beloved King and Emperor, our allegiance and devotion to His Most Gracious Majesty's person and throne.

2. This is the second occasion upon which the Heir to the Throne has honoured India with his presence, and the universal rejoicing with which our present King-Emperor, then Prince of Wales, was greeted 30 years ago still lives in the hearts of the people of this city. The present occasion is still further memorable, inasmuch as this is the first visit of a Princess of Wales to Calcutta.

3. This visit of Your Royal Highnesses while strengthening and cementing the bonds of loyalty and attachment which have ever bound the people of India to their Sovereign, awakens associations connected with the many mighty and ancient dynasties of this vast Empire now so happily, centred in the Imperial Throne of England, and affords us an additional pledge of His Majesty the King-Emperor's increasing interest in the welfare and advancement of his Indian subjects.

4. Calcutta is proud to be reckoned the second city in the British Empire, and Your Royal Highnesses will find here abundant indications of the prosperity and contentment which everywhere follow on British rule. The continued moral and material progress, not only of Calcutta but of all India as evidenced by the numerous works of public utility, the growth and development of trade, commerce and industries and the spread of education is a lasting testimony to the fostering care for the Indian people which is the guiding principle of His Majesty's rule.

In conclusion we would respectfully express our hope, that Your Royal Highnesses may enjoy to the full the interesting tour on which you have embarked and that at its termination you may bear away pleasing recollections of India and its people.

Madras Mail.—His Highness the Maharaja has adopted the suggestion of Sir P. N. Krishna Murti, Dewan of Mysore, that an Agricultural and Industrial Exhibition should be held at Mysore on the occasion of the coming Royal visit to the Capital.

In connection with a meeting of prominent Hindus and Muhammadans which was held lately with the object of devising means for improving the sanitation of the station in view of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, a Committee meeting has been held. Rai Bahadur A. Maigun Ladeva Moodelliar has been appointed to act as Secretary, and a further meeting will be held shortly. Active measures will then be arranged to be taken by the Hindu and Muhammadan Municipal Commissioners in their respective divisions, and in the meanwhile the people themselves will be urged to undergo inoculation, and all other possible means will be taken to keep the plague down this year. Appearances so far would seem to show that the scourge will not be so bad this year and, if early measures are taken, success should be assured.

Pioneer.—Sums totalling Rs. 52,000 have been allotted by various sub-committees for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales at Rangoon in January next. Their Royal Highnesses will be received in a pandal to be erected in Barr Street, where they will be presented with an address and casket. Their Royal Highnesses will then drive to Government House. In Godwin Road, north of the railway, a double pandal will be erected on both sides of the road to be occupied by the school children of Rangoon—between 16,000 and 17,000. On Monday morning, the 1st January, the Victoria Memorial Park will be opened by His Royal Highness. In the evening the Royal Lakes will be illuminated. At the pavilion of the Royal Lakes Her Royal Highness will be presented with an album of views of Rangoon. The Prince and Princess will then embark on a Karaweik barge and be towed across to the promontory by Burmese racing canoes, where the members of the Boat Club will be "At Home."

7TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Mail.—Persistent rumours have been published to the effect that the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales is likely to be either abandoned or postponed. We are able to state that there is absolutely no foundation for these reports in some of our contemporaries. There is no probability that the arrangements which were made early in the year will be varied.

Although scarcity has appeared in some parts of India, nowhere has it reached the stage which is known officially as "famine". Communications which have passed between the Indian and Home Governments indicated that extreme scarcity is not probable, and in any events the improved railway systems in the peninsula, enabling the abundance of one district to supply the lack in another, and the organisation of relief for any emergency, render it certain that even famine in any particular section would not necessitate a postponement of the tour. In the almost impossible event of a universal scarcity in India the position would be very different.

There are no grounds for the repeated statements which have appeared that the Prince and Princess will extend their tour so as to visit the Court of the Mikado. There are obvious reasons why at present Their Royal Highnesses will not go further than India. The journey is undertaken wholly and solely so that His Majesty may be represented in our vast Eastern possessions by the Heir to the Throne.

Leicester Post.—Information received to-day deepens the gravity of the reports from India as to the extent of the famine. I mentioned a fortnight ago that the question whether, after all, the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales should take place in the circumstances was under consideration. Correspondents in India have exercised great reticence, and it has been the business of the India Office to repudiate, as it might have a depressing effect on the tour. Now, however, it seems to be almost certain that a large part of the intended progress will be abandoned. The early hint I got of what was passing was, as I mentioned at the time, unofficial, but it came from a source not lightly to be disregarded. The Prince is, I understand, keen on making the trip if it can be done to the good of the Empire, and I am inclined to think it will be proceeded with on a reduced scale. But much depends on the news of the next fortnight.

United India and Native States.—A report from Simla says that there is a growing opinion there that if rain does not fall on an early date in the Rajputana districts certain modifications in the proposed tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales will become necessary. In the event of the programme being considerably abridged to save the situation to some extent, the question arises if by this means the Royal party can derive the full measure of benefit they are expected to do from an expensive tour.

Western Daily Press.—It does not seem to be certain yet whether the projected tour of the Prince of Wales in India will be abandoned, but there is every reason to fear that it will have to be given up because of the prevalence of another of the famines which periodically call for the most energetic work on the part of the Indian Civil Service.

Daily Express.—H.M.S. Renown, in which the Prince and Princess of Wales are to journey to India, had her crew made up to the full complement yesterday, so that the men may assist in hurrying forward the preparation of the vessel.

In a few days the Renown will leave for her commissioning steam trials, and, if satisfactory, she will return at once to Portsmouth and begin to take in stores for the voyage.

8TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Mail.—Some changes are announced in the forthcoming tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales in India. Ajmer, in Rajputana, has been definitely dropped from the Royal programme, and, although a visit may possibly be made to Udaipur, it is doubtful whether any stay will be made at the places originally fixed in Rajputana, owing to the now almost inevitable famine.

It is expected that it will be impossible to hold the Delhi manoeuvres consequent on the failure of the wells. The country north of Meerut has been examined as an alternative ground for the manoeuvres, but was also found to be too parched.

Further revision of the Royal programme has been postponed till September 15th, on the chance of rain falling in the meantime.

H. M. battleship Renown, which is to convey the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, was commissioned yesterday at Portsmouth by Commodore the Hon'ble H. Tyrwhitt.

Times of India.—Every effort is being made in Bombay by the official committee to ensure that the illuminations in the city on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales shall be as perfect as possible and with the loyal support which, no doubt, will be forthcoming on the part of the public, there is every prospect that the result will eclipse anything that has ever been seen in Bombay. It has now been definitely fixed that the night for the grand illumination of the city shall be Tuesday, November 14th, and strong district committees have been appointed to co-operate with the public and endeavour to secure the illumination of every house on the selected route. It will be noticed from the list of streets thus named that nearly every thoroughfare in the Fort has been included while in the native town not one of the principal through streets has been omitted and it is hoped that every householder on the way will carry out his illuminations in a manner worthy of the great occasion.

9TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Times of India.—It is hoped here that the Royal visitors to Mysore will travel by motor cars in a train of seven from Bangalore to Mysore City (75 miles) and thence to the elephant kheddass (100 miles) there and back, or about 250 miles in all spread over a week. There is the Southern Mahratta line of railway between Bangalore and Mysore City, but the Maharaja of Mysore has lately taken to doing the journey by motor car, as more convenient and comfortable and free from ceremonial departures and arrivals. They have four cars in the place now, one a 30-horse power touring De Dion, and three more of the latest types have now been ordered, including a 25-horse power Panhard. Among the several ceremonies which the Prince of Wales is expected to perform in Mysore, will be the opening of an industrial and agricultural exhibition and the unveiling of the Victoria Memorial Statue.

11TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Madras Mail.—Apropos of the coming visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, a short account of some notable progresses in Ancient India may be of more than ordinary interest. Ancient Hindu Kings left the task of administration almost entirely in the hands of their Brahmin Ministers and do not seem to have troubled to acquaint themselves with the real condition of the people by travelling among them. The superstition about the King's evil eye, a belief that has survived even to this day, was, no doubt, the invention of counsellors who were anxious that Their Royal Masters should not go amongst their subjects and learn firsthand how the Government was appreciated. Two kinds of Royal tours, however, seem to have been commonly undertaken in early India, viz., hunting expeditions and the Digvijaya yātras preceding Rājasūya sacrifices. In the former the Kings necessarily travelled with only a very limited suite, and consequently these shikar expeditions convey but a faint idea of the pomp and circumstance of the Oriental monarch on tour. The Digvijaya was the conquest of hostile kingdoms that must be accomplished before a Sovereign could perform the Rājasūya sacrifice, the highest ambition of a Sovereign, at which all the subject rulers were present and acknowledged their vassalage. Prominent among the Digvijayins mentioned in the legends are Māndhātā and Raghu, ancestors of Rāma, and Pandu and his son, Arjuna, the last of whom is said to have penetrated into China and made the Celestial Kingdom feudatory. We read also in the Epics of Hindu Kings travelling to the Srayamvarams (Choice of Husband) instituted by princesses such as Sita, Draupadi, Damayanti and Indumati, to mention but a few. Royalties in Ancient India were too indolent and easy-going to travel for travel's sake. An amusing story is told of a certain Raja of Tanjore who was, with considerable difficulty, prevailed upon to undertake a pilgrimage to Benares and who, on descending from the fifth floor of his palace to the first, asked his courtiers how much of the distance was yet to be covered!

The Rāmāyana contains an elaborate description of perhaps the most notable of Royal tours in early India. Every one who has any acquaintance with Indian literature knows the circumstances which led to the banishment of Rāma to the forests for a period of fourteen years. Bharata, for whom Kaikeyi had obtained the throne of Ayōdhya which rightfully belonged to his elder brother, the exiled prince, was resolved to bring back Rāma to the capital and prevail upon him to take the reins of government into his own hands. With this object in view, Bharata first sent out an army of workmen to clear a way through the forests in order to make his progress through them easy. Under the direction of able guides, there set out a host of men skilled in making tents, brave delvers of the ground, labourers who were expert in constructing canals and watercourses, car-makers, carpenters, cooks, and soldiers to keep guard over the roads as they were made. A beautiful highway was rapidly made, uneven places were levelled, shady trees were planted in desert places, bridges were thrown over rivers and streams wherever necessary, and wells and reservoirs of water were dug in arid tracts. On the night preceding the auspicious day that had been decided upon for Bharata's departure, several preliminary ceremonies were performed and poets and musicians sang the praises of the Prince. The next morning he assembled his Court and, promising to bring back the rightful ruler of Ayōdhya, affectionately took leave of the noble and worthy personages gathered before him. The Chiefs of the Army and Bharata's principal adherents were commanded to follow in his train and the procession started. In its van went the priests and counsellors singing Vedic chants and invoking the blessing of the gods on the success of the mission. A thousand elephants duly consecrated and beautifully caparisoned and 6,000 chargers and chariots on which were mounted warriors armed with various weapons followed in the wake of Bharata's splendid car. The citizens of Ayōdhya embracing each other frequently in the gladness of their hearts, brought up the rear: among them were representatives of all castes and callings, from merchants and nobles down to shampoos. On his right wrist, a pratizara or triple string was tied, which was to be removed after the completion of the journey. When the Royal procession left the capital, which was resonant with the auspicious sound of conches, drums and horns, hundreds of prisoners were set at large. Every morning the vast army was notified by a peculiar system of signalling of the intended length of the day's march. A big drum which could be heard furlongs off, was sounded, and if six strokes were beaten, it meant that the progress that day was to be 6 kos or about fifteen miles: if ten, the distance to be traversed was 10 kos or 25 miles, and so on. The daily march was usually 20 miles. The headmen of the villages through which passed the King and his train, supplied men and beasts with provisions. The leading citizens, with the oldest among them at their head, welcomed the King with presents of caskets containing, not addresses, but jaggery, curds and flowers. The hospitality shown him cost the King rather dear, for his return gifts consisted of large villages, each a field for a thousand ploughs.

12TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Express, London.—In spite of a hundred and fifty years of British rule, the mass of Indians continue to be entirely Indian in spirit, and the Indian ideal of a king or emperor differs in many respects from the British ideal. The elements that make a king's popularity are far from being the same in India and Britain. The Indian people are eagerly looking forward to the Prince of Wales' visit, and if during his tour in India he conforms to certain Indian practices, which in themselves are not in the least undignified but calculated to please his Indian subjects, his popularity will be unbounded.

His Royal Highness is to visit Benares and some other places of Hindu pilgrimage. In these places the ancient temples will naturally be the chief objects that will interest him. Hindus consider it a sacrilege to enter even the courtyard of a temple with shoes on, but some Anglo-Indian officials wound the religious feelings of the people by disregarding this restriction. His Royal Highness is not likely to follow this Anglo-Indian practice. When he visits a temple, the whole place will be covered with red cloth, and there will be no very great inconvenience in walking barefooted.

The Prince will be invited to dinner by several Maharajahs. It is the practice of Indians to provide English dinners for their European guests. But why should not the Prince be given some Indian viands? Many an Indian dish is the delight of the European gourmand in India.

A word from His Royal Highness hinting that it would please him to break the monotony of the English dinner-table by the introduction of a few courses of purely Indian origin will be taken by his host as a high compliment and an honour done not only to him, but also to his country.

There is a large and influential body of highly educated men in India who by the right of their intellectual superiority and moral worth are recognised as leaders of the people. They lead the public movements of the country, of both political and non-political character. These men are considered in India to be the party in opposition and the Government the party in power.

If the Prince were to invite representative members of this class to a party during his stay in such capital towns as Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Lahore, and Lucknow and hear from them without, of course, expressing any opinions, what they have to say about the questions in which they are interested, His Royal Highness would immensely increase the prestige of the Throne, and convince the Indian people that he has the liveliest interest in their welfare.

We are fully aware that the Prince is in England an active promoter of schemes of public utility and we are earnestly hoping that His Royal Highness will take the same interest in India. There are as yet no adequate arrangements either in India or in England for the special scientific education of Indians, and we are trusting that His Royal Highness, after returning home, may establish in London a society for the scientific and technical education of Indian youths. The Prince's return might then be followed by the voyage to England of a select band of brilliant Indian graduates for technical and scientific education.

The number of cities to be visited is not very numerous, and I would suggest that in bidding farewell to the citizens the Prince should, if possible, announce a present to the city. It should be something that would be beneficial to the inhabitants. He may present one city with waterworks, another with an arts or technical school, a third with an asylum for lepers, the decision to be made according to the special sore needs of a city. There would be discerned a true Indian kingly grace in such acts, which is sure to captivate the Indian heart.

India is full of beggars, but in his progress through the streets of a city or town His Royal Highness will see few, for they are to be cleared of such nuisance by the police. Yet he may by chance some time meet some of the cripples or the blind who live upon the charity of the charitable. It would be in accord with Indian ideas if His Royal Highness kept a supply of Indian sovereigns for these unfortunates. A king, to be kingly in India, should give alms to the needy whenever they come in his presence.

The climax of kingly grace would, however, be reached in a proclamation that might be issued in the name of the Government of India on the eve of the Prince's departure from India, announcing that in memory of the visit and at their gracious wish, remissions have been made in the land tax or salt tax, or any other tax that touches the pockets of the majority of the Indian people.

European ladies in India are eager to accord a cordial welcome to the Princess of Wales. It may not be known to Her Royal Highness that the same desire is shared by many Indian ladies. In Bombay there is already a movement started by Indian ladies to give a reception to Her Royal Highness in their own way. It is not certain if the officials will lend their support to this proposal and offer every assistance to its accomplishment. A hint from the Princess that it would afford her particular gratification to respond to the invitation to receptions to be held by Indian ladies in her honour will effect all that is desirable in this respect. These receptions should be most interesting to Her Royal Highness, for the opportunity they must afford her to study the Indian woman.

The Princess would also immensely please the Indians if she were able to hold in her residence, wherever practicable, a special party for Indian ladies. Such a party can now be expected to be attended by many native ladies even in places where the rigours of the zenana have not yet been admittedly much relaxed, if the party is guaranteed to be absolutely safe from the approach of any male feet.

There are in the large Indian towns schools and colleges, both Government and private, for Indian girls. The Princess will, doubtless visit them, and thus afford further proof of the interest we know she feels in the intellectual improvement of the womankind of India.

These suggestions are made in all humility and loyalty. It is sometimes difficult for the Briton to understand the Indian point of view, and the success of the tour—a success we all desire—depends so much on that understanding.

13TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The latest weather reports tend to show that all real anxiety regarding the Prince of Wales's tour is now at an end. So far as Ajmere is concerned the scarcity of fodder and grass may prevent any large gathering of Chiefs there, but the Royal visit to Udaipur may be looked upon as settled, and a few days should prove whether any doubt need be necessary as regards Bikanir and Jaipur.

Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury.—The new, and not the retiring Governor-General, will receive the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival in India. The state of Lord Curzon's health would, in any event, have rendered it difficult for him to take a leading part in the ceremonies and festivities that will attend the Royal visit. Lord Curzon has for some time been unable to perform more than his strictly official and necessary duty, and I believe that it is a fact that some of his recent despatches have been written under considerable difficulties. In these circumstances, it will fall to Lord Minto to take what may be called the direction of the Royal tour in India. He is himself a greater stranger to the country than the Prince of Wales, but he will, of course, be able to command an abundance of expert advice and assistance. Whether Lord Curzon will leave India before the arrival of the Prince is uncertain. It is usual for one Governor-General to depart before the other arrives. It appears to be opposed to official theory, if not to etiquette, that a retiring Governor-General should directly hand over his duties to his successor and the probability is, therefore, that Lord Curzon will leave India before Lord Minto reaches Bombay. In any event, the new Governor-General will be in office before the Royal visit begins and Lord Minto will be responsible for the arrangements connected with the tour of the Prince. There is, however, no doubt that the King is disappointed by the withdrawal of Lord Curzon from India at this particular time.

Nottingham Daily Express.—News that rain has fallen in several parts of India has helped to relieve some of the fears that were entertained by those responsible for the Royal visit to India. We hear now of a fresh crop of statements as to altered arrangements. As matters stand, there is a programme containing certain items the fulfilment of which must depend upon local circumstances. That was understood from the first, and if the showers reported are followed by others of a sufficiently plentiful character, if thereby the prospects of the country are improved and the risk of famine removed, then the Prince and Princess of Wales will travel more in India than would be advisable were the worst fears of suffering realised. At present the Renown is ready to leave Portsmouth for Genoa on October 8th, according to the original arrangements. The Prince and Princess will travel overland to the Italian port, and there go aboard the vessel that has been shorn of its armaments, and now looks more like a sumptuous yacht than a battleship. The attempts to cause sensation by reports that the tour is to be abandoned may be ignored, as also may the statement that the embarkation will be at Portsmouth. The Princess is not a sufficiently good sailor to face the Bay at this time of the year.

Rangoon Gazette.—At a meeting of the Streets Decoration Sub-Committee Mr. M. Laurie, I.C.S., Chairman, explained the arrangements suggested for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and the route by which it is proposed they should proceed from the Sule Pagoda Wharf to Government House which will be:—Strand Road, Phayre Street, Merchant Street, Strand Road, Latter Street, Dalhousie Street, Godwin Road, Halpin Road, Leeds Road. The following sections of the line of the route are allotted to the various communities for the erection of arches and for decoration:—(a) Strand Road, between Sule Pagoda Road and Barr Street, to the Jewish community. (b) Strand Road, opposite the Custom House, to the Indian Mahomedan community. (c) Merchant Street, between Sule Pagoda Road and 32nd Street, to the Hindu community. (d) Merchant Street, between 30th and 31st Streets, to the Persian community. (e) Merchant Street, between 27th and 29th Streets, to the Surratee Bazaar Co. (f) Merchant Street, between Edward Street and China Street, to the Marwari community. (g) Strand Road, between China Street and Latter Street, to the Chetty community. (h) Latter Street, between Strand Road and Dalhousie Street, to the Fokein Chinese community. (i) Dalhousie Street, between Latter Street and Godwin Road, to the Canton Chinese community. (j) Godwin Road, between Canal Street and the hpoongyi kyounng, to the Burmese community. (k) Godwin Road opposite the hpoongyi kyounng, to the Rangoon College.

The Sub-Committee approved of the suggestion made for having a large double pandal on both sides of Godwin Road, north of the railway, in which to accommodate the whole of the school children of Rangoon, who will there welcome Their Royal Highnesses and present offerings to them.

As the Principal of the Rangoon College objects to the scholars in the College taking part in the reception to be given by school children, but asks that the students of the Rangoon College may be allowed to erect a pandal and arch on the line of the route to be taken by Their Royal Highnesses, the Sub-Committee directed that the Principal of the Rangoon College be informed that there is no objection to the erection by the Rangoon College of a pandal and arch in Godwin Road opposite the hpoongyi kyounng and this portion of the line of route can be allotted to the Rangoon College for decoration, but it must be understood that whatever is undertaken and done by the Rangoon College will form no part of the reception for which the Reception Committee is responsible.

It was decided to ask the residents of Phayre Street, between Strand Road and Merchant Street, to decorate that street, a similar request to be made to the residents of Merchant Street, between Phayre Street and Sule Pagoda Road and other streets, where there are no arches.

It was decided to ask Government to decorate Government buildings along the line of route and, where advisable, the Committee will decorate streets not otherwise decorated.

The communities erecting arches are to be requested to submit plans of them to Mr. Foy, the Municipal Engineer.

The Sub-Committee decided to ask the Finance Sub-Committee to allot Rs. 15,000 for the expenses to be incurred by the Streets Decorations Sub-Committee.

At a meeting the Address Sub-Committee inspected the designs for a casket to contain the address and discussed the matter with Mr. Coombes, representing Messrs. P. Orr and Sons. It was decided that another design, made in accordance with the wishes of the Sub-Committee, should be submitted by Messrs. P. Orr and Sons as quickly as possible. The Chairman undertook to draft and circulate the address for the approval of the Sub-Committee.

14TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Englishman.—It had been practically settled that in the place of Ballabgarh there would be a large manœuvre in the neighbourhood of Attock between the 2nd and 8th of December, but the heavy rain received in the Punjab brings new uncertainty into the situation by making it possible that the original plan may be adhered to after all.

Madras Mail.—Subscriptions do not seem to be coming in connection with the Royal visit quite so fast as they should. No doubt the festivities in the Mysore Capital are the Mysore Government's own business and they may be most confidently trusted to do themselves justice. But—the Civil and Military Station—especially Military?

So far the subscriptions amount to something under Rs. 3,000, and as the matter was put to me this morning, "if that amount is to be spread over the whole of Bangalore it won't go far." Whilst quite agreeing that the subscription list is one for spontaneous contribution, the above facts stand out, and it would not do for the "City o' Beans" to be wanting in loyalty. And one other point may be added. Had Bangalore not been a large military centre should we ever have got our present excellent water-supply and other blessings? I trow not.

News of India.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will, we hear, arrive at Bombay on November 9th in the forenoon. On the same afternoon Their Excellencies the Viceroy and Lady Curzon, who will, we hope, have reached Bombay a day or so before them, will go on board and meet Their Royal Highnesses. The Royal party will land at 5 P.M. and drive in procession by the same route as the King did in 1875 to Government House. During a stay of five days in Bombay, visits will be received from Native Chiefs, and drives will be made to some of the outskirts.

Pioneer.—The recent rain in Rajputana may render unnecessary any material alteration in the dates of the Royal tour so far as the principal Rajput States are concerned.

Reception Committees at Bangalore and Mysore have been appointed by the Government of His Highness the Maharaja for making suitable arrangements in connection with the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Times of India.—Mr. Maconochie, Private Secretary to His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore; Colonel Jones, Military Secretary; Colonel Smyth, Senior Surgeon; Captain Traill, Public Works; and Mr. Sparkes, Deputy Commissioner, left Mysore this morning for the elephant jungles fifty miles away to select a new site for the Royal Camp. When the Prince of Wales comes to Mysore the site used for many years for the Duke of Clarence's shikkar party and several Viceroys is to be abandoned in favour of a plot of elevated open ground eight miles nearer to Mysore, so that the party itself and the little army of coolies engaged in transport and encircling and driving operations may not disturb the herds which are being watched.

Civil and Military Gazette.—It is reported that the Jind State has been asked for the loan of its famous tent, the dal-badal, in connection with the coming visit of the Prince of Wales to Lahore. The tent covers no less than twenty-eight bigahs of land, and its size will be certain to surprise and interest the visitors from Home. When furnished it presents a most sumptuous appearance, and in all probability no other Native State possesses a tent like it.

Englishman.—The next item of business in the meeting of the Corporation of Calcutta was to approve the following draft of the Address of Welcome to be presented to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their Visit to Calcutta in December 1905:—"May it please Your Royal Highnesses,—We, the Chairman and Commissioners of the Corporation of Calcutta on behalf of the inhabitants of this city, beg leave to approach Your Royal Highnesses with a most respectful, loyal and heartfelt welcome on this joyous occasion of the visit of Your Royal Highnesses to the metropolis of this great dependency of the British Crown, and to express to Your Royal Highnesses, and through Your Royal Highnesses to our beloved King and Emperor, our allegiance and devotion to His Most Gracious Majesty's person and throne. (2) This is the second occasion upon which the Heir to the Throne has honoured India with his presence and the universal rejoicing with which our present King-Emperor, then Prince of Wales, was greeted 30 years ago still lives in the hearts of the people of this city. The present occasion is still further memorable, inasmuch as this is the first visit of a Princess of Wales to Calcutta. (3) This visit of Your Royal Highnesses, while strengthening and cementing the bonds of loyalty and attachment, which have ever bound the people of India to their Sovereign, awakens associations connected with the many mighty and ancient dynasties of this vast Empire now so happily centred in the Imperial Throne of England, and affords us an additional pledge of His Majesty the King-Emperor's increasing interest in the welfare and advancement of His Indian subjects. (4) Calcutta is proud to be reckoned the second city in the British Empire, and Your Royal Highnesses will find here abundant indications of the prosperity and contentment which everywhere follow on British rule. The continued moral and material progress not only of Calcutta but of all India, as evidenced by the numerous works of public utility, the growth and development of trade, commerce and industries and the spread of education, is a lasting testimony to the fostering care for the Indian people which is the guiding principle of His Majesty's rule. (5) In conclusion we would respectfully express our hope that Your Royal Highnesses may enjoy to the full the interesting tour on which you have embarked, and that at its termination you may bear away pleasing recollections of India and its people.

The Chairman moved that the draft of the address of welcome be approved.

Moulvie Seraj-ul-Islam seconded the motion.

Mr. Cotton moved as an amendment that in 1 the words "this joyous" be omitted and the word "the" be substituted, and that the 3rd paragraph the words "awakens associations connected with the many mighty and ancient dynasties of this vast Empire now so happily centred in the Imperial Throne of England and" be omitted.

Mr. Braunfeld said the address was badly worded, and he moved that it be referred back to the Special Committee to be redrafted.

Dr. Haridhone Dutt suggested that in paragraph 4 the words "prosperity and contentment" be omitted, and the word "advancement" substituted.

Mr. Apear remarked that it was not wise or feasible for them to make alterations here by amendments. If there was going to be any change, the matter ought to be properly considered, and it could not be so considered at a big meeting like this. He supported Mr. Braunfeld's proposal that the matter should go back to the Special Committee.

Mr. Braunfeld's proposal that the address be referred back to the Special Committee to be re-drafted was then put and carried, it being decided that Mr. Braunfeld be invited to help the Special Committee in re-drafting the address.

16TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—On the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to the Punjab and their journey over the North-Western Railway system in November 1905 and March 1906, day decoration and night illumination on a grand scale will take place at the Lahore station for which extensive preparations are in hand.

Arrangements will also be made for day decorations and night illuminations at Peshawar, Jammu and Amritsar stations, and for day decoration, at Bhatinda, Quetta and Karachi.

Egyptian Gazette.—Before H.M.S. Renown commences her voyage to India, it is expected that the King and Queen will pay her a visit, in order to inspect the arrangements made for the comfort of the Prince and Princess of Wales during the voyage. All things considered it is a matter for some regret that the Royal travellers will not make their start from Portsmouth, where a real good send-off could have been managed, but the Princess of Wales has a great horror of the Bay of Biscay, and therefore it has been decided that the Royal party shall cross to Genoa. The embarkation at the Italian port, however, will not be without ceremonial, for both an English and an Italian fleet will be present to pay farewell honours.

Indian Daily News.—Our English news as often as not comes by way of America where they always know much more of the movements of Royalty than in England. The New York Herald, which is always far in advance of the English press, has just been giving an account of the arrangements made for training the Prince of Wales' chargers for his Indian tour. "It is," says that enterprising journal, "good form for the Prince to carry his own mounts with him, and so the necessity for their schooling is apparent. Three splendid horses in fact have gone to the Zoo for a three months' education to accustom themselves to the sort of things they may meet in India. They will by that time know by sight and sound and smell all the animals they are likely to meet in India, and there will be no fear of their misbehaving on parade or marring the spectacle because an elephant or a tiger or a monkey comes along." We are told that the same was done 30 years ago, when King Edward came over here. There are, however, we are afraid, many surprises in store for these learned animals and many appalling sights and smells which they would not find in that beautiful and well-gardened place, the Zoo. The sight of a third-class Calcutta tiffin with ten inside and eleven outside could not, we fancy, be got in London, and there is nothing in the Zoo to equal the subtle smell of an Oriental City. Any educated animal who reflected about it for a moment would probably attribute it to the presence of some extraordinary animal like that Mr. Carnegie recently gave to the national History Museum, and bolt for his life. To revert, however, it is not usual for elephants, tigers or even monkeys (at any rate on sticks) to be allowed on any ceremonial parade—even in savage and uncivilised India. The horse, "the friend of man," we are told by that excellent moralist "Private Pagett" is not such a thing, but quite the contrary, in fact, "an omicidal maniac with a nasty sarcastical grin on his ugly mouth," and so perhaps after all it is as well that the horses which Prince George of Wales is destined to ride should be put through all sorts of preliminary drill.

Sussex Daily News.—The wardrobes for the Prince and Princess of Wales during their Indian tour are now being prepared. The finishing of Her Royal Highness's costumes will be undertaken immediately after her return to Marlborough House. With the exception of a few silks of Lyons manufacture, and some items of minor interest the materials employed are all of British origin, and the patterns adopted for travelling suits and costumes are those of the forthcoming summer trade at home. Thus His Royal Highness will make considerable use of grey check flannels, vandyke-brown chevrons, and similar materials for lounge suits, and the Princess is also giving much attention to natty greys, although navies and creams, in serges, cashmeres, and twills, are also being made up, more especially for daylight use on board during the voyage. Among the materials prepared for use on State occasions there are some which, while being of English origin, embody a strain of Oriental fancy.

17TH SEPTEMBER 1903.

Pioneer.—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has been pleased to accept a copy of The Silken East from the author, Mr. V. C. Scott O'Connor. In acknowledging the work Sir Arthur Bigge writes:—"I am desired to express to you His Royal Highness' best thanks for this valuable work, the contents of which he feels sure will afford him much interesting information of that country which he looks forward to visiting with great pleasure."

18TH SEPTEMBER 1903.

Daily Express, London.—It is now possible to give a general idea of the elaborate and magnificent schemes that have been prepared for the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales when they visit India at the end of autumn, writes the Express Lucknow correspondent.

The ceremonies will resemble the wonderful receptions accorded to the Kings of the Hindu and Muhammadan periods more than modern pageants. The Prince of Wales will be a great figure, but all the resources at India's command will be given to making the visit a tour of triumph for the Princess, for it is the first time in history that the Heir-Apparent to the Throne has visited India in the company of India's future Empress.

In her honour, native ladies of the highest rank, who have never before left the sacred precincts of the zenana, will come out to give her a personal welcome.

The Calcutta municipality have resolved to present Her Royal Highness with a diamond necklace worth £1,500. The native Indian ladies of Bombay will give her a massive silver album containing a selection of water-colour sketches depicting fourteen types of Indian women, accompanied by an address in six different languages.

Mr. David Sassoon, of Bombay, has given £7,500 for the erection in that city of a statue of Her Royal Highness.

The royal party will be received at Bombay by the Earl of Minto. That city will be given over absolutely to gaiety on November 9th, for as well as being the date of arrival of the Prince and Princess, it is the King-Emperor's birthday.

The municipality have voted large sums for the presentation of addresses, decorations, pyrotechnic displays, feeding the poor, and a dozen kindred objects. Even the ryot will have an opportunity of giving his mite towards the reception.

A magnificent casket of carved ivory, which is being designed by the Vice-Principal of the School of Art, will contain the address which will be presented to the Prince and Princess. The Presidency will commemorate the visit by the erection of a public museum in which will be collected the archaeological, artistic, and industrial treasures for which Bombay is famed, and which are now scattered about in various towns.

Towards this project the Bombay Government has given £22,500, and a similar sum has been subscribed by Mr. Currimbhoy Ibrahim, a leading merchant. The laying of the foundation stone of this museum will be one of the principal functions of the visit. The Prince will also open the port's new docks during the stay.

The Talukdars of Oudh are contemplating a permanent memorial to commemorate the visit. This will probably take the shape of a medical college and institution, which is urgently needed in Lucknow.

It is understood that in Agra the Prince will be asked to unveil the handsome statue to the memory of Queen Victoria, which has recently been completed.

Lord Curzon's magnificent project for commemorating the memory of the late Queen-Empress should be well advanced by the end of the year, and one of the functions of the Prince while in Calcutta will be to lay the foundation stone of the new Victoria Memorial Hall.

The Delhi programme will not be on quite the elaborate scale of the great Durbar. The Royal party arrive there on December 7th, and the visit will last three days. The Prince will receive the Delhi chieftains, and a ball will be given in his honour. Much the same programme has been drawn up for Lahore and other cities in Northern India.

A great deal of time will necessarily be taken up by the reception of the leading Indian Princes, whose visits will be returned in person by His Royal Highness.

The weather will be at its best for sight-seeing, and elaborate preparations are being made for the phenomenal rush of English visitors which is expected.

Indian Daily News.—The recent rainfall in Rajputana has improved the prospects of carrying out the tour in that region proposed for the Prince and Princess of Wales. It may now be taken as practically certain that Their Royal Highnesses will visit Udaipur. As regards other cities, the reports of the local authorities on the subject of the extent to which the rainfall has restored normal conditions must be awaited before the programme can be finally settled.

The public fête on the maiden in honour of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Calcutta has been fixed for the 2nd January.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—We have had several reminders this week that the time is near at hand when India's reception of her new Viceroy and of her Royal visitors will be the subject of many cablegrams to this country. Both the Prince of Wales and Lord Minto have been visiting the King at Balmoral in connection with their prospective departures to the East. The Viceroy designate was received in audience on Tuesday evening and kissed hands on his appointment, and he was present the following evening when the King invested the Prince of Wales with the insignia of Knight Grand Cross of both the Indian Orders. The appointment of His Royal Highness to these Orders will enable him to take part in any Chapters of the Orders that may be held during his visit. During the week, too, authoritative details respecting the tailor-made dresses the Princess is taking in India have been supplied to the Press. This work has been in the hands of Mr. A. Phillips of Sloane Street, who carried out a similar order in connection with the Royal colonial tour of 1902. By the special desire of the Princess only British materials have been used. To-morrow the Princess goes to Portsmouth to inspect the arrangements made for her accommodation on board the Renown, which will be leaving a few days hence for Genoa. The Prince and Princess will leave town for Italy, en route to India on the 18th or 19th October.

Standard.—The Prince and Princess of Wales have graciously accepted an invitation to a ball at the Montgomery Hall, Lahore, on November 30, the hosts being gentlemen on the Punjab Government House list. The Montgomery Hall was built in honour of the late Sir Robert Montgomery, formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the province, friend of the Lawrences, and known to his contemporaries as "Pickwick" from his supposed resemblance to that worthy. It was a good deal knocked about in the earthquake, but defects have been made good by this time, and it has the best dancing floor in India. It is quite the proper place for a Punjab ball; and the hope may, perhaps, be expressed that the Indian authorities will at last set their faces against the use of famous historic buildings like the Divan-i-Am and Divan-i-Khas at Delhi, for English balls; at any rate, if, as during the Coronation Durbar festivities, it is thought necessary to disfigure their design by unsightly alterations and additions, even though these are only temporary. A presidency journal publishes a letter from a Muhammadan correspondent, who points out that November 9, the date fixed for the Prince of Wales's arrival in Bombay, will fall on the eleventh day of Ramazan, the month of fasting. Only those, said the Prophet, who keep the fast will be allowed at the last day to enter the celestial city by the portal of Rayan. Throughout Ramazan, Muhammadans may not break their fast till sunset, and must then engage in prayer and other religious exercises. They will thus, the Times of India's correspondent writes, find it difficult, if not impossible, to take part in any demonstrations or festivities in honour of the Royal visit. "Permit me," he adds, "to say that as the authorities have committed an initial error, they should try and rectify it while there is yet time." It does not appear, however, that any widespread apprehension is felt on this score; and, as public business will to a large extent be suspended during Their Royal Highnesses' stay in Bombay, the Muhammadans will, perhaps, not be greatly inconvenienced.

19TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Madras Mail.—Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior has purchased a magnificent petrol landaulette, which he intends to offer to the Prince and Princess of Wales for their use during their tour in India.

Times of India.—The Commissioner of Lucknow has issued a circular indicating the routes to be followed by Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during their visit to Lucknow in December.

Their Royal Highnesses arrive on the morning of the 26th November, and drive to Government House. In the afternoon the Residency will be visited and in the evening a visit will be paid to the Kaiserbagh, where the Prince and Princess will in all probability be entertained by the Talukdars of Oudh. On the afternoon of the following day a visit will be paid to Hussainabad and in the evening to Chuttermunzil, where entertainments are arranged.

The Prince and Princess leave Lucknow on the night of the 28th November.

20th SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Mirror.—The programme of the Prince and Princess of Wales's tour in India is now practically completed, and it is possible to give some idea of the magnificent pageants and ceremonies which have been prepared for Their Royal Highnesses.

On November 8, 1875, King Edward, then Prince of Wales, arrived at Bombay at the beginning of his Indian tour.

On November 9, 1905, just thirty years afterwards, Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will set foot for the first time in India, also landing at Bombay.

At Bombay Their Royal Highnesses will be received in full state by the Earl of Minto—the new Viceroy—who will go on board the Renown.

During the next six days Their Royal Highnesses will lay the foundation of a new dock and open a new street in the native town, while presents will be offered to the Princess.

The Princess is to be personally received by the native ladies, who are usually kept strictly shut away from the public eye.

Bombay will also mark its appreciation of the occasion by erecting a statue in honour of the Princess, and a museum, in which shall be installed various archaeological and artistic treasures now spread half over India, will be built at a cost of some £50,000.

November 16-27th will be spent in the Rajputana Native States. As was explained to the Daily Mirror by a high official of the Prince's entourage, it is greatly hoped that the visit to these States—and, in fact, the visit generally—will tend to allay the irritation among the natives caused by the unfortunate resignation of Lord Curzon. "The native," he said "looks on the King as a God who cannot do wrong, and considers the Viceroy very much in the same light—as a much bigger person, in fact, than the Commander-in-Chief. He believes that the Viceroy was worsted by that very Commander-in-Chief, so his confidence in the King's divinity tends to become weaker."

This, coupled with the fact that for thirty years no member of the Royal Family has been seen in India, and that many of the natives believe that the King has never actually come to the Throne, makes for trouble. In any case, it was high time for a visit of this kind.

From Lahore Their Royal Highnesses will go on for two days to Peshawar, on the North-West Frontier. In view of possible eventualities the Prince is very anxious to make himself acquainted with the Frontier, and his visit all through is intended to be a thoroughly business one.

From December 7th to 10th the Royal party will be at Delhi, where there will be a brilliant reception of native Chiefs.

Agra will be reached on December 16th. Thence they will go to Bhurtpore (two days), Gwalior (four days), Lucknow (two days), and then straightway to Calcutta (December 29th to January 6th), where they will lay the foundation stone of the new Victoria Memorial Hall, and a diamond necklace, worth nearly £2,000, will be presented to the Princess.

A day will be spent at Darjeeling, and then ship taken for Rangoon, in Burma. January 15th-21st will be spent in Burma, including a trip on the river and a visit to Mandalay. From there the party will sail for South India, landing at Madras on January 24th. After visiting Southern Indian towns Their Royal Highnesses will leave Karachi for England on March 19th.

Sussex Daily News.—The Indian tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales bids fair to rival in magnificence that accomplished by his illustrious father nearly three decades ago. A warm welcome awaits the Heir-Apparent to the Imperial throne and his much-travelled Consort from His Majesty's millions of loyal subjects in the Far East. The great cities of Hindustan are already outvying each other in their preparations to accord Their Royal Highnesses a reception of fitting splendour. The wealthy municipalities of Calcutta and Bombay are competing with each other in friendly rivalry in the organisation of fetes on a scale which, we are told, will resemble that of the historic receptions given to the Kings of the Hindu and Muhammadan periods. The programme is in every sense a glittering one; but it is by no means lacking in utilitarian items. Its fireworks, for example, are to be varied by the foundation of a public museum, which is to house the archaeological, artistic and industrial treasures of the Bombay Presidency; and of a medical college hospital in Lucknow, the scene of one of the most brilliant of Britain's military triumphs. The Princess is to be especially honoured. For the first time in the history of the country ladies of the zenana will emerge from their seclusion to welcome their guest. Her Royal Highness will be presented with rich souvenirs typical of the habits and customs of this many-memored portion of the Empire. Whatever may be the conflicting opinions of Britons at home as to the merits of the recent Curzon-Kitchener imbroglio, it seems to us certain that the organisers of the arrangements for the approaching Royal visit to India are doing their best to obliterate any ill-feeling which it might, not unnaturally, leave behind.

21ST SEPTEMBER 1905.

Madras Mail.—Sir,—I see a notice in the Madras Mail that those who wish to attend the entertainment to be given to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, should send in their applications for seats and their contributions towards expenses. But the Committee appointed to arrange for the entertainment do not state its nature. Why don't they publish a tentative programme, at least, so that the public may have an idea of what they propose to do? The Committee are acting for the public and appeal for funds to the public. They should, therefore, take the public into their confidence.

The question asked by a large number of Anglo-Indians and Hindu Christians is—"Are nautch girls to be there? If so, it will deprive us of the pleasure of contributing to and attending the entertainment." Is it fair to keep a large number of loyal citizens in suspense with regard to an important matter like this? I trust the Committee will give to the public an authoritative answer to this question without delay, and that their answer will be in the negative. Surely our Social Reformers have not left the City and the Presidency. In 1894 they convened a large meeting in the Anderson Hall, and did me the honour of inviting me to attend. That meeting was not only large but very enthusiastic, and among the resolutions passed was one to the effect that every one present promised not to attend entertainments, whether private or public, where dancing girls are introduced. I believe that many of those who attended that meeting are still in the City and in the Presidency, and that many more are filled with the same spirit. I look to them to unite with Anglo-Indian and Hindu Christians to do all they can to avert the disgrace of bringing the prostitutes of India before Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. No right-minded man or woman can derive pleasure from the degradation of the daughters of India. Her Royal Highness, it is well known, takes deep interest in the elevation of Indian women. One can well imagine, therefore, what a shock it would be to her should the shame of India be paraded before her with the mistaken idea that it would please her! I have strong faith in the people of Madras that they will not degrade their education and soil their good name by doing anything of the kind—MAURICE PHILLIPS.

22ND SEPTEMBER 1905.

Englishman.—The Prince and Princess of Wales will visit Darjeeling more for the sake of seeing the scenery and the magnificent snows, hence it has been decided that no address will be read to them on behalf of the town or district. The approaches to the town and the station itself will be decorated and bonfires will be lighted on the neighbouring hill tops at night. The officials and Municipal Commissioners will doubtless have to receive Their Royal Highnesses at the railway station and it would be well if the kind of dress to be worn be specified. The Government order is that the same dress is to be worn as on occasions when the Viceroy is present, but as top hats and frock coats are somehow disliked in Darjeeling and many persons will not wear them, some definite orders ought to be issued for the reception.

Indian Daily News.—At a Special Meeting of the Corporation of Calcutta, the Commissioners approved the following draft address:—

"May it please Your Royal Highnesses,—We, the Chairman and Commissioners of the Corporation of Calcutta, on behalf of the inhabitants of this city, approach Your Royal Highnesses with a most respectful, loyal and heartfelt welcome on this occasion of the visit of Your Royal Highnesses to the metropolis of this great dependency of the British Crown, and to express to Your Royal Highnesses, and through Your Royal Highnesses to our beloved King and Emperor, our allegiance and devotion to His Most Gracious Majesty's person and throne.

2. This is the second occasion upon which the Heir to the Throne has honoured India with his presence, and the universal rejoicing with which our present King-Emperor, then Prince of Wales, was greeted 30 years ago still lives in the hearts of the people of this city.

3. This visit of Your Royal Highnesses, while strengthening and cementing the bonds of loyalty and attachment which have ever bound the people of India to their Sovereign, affords us an additional pledge of His Majesty the King Emperor's abiding interest in the welfare and advancement of his Indian subjects.

4. Calcutta is proud to be reckoned the second city in the British Empire, and Your Royal Highnesses will find here abundant indication of the prosperity which everywhere accompanies British rule. The continued moral and material progress, not only of Calcutta but of all India, as evidenced by the numerous works of public utility, the growth and development of trade, commerce, and industries and the spread of education, is a lasting testimony to the fostering care for the Indian people which is the guiding principle of His Majesty's rule.

5. The present occasion is a source of special rejoicing as this is the first visit of a Princess of Wales to Calcutta, and we beg leave to offer for Her Royal Highness's gracious acceptance this jewel as a gift from the inhabitants of this city. We trust that it may serve to remind Her Royal Highness of the real love and affection of the people.

We beg to subscribe ourselves with the highest respect,—

Your Royal Highnesses'
Most dutiful and most obedient Servants.

Pioneer.—There are few people in India who can claim so intimate and extensive a knowledge of the Royal Family as Mr. H. Wutzler, of the Charleville Hotel, who has been entrusted with the catering for the Prince and Princess of Wales during the whole of their railway journeys in India, as well as for the shooting camp in Nepal and for the visits to several of the Native States. Mr. Wutzler's experience of the business goes back to 1875-76 when he accompanied the present King over the greater part of India. He performed the same offices for the late Prince Albert Victor during his Indian tour, and catered for the Duke and Duchess of Connaught in the tour Their Royal Highnesses made after the Delhi Durbar in the Central Provinces, Rajputana and Northern India. He has had the comfort and health of foreign potentates entrusted to him, notably the present Czar when as Czarevitch he did the round of India and the Archduke Franz Ferdinand of Austria; while of Viceroy Mr. Wutzler can count no less than seven as his clients. None of these illustrious personages has ever been known to express anything but satisfaction at the arrangements made for him, often under circumstances of great difficulty, by Mr. Wutzler.

The Telegraph Department is making preparations well in advance for the burden of work that will fall upon it in connection with the Royal tour. Additional wires are being put up to certain places lying off the main lines of communication, and a special staff of signallers will accompany the party on their journey. In this way the great demands that are certain to be made upon the resources of the Department, particularly in respect of long messages to English and Indian newspapers, will be met, while the public traffic will in no way be interfered with. The extra wires erected will, in many instances, remain after the tour has come to an end, as the rapid growth of telegraphic traffic all over India renders the provision of increased mileage of line a yearly necessity.

We hear from Calcutta that the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales will be made the occasion for a grand spectacular display on the Hooghly. Their Royal Highnesses, instead of being taken by the ordinary route across the bridge and down the Strand Road, will embark on a steamer and proceed down the river to Prinsep's Ghat, the shipping in harbour being "dressed" in their honour. The landing at the historic ghat will, in itself, be a ceremonial of the most imposing kind, as there is ample space for the assembly there of many thousands of spectators and for the formation of the cortege with its military escort. The roads to Government House will be lined with troops, and a route will be taken that will afford the citizens of Calcutta every opportunity of seeing the Royal visitors and according them a loyal welcome.

23RD SEPTEMBER 1905.

Indian Daily News.—The Prince of Wales having wired that he would prefer to witness the manœuvres of the Indian troops to a march past at Delhi, Lord Kitchener leaves for Rawalpindi next Tuesday, and may be absent for some days, organising the necessary arrangements for an assembly of troops in that vicinity on a large scale. It is almost settled that Ajmer will not be included in the programme owing to the drought in Rajputana; in fact, the programme of the Royal tour is said to be undergoing considerable alterations.

Madras Mail.—The Mysore Government have been pleased to sanction the holding of an Industrial and Agricultural Exhibition at Mysore on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales during January and February next. Apart from the educative value of such an exhibition and from the stimulus it affords to the improvement of industries and agriculture in the Province, it is intended to convey to Their Royal Highnesses, should they be pleased to visit it, an approximate idea of the industrial and agricultural resources of Mysore and the degree of civilisation to which the people have attained. Besides, it will afford to the people of the interior an opportunity of seeing Their Royal Highnesses.

To organise the exhibition and to elaborate the numerous details connected therewith, the Government have appointed an Exhibition Committee, with Mr. Madiah as President and Mr. A. Ananda Rao as whole-time Secretary.

The Deputy Commissioners of Districts, who will be ex-officio members of the Exhibition Committee, are requested to form District Committees containing a fair proportion of representative non-official members, and will, as Presidents thereof, correspond directly with the Exhibition Committee and render all reasonable assistance in collecting exhibits, etc. Similarly, Taluk Committees should be formed under the presidency of Amildars, so that the ryots and artisans of every taluk may be directly dealt with.

A sum of Rs. 20,000 is sanctioned towards the expenses of the Exhibition; and the Committee is requested to submit proposals regarding its apportionment among the main heads of expenditure, such as prizes, buildings, etc.

Pioneer.—It is understood that the Prince of Wales has intimated his desire to see something more of the troops in India than ceremonial marches past. Hence, manœuvres seem certain to take place somewhere.

Times of India.—Sir,—Your correspondent "A Loyal East Indian" seems to have fallen into the same error as some others. He thinks that because the Goanese community has taken steps to manifest their feelings on the occasion of the approaching Royal visit the East Indian community should do likewise. He forgets that the Goanese are foreign subjects, and as such it behoves them as the recipients of many favours at the hands of the British Government, to demonstrate their sentiments of gratitude in a special way. The members of the East Indian community, however, are all British subjects and whatever they do to show their loyalty should clearly be done in conjunction with the other communities composed of British subjects. It is not only unnecessary but improper that there should be any exclusive representation of the various communities. The East Indian community should and no doubt will loyally co-operate with the General Committee appointed at the Town Hall meeting in making the occasion one of great rejoicing.—
EQUALLY LOYAL EAST INDIAN.

24TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales has graciously consented to receive an Address from the Indian ladies of Bombay during her stay at the city.

Pioneer.—The cruiser Proserpine has received orders to proceed to Suez to act as an escort to the vessel bringing the Prince and Princess of Wales out to India.

According to the Home papers the Maharaja Scindia, who is well known as an enthusiastic motorist, will place two motor cars of the latest construction at the disposal of the Prince and Princess of Wales during their visit to India. One is a landaulet de luxe fitted with a sixteen to twenty-four horse-power engine. In announcing these facts, the World adds that Scindia is "a powerful semi-independent prince of the region of Malwa, in the North-West Provinces of India."

Government offices in Calcutta, with the exception of those of the Paper Currency and Comptroller-General, will be closed on the 2nd January in honour of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Lady's Pictorial.—Women in India, owing to European example, begin to be much more considered than was formerly the case. No lady member of the Royal family so near the Throne as the Princess of Wales has ever before visited India. It was always a great wish with Queen Victoria to visit her Empire in the East, but one which it was never possible for her to gratify. The Duchess of Connaught has been out, but not in an official capacity. During the approaching tour the Heir-Apparent will represent the King, and his wife the Queen. It will be an occasion of recognising the advance in position of the women of the East more than any which has yet occurred. The Princess of Wales' height, and her fair hair and skin and blue eyes will impress them very favourably. Her manner, too, is all that is dignified and pleasant. The Eastern woman is unable to understand the terms of equality on which Her Royal Highness stands with her husband in some matters, while in regard to others his chivalrous deference to her will be quite incomprehensible. They themselves are so differently situated that even their small advance in position has somewhat startled them.

Pioneer.—We understand that if manoeuvres are arranged in connection with the tour of the Prince of Wales, they will take place between Rawalpindi and Attock. The 1st, 2nd and 3rd Divisions will be employed in such operations as are ordered.

Rangoon Gazette.—The Prince of Wales has graciously consented to inaugurate the opening of the Victoria Memorial Park during his visit to Rangoon. Subject to His Royal Highness's approval the ceremony has been entered in the programme for the afternoon of Saturday, the 13th January.

Times of India.—Sir,—"An Equally Loyal East Indian" is not aware that besides the Goans, the Muhammadans, who are British subjects, while agreeing and participating in the general movement, held a meeting or two of their own, with a view of imparting, so to say, an object lesson in loyalty and gratitude to all Moslems.

In the year 1887, to celebrate the Jubilee of the reign of our late Queen-Empress, a solemn service was held in the Cathedral of our Lady of Hope at Bhuleswar. Further, to commemorate the auspicious event, I understand the Bombay East Indian Association was started the same day. There was then, as now, a general movement to celebrate the Royal Jubilee, yet the East Indian leaders then deemed it fit that something should be done by the community to which they belonged. In like manner, if a public meeting of the leading East Indians of Bombay, Salsette and Bassein were held, something practical could be suggested by which to commemorate the Royal Visit.

In the general movement, I think no more than 3 or 4 East Indians will take part on behalf of the community—a drop in the ocean; their joining the movement would not practically affect the community much. On the other hand a public meeting of the community would create a keener and wider interest; its outcome would be far-reaching and would produce definite results. It must not, however, be inferred that I am against members of my community joining the general movement. Though Dr. Viegas has a place on it, yet he has thought it wise and proper to evoke, in an especial manner, sentiments of gratitude in the members of his community, and I really fail to see why the leaders of the East Indian Community should not avail themselves of the forthcoming opportunity to evoke and promote feelings of loyalty and devotion throughout their community to a Throne from which so many blessings have flowed to them. Better late than never, so says—LOYALTY.

26TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Mail.—The muslins chosen by the Princess of Wales for her Indian visit are English productions in cream, and such cool colours as mauve, lavender, and grey, trimmed with lace, most of which is of Irish make.

Three characteristics are apparent in all the cool morning and afternoon robes. In the first place, Her Royal Highness does not approve of the elbow sleeve, but prefers that all her dresses intended for day-time wear should cover her arms to the wrists. Then the absurd modern custom of placing the pocket in so awkward a position as among the ruffles at the hem of the skirt does not find favour with the Princess of Wales, who orders her pockets to be placed in the old-fashioned manner at the left-hand side of the centre panel of her dress skirt, where they are accessible and safe. Her muslin frocks are therefore made in many instances with trimmed panels down the centre of the skirt, that permit the insertion of a pocket without its being seen. Thirdly, Her Royal Highness admires a semi-transparent yoke, made of stripes of delicate lace lightly decorated with raised medallions of the same, and several of her corsages for the day-time display this pretty conceit.

Daintily beautiful is a cream net gown for day-time reception wear, specially designed in order that some of Her Royal Highness's Limerick and Carrickmacross lace may figure in the scheme. There are deep flounces of Limerick at the foot of the skirt, overlaid with ruffles of cream baby ribbon set in scallops.

Ideal for a hot day is a gown made entirely of broderie Anglaise and Valenciennes lace, which prove together a most happy combination of beautiful fabrics. The Valenciennes is arranged in narrow stripes that radiate from the waist to the hem of the skirt, dividing panels of broderie Anglaise, and both laces mingle at the foot in a series of full flounces, enriched by appliqué roses of broderie Anglaise posed upon the more delicate Valenciennes lace. One of the Princess's favourite colours is that particular shade of mauve known as old English lavender, which is conspicuous in several of her muslin robes. One charming instance is a gown patterned all over with bunches of violets and their leaves, perfect imitations of Nature's handiwork. In the front and at the back of the skirt there are inset panels of cream-spotted net trimmed with straps of mimosa lace, which light and elegant edging figures on the bodice with quantities of real amethyst buttons rimmed with pearls.

These buttons were given to Her Royal Highness in Canada as the ornaments of a blotting-pad, and, by her command, formed into buttons after the blotter was worn out, as a memento of the kindness of its donors.

The dainty grace that Mrs. Durrant of 16, New Bond Street, has bestowed upon all these and the several other robes, which this morning will be delivered at Marlborough House, suggest just the effect an English muslin frock should produce upon its beholders. Muslin has been too often of late divorced from the primary simplicity that best suits it, but the Princess of Wales will in India show it as it should be seen, the epitome of exquisite daintiness expressed by the most lovely fabrics.

Times of India.—At the meeting of Bombay Municipal Corporation, held yesterday, the Committee appointed on June 22nd to draft an address of welcome to be presented by the Corporation to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their approaching visit to India, submitted the following draft address for the Corporation's approval:—

To His Royal Highness George Frederick Ernest Albert, Prince of Wales, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.O., V.O., P.O., etc., etc., and Her Royal Highness Victoria Mary, Princess of Wales, C.I., M.V.O., etc., etc.

May it Please Your Royal Highnesses, We the President and Members of the Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay, beg to tender to Your Royal Highnesses in the name and on behalf of all its inhabitants an earnest, enthusiastic and loyal welcome on your first landing on the shores of India.

A part of the dowry brought to an English Sovereign by his Portuguese bride, Bombay has been long associated with the Royal Family of England, and may justly lay claim to be a Royal City; and we therefore proudly consider that it is only in the fitness of things, that this city should lead the hearty greetings and rejoicings that eagerly await Your Royal Highnesses throughout the length and breadth of this country.

Under the aegis of the British Crown and its wise and generous policy of equality, sympathy and toleration, this City has marvellously thriven as an important centre of trade, commerce and industry. At the time when it came to King Charles II, it was an insignificant cluster of islets, as shown on one panel of the casket which will hold this address, with a sparse population of 10,000 souls, whose only trade was in dried fish and coconuts. Bombay now takes a high place among the great cities of the Empire and of the world, and the foundations of its growth and prosperity are so deeply laid that though we have of recent years passed through dire visitations of pestilence and disease, aggravated by agricultural distress throughout the Presidency, this growth and prosperity have not only not been permanently checked but have continued to increase. We gratefully see in this wonderful transformation the righteous beneficence of British rule, founded on justice and equality, making no distinctions of colour or creed, and extending equal opportunities to men of varied creeds and nations who inherit ancient civilizations from widely separate families of mankind.

It is thirty years almost to a day that we had the inestimable privilege of welcoming Your Royal Highnesses' august father, our most gracious Sovereign, the then Prince of Wales on his historic visit to this country, the happy memories whereof are yet cherished throughout the land among high and low, with pride and affection. We may be pardoned for fondly believing that it was during that visit that his Imperial Majesty first displayed those great qualities of head and heart which have to-day enabled him to play so noble a part in the peaceful destinies of mankind and to win the esteem and admiration of the whole world, and which then contributed powerfully to develop the loyalty of the people of India into personal attachment to the Royal Family of England, the foundations of which have been laid deep in the hearts of the people of this country by the sympathy and solicitude which the great and good Queen-Empress Victoria had constantly shown for their well-being and advancement.

We pray Your Royal Highnesses to convey to His Majesty our feelings of unalterable loyalty and personal attachment, and our gratitude for the proof he has once more given of his great care and regard for his Indian subjects in sending not only His Royal son and Heir to become personally acquainted with them, but to do them the high grace of sending him accompanied by His Royal Consort the Princess of Wales. Her Royal Highness's gracious and kindly presence amongst us cannot but deeply touch the heart of the country, of people of all classes and all grades alike, who will value beyond measure so striking a token of her womanly sympathy and solicitude for them. We joyously hail with heartfelt greetings the first Princess of Wales to set foot on the soil of India.

We now pray that benign Providence may watch over Your Royal Highnesses' progress throughout this country and bring it to a blessed and happy conclusion, so that it may prove fruitful of results, binding together closer and still more close the ties which unite the two countries, whom a wonderful dispensation of Providence has brought together from distant ends of the world, to the lasting glory of Your Royal House and of the great Empire over which it presides.

The Hon. Mr. Ibrahim Rahimtoola proposed that the draft address be approved and adopted and that the Municipal Secretary be requested to intimate to Government in the Political Department and to the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor the wish of the Corporation to present an address to Their Royal Highnesses on their arrival at Bombay. He said the resolution did not call for any remarks, and he trusted the Corporation would adopt it unanimously.

Mr. James McDonald seconded the resolution, which was unanimously adopted.

27TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Chronicle.—Preparations on the most lavish scale are being made in all the principal cities of India to be visited by the Prince and Princess of Wales, during their forthcoming tour.

Bombay, the port where the Royal party will disembark, is to be entirely lighted with electricity. The palatial hotel, the Taj Mahal, on the Apollo Bander, is being redecorated for members of the Royal suite, who are to be guests of the Bombay Government during their sojourn in that city. Government House, Malabar Hill, is to have the honour of entertaining Their Royal Highnesses. The Bombay Horse have been selected to furnish the principal guards and to act as escort.

Delhi will present a scene of grandeur surpassing anything of the kind yet seen there. The fears entertained as to the failure of the local water-supply have been allayed. Water has been furnished from the works near the railway bridge and from Oklen.

Troops for the manoeuvres will encamp at Oklen and in its vicinity. This delightful place is seven miles distant from Delhi, and is situated on the banks of the Jumna.

Sketch.—There is something amusing in the thought that so many loyal globe-trotters are now turning their attention to India. It is said that many berths on the more popular liners are already engaged, and that the Prince and Princess of Wales will hardly be able to see the natives through the crowd of British sightseers who hope to follow the Royal progress from place to place. Be that as it may, India means to offer a splendid welcome to the Heir-Apparent and his Consort and Their Royal Highnesses' various tastes will be carefully catered for. Thus a series of tiger hunts and pig-sticking expeditions will figure in that portion of the programme more especially devoted to the Prince, and the Princess will be entertained at all the principal centres of artistic and textile industries, for these, as all the world knows, are peculiarly interesting to the Royal lady who has done so much to revive our own silk trade.

Times of India.—The Shahi, or Imperial annual Jirga, has concluded its local session, and the Agent of the Governor-General holds the usual durbars in connection therewith on the 30th instant, at which special announcements, primarily in connection with the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to these territories next March, are expected to be made.

Madras Mail.—Although it is still in a comparatively distant future, the preparations for the Royal visit are already actively in train in Mysore. The Khedda Camp will be at Karepur, between milestones 129 and 130 on the Mysore-Mannantoddy road, and 5½ miles on the Mysore side of the kheddass themselves. The camp will be on high ground, with a fine view over hill and jungle, will be well outside the jungle itself, and with a first-class water-supply available from the river Kabani, which flows only a few hundred yards away, it ought to be absolutely healthy. The work on the site of the camp will be carried out by the Public Works Department, under Captain Traill's supervision, whilst Colonel Jones will be in charge of all camp arrangements. Mr. D. M. Narasinga Rao is on special duty with the Dewan of Mysore in connection with the Prince of Wales's visit to Mysore, and, taken altogether, there can be little doubt that the occasion will be so celebrated as to mark an epoch in the history of Mysore.

Western Mail.—We are now within a few days of the date fixed for the departure of His Majesty's ship Renown from Portsmouth to Genoa, where she will take up the Prince and Princess of Wales for their Indian tour. The ship has been completely transformed from a grim battleship to a comfortable yacht. The Princess takes a suite of "rooms" on starboard side of the vessel, whilst the Prince's suite is on the main deck. The decorations are in white and gold, and, although it was impossible to obliterate the warlike character of the fittings, the alterations are adjudged to be very successful. It is rather peculiar that the Prince of Wales, who is accredited with a liking to spend his holidays here within the United Kingdom best of all, stands as the greatest traveller amongst Royalties. King Leopold is proud of the miles that he has covered, but the Prince of Wales beats him by a long distance. The cruise of the Bacchante made up nearly 55,000 miles, and to that must be added the voyage in the Ophir and now there is to be the Indian tour. One result of the visit is that India has become a fashionable holiday resort. Most of the shipping agencies say that the stream of tourists to the East is greater than ever, and the bookings show that the business is likely to last until December. One company has been obliged to put extra boats on the service.

20TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Sir Ugyen Wang Chuk, Tongsa Penlop, Bhutan, has accepted an invitation of the Government of India to be present in Calcutta during the Royal visit.

Evening News.—H.M.S. Renown, in which the Prince and Princess of Wales travel to India, and which Their Royal Highnesses will inspect on Saturday, looks very unlike a British warship in her new Indian outfit.

No guns peep from her sides. They have been removed in order to provide sleeping accommodation for officers, and instead of the regulation French grey, the ship's hull is painted a brilliant white, relieved by a broad band of green, just under the gunwale, and her masts and upper works are of a yellow hue.

Undeniably she looks very smart, and the colours she is clothed in, though unfamiliar in home waters, are those commonly adopted for the East Indies station. The whole after-part of the ship is given up to the Prince and Princess. A sound-proof wall has now been built on one side of the ward-room, so that the officers may enjoy themselves without annoying the Princess.

Her Royal Highness will have the use of the captain's cabin on the upper deck, and to this a small suite has been added by the simple process of roofing in a part of the deck.

From the Princess's apartments a covered way of canvas leads to the companion ladder that gives access to the state rooms below.

In Her Royal Highness's rooms everything is plain and tasteful, and there is notable lack of ornament. The cabin walls are of ivory white, and the adornment will for the most part consist of the photographs of her children and friends, treasured mementoes which the Princess always carries with her.

The Prince's cabin on the half-deck is also very plainly and simply furnished. In fitting out the dining and reception-rooms very little had to be done in the way of furnishing, as the handsomely-carved mahogany furniture originally placed in these apartments by Sir John Fisher were deemed good enough for the Royal use.

Cabins for the Royal suite have been provided by turning out the ship's officers, who have sought other quarters. Probably the Royal servants are the most dissatisfied with their quarters, for they will have to sleep in what looks like a double row of varnished orange-boxes, placed end to end in the centre of the after-flats, a sort of dungeon well below the water-line.

Pioneer.—One of the functions which will form part of the programme on the occasion of the Royal visit to Lucknow will be the unveiling by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales of the statue of Queen Victoria. The site chosen for the statue is an open space of ground near Neill Gate.

30TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Daily Express, London.—A magnificent train for the use of the Prince and Princess of Wales while travelling in India has been constructed at the Lilloah works of the East Indian Railway Company.

It represents the highest type of the railway carriage builders' art, and exceeds anything that has yet been seen on the Indian railways.

The most interesting carriages are, of course, the two Royal saloon carriages, which are identical in arrangement. Each contains a day and night apartment, a bathroom, a compartment for a personal servant, and a luggage room. The internal decoration consists of highly polished woods, the panels being of figured Spanish mahogany, bird's-eye maple, sycamore, rosewood, and teak. No paint has been used, and the natural colours of the different woods have been carefully preserved. The floors are carpeted in artistic green Axminster.

The furniture of the Prince's day apartment is upholstered in dark green morocco, the Royal arms being emblazoned on the chair backs, and in that of the Princess's pale grey figured satin has been used.

The night apartments in both saloons are equipped with furniture of polished woods in keeping with the panels. The bedsteads are of Cuban mahogany, inlaid with bird's-eye maple and rosewood moulding, the Royal arms appearing on diamond shaped panels at the head and foot.

It is interesting to note that the workmen employed in the building of the train included natives of Bengal, Bombay, Madras, Burma, and the Punjab, and Chinamen, as well as some Europeans, says Engineering.

The train was built to the order of Lord Curzon, who took great interest in its construction, and expressed his satisfaction at the completion of so large and difficult a piece of work in India.

Indian Daily News.—Their Royal Highnesses are to extend their patronage, writes "Max" in Capital, to the Fancy Fair to be held in the Zoological Gardens on behalf of the Calcutta charities on the 1st and 2nd days of the New Year. This annual fair is looked upon as being a gala time for middle-class Calcutta, and has always been highly appreciated as such. About six thousand visitors attend on ordinary occasions. This number might easily be doubled next New Year's Day, when very likely the Prince and Princess will pay a visit to the Fair.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales have graciously intimated, through Sir Walter Lawrence, that it will give them great pleasure to become patrons of "The Capital Christmas Toy Fund" for the coming season, says "Max" in Capital. The fund will be opened immediately after the Pooja holidays, when the usual shower (increasing yearly) of ten rupee notes will have a glad welcome. This fund was instituted for the purpose of supplying Christmas toys to little ones in India whose environment of poverty shut them out from receiving gifts at Christmas.

Lady's Pictorial.—The Princess of Wales has a very interesting time before her. Never before has she experienced so fully as she will experience in India the greatness of her position. Her Royal Highness will be the first lady near the Throne to visit the great Eastern Empire, where adulation and enthusiasm for her will know no bounds. Mr. David Sassoon, of Bombay, has given several thousands of pounds for the erection of a statue of Her Royal Highness in that city.

Native ladies of great rank who have never before left the shelter of the zenana will come out personally to welcome the great white Princess. Indian ladies of Bombay will give her a massive silver album containing a selection of watercolour sketches of fourteen different types of Indian women. The Municipality of Calcutta wish to present a magnificent diamond necklace. At Delhi there will be an elaborate programme for three days, only less magnificent than the Coronation Durbar. The Prince and Princess have before them a time of unexampled splendour and a feast of Oriental magnificence. Here in the West we fail to realise the beauty of pageants which fit with the surroundings, the superb weather, and the marvellous atmosphere. After great Eastern processions and assemblages our own seem tawdry and wanting in the dignity of true harmony.

Ever since the Indian tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales was decided upon, the voyage has been somewhat of a nightmare to the latter, who is a very bad sailor. In order to save her the certain sufferings that accrue from the passage through the Bay of Biscay and to shorten the sea journey as much as possible, it has been arranged that the Princess of Wales shall travel overland to Brindisi, when she will join the Prince of Wales. The preparations for the Indian tour are now proceeding with great rapidity, and much time has to be devoted to the dressmakers and milliners who are preparing a huge outfit for the Princess of Wales, as she will require clothes for every kind of climate and occasion while she is away.

It was thought for a time that circumstances were proving unpropitious, and that the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales in India might be abandoned, at all events so far as Rajputana was concerned. But now, happily, everything promises well and there is every reason to believe that Their Royal Highnesses' visit to the East will be as notable and as agreeable as their great colonial tour. On page 465 we give some illustrations of the manner in which the splendid battleship, the Renown, has been re-arranged and furnished in order to ensure the greatest possible amount of comfort for the Royal tourists. The conversion of a battleship into a kind of floating palace has not been carried out without a good deal of thoughtful planning, and the cost has not been inconsiderable. But as a matter of policy it is wise that the son of the Emperor should arrive in the East in Imperial fashion. Nothing that could be done to make the voyage as free from discomfort and as pleasant as possible for the Prince and Princess has been left undone, and the drawing-room and dining-room are as luxurious as if the Royal travellers were quartered at a first-rate hotel. The bedrooms, though simple, have been treated in an extremely artistic manner by Warings, and the upholstery throughout the Royal apartments is a flowered tissue which produces a very warm and agreeable effect.

Madras Mail.—We learn that the amended programme of the tour of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales is now settled. The only station which it has been found necessary to drop out of the arrangements is that of Ajmer, where Their Royal Highnesses' proposed visit has had to be abandoned on account of the scarcity. The other proposed visits in Rajputana will be carried out as originally arranged. To meet the altered arrangements in connection with the Army Manœuvres Their Royal Highnesses will spend three days near Rawalpindi after leaving Peshawar. They will then do three days' sight-seeing at Delhi; reaching Agra on the date originally proposed and thereafter carrying out the tour as already announced. The proceedings at Agra will be especially impressive, the ceremonies including a great elephant procession and the unveiling of a statue of the late Queen Victoria.

Their Royal Highnesses will arrive in Bombay on the afternoon of the 9th November, remaining in Bombay up to the 17th November.

Leaving Bombay on the 17th November, Their Royal Highnesses will arrive at Udaipur on the 18th, remaining there till the 20th November.

From the 21st to the 24th November the party will be at Jaipur, from whence they go to Bikanir, arriving there on the 25th idem.

Leaving Bikanir on the 27th November, Their Royal Highnesses reach Lahore the next day and remain there till the 1st December.

The next place to be visited will be Peshawar, which is reached on the 2nd December. Leaving this on the 4th idem the party arrives at Jammu the next day and stay there a day.

On the 7th December Their Royal Highnesses reach Rawalpindi and remain there until the 12th idem, then going on to Delhi, and remaining there till the 15th.

Agra is reached the next day (16th), and a halt is made there until the 19th December.

Leaving Agra, the party arrives at Bhurtpur on the 20th idem. Only a brief stay is made here, for the party is due at Gwalior next day (21st). Here they stay until the 25th December, when a move is made to Lucknow, which is reached on the 26th.

Two days will be spent at Lucknow, and on the 28th December the Prince and Princess leave for Calcutta, which will be reached on the 29th idem.

A halt is made in Calcutta to the 6th January next year, on which day the party leave for Darjeeling, where they arrive next day. The 8th January is to be spent at Darjeeling and Their Royal Highnesses return to Calcutta on the 9th idem, spending the next two days on board the Renown on the journey to Rangoon.

Rangoon is reached on the 13th January, and here a halt is to be made to the 15th, when the party leaves for Mandalay, arriving there on the 16th. The Prince and Princess remain there for two days and spend the 19th and 20th January on the river on the return journey to Rangoon, which is reached on the 21st.

Their Royal Highnesses then re-embark on the Renown for the journey to Madras, which is to be reached on Wednesday, the 24th January.

Four days will be spent here, and the party leave Madras on the 28th January for Bangalore and Mysore, where a halt is to be made from the 29th January to the 7th February.

Hyderabad is the next place to be visited and here Their Royal Highnesses are to stay from the 6th to the 15th February.

A visit is then to be paid to Ellora (16th February), after which Their Royal Highnesses leave for Benares, where the 18th and 19th February will be spent.

From Benares the party leave for Nepal, where they remain from the 28th February to 2nd March. After leaving Nepal Their Royal Highnesses will probably visit Simla and some other places.

Quetta is the next place to be visited, where four days will be spent (March 12th to the 16th).

Their Royal Highnesses will next go to Karachi, where they will arrive on the 17th March, leaving that port for England on the 16th idem.

The announcement is made to-day that Lord Minto has postponed his departure for a fortnight and that His Lordship will arrive in Bombay on the 17th November instead of the 3rd November. This, of course, will necessitate the reception of Their Royal Highnesses in Bombay by Lord Curzon, whose departure from India will, of course, also be postponed for a fortnight. The reasons for this change of plans are not given; but so far as the change gives Lord Curzon the opportunity of welcoming Their Royal Highnesses to the shores of India it is not to be regretted. His Excellency has done so much in initiating, facilitating and making preparations for the Royal visit, that it is appropriate enough that he should be there to welcome Their Royal Highnesses as the representative of His Majesty the King-Emperor.

Pall Mall Gazette.—The preparations for the Prince and Princess of Wales's tour in India are now well advanced, and H.M.S. Renown, looking very smart with her new coat of white paint, is attracting numerous visitors to the dockyard where she lies awaiting the visit of inspection which is to be paid her by the Princess to-day.

She is now practically ready for the start on Monday week, when several members of the Royal suite will go aboard so as to be settled into their quarters, and ready to receive the Royal guests, who are travelling overland across France, and join the ship at Genoa. For the most part the sightseers have to content themselves with an outside view of the great battleship, for access to the Royal apartments is strictly guarded, and only a favoured few have been allowed to see over that part which has been set aside for the exclusive use of the Prince and Princess.

Enjoying this privilege, one could not help being struck with the comparatively few alterations, and the simplicity and comfort of the preparations made for the Royalities. Although the Prince of Wales is a Vice-Admiral, and as such is superior to any officer on board the Renown, His Royal Highness will not fly his own pennant during the voyage out, but will occupy the position of a Royal guest. With the exception of the special suite of rooms for the use of the Princess, which have been made on the upper deck, and consist of a charming little boudoir, a couple of sleeping cabins, bath-rooms, and maid's cabin, comparatively little has been altered on board since Sir John Fisher used the Renown as his flagship on the North American and West Indies station. The same handsomely carved furniture which he put in remains in the dining saloon, which is capable of seating some sixty or more guests at a long table which runs the entire length. Leading out of this is the ladies' retiring saloon or drawing-room, comfortably supplied with easy chairs upholstered in floral pattern tissue, and supplied with a goodly number of substantial-looking card and writing tables. Next at hand, on the main deck, are the sleeping cabins and private room of the Prince, furnished likewise in mahogany upholstered in rose-patterned cretonne, furnished throughout with silver fittings.

The Princess's apartments, however, are the special feature. These open on to the promenade deck, already covered with linoleum and protected by a huge awning. The scheme of decoration throughout is delightfully dainty and simple; white is the principal colour used, all the paint-work and furniture being of white enamel relieved by light blue carpets and hangings, the boudoir being upholstered in white chintz covered with an all-over design of pink rosebuds surrounded by a wreath-lattice of pale blue leaves. The fittings throughout are of silver plate, as are also the swing cots, which are a special feature and purposely designed and constructed so as to minimise as much as possible the motion of the ship in rough seas.

Throughout, these apartments, though small, give an impression of airiness and coolness which will undoubtedly be greatly appreciated by the Royal travellers during that portion of the voyage when the nights as well as the days will be intensely hot. The Royal suite, which in all, counting both ladies and gentlemen, and their several personal attendants, number a hundred odd, will occupy the cabins usually used by the ship's officers, and accommodation for the latter has been provided by the removal of the 6-inch guns to make room for extra berths; while a special smoke-room has been made for the use of the gentlemen of the suite. Books in plenty are being provided for the party, a special travelling library being put on board which will include all the latest and best-known books upon India and its people, a great many of which have been personally selected by the Princess of Wales, who is as anxious as the Prince to be thoroughly informed, and to extend her already extensive knowledge of the country and the people she is about to visit. Amongst the games and recreations provided for the Royal guests and their suite is a set of ship's croquet, which differs from the ordinary game, inasmuch as chalked rings take the place of the familiar hoops, and wooden platters the size of small plates are used instead of balls. So popular is this game on board ship that it has quite ousted the once famous quoits and bull board, and has proved far and away the most popular amusement on many yachts during the last season.

Arrangements have also been made on the Renown for the publishing of a newspaper, intelligence for which will be communicated by the wireless apparatus, with which the ship is fitted. This record will also include articles on incidents and news of the great tour which the Prince and Princess will undertake upon their arrival in India, which promises to be of an appalling extent, and to embrace every kind of function and entertainment that hospitality can devise, attended with all the ceremony so indispensable in India. Already a splendid train de luxe for the use of the Prince and Princess has been specially constructed in the carriage works of the East Indian Railway at Lilloah, near Calcutta, which is counted the most elaborate rolling stock ever built in India.

Beside the usual brake vans and cars for the staff, it contains two handsome Royal saloons and an elaborate dining-car and kitchen, the whole being lit by electricity and fitted with fans and ventilators to keep it cool. The train is painted cream colour, with mouldings in maroon, picked out with gold and ornamented with the Royal arms. This will carry the Royal visitors over hundreds of miles of their tour, which will include some excellent sport in the Central Plain districts. In anticipation of this, His Royal Highness is taking a large shooting paraphernalia with him, and has consulted several experts as to the selection of guns he will require. A taxidermist will also be attached to the Royal staff for the purpose of preparing skins and trophies of the chase.

In addition to the immense amount of personal luggage taken by the Prince and Princess, whose wardrobes will include something like a hundred changes of costume—suitable for yachting, travelling, sport, grand State functions, garden parties, driving tours, and formal receptions—Their Royal Highnesses are taking with them a great quantity of specially designed jewellery made up in pins, brooches, and other small trinkets, representing the Prince of Wales's feathers, the Tudor Rose, and other Royal designs. These are for presentation, as are also great quantities of signed photographs, for which they have lately been busy giving sittings to many Royal photographers.

Under the auspices of the Anjumani Hafiz-ul-Islam of Bombay, a public meeting of the residents of Second Nagpada, Kamatipura and Ripon Road, was held yesterday evening in the premises of the Anjuman at Huzra street, under the presidency of Khan Sahib Shaikh Ibrahim Hafiz, J.P., when the following resolution moved by Mr. A. R. Bostani and seconded by Munshi Doolekhan, was adopted "That this meeting expresses its earnest desire and willingness to cordially co-operate with the public meeting of the citizens of Bombay convened by the Sheriff in the Town Hall on the 14th August last to welcome Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay." The meeting was very largely attended.

At the Framjee Cowasjee Institute, Bombay, to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon at four o'clock the Portuguese subjects in Bombay, known as the Portuguese Community, will assemble in public meeting in order to take steps to commemorate the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.

1ST OCTOBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The East has lately been borrowing at least one new idea from the West. An industrial and agricultural exhibition is to be held at Mysore in connection with the forthcoming visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. It is hoped by this means to convey to Their Royal Highnesses an approximate idea of the resources of the State and of the degree of civilization to which the people have attained. A sum of Rs. 20,000 has been provided for the preliminary expenses of the exhibition.

Special arrangements are being made in Bombay to enable the children of the city to join in the festivities in honour of the visit of the Prince and Princess and the Committee having charge of this branch of the preparations met at the Municipal Office, Bombay, on the 22nd, finally to settle the main lines of their programme. The Committee have found it impossible to include any other children than those attending schools, in their arrangements, and on this basis of calculation there will be between 18,000 and 20,000 children to provide for. The principal item in their entertainment will be a view of the Royal procession on the day the Prince and Princess land, and the Committee have decided to erect four enormous stands for their accommodation, there will be a presentation of sweetmeats to each child. Medals are also to be distributed and the Committee have accepted an attractive design which will be minted in potosi silver, the medal having on one side excellent portraits of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and on the other a device of three feathers and the date of the Royal visit. The Committee of the Coronation Festivities Fund, which has a balance in hand of Rs. 8,758, has resolved to hand over the amount to the committee of the Royal Visit Fund.

Pioneer.—The dates of the manoeuvres at Rawalpindi will probably be the 6th to 8th December ending with a grand march past on Khanna Plain on the 9th. The Prince and Princess of Wales will then proceed to Delhi, staying there from the 11th to the 15th. This will leave the other dates of the tour unchanged.

The Prince of Wales will unveil the statue of Queen Victoria during his visit to Agra.

Arunodaya.—The address proposed to be presented to the Prince of Wales on his arrival in India is devoid of any value, being replete with fulsome praises of British rule. Not a word is said in the address about the visitations of famine and plague in India and about the gradual impoverishment of the people. On the contrary the address dwells on the continued prosperity enjoyed by Bombay, and for the matter of that the whole of the British Indian Empire, under the egis of the benign British rule. In our opinion our duty to the Prince does not consist in loading the address with false praises of the British Government. His Royal Highness has come here not in order to receive garlands and bouquets from the people, but to be informed of their true condition, and looking at the matter from this point of view we are constrained to say that the presentation of such an address is a mean attempt to deceive our sovereign.

2ND OCTOBER 1905.

Birmingham Daily Post and Journal.—The Princess of Wales has resolved to reduce her immediate suite for the Indian tour to a minimum. Her constant companion when visiting and receiving native ladies will be Lady Eva Dugdale, whose cabin on the Renown is within easy reach of the Princess's quarters, and upon whom will devolve the duty of conducting such correspondence as will not fall to the share of Mr. Frank Dugdale as equerry-in-attendance. Very careful arrangements are being made for the packing in handy boxes of the souvenirs and gifts which Her Royal Highness is taking with her so as to permit of their ready access on all occasions; and much clerical work will be done at Marlborough House in the course of the ensuing week in the preparation of schedules and detailed lists of the contents of packages which are to be despatched to Portsmouth for shipment on the touring cruiser. Lady Chesterfield has been appointed an extra lady-in-waiting to enable her to join her husband who is the chamberlain to the Princess, and there will accordingly be no lady in the party who is not accompanied by her husband, and Her Royal Highness will not be attended by a maid of honour.

The Prince of Wales's amended programme has now been settled, the only changes being the omission of the visit to Ajmer, in consequence of the scarcity in that region, and the interpolation of three days which will be spent in seeing the manoeuvres near Rawalpindi, together with a reduction in the time of the Delhi visit.

Agra, where an imposing ceremony of the unveiling of the Queen's statue, and an elephant procession, will occur, is to be reached on the original date.

Daily Mirror.—Yesterday afternoon the Princess of Wales travelled to Portsmouth, and had a look over the battleship Renown. The object of Her Royal Highness's journey was to inspect the apartments fitted up in the vessel for the Prince and Princess on the voyage to India, but more particularly those allocated to herself.

When Her Royal Highness alighted from the train in Portsmouth Dockyard she was received by a little knot of admirals. A few minutes were spent looking at the Renown, which lay alongside the south railway jetty, looking very smart in its speckless dress of snowy white, with just a relieving touch of green under the gunwale.

Then Commodore Tyrwhitt, who will command the Renown during the voyage, conducted the Princess up the steep, crimson-covered gangway that gave access to the ship. The quarter-deck had been canvassed in the awnings being lined with red and white cloth. A canvas shelter was likewise rigged up on the stern walk, where also dark green muslin had been used for decorative purposes.

These were the only visible signs that anything out of the common was happening aboard the ship. A fairly successful effort has been made to turn the battleship into a yacht. With the exception of the 10-inch guns in the barbettes and the light guns on the boat deck, all her armament has been removed to give cabin space for officers.

A partition across the after part divides the Royal apartments in the stern from the remainder of the ship. The captain's cabin and part of the upper deck have been turned into a spacious suite of apartments for the Princess, who will have the best accommodation aboard.

Doubtless the situation of Her Royal Highness's apartments was determined by the fact that the Princess is not a good sailor. But for her desire to shorten it and escape the Bay of Biscay, the Royal travellers would have embarked at Portsmouth instead of Genoa.

However, the Princess is well pleased with the arrangements made for her accommodation. Her suite of apartments includes a sleeping cabin bathroom, and boudoir, with a room for a maid, and a very commodious wardrobe.

In the sleeping cabin is a swing cot, so constructed that the Princess will not feel the roll of the ship. A dainty simplicity is the dominant note throughout the Princess's rooms.

White panelling, picked out with gold, is the chief decorative feature. Some pretty chintzes are also employed, and the rooms have a very pleasing effect upon the eye.

After completing an inspection of the upper deck, the Princess was escorted to the after part of the ship below. Here she was shown first the cabin provided for Lady Eva Dugdale, which is nearest the accommodation ladder that leads to the Princess's own suite, and other cabins allocated to members of her suite. All are spacious, and simply furnished. Next Her Royal Highness looked over the Prince's suite of rooms. These are on the port side of the half-deck, and consist of sleeping cabin, bath and dressing rooms. Part of the wardrobe has been cut away to make the Prince's cabin, and sound-proof walls have been fitted to the wardrobe. Lastly the Princess entered the admiral's apartment which will be used as the Royal dining and reception rooms.

The admiral's fore cabin will be the dining-room and the after cabin the reception-room. The latter will also be used as a drawing-room, and is a very pleasant apartment, from which doors open upon the stern walk. Most of the furniture in these rooms has been in the Renown ever since Sir John Fisher first commissioned her as his flagship on the North America and West Indies Station. It is of mahogany, and beautifully carved.

The corridors outside have been decorated with pictures of warships, and the whole of the Royal apartments give an air of cosiness and comfort. Electric fans are installed in all cabins, and most of the fittings are silver-plated.

The Renown leaves harbour next Saturday, and a few days later will start for Genoa in company with the cruiser Terrible, which is to carry several members of the Royal suite.

The Princess of Wales thoroughly enjoys little expeditions like that she made to Portsmouth on Saturday to inspect the arrangements on the battleship Renown in preparation for the forthcoming visit to India. They afford her that spice of what one may term "domestic" interest which brings so welcome a relaxation from the exacting routine of Court life. Nothing delights Her Royal Highness more when as in this case some comparatively small additional preparation may make all the difference between a long voyage being comfortable or the reverse, than to discover this as the result of her own personal scrutiny. She never appears to feel fatigue on such occasions, though she allows no detail to escape her notice, and is not content until she has closely inspected and discussed the arrangements in every apartment.

It is hardly likely, however, that the Princess has found it necessary to suggest any radical alteration in the arrangements on the Renown. The fact that they have been in the hands of Captain the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt is sufficient guarantee that the preparations have been carried out with all possible care and foresight. Few men have a keener appreciation of the requirements of Royalty. He has long been persona grata at Court and is a brother-in-law of Lord Knollys to whom his sister, the Hon'ble Ardy Mary, was married in 1887. When he first joined the Navy as a boy of thirteen, thirty-six years ago, he quickly attracted the attention of his superiors in the service and they prophesied that he would "do" things. This forecast was fully justified, when in 1894 young Tyrwhitt took part in the Nile Expedition for the relief of General Gordon at Khartoum, and so distinguished himself that he received a medal and clasp and the Khedival Star. He gained his captaincy in 1889, and in 1902 was chosen for the responsible position of private secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Dundee Courier.—To-day Captain the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt hoists his pennant on board the Renown, the battleship which has been converted into a magnificent yacht painted gleaming white from stem to stern, and beautifully fitted throughout, to convey the Prince and Princess of Wales to India. Their Royal Highnesses are to join the Renown in the course of a few days, and if their voyage to the Orient is followed with less interest than that to the more distant Colonies four years ago it will only be because the passage is one which the public are now accustomed to look upon as an almost everyday affair. Their journeys and ceremonials in the Indian provinces will be followed with close attention by everyone in this country as well as the King-Emperor and Queen-Empress whom they are to represent. The Royal visit is being looked forward to with the utmost interest by our fellow-subjects in India, and everything is being done to give their distinguished guests a right Royal welcome. The reception will only be an earnest of what they will meet with throughout their several months' tour, which as a whole bids fair, judging from the preparations being made for it to be productive of as happy results as the memorable visit of King Edward in 1875, when as Prince of Wales he received the homage of the Indian people on behalf of his Royal mother.

Lord Curzon is, after all, to do the honours of the visit. It has been arranged that he will not sail until the 18th of next month, which will allow him to welcome the Prince and Princess, his successor not arriving until a few days before he leaves Bombay. It is most fitting that it should be Lord Curzon, in spite of his impending abdication of his duties, who should have the honour of receiving Their Royal Highnesses. The welcome will be all the more truly representative since it is given by one who has been so closely identified with India during the last seven years, and has borne the heat and burden of the day. And India is pre-eminently the country which requires a man's most strenuous efforts. At the farewell banquet at the United Service Club at Simla on Friday evening Lord Curzon could not help confessing that India is in some respects a hard taskmaster, and that he has sometimes felt discouraged in his work. But he was also able to point to the successful result of his work in the prosperity of the Empire and the cordial relations between the Local and Imperial Governments. It is the fruits of his rule that the Prince and Princess of Wales will see, and his welcome of them will form a fitting rounding off of a Governor-Generalship which has, taken all in all, been of great benefit to India.

While the Royal visit was being arranged the suggestion was made that the Prince of Wales, if not also the Princess, should extend his tour so as to include a visit to Japan. The war, however, was then at its height, and Diplomatic considerations precluded the idea being entertained. Now that peace has happily come to the belligerents the suggestion is renewed, and now nothing stands in the way of its being carried out. The conclusion of the new treaty between Great Britain and Japan, making as it does for the safety of the country which the Royal couple are visiting, would make the occasion all the more auspicious, and there can be no doubt that the Prince would receive a warm welcome from our allies. There is much in the idea that this extension should be made and that His Royal Highness should afterwards, again following in his father's footsteps, come home by way of the United States.

Englishman.—There have been strong rumours in Simla for the last few days that Lord Curzon would meet the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay on their arrival, and our correspondent telegraphs that the postponement of Lord Minto's departure from England now makes this fact a certainty. It is now definitely settled that the Prince of Wales will visit Rajputana, though the original Ajmer programme will necessarily be modified.

Pall Mall Gazette.—There will be great satisfaction at the arrangement by which Lord Curzon is to remain in India long enough to let him receive the Prince and Princess of Wales on their landing at Bombay. It will be felt that a Viceroy of so many years' standing can more fitly represent India on such an occasion and offer its welcome than one who is himself but a new arrival.

Pioneer.—The programme of tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales in the United Provinces will be as follows: Their Royal Highnesses will arrive at Agra on the 16th December, receive the Municipal address and attend a garden party at Secundra in the afternoon; on the 17th a visit will be paid to Itmad-ud-Dowlah's tomb, and on the 18th the Prince will unveil Queen Victoria's statue. There will be a reception that evening. On the 19th Their Royal Highnesses will visit Fatehpur Sikri travelling by motor, and will leave for Gwalior on the 20th. The Royal party, after staying at Gwalior for Christmas, will reach Lucknow on the 26th, where the Municipal address will be presented on arrival. The Mutiny veterans will be presented at the Residency in the afternoon and there will be a Talukdars entertainment with illuminations at the Kaiser Bagh in the evening. On the 27th the Prince will receive visits from the Talukdars. There will be a garden party at the Husainabagh in the afternoon and State Dinner, followed by a levée, at the Chutter Munzil at night. On the 28th the Prince will drive round the Cantonments with the General Officer Commanding the Lucknow Divisions, and the party will leave the same afternoon for Calcutta.

By desire of His Majesty the King-Emperor His Excellency the Viceroy will remain in India to receive His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales at Bombay on the 9th November. Lord Minto will arrive at Bombay on the 17th November. The Viceroy will make over charge to him there on the 18th November, and will sail on the same day in the Royal Marine steamer Dufferin.

Times of India.—The personal intervention of His Majesty the King-Emperor, who has signified that it is his special desire that the Viceroy should remain in India to welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival, will give widespread pleasure and satisfaction. The modification that it is His Majesty's own personal wish is emphatic and unmitigable, for it was simultaneously announced in Simla and in London, and was cabled out by Reuter yesterday. It may well be regarded as one of those eminently tactful and gracious acts of thoughtfulness which so endear the King-Emperor to His subjects. Ministers may forget the consideration due to long and arduous service, but the King-Emperor never forgets a faithful servant. Though nothing has been said publicly on the matter, many people have felt that it would be most unfortunate and most unseemly that Lord Curzon should depart from India on the very eve of the arrival of the Heir-Apparent, and pass him in mid-ocean, leaving him to be greeted on stepping ashore by a stranger in the land. It should be remembered that the Viceroy is not only the representative of the British Government, but also, in a very real sense, the personal representative of the King-Emperor. Lord Curzon has represented His Majesty in India for the unprecedented period of nearly seven years, with only one break. To have allowed him to leave at such a moment would, whether accidentally or not, have conveyed an impression of magnificent services very ill requited. Very erroneous and unfortunate interpretations might have been placed on such a procedure by the people of India. It would not have been an intentional slight, but it might have been so regarded, and that is what many of us have been fearing. These considerations have plainly been recognised by His Majesty, who has done a peculiarly graceful and appropriate thing in requesting Lord Curzon to remain in India to greet the Prince and Princess of Wales. His Majesty's marked recognition of Lord Curzon's great labours has been already conspicuously shown in his generous telegram, the warmth of which has been widely commented on in England; and this fresh proof of his gracious regard is equally felicitously conceived. Happy is the public servant who is privileged to serve so sympathetic a monarch; and happy, too, the ruler who can command such services as have been given to India in the last seven years.

Speaking at the durbar held here at Quetta on 30th September the Hon'ble Mr. Tucker, I.C.S., Agent to the Governor-General, alluded to the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to Quetta and he said he felt nothing would be wanting on the part of the Chiefs, Sirdars and Maliks of Baluchistan to show their appreciations of the visit and to accord to Their Royal Highnesses a most hearty welcome.

In the Hall of the Framji Cowasji Institute at Dhobitalao, Bombay, a meeting of the Indo-Portuguese community was held yesterday afternoon, Mr. L. M. Furtado presiding. Over two thousand persons were present. The Reverend J. N. Coutinho, Vicar of Dabul, delivered a message from the Bishop of Daman, declaring His Lordship's adherence and support to the resolutions passed in the meeting of 17th September, held in the Goan, Union School, at Dabul, and expressing his particular desire to refrain from associating his name in connection with any other movement. A similar message was announced from Visconde de Wrem, Consul-General for Portugal, by Mr. L. Mascarenhas. The Vicar of Dabul withdrew from the meeting, and Mr. Mascarenhas made a few remarks. He said that the community having already opened a subscription list in connection with the celebration of the approaching Royal Visit, there was no need of having a separate meeting, or of opening another list for the same purpose. The list already opened was swelling in subscriptions, and the endeavour of all who were present in this meeting should be to keep up the spirit which had prevailed at the former meeting in order to augment the subscriptions. He would, therefore, propose that the resolutions passed at the previous meeting be adopted, and that subscriptions collected be forwarded, through Dr. A. G. Viegas, President of that meeting, to the Secretaries of the general fund started in Bombay. Mr. C. R. Lopez seconded the proposition, which was carried with acclamation. Mr. Mascarenhas called for three cheers for His Majesty the King-Emperor, which were heartily given, and the meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

Yesterday afternoon, in Muzerabad Hall, Grant Road, a very large meeting of Bombay Muhammadans was held in connection with the approaching Royal Visit, and for deciding upon the steps to be taken to accord a fitting reception to Royal Pair. Kazi Mahomedali Murgey was voted to the chair. Moulvi Rafiuddin gave instances of the personal interest evinced by the late Queen-Emress in the amelioration of the condition of the Moslems of India and averred that the state of the Mahomedans who enjoyed the blessings of the British rule, was considerably better than those who lived under the protection of other European Powers. The moral and political influence exercised by this meeting in the Mahomedan countries, under the protection of the British Paramount Power, would be immense. Moulvi Rafiuddin proposed that this meeting desired to voice the feelings of joy occasioned among the Mahomedans of India at the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in this country; and to express their loyalty and devotion towards His Majesty the King-Emperor, the Queen-Emress and other members of the Royal Family. Mr. Ahmed Dawji seconded the proposition which was unanimously agreed to. Resolutions were passed to illuminate and decorate the mosques, public buildings, and private houses, and in every respect to co-operate with the general arrangements proposed to be made by the committee appointed in the public meeting in the Town Hall. A strong and influential committee was also appointed by the meeting to carry into effect the objects of the above resolutions. It was further resolved to send a telegram to His Excellency the Governor, expressing the enthusiasm felt by the Muhammadans of Bombay at the approaching Royal visit, and humbly requesting His Excellency to communicate to Their August Sovereign, His Majesty the King-Emperor, the gratitude of the Muhammadans at his having afforded them this opportunity to express their feeling of loyalty and devotion to the British Throne. A vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the proceedings.

Western Daily Press, Bristol.—The impending visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India has already excited the deepest interest in this country, and as the time draws nigh for the departure of the Royal party the anticipations in India become much more lively. Everything is being done in the great Dependency to render the tour successful in every respect. But there are points beyond which human ingenuity cannot make its influence felt, and it is possible that in some parts of the country at least the Royal tourists will have to contend against the great forces of Nature. It is essential that the Prince of Wales should see India as a whole, and not merely confine his attentions to those districts where all is prosperous, bright, and tranquil. There are provinces on which the sombre shadow of famine has fallen. The Prince of Wales has no desire to avoid these somewhat dismal scenes, and it is understood that he will proceed through some of the most typical of the smitten areas. A telegram from Simla on Saturday contains the interesting announcement that Lord Curzon, it is understood by the desire of King Edward himself, will remain in India for the purpose of welcoming the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival at Bombay. The expression of the Royal desire in this sense certainly confers a great distinction on Lord Curzon, whilst it does not in the slightest degree offend the amour propre of the new Viceroy, Lord Minto. As a master of Oriental ceremony Lord Curzon is acknowledged, even by his less restrained critics, to take the highest rank. It has been his fortune during the period of his Viceroyalty, to be the chief organiser of some of the most magnificent pageants witnessed in India. The expenditure on these brilliant pageants has been condemned as far too lavish. But the severe economists are not, in launching these criticisms, on absolutely solid ground. They forget how deeply symbolism enters into the life of the Orient. The parade of power and of wealth is almost necessary when it is desired to make a lasting impression on the native mind. No man is more keenly aware of this circumstance than Lord Curzon. He has given years of his life to the analysis of the Eastern temperament, and he has arrived at the conclusion that money, which in other lands might be squandered, is not by any means wasted in the provision of pageants symbolic of the might and dignity of the dominant nation whose representative he is. Lord Curzon is thoroughly au courant with all the resources and possibilities of the country, when it is laid under the influence of a Royal progress. His unique knowledge in this respect will be utilised to the full, and the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales throughout India should lack nothing, so far as preparation goes, in the element of success. The Simla telegram states that the retention of Lord Curzon as master of the ceremonies, until at least the Royal cavalcade is fairly well on its way, has given the greatest pleasure in India, and there will, consequently, be a hearty co-operation amongst all classes to impart to the Royal tour those touches of état which count for so much in cases of the kind.

Western Morning News.—The Prince of Wales's tour through India will be performed with all the comforts of modern civilisation, and these have made great advances since 1876, when King Edward paid his well remembered visit. An interesting comparison between the two journeys is made in the Empire Review, which publishes a plan of the route. The tour of His Majesty comprised nearly ten thousand miles, but this included the coast voyages from Bombay to Ceylon and Madras to Calcutta. On this occasion Ceylon will not be visited; and His Royal Highness will go by rail from Mysore in the South to Peshawar on the North-West Frontier, that is to say through almost the entire length of the peninsula. The extent of country covered will be much wider than was the case in the Royal tour thirty years ago. The Royal visitors will miss Goa and some other points of interest, but will get more of the real India—its illimitable plains teeming with population, its historic cities, its ancient rivers, and everlasting hills, a vast country of ordered activity and busy commerce. At a rough computation, the Prince and Princess will travel within the boundaries of the Indian Empire alone over eleven thousand miles, including the crossing and recrossing of the Bay of Bengal. No mere pleasure trip is this but a splendid train de luxe has been specially constructed in the carriage works of the East Indian Railway, near Calcutta, and is the finest thing in railway accommodation ever provided in the peninsula.

3RD OCTOBER 1905

Indian Daily News.—The Executive Committee of the Prince of Wales' Reception Fund, Madras, has so far collected Rs. 40,000. Out of this sum the Committee has allotted Rs. 15,000 for a public entertainment, Rs. 15,000 for illuminations and decorations in the city and Rs. 5,000 for a casket and an address and Rs. 5,000 for the school children's fitz. Some local zemindars have offered to erect triumphal arches in the city, and the Committee has accepted their offers.

Standard.—Sir Matthew Nathan, the Governor of Hongkong, in discussing the proposal made by the Standard that the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India might be extended to the Far East, was certain that the community here would gladly welcome a prolongation of the journey to Hongkong apart from Japan.

Major General Villiers Hutton, commanding the troops, as well as the leaders of the society, both official and civil, endorse the Governor's view, and add that could the tour be prolonged so as to include Japan, such an event would emphasise the alliance between the two countries.

Last June the British and Chinese unofficial members of the Legislative Council, as representing the community, requested Sir Matthew to cable an invitation to His Royal Highness to stay at Hongkong, en route to Japan, to unveil the statue of the King. On that occasion the Prince replied that he was unable to extend his tour.

The Japanese Consul heartily welcomes the Standard's suggestion, as calculated to promote closer relations between the peoples of the two countries.

3RD OCTOBER 1905.

Sind Gazette.—The action of the King in expressly desiring that the Prince and Princess of Wales should be received in India by Lord Curzon, is a most flattering mark of Royal sympathy and appreciation and is most gratifying to the admirers of our great Viceroy. It is another instance of the tact and consideration for the feelings of others, which are so conspicuous in Edward VII and which have endeared him to the hearts of his own subjects and made him so popular with foreigners. Lord Curzon's valuable services to India are fully deserving of some special recognition at the close of his period of service, and this flattering attention on the part of his sovereign is a signal mark of the regard and esteem in which he is held by His Majesty, and sets an appropriate seal on the expressions of gratitude and admiration that he has received from all sides since his resignation.

Indu Prakash.—"We can well understand the thoughtful chivalry of the King-Emperor in desiring that Lord Minto's arrival in India should be postponed for a week, so as to accord to Lord Curzon the honour of receiving Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their landing in India. Lord Curzon had planned the visit and it is but meet that he should do the honours of the host to the Royal visitors. It is also possible that both the King-Emperor and the Ministers consider this special honour to be some reparation for the hard blows dealt to Lord Curzon over the military controversy. India can by no means be jealous of this special honour to Lord Curzon, for he is in spite of his high abilities, but it is from ourselves the fact that Lord Curzon's presence cannot but be a serious damper upon the spirit of enthusiasm and loyalty with which the people of Bombay look forward to greeting their future Emperor and Empress. Lord Curzon, the retrogressionist, to sit in the same carriage with the august representative and descendant of that model of Royal kindness and solicitude the late Queen-Empress Victoria, and to be associated with Their Royal Highnesses in all important functions and ceremonies—this is an idea which to many of us will appear too bizarre. We are, therefore, inclined to think that it is a political blunder to allow the warmth of our loyalty to be thus exposed to the chilling blasts of the feelings which are sure to be generated in our minds by the very sight of Lord Curzon, who is now known to be the greatest enemy of the progress of the country and of the principles of trust and confidence in the people on which the stability of British rule in India mainly depends."

Birmingham Daily Post and Journal.—By way of illustrating the care and forethought that have been bestowed upon the preparations for the Royal tour in India, an incident may be recorded which is not without its significant interest at this stage. It was desired by the Prince and Princess of Wales to give special sittings for portraits designed to be reproduced in colour for commemorative purposes in connection with this event. The Heir-Apparent duly submitted himself to the artist, and donned the uniform of an admiral, with several stars and other orders for the purpose. The work of reproduction was continued for many weeks, but the secret that lay hidden in this portrait was unrevealed. Then, a few days ago, the official announcement was made that the Grand Cross of the Star of India had been conferred at Balmoral upon the Prince of Wales; and when the photograph, though taken many weeks before, was examined, it was found to bear the Star of India already, His Royal Highness having borrowed the King's own star, "in intelligent anticipation of a thing which was about to happen," as Mr. Balfour would describe it.

Englishman.—Lord Kitchener will, it is understood, have his head quarters in Rawalpindi during the manoeuvres which will be held in honour of the Prince and Princess of Wales early in December. About 55,000 troops will take part therein and probably Their Royal Highnesses will motor out each day to witness the manoeuvres. They will of course be the Commander-in-Chief's guests during their visit to Rawalpindi.

Civil and Military Gazette.—There is an article in the Express by a native gentleman named Jogindra Nath Bose on what will be expected of the Prince of Wales during his Indian tour. Mr. Bose makes a few suggestions of ways in which the Prince might ingratiate himself more thoroughly with the natives, such as removing his shoes before entering Hindu temples, varying his menus with Indian dishes, and distributing alms to beggars who swarm in Indian towns. In taking leave of a city, it is suggested, the Prince should, if possible, make a present to the inhabitants of a waterworks, a school, or hospital, according to its needs.

Pioneer.—It has practically been decided that the Prince and Princess of Wales will not visit Ajmere during their journey through Rajputana. There is actual famine in Ajmere-Merwara, and though the people are being well cared for, it would not be advisable to expend local resources in connection with the Royal tour. Their Royal Highnesses will see Udaipur, Jaipur and Bikanir, where the preparations for their reception are now being completed.

Oriental Review.—The King of England and Emperor of India is a constitutional Sovereign, and as such takes no part in the working of the party politics of the Empire. Yet Reuter's message that 'it is at the King's special wish that Lord Curzon should stay to welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales' is turned and twisted, and a meaning is imported into it which His Majesty could hardly have intended to convey. The Times of India is ever on the alert to catch at any straw it may find to bolster up the forlorn cause of the Viceroy.

In the present instance, a graceful act of His Majesty the King-Emperor is turned into a marked recognition of Lord Curzon's great labours. It is unfortunate that our contemporary should attempt to put an erroneous interpretation on a harmless but graceful act of the King, and thus place him in a position hardly fair to His Majesty and against the very spirit and letter of the British constitution. But it is the way of the Times of India and Reuter, who leave no stone unturned to prop up the shattered reputation of their hero. His Majesty's wish in no way signifies a recognition of the services of, or approval of the policy pursued by, the Viceroy. We deprecate in the strongest manner all possible attempts.

to mix up His Majesty in active politics. They are fraught with immense possibilities of mischief.

Phoenix.—The sensational resignation of Lord Curzon was apparently an attempt at bluff, which was accepted more seriously than was expected. If it was seriously intended, consistency demanded Lord Curzon's immediate departure from India, as there was no real necessity to wait for his successor. Spectacular effect is a weakness of Lord Curzon and it was not likely he would miss any opportunity for indulging his penchant.

5TH OCTOBER 1905.

News of India.—As we said in our issue of the 14th September, Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will arrive in Bombay on the 8th proximo, when Lord and Lady Curzon will go on board and receive them. The motor cars which the royal tourists are importing on the Renown will enable them to make excursions among the environs of Bombay and Salsette. Lord and Lady Curzon will then probably leave Bombay and complete their tour by a visit to Agra so as to return and leave on the 18th proximo on the R. J. M. S. Dufferin for Egypt.

Nottingham Daily Express.—The Prince of Wales is following in the footsteps of his illustrious father in many ways, and in a few days will proceed to imitate one of his most successful investigations of the Empire. As a boy with his elder brother, the late Duke of Clarence, he commenced his Imperial education on the Bacchante with a world tour which included the Australian continent, a visit destined to be repeated when, a short time since, he again proceeded, in state, as Heir-Apparent, to proclaim the new-born Commonwealth. And on this occasion, it will be remembered, he also found an opportunity to pay flying visits to Ceylon and the Straits Settlements. At the time it was suggested that the Prince and Princess should extend their voyage and see something of India, but, owing to pressing engagements at home, this was found to be impossible.

By a curious coincidence, next week it will be exactly thirty years since King Edward started for the East. Lord Northbrook was Viceroy, and the visit occupied five months, during which time His Majesty was enabled to get a very good idea of the magnificent country of which he is to-day the acknowledged Emperor. It is also, perhaps, interesting to observe that Lord Salisbury at this time was Secretary of State for India, and that in the following year Queen Victoria was proclaimed with the Imperial title which is now regarded as one of the fairest jewels of the British Crown. When the King landed at Bombay in 1875, dreadful memories of the mutiny survived. Only the year before one of the fugitive leaders had been brought to justice, and the search for the notorious Nana Sahib was still being actively pursued. Further, the idea of a combination of the native rulers for Imperial defence had not so much as been mooted. But, all the same the seeds of good government were beginning to yield that fruit which has matured in the happiness and prosperity of millions of people to whom these words had borne little or no significance in bygone years. Our Prince and Princess will therefore be sure of an enthusiastic reception, not only among the exalted classes but among the millions whose thrift and industry are the secret of progress.

Meanwhile the introduction by the Anglo-Japanese Treaty of a third party pledged to support Indian integrity against unprovoked aggression naturally suggests that a change of policy so novel should be duly impressed upon the princes and people of India. That the Prince and Princess should proceed to Japan on a special mission would put as it were the finishing touches to the alliance, and impress its nature upon all India from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin. Nor should there be difficulty in finding an occasion. Already it is said that the British fleet is to pay a visit to Japan, and that it will be reviewed, with Togo's victorious ships, by the Mikado in person. What more fitting, then, than that, as Mr. Alfred Stead suggests in the Fortnightly Review, the Prince of Wales should present His Imperial Majesty with that order which is regarded as at once the noblest and the highest compliments which our Sovereign can confer! An investiture of the Garter in this instance would carry with it the best wishes of the nation as well, apart entirely from any such effect as we have intimated.

Times.—The following is the revised itinerary of the first portion of the forthcoming tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales in India. Their Royal Highnesses will arrive at Bombay on November 9th, and will leave on the 14th. They will be at Indore from the 15th to the 17th; at Udaipur from the 18th to the 20th; at Jaipur from the 21st to the 22nd; at Bikanir from the 24th to the 27th; at Lahore from the 28th to December 1st and at Peshawar from December 2nd to December 4th. The manoeuvres in the vicinity of Rawalpindi will occupy from the 5th to the 8th. Their Royal Highnesses will be at Jammu on the 9th and 10th; at Amritsar on the 11th; at Delhi from the 12th to the 15th; at Agra from the 16th to the 19th and at Gwalior from the 20th to the 25th.

We congratulate the Executive Committee of the Prince and Princess of Wales Reception Fund in Madras upon their wise decision that there should be no performances by nautch girls at the entertainment to be given to Their Royal Highnesses. Madras is the birth-place of the anti-nautch movement, and it would not do that while in the other Presidencies the nautch was to be discarded, Madras should advertise the fact that it has gone down in its Social Reform zeal and reeled back from its noble enthusiasms in the past into a moral terror which could not resist the siren voice of third-rate leaders of society for whom pleasure and the present are the limits of existence. We knew that with such genuine leaders of Indian Society as Sir Subramanya Aiyar and Mr. Sankara Nayar on the Committee—for in such matters the European does not feel free to assert his own view and feels bound to accede to the wishes of Indian leaders—the cause of social decency, not to say that of social purity, was safe; and safe indeed it has proved in their hands.

6TH OCTOBER 1905.

Indian Daily News.—Among other functions to be performed by the Prince of Wales here will probably be the opening of the Sir Seshadri Iyer Memorial, which building is now almost complete. The Victoria Memorial statue works are well in advance. Messrs. Peliti, Calcutta, and D'Angelis, Madras, will cater during the tour here.

The Madras Mail.—It may be interesting to residents to know the arrangements which have been agreed to with regard to the unveiling of the statue of Her late Majesty the Queen-Empress, by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Mr. Stephens, the Municipal Engineer, is preparing a plan on lines which were arranged this morning, when Mr. F. C. Carr, Mr. P. L. Moore, Mr. F. H. Wilkinson, Mr. R. Moss King, and Mr. Devaraj Urs discussed the matter on the site of the statue in Cubbon Park. As at present conceived, the preparations will be as follows:—In rear of the Cubbon Park Police Station, and on the left of the statue as one enters Cubbon Park, there will be an enclosure reserved for officers of the British and Mysore Services. The Band will be in the compound of the Police Station itself. The Guard of Honour will be drawn up in double rank from the Washington lamp near the Cubbon Park gates, along the front of the Police Station, and up to the service enclosure. On the right-hand road from the entrance to the Park, a large shamiana will be erected, in which His Royal Highness will be received, and from which he can step to draw the cord which will unveil the statue. Further down the right-hand road, and in rear of it there will be another enclosure, to which admittance will be by ticket. His Royal Highness' body-guard will be drawn up to the left of the enclosure for the Services, and a section of ground extending over a segment of a circle some 200 yards in length will be roped in for the use of the general public. Finally, the left-hand road from the entrance to the Park will be kept open, and it will be by this road that the Prince of Wales will leave after the ceremony. It is, of course, possible that these arrangements may be altered, as these are still early days, but it is difficult to see how they could be bettered. The site of the statue is not a very easy one upon which to arrange accommodation for a curious and numerous public, but it would seem that the problem has been satisfactorily solved.

Pioneer.—The Prince and Princess of Wales, instead of visiting Ahmedabad and Ajmere, will proceed from Bombay direct to Indore, staying there from the 15th to the 17th November.

In connection with the programme of the Prince and Princess of Wales' tour the following are the official details with regard to Benares:—Monday, 19th February:—Morning: Public arrival 8-30. Receive ceremonial visit from Maharaja, Presentation of Municipal address. Afternoon: Drive through Benares. Evening: Banquet at Nandesar house. Tuesday 20th February:—Morning: Expedition down the river by boat to see ghats, etc. Visit to Golden Temple. Inspection of local industries. Afternoon: Ceremonial visit to Maharaja at Ramnagar and return by boat to see illuminations on the river. Evening: Private departure for Nepal.

The 10th (Prince of Wales' Own Royal) Hussars, now at Mhow, will proceed to Bombay as part of the escort to the Prince and Princess of Wales during the Royal visit to that city.

Times of India.—Sir,—I beg to draw the attention of our popular Police Commissioner through your influential journal to the great inconvenience and disappointment shared by many on the occasion of the Coronation illuminations. There was a general complaint about the carriage routes arranged on that occasion. People had to return to their homes at very late hours in the morning, without seeing properly the illumination. They were obliged against their will to go beyond Parel, where they could witness nothing but close shops, as between Pydhownie station and Parel there was no illumination worth seeing, excepting that at the Victoria Gardens. People did not care to waste an hour or more for the sake of seeing the illumination of the gardens. The principal illumination worth witnessing would be on the road lying from Apollo Bunder to Crawford Market.

The arrangements for carriage traffic should be so made that most of the people who only care to see the illumination of this part of the town should be given facility to return to their homes after witnessing it and not forced to go beyond Market or Pydhownie against their will. It is a hardship on people going with their families and children to be prevented from going home early. The arrangement suggested would also curtail the arduous work of the Police.—A. C.

7TH OCTOBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The amended programme of the tour of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales is now settled. The only station which it has been found necessary to drop out of the arrangements is that of Ajmer, where Their Royal Highnesses' proposed visit has had to be abandoned on account of the scarcity. The other proposed visits in Rajputana will be carried out as originally arranged. To meet the altered arrangements in connection with the Army Manœuvres Their Royal Highnesses will spend three days near Rawalpindi after leaving Peshawar. They will then do three days' sight-seeing at Delhi, reaching Agra on the date originally proposed, and thereafter carrying out the tour as already announced. The proceedings at Agra will be especially impressive, the ceremonies including a great elephant procession and the unveiling of a statue of the late Queen Victoria.

Their Royal Highnesses will arrive in Bombay on the afternoon of the 9th November, remaining in Bombay up to the 17th November. Leaving Bombay on the 17th November, Their Royal Highnesses will arrive at Udaipur on the 18th, remaining there till the 20th November. From the 21st to the 24th November the party will be at Jaipur, from whence they go to Bikaner, arriving there on the 25th idem. Leaving Bikaner on the 27th November, Their Royal Highnesses reach Lahore the next day and remain there till the 1st December. The next place to be visited will be Peshawar, which is reached on the 2nd December. Leaving this on the 4th idem the party arrives at Jammu the next day and stay there a day. On the 7th December Their Royal Highnesses reach Rawalpindi and remain there until the 12th idem, then going on to Delhi, and remaining there till the 15th. Agra is reached the next day (16th), and a halt is made there until the 19th December. Leaving Agra, the party arrives at Bhurtpur on the 20th idem. Only a brief stay is made here, for the party is due at Gwalior next day (21st). Here they stay until the 25th December when a move is made to Lucknow, which is reached on the 26th. Two days will be spent at Lucknow, and on the 28th December the Prince and Princess leave for Calcutta, which will be reached on the 29th idem. A halt is made in Calcutta to the 6th January next year, on which day the party leave for Darjeeling, where they arrive next day. The 8th January is to be spent at Darjeeling and Their Royal Highnesses return to Calcutta on the 9th idem, spending the next two days on board the Renown on the journey to Rangoon. Rangoon is reached on the 13th January, and here a halt is to be made to the 15th, when the party leaves for Mandalay, arriving there on the 16th. The Prince and Princess remain there for two days and spend the 19th and 20th January on the river on the return journey to Rangoon, which is reached on the 21st. Their Royal Highnesses then re-embark on the Renown for the journey to Madras, which is to be reached on Wednesday, the 24th January. Four days will be spent here, and the party leave Madras on the 28th January for Bangalore and Mysore, where a halt is to be made from the 29th January to the 7th February. Hyderabad is the next place to be visited, and here Their Royal Highnesses are to stay from the 8th to the 15th February. A visit is then to be paid to Ellora (16th February) after which Their Royal Highnesses leave for Benares, where the 18th and 19th February will be spent. From Benares the party leave for Nepal, where they remain from the 28th February to 2nd March. After leaving Nepal Their Royal Highnesses will probably visit Simla and some other places. Quetta is the next place to be visited, where four days will be spent (March 12th to the 19th). Their Royal Highnesses will next go to Karachi, where they will arrive on the 17th March, leaving that port for England on the 16th idem.

London Opinion and To-Day.—The great interest centred round H. M. S. Renown, which is to take the Prince and Princess to India, has attracted many sightseers to Portsmouth, where, for the most part, they have to content themselves with gazing at the great white ship lying in the Dockyard, as access to view the Royal apartments is strictly limited to the favoured few. Being one of the latter, one could not help being struck with the extreme daintiness and simplicity of the Princess's apartments, which are situated on the deck, and consist of a light and airy boudoir, two cabins and bath-room, and a maid's room. These are decorated throughout in white enamel, the covering of the furniture being a simple chintz bearing a single rosebud set in a light blue wreath. The carpets are of the corresponding shade of blue, and the same delicate tint provides a screen for the electric light. All the fittings throughout the Royal apartments are of silver-plate, including the swinging cot, designed specially to minimise the motion of the ship in rough weather.

Several well-known Anglo-Indians have been consulted about the clothes required by Their Royal Highnesses during their Indian tour. It is estimated that the Princess's wardrobe alone will contain nearly a hundred different costumes. These include yachting clothes, travelling costumes, and grand toilettes for the great State functions which the Prince and Princess will have to attend while at Bombay. White, grey, and light shades of mauve are Her Royal Highness's favourite colours, and light serges and flannels figure almost as largely as muslins do. Like the Queen, the Princess of Wales shows considerable taste in dress, and affects the severe rather than picturesque style of costume, which the ladies of the Royal Family have made so much their own. Her Indian wardrobe includes quantities of lovely Irish and English laces, of which Her Royal Highness boasts a unique collection.

In addition to the Princess's own personal jewels, which are of great value, and include a great many diamonds, as well as her lovely array of pearls, Their Royal Highnesses are taking with them great quantities of jewellery manufactured in England, which they will distribute as gifts. These are, for the most part, brooches and pins mounted with the Prince of Wales' Feathers, the Tudor Crown, and several other well-known Royal designs, all of which have been specially selected by the Prince and Princess themselves, and are principally intended for distribution amongst the retinue provided for them by the Viceroy.

Pioneer.—Among the functions to be performed by the Prince of Wales at Bangalore will probably be the opening of the Sir Seshadri Memorial, which building is now almost complete. The Victoria Memorial statue works are also well advanced.

On the arrival of the Prince of Wales in Bangalore on the 5th February the Municipal address will be presented and in the evening the Prince will unveil the statue of the late Queen. The Prince will then drive to Lal Bagh, where a fête will be held, after which there will be a State dinner. On the 6th His Royal Highness will drive through the cantonment; in the evening a garden party will be given at the Residency, and on the morning of the 7th the Prince will proceed to Hyderabad, the departure being private.

Jam-e-Jamshed.—The announcement that His Majesty the King-Emperor has been pleased to express the desire that Lord Curzon should stay a few days longer in this country than already arranged to receive Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will not be without its significance. Lord Curzon has served his King no less faithfully than he has served his country and the Empire; and it is singularly appropriate, therefore, that the differences that have arisen between him and the Cabinet at Home should not be permitted to imply that he has forfeited the good-will and esteem of his Sovereign. In India there is always a special danger to be guarded against in this direction, and though the very kindly message that was promptly sent by His Majesty from Maricbad, on the morrow of His Excellency's resignation, has been in itself a sufficient proof of the unabated confidence and regard in which Lord Curzon is still held by his Imperial master, His Majesty's latest command will emphasise his recognition of the present Viceroy's devoted and self-sacrificing labours in the interests of the Empire. . . . In India the wearer of the Imperial Crown is held in much greater reverence than in self-governing countries; and everything that the Cabinet has done till now to humiliate the retiring Pro-consul must be held to be atoned by the proofs of gracious regard that His Majesty has evinced towards him personally since his retirement. Not even the most malicious of Lord Curzon's critics in this country will henceforth dare to tell his audience, howsoever ignorant it may be, that His Excellency has been either recalled or disgraced.

Andhraprakasika, Madras.—The Andhraprakasika, of the 7th October, states that it would be the more desirable to acquaint His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales with the grievances of His Majesty's loyal subjects and with the treatment accorded to them by the rulers than to make a show of loyalty by means of receptions, entertainments and pageants. It suggests to the reception committees to add the following items to their programmes:—

- (1) A surprise visit to a temple to see how religious the Indians are and how any interference with their religion may cause a commotion.
- (2) A scientific examination by His Royal Highness of the pipe-water in Madras.
- (3) A surprise visit by the Prince to one of the villages of the Chingleput district to note personally the real condition of the subjects.
- (4) An incognito visit to the High Court when second appeals are being heard. His Royal Highness will be able to see whether the vexatious remarks hurled by the Judges on the pleaders are due to their inability to grasp the nature of the cases or to their sickly disposition.
- (5) Similar visits to Magistrates' Courts in the mofussil to inspect them.
- (6) A visit to a Collector's office when the Collector goes there to inspect the work of his subordinates.

The paper requests His Royal Highness to allow access to non-officials, as they will openly and freely ventilate the grievances of the public.

The Khalqa Bahadur (Lahore) remarks that when Lord Curzon founded the Imperial Cadet Corps hopes were entertained that the scions of the ruling families of India who form the corps would receive commissions in the Army. Those hopes are, however, now blasted, and hence it is that the sons of noble families show little or no desire to enlist in the corps. It will be a graceful act on the part of Lord Curzon if on the eve of his departure he grants to the Cadets commissions in the Army, especially on the occasion of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales' visit to this country.

30TH SEPTEMBER 1905.

Rast Gofstar.—The news that His Majesty the King-Emperor has desired the Viceroy Lord Curzon to remain in India to welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales has been received in the country with great enthusiasm. . . . It was a very prudent thought on the part of His Majesty to send that message to the Viceroy, to whom it would have been a great injustice if he were allowed to part from us without celebrating an event of great rejoicing simply because it happened to fall on the eve of his departure. Lord Curzon is distinguished for his masterful tact and aptitude, that are so essential to give the finishing strokes to the celebration of great events of public moment. His memorable Delhi Durbar is a living testimony to the unique help which he afforded in making the celebration of the King-Emperor's Coronation an event of such world-wide interest and enthusiasm in this country and abroad. His presence on the day of the arrival of the Royal guests will lend additional lustre to the event, and if words and speeches can be trusted to magnify the significance of the Royal tour, Lord Curzon, who is a past master in oratory, can be safely relied upon to rise fully to the occasion.

Observer.—It is probable, however, that the plans for the Royal tour will be carried out as originally proposed. There is no reason why the Prince should not even visit Bikanir, that quaint city in the remote desert, with its pigeon-haunted palace, where the fine young Maharajah can show His Royal Highness as good sand-grouse shooting as can be got in the world. All India is agog with excitement regarding the forthcoming visit of Royalty. The great cities have appointed committees innumerable, and the splendour of the reception will probably surpass in many respects the visit of the King more than thirty years ago. It is really remarkable to notice how every class and creed unite in a genuine desire to do honour and to proffer homage to the Prince and Princess. Those of us who know India well, and can distinguish between real and simulated interest, can see how sincere the pervading sentiment is. In Bombay, by a curious chance, those largely responsible for the city's arrangements happen to be among the most prominent of the leaders of the Indian National Congress; but none are more zealous in the labour of preparation. People in England often ask whether the natives of India are really loyal. The true answer is that they are unquestionably loyal to the sentiment of kingship, and will gladly do reverence to its personal embodiment. It is the ingrained habit of centuries, and whereas the Government of India is to them a nebulous and sometimes irritating thing, they cherish a real veneration for the King and a warm regard for the Royal Family.

Pioneer.—Lord Kitchener has during the past week gone over the whole ground beyond Rawalpindi upon which the troops will be manœuvred during December. It is likely that four divisions will take part in the movements, so that between 40,000 and 50,000 men should march past on Khanna plain before the Prince of Wales on the 8th December.

9TH OCTOBER 1905.

Daily Mail.—With the Prince and Princess in the Renown will be Lady Eva Dugdale, Sir Arthur Bigge, Sir Charles Cust, and the Hon'ble Derek Keppell, all close personal friends. Accommodation aboard the Terrible has been provided for Lord and Lady Shaftesbury, Viscount Crichton, and Commander Godfrey Faussett.

Daily Telegraph.—Yesterday morning the battleship Renown, in which the Prince and Princess of Wales are to make their journey to India, left Portsmouth for Genoa, in company with the first class cruiser Terrible, which is to be her escort. All the Royal baggage was got on board last week, and on Saturday a number of the personal attendants on Their Royal Highnesses went on board the Renown, so as to make all the necessary arrangements. The Renown and Terrible are due at Genoa on the 18th instant, and the Prince and Princess, with their suite, embark there on the following day, but the Renown will not leave the Italian port until the 21st. In the Straits of Messina the Renown will be met by the entire Mediterranean Fleet, which will fire a Royal salute as the Prince and Princess approach. The Renown will steam through the Fleet, and be escorted to Port Said by the cruiser squadron, the battle fleet returning to Malta.

On the occasion of the recent visit of the Princess of Wales to the Renown at Portsmouth Her Royal Highness was met and attended on her inspection round the ship by Mr. T. Mitchell, the Chief Constructor, and Mr. John Forsey, the Chief Naval Store Officer of Portsmouth Dockyard, who have been responsible for the arrangements which have been made on board the vessel for the Royal tour. These officers have since been presented by Commodore the Hon'ble Hugh Tyrwhitt, on behalf of the Prince of Wales, with valuable scarf pins as personal gifts from His Royal Highness, in acknowledgment of their services in this connection.

Madras Mail.—His Highness the Nizam has given Rs. 7 lakhs for the construction of an adequate Women and Children's Hospital, which shall be not only an ornament to the City but a boon to the females and children for whom it is intended. The foundation stone will be laid by the Princess of Wales, whose visit will be permanently recorded in the name of the edifice, which is to be called after Her Royal Highness's youngest daughter. Besides the grant specified above, the Princess of Wales, Lady Curzon, Lady Amphi'l, Mrs. Bayley (wife of our present Resident) and several other ladies whose husbands have grateful recollections of His Highness the Nizam and of Hyderabad, are also contributing to the same noble cause.

The site chosen by the Hon'ble Mr. Bayley, in conjunction with His Excellency the Minister, is the large piece of ground known as "The Ameer Bagh," near Nawab Fakr-ul-Mulk's City Palace.

Mysore Herald.—His Highness General Partabsinghji, Maharana Sahib of Idar, will accompany His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales as A.-D.-C. during the Royal tour in different parts of India.

There will be a large gathering of the Native Princes and Chiefs of the Bombay Presidency on the occasion of the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay. One of the interesting features of the assembly will be the presence of the sons of the reigning families of Kathiawar, who come from the Rajkumar College at Rajkote, and also of the members of the Imperial Service Cadet Corps raised in that Province.

Pioneer.—Lord Kitchener, after seeing the sites of the camps for the Royal manœuvres near Hassan Abdul and Burhan, goes to Nowshera, and thence possibly proceeds to Landi Kotal. It is now finally settled that the Rawalpindi manœuvres will take place on the 5th, 6th and 7th December. A big review will be held at Rawalpindi on the 8th instant. The northern force will concentrate at Burhan Station, and the southern force at Janikasang. Four infantry divisions and two cavalry divisions will take part.

Times of India.—The following appeared in a Bombay Government Gazette Extraordinary, dated Friday, 6th October:—

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall and York, K.G., P.C., K.T., K.P.G., C.M.G., G.C.V.O., I.S.O., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., will hold a Levée at the New Secretariat, Bombay, at 10 P.M. on Friday, the 10th November 1905.

All Civil, Naval and Military Officers and other gentlemen, European and Native, who have attended Levées held by His Excellency the Governor and who desire to attend the Levée, are requested to notify their wish to the Military Secretary to His Excellency the Governor by letter addressed to Government House, Malabar Point, Bombay, between the 10th and 20th October 1905, after which time no applications will be entertained. The letter should state the name, place of residence, and address in Bombay, and the office, rank, profession or occupation of the writer, and should be very legibly written. The cards to be presented at the Levée will be issued by the Military Secretary to His Excellency the Governor and will be transmitted by post or messenger on or before the 5th November 1905, to the address in Bombay of the officers and gentlemen who are permitted to attend the Levée, and must in all cases be presented to the Aide-de-Camp on duty before entering the Presence Chamber. Gentlemen entitled to wear uniform will appear in full dress. Clergymen, being university graduates, and other gentlemen entitled to wear robes or gowns on account of judicial or academical office or status, will appear in such robes or gowns, with the other dress laid down in these rules. Gentlemen not entitled to wear uniform, robes or gowns will appear in evening dress. Native gentlemen who ordinarily wear European dress will appear in evening dress, but will retain their Native head-dress. The following is the dress prescribed for Native gentlemen who do not wear European dress:—

(a) Hindu Gentlemen.

Black broadcloth coat (dagla or angarka) or white angarka or jama-pichhodi and white or coloured trousers* with shela, uparuna or other white scarf; for head-dress, pagri, pagoten, rumal or other recognised head-dress, but not a brimless cap.

(b) Mussalman Gentlemen.

Black broadcloth or silk jubba, jama, choga or other robe worn over a saya, kuba or dagla or black broadcloth or silk sherwani, and white or coloured trousers; head-dress, turban or fez, but not a brimless cap.

(c) Parsi Gentlemen.

Jama-pichhodi, saya or black broadcloth coat (dagla), and white or coloured trousers, with pagri or phinta, but not a brimless cap as head-dress.

(d) All Other Native Gentlemen.

The dress worn on high ceremonial occasions.

All Native gentlemen either must wear boots or shoes of European pattern of black polished or patent leather, or must leave their native shoes outside.

Pioneer.—The following notice has been issued with regard to representatives of the Native Press who are desirous of accompanying Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their tour in the Bombay Presidency:—

During the forthcoming tour in India of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales arrangements can probably be made for two representatives of the Native Press in the Bombay Presidency to accompany the Royal Party. It is desirable therefore that Indian newspapers in the Presidency should, as European newspapers have done, combine to appoint joint representatives. Applications submitted to the Chief Secretary to Government, Political Department, not later than the 20th October 1905, will be considered. Permission to accompany the Royal Party will ceteris paribus be given to representatives whose reports will be available to the largest number of leading journals.

10TH OCTOBER 1905.

Bristol Times and Mirror.—The Renown will be escorted throughout the tour by the first-class cruiser Terrible, whose commander, Captain H. A. Campbell, is a favourite of the Royal Family. Several members of the Prince's suite will be accommodated on board the cruiser, room on the battleship being somewhat limited, in spite of the thorough alteration. Both war vessels will arrive at Genoa three days before the Prince and Princess will go on board, and will be met by the Mediterranean Squadron in the Straits of Messina, and be escorted to Port Said by the Cruiser Squadron, the battleships returning to Malta.

* The dhooli may be worn instead of trousers only with the permission (to be previously obtained) of the Military Secretary.

Pall Mall Gazette.—Precedent stands for everything in the City Corporation. A precedent which establishes a right is religiously followed, as witness the struggle of the Corporation to retain all its ancient rights, established by precedent, at the Coronation of King Edward. The precedent established on October 9, 1875, on the eve of the departure of our present King, as Prince of Wales, on his memorable Indian tour, will be, it is understood, followed on this occasion, thirty years later. An address to His Royal Highness forms the most important feature of the precedent. Exactly thirty years ago, yesterday, a deputation from the City Corporation, headed as usual by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, proceeded to Marlborough House and laid before the Prince of Wales the loyal and dutiful address of the Corporation, wishing every success for the tour and a safe return.

Of the deputation which established that precedent but few remain alive. The then Lord Mayor passed away long ago, but Mr. Sheriff Knight, now Sir Henry Knight, still lives and takes an active interest in his duties as Alderman of the Ward of Cripplegate. Both the under-sheriffs are alive in the persons of Sir Homewood Crawford, the City Solicitor, and Mr. Baylis, the City Comptroller. But Mr. Russell Gurney, the Recorder, Sir Thomas Chambers, the Common Serjeant, who succeeded him, and Mr. Lawley, the Chief Commoner, have long since joined the "great majority." In the deputation were six members of the Court of Aldermen, the Chamberlain, the City Solicitor, the Remembrancer, the Comptroller, and the Town Clerk—all dead—with a few Common Councillors. The City Fathers proceeded in state to Marlborough House, and created no little sensation in the streets by the brilliant display. Records are now being looked up, and such is the power of precedent, that if it be the pleasure of the Prince of Wales to receive the address, a deputation, composed of the same representative units, will be formed to present it, most likely at Marlborough House.

Times.—The Mediterranean Fleet is to escort the Renown battleship, with the Prince and Princess of Wales on board, through the Straits of Messina. The fleet, consisting of the Bulwark, Queen, Formidable, Implacable, Venerable, Irresistible, Goliath, and Prince of Wales, battleships, the Leviathan and Venus, cruisers, Sentinel, scout, and 15 destroyers, will leave Malta at 4 P.M. on Sunday, October 22, and meet the Renown at 10 A.M. on Monday, October 23, off Cape Pellaro. Before meeting the Renown, the fleet will be formed in single line abreast, the flagship in the centre, with the cruisers on the flank. The destroyers will be line abreast, 21 cables astern, the ships and destroyers being dressed with masthead flags. A Royal salute will be fired at a suitable distance, to be completed before the Bulwark gets within one mile of the Renown. When the Bulwark is 1,900 yards off the Renown, the fleet will turn 16 points outwards together, and when turned should be on the beam of the Renown. The destroyers will then pass through the line of ships at 20 knots' speed, and when through the line the port division of destroyers will turn together eight points inwards, and then the starboard division eight points inwards, the divisions passing each other through the intervals, port side to port side, and the destroyers firing a Royal salute while crossing the bows of the Renown. After this evolution, the battle fleet will form columns of divisions in line ahead, the divisions of destroyers passing round the flanks of the battle fleet in columns of division line ahead, taking station on the bows of the Renown, the battle fleet being just abaft the beam. At 6 P.M. the fleet will form on the bows so as to be ready for illuminations, and at 7-40 P.M. the fleet will illuminate with coloured lights. The fleet will part company with the Renown on the evening of Monday, October 23, and proceed to Malta.

11TH OCTOBER 1905.

Daily Express, London.—The Prince and Princess of Wales will reach the shores of India amid a blaze of fireworks. At Bombay where they land, and at Rangoon and Madras where they afterwards arrive in the Renown, the sight of land will be the signal for an extraordinary pyrotechnic display on board the ship. Thousands of rockets will be fired into the air, waterfalls of silver lights will illuminate the deck, and as the vessel carrying the Royal travellers enters the harbour, fire portraits of the Prince and Princess will greet their Indian admirers. Quantities of fireworks have already been shipped to India by Messrs. James Pain on board the Terrible.

"We shall have our own men on board the Royal battleship," said Mr. P. Pain to an Express representative yesterday, "and fireworks will be let off from the four accompanying cruisers, the Hyacinth, Fox, Perseus, and Proserpine."

"Portraits in fire of the Prince and Princess, measuring 1,000 square feet with the Star of India in true colours, measuring 500 square feet, will be the main feature of the display on the Renown."

During the Royal visit to Calcutta there will be given on the Maidan a display of fireworks such as has never before been seen in the Indian Empire. Fireworks will be especially chosen, so as to be visible by all the surrounding districts, and huge floating mottoes of flame.

The Princess of Wales finds the greatest drawback to her Indian tour in the fact that she has to leave her children for so long a time. She is in consequence having them with her as much as possible, and is constantly to be seen about London with little Princess Mary and one or other of her brothers.

Her Royal Highness yesterday drove round Battersea Park with the little Princess, garbed in white furs, and the younger Princes, Henry and George.

The Royal Carriage was stopped by the Traffic on Albert Bridge about 5-30, but though a stream of workers on their way home passed by the carriage, very few recognised that the animated mother talking to her three happy children was the future Queen of England.

Madras Mail.—The following is an extract from the address delivered by the Dewan of Mysore at the Mysore Representative Assembly:—"Before concluding, I am commanded by His Highness the Maharajah to announce to you the happy news of the gracious acceptance by Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales of His Highness' invitation to honour this State with a visit. This is the first time that Mysore will have the proud privilege and satisfaction of welcoming the Heir-apparent to the British Throne and his Royal consort. Their Royal Highnesses are expected to arrive towards the end of January next and spend about ten days here. His Majesty the King-Emperor has, by according his gracious sanction to this visit, given us a signal proof of his love to Mysore and its people, and we cannot be too grateful for these acts of great condescension. The British Throne, as you know, gentlemen, is the symbol of unity and progress for the Empire, and His Highness the Maharajah is sure that Mysore will occupy a foremost place both in spontaneity of welcome as well as in the sincerity and intensity of its loyalty to the august representatives of that Imperial Throne."

Pioneer.—A frontier correspondent writes:—

It is considered likely here that the Prince and Princess of Wales may venture beyond Peshawar to have a look at the famous Khyber Pass bungalow at Landi Kotal. It is, at any rate, being put in order for their possible reception.

Sketch.—The departure of the Prince and Princess of Wales for the Far East draws very near, and recalls the visit of our present Sovereign to India and the extraordinary amount of interest and excitement with which the Mother Country followed the triumphal progress of Queen Victoria's heir-apparent. The journey began just thirty years ago, on October 11, 1875, and the eventful voyage was accomplished in the Serapis, a famous old Indian troopship. In addition to the official Household, the future Emperor of India was accompanied by a group of private friends including the then Duke of Sutherland, Lord, now Earl, Carrington, and Lieutenant, now Admiral, Lord Charles Beresford. Lord Alfred Paget was also of the party, and wrote each day an account of the tour for the private perusal of Queen Victoria. The Royal Tour lasted four months, and during these hundred and twenty days the then Prince of Wales travelled 8,000 miles on land and 25,000 miles by sea, and he had seen more of our vast Indian Empire than had any living Englishman.

Tattler.—The men who have fitted out the Renown so luxuriously for the use of the Prince and Princess are quite on their mettle. The last time the big battleship was turned into a pleasure yacht was when the Duke and Duchess of Connaught made their Eastern trip in 1902, and the work was then done at Malta. It was very cleverly done too, for the Maltese workmen have both taste and ingenuity. The whole afterpart of the vessel was turned into dainty apartments, the steel floors being covered with cork before the carpets were laid, and the rooms painted in white and gold with mahogany fittings. The Duke and Duchess found her a very comfortable ship, though the upholstery was in danger as she left Genoa after taking her distinguished passengers on board—a huge barge took fire and bore down upon her blazing until the two almost collided. The Renown, however, came off without a scorch. It is to be hoped that no such misfortune will befall her during the coming cruise. One of the most interesting features of the present alterations is the adaptation of the 6-in. gun casements as cabins for the executive officers.

11TH OCTOBER 1905.

Oriental Review.—We have been requested to announce that her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales has been graciously pleased to accept the invitation of Indian ladies to an entertainment at the Town Hall on Saturday, the 11th November, when addresses will be given in six different languages welcoming the Royal visitor to the shores of India. The reception will be entirely Oriental, maintaining the traditional reputation of Oriental grandeur and Oriental loyalty, and worthy of the acceptance of the future Queen-Empress of India. No such reception was included in the tentative programme of the engagements of our Royal guests. Great disappointment was, therefore, felt at its absence. It was fallaciously apprehended by the powers that be that as European ladies were not invited to take part in the movement, there was some sinister influence lurking behind it. It was unfortunately suggested by the London correspondent of the Times of India that the movement was engineered by Indian political wire-pullers for the sole purpose of personal aggrandisement, but thanks to the indefatigable exertions of Lady Jehangir Cowasjee Jehangir, this misapprehension was soon dispelled, and it was proved that the movement was the outcome of a spontaneous desire on the part of Indian ladies to give a cordial and loyal welcome to the Princess of Wales. There was absolutely nothing at the back of it. . . . This will be the first time, that an English Princess, so exalted, will come face to face with her Indian sisters. How then would it have looked for Indian manners and Indian ideas of hospitality (even apart from all notions of Western education), if Indian ladies had kept aloof and not come forward to accord a national welcome to the Royal guest?

Swadesi, Madras.—The Prince of Wales' visit to India is inopportune, as Lord Curzon during his seven years' administration has reduced the Indians to a state of despair, and has, by his several actions, caused sorrow and discontent among the people, who cannot therefore show so much enthusiasm as they ought to display on a grand and rare occasion like this. It is feared that an erroneous impression will be created in the Prince's mind about the condition of India by his being taken to only those few places where the people are contented and satisfied, and by presenting to the Prince those uneducated individuals who long for titles and who will not therefore hesitate to give out that India is growing prosperous. Because the empty-headed British Ministers approved of the partition of Bengal and the reconstitution of the Military Department in order to please Lord Curzon and Lord Kitchener respectively, without listening to the wishes of the people, a feeling of dissatisfaction has arisen throughout this country. In the addresses to be presented by the Municipalities of Calcutta and Bombay, it is stated that this country is advancing in wealth and prosperity under the British Government, which is not actuated by any racial prejudices in the administration of justice. The Municipalities of Calcutta and Bombay do not at all represent the whole population of those cities. No one will say that the British and the Indians are treated alike by the Government. Separate rules have been framed in the Indian Criminal Codes for the trial of European offenders. No European has been sentenced to death for acts of murder, while a considerable number of Indians were sentenced to capital punishment. High appointments have been denied to the people of this country. These Municipalities should not give utterance to such falsehoods, especially in the presence of the Prince, who should be looked upon as a Divine being.

12TH OCTOBER 1905.

Daily Express, London.—Several very interesting military functions are included in the programme for the Indian tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales. There are several regiments in the native army with which the Prince of Wales is identified in name or as Colonel-in-Chief, and His Royal Highness will, if time permit, personally inspect these. They include the 10th Prince of Wales' Own Royal Hussars, the 12th Prince of Wales' Royal Lancers, the 1st Duke of York's Own Lancers (Skinner's Horse), of which the Prince is Colonel-in-Chief, the 6th Prince of Wales' Cavalry, the 11th Prince of Wales' Own Lancers (Probyn's Horse), the 102nd Prince of Wales' Own Grenadiers, and the 1st and 2nd Battalions, 2nd Prince of Wales' Own Gurkha Rifles (the Sirmoor Rifles).

A great military reception will take place at Calcutta on December 20. The Prince will embark on a steamer in the Hooghly, and proceed to Prinsep's Ghat between lines of gaily dressed shipping. On landing, he will be received by all the principal military officials, and will proceed by road to Government House through lines of troops.

The other army items are three days' exercises round Rawalpindi, under Lord Kitchener, and a review of troops.

The Maharaja and Maharanees of Kapurthala, who have spent a considerable time in England, are returning to India in time for the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and have booked passages by the P. and O. steamer Meldavia, which leaves Marseilles on October 13. The sailings for India are very heavy just now, in view of the approaching Royal tour.

Englishman.—The Princess of Wales has graciously expressed her willingness to receive the album with an address in English, Urdu, Marathi, Gujarati, Persian and Kanarese from the Indian ladies of Bombay at an entertainment to be given at the Bombay Town Hall. The ceremony of presentation will be in the Oriental style, and all the subscribers will be invited to be present.

H. M.S. Proserpine, which recently arrived here from Colombo, has left for Suez to await the Renown.

Arrangements are being made to depute special officers who will advise and assist the Press correspondents who will accompany the Prince and Princess of Wales on their tour. The Bombay Government have already nominated Mr. S. M. Edwards for this duty.

The Central India Chiefs, who will have assembled at Indore next month to witness the laying of the foundation stone of the Daly College by the Viceroy will remain there to greet the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival on the 15th November. Among those who will be present will be the Maharaja of Holkar, the Begum of Bhopal and the Chiefs of Rewah, Orchha and Sailana. The last named will be invested with the K.C.I.E. A banquet and a general reception will take place on the evening of the 16th. On the 17th the Prince of Wales will open the King Edward Hall built in memory of the Coronation of the King, at Gwalior. There will be a Durbar at the palace on the morning of 20th December and the Victoria Memorial Market will be opened in the afternoon on 21st. A parade of Imperial Service Troops will take place with a presentation of medals and military sports, while a State Banquet will be given in the evening. The 22nd and 23rd will be devoted to tiger shooting, and the 24th and 25th will be days of rest.

The following arrangements have been made for the reception and stay of the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay:—

November 9th.—The Viceroy arrives in the early morning, and drives to Government House. At noon H.M.S. Renown arrives. The Naval Commander-in-Chief goes on board at 3.30 p.m. The Viceroy goes on board at 3.45. The Governor, Members of Council and Chief Justice go on board at 4.30. Their Royal Highnesses land at the Apollo Bundar, where there will be presentations of Chiefs and high officials, presentation of municipal addresses, and a reply thereto at 5.30 p.m. Their Royal Highnesses drive through part of the Native city to Government House, Malabar Point. The Viceroy will dine with Their Royal Highnesses at Government House at 8.15, and leave at midnight.

November 10th, 9.30 a.m., breakfast; 10.30 a.m., visits from Chiefs to His Royal Highness; 2 p.m., lunch; 4.30 p.m., Their Royal Highnesses drive through the native town, and open a new street en route; 8 p.m., banquet, followed by Levée at the Secretariat and purdah party at Government House.

November 11th, 10 a.m., His Royal Highness returns the visits of the Chiefs; 4.30 p.m., Their Royal Highnesses lay the foundation-stone of the Museum, and visit the dockyard and flagship; 8 p.m., dinner followed by reception of Native Chiefs first, and then a more general reception.

November 12th, rest. In the evening Their Royal Highnesses attend Divine Service at the Cathedral.

November 13th, 10 a.m., His Royal Highness returns visits of Chiefs; 4.30 p.m., Their Royal Highnesses lay the foundation-stone of the new dock and call at the Yacht Club; 8.30, quiet dinner, followed by Byculla Club Ball.

November 14th, 10.30 a.m., Reception of lesser Chiefs and other interviews; afternoon, drive through the children's fete to the Apollo Bundar, and go by steam launch to the Elephant Caves. Private dinner and departure.

Mysore Herald.—The Government of His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore have sanctioned the following sums in connection with the visit of Their Royal Highnesses:—Kedda operations, Rs. 80,000; Industrial and Agricultural Exhibition, Rs. 30,000; Improvements to the Government House and the Park, Rs. 20,000; Purchase of furniture and tents, Rs. 43,000; Entertainments, Rs. 30,000; Carriage of tents, etc., Rs. 4,000; Preparation of camping ground, Rs. 5,000; Feeding horses and ponies and batta to servants, Rs. 2,000; Motor cars, Rs. 16,000; Reception expenses in the capital, Rs. 20,000; Fireworks in the capital, Rs. 20,000; Reception expenses in Bangalore City, Rs. 17,000; Miscellaneous expenses for the Mysore city, Rs. 34,000 and for the Bangalore city, Rs. 2,000.

According to present arrangements, Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will arrive at the capital on the afternoon of Monday, the 29th January 1906. Exchange visits will be paid on the same afternoon by the Prince of Wales and His Highness the Maharaja and private dinner will be given to Their Royal Highnesses the same evening. Their Royal Highnesses will inspect the capital on the morning of Tuesday, the 30th January and a visit will be paid to Seringapatam. The Royal party will return the same afternoon. At night a State Dinner will be given to the Royal party. Fireworks will follow the dinner. Their Royal Highnesses will leave for the Kedda camp on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 31st January. On the 4th of February Their Royal Highnesses return from the shooting excursion and the departure to Bangalore the same day will be private.

The Tunga Penlop of Bhutan has accepted the Government of India's invitation to be present in Calcutta during the Royal visit.

Times of India.—The authorities of the Aligarh Mahomedan College have been informed that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will be pleased to visit their college on March 6th.

Vanity Fair.—To say that India is looking forward to the forthcoming visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales with intense interest is to state the condition of affairs very mildly. From Colombo to Peshawar and from Rangoon to Karachi the whole Dependency is stirred, and everywhere great preparations for the fitting reception and welcome of the Royal tourists are going forward.

The Renown has been temporarily classified as a Royal Yacht, and none of the routine duties of a man-of-war will be performed on her during the voyage. The crew will be kept employed with physical drill under a special officer, Lieutenant Eric Fullerton. The Prince will not proceed under his own flag as a Vice-Admiral, but will travel as a Royal Personage.

The tour, both in extent of ground to be covered and the length of time to be devoted to it, far surpasses the visit of his present Majesty in 1875. Since that time much new territory has been added to our Indian Empire, and as much of this as possible has been included in the arrangements for the present tour. Burma, for instance, will now for the first time receive a visit from members of the British Royal Family.

In some quarters the tour has been referred to as a "Royal Holiday." A pretty holiday, forsooth! From the moment Their Royal Highnesses set foot on Indian soil at Bombay down to the time when they quit it at Calcutta every waking moment will be fully occupied. Take Lahore as an example. This town will be reached on November 28th. During the four days that Their Royal Highnesses will remain in the town ten of the leading Princes of the Punjab, headed by the Maharaja of Patiala, will be received in audience and their visits returned, a State dinner will be held at Government House, an afternoon purdah party patronised, and an illuminated drive to the beautiful Shalimar Gardens undertaken, while a ball on a large scale winds up the programme. Not much holiday for the Prince and Princess in these four days, which may be held as a fair sample, taken at random, of what will have to be performed every day that the tour lasts.

Since the programme for this tour was originally drawn up at the beginning of the summer, many alterations and additions have been made. It is now settled, however, that Their Royal Highnesses will land at Bombay on November 9th—the King's birthday—and leave for Indore on November 14th. Bombay was the landing-place of the King in 1875, and great efforts are being made in the city to make the present occasion even more brilliant than its historic predecessor. The Municipality of Bombay has voted three lakhs of rupees to be spent on the festivities in connection with this visit, and some very gorgeous illuminations of the kind to which Bombay—in common with every other Eastern city—so readily lends itself are being arranged. Of the sum assigned, two-and-a-half lakhs are to be spent upon the erection of a new Museum and Library, which shall form a permanent memorial of the visit. The foundation-stone of these buildings will be laid by the Prince, and this will be the first function of importance on the tour.

Perhaps the greatest change in the programme that has been made since it was first drawn up is in connection with the great military review that it was proposed to hold on the historic Ridge outside Delhi, where so many deeds of valour were performed in 1857. Through the failure of the rains in this part of India, it has been found impossible to provide the necessary water for so many thousands of men and horses. This has been taken to mean in some quarters that no review on a large scale will be held; this, however, is erroneous. A succession of festivities in India without a great military spectacle forming a prominent part of them is a thing inconceivable. I have authority for stating that the review will be held on the lines originally laid down, and that it will take place, in all probability, in the broken country around Meerut, which is admirably adapted for a display of this nature, and where water and every other accommodation for any number of troops can be provided. Lord Kitchener will take command of the troops in person, and the forces on parade will represent every branch of the Native Army—regular and volunteer.

Another of the military spectacular displays will be a grand fête on the Hooghly at Calcutta. Instead of proceeding across the bridge and down the Strand Road, the ordinary route, the Prince will embark on a steamer and proceed to Prinsep's Ghat, between lines of "dressed" shipping. A ceremonial landing will be made from the water at the famous Ghat, where a great military function will be held. The streets to Government House will be lined with troops, and this welcome to the capital will be one of the great events.

Feminine society in India is somewhat downcast at the official announcement that the Princess of Wales will not hold any Drawing Rooms during the tour. It is the first time that a Royal Princess has visited India, with the exception of the Duchess of Connaught, and it was hoped that at least three Drawing Rooms, at Bombay, Calcutta, and Simla, would be held. A Drawing Room, however, in any part of the world is a peculiarly senseless function, and is certainly one that is quite unsuited to the climate of India. To jostle and push amid a perspiring crowd in over-heated rooms on an Indian evening is not an ordeal that anyone can contemplate with equanimity, and the Princess has been well advised in setting her face against Drawing Rooms. In their place there will be receptions, mainly in the open air, at almost every town visited, and here the ladies will be able to show their new costumes equally well and, the cynic would probably add, at much less cost to their husbands!

It is probable that the Princess will make a feature of visiting as many of the Dufferin Fund Hospitals as possible during her tour. These hospitals exist to provide proper medical and nursing attendance for the native women, and the interest that Her Royal Highness takes in nursing and hospital work is well known. These hospitals will have an added attraction for her by reason of the fact that she is the Vice-Patroness of the National Association for providing the women of India with medical aid, the Society that has control of these hospitals. While dealing more particularly with the Princess, it may be added that she is to be presented by the Calcutta municipal authority with a pearl necklace, said to be of surpassing beauty. This presentation, as now arranged, will be made just before the Renown sails for England, so that the gift will form a parting memento of an historic visit.

Special efforts are being made to provide the Prince with some really good shooting, and it is hoped that he will manage to bag several tigers before his tour expires. Tigers are growing more and more shy, and are retreating further from the haunts of man every year, so that one has now to travel many miles through jungle, scrub, and swamp before one can get any really good sport. The keenest sportsmen in India, however, have been exercising their minds on this question for some time past, and, as a result of their united efforts, the Prince is likely to get all the shooting for which he can find time.

Their Royal Highnesses have had a very good "agent in advance" in the person of Brigadier-General Beatson, who has traversed the entire route to be taken from start to finish, and has superintended all the preliminary arrangements. There are very few who possess a more extensive knowledge of every part of India than General Beatson, and it is only to be expected that in his hands things will go without a hitch from the day that the Renown weighs anchor down to that of its return to these shores.

When on the move the Prince will be catered for by Mr. H. Wutzler, who has catered for all the visitors of note, and belongs to the Victorian Order by reason of former Royal patronage.

Tribune, Lahore.—When our Gracious Emperor visited India as Prince of Wales a wave of indescribable joy and enthusiasm passed over the country. Old Calcutta men still talk fondly of the great outburst of loyal fervour that marked the advent of the then Royal Highness. But in how different a frame of mind the approaching Royal visit is contemplated! The repressive and reactionary rule of the last few years has killed the warmer impulses in the hearts of our countrymen towards the British Raj and its representatives. The partition of Bengal has not only filled all classes in that Province with discontent, but alarmed the thinking public in all parts of India. How can the hearts of a people warm towards rulers who have displayed such zid in carrying through an unnecessary project in spite of the protests and entreaties of 80 millions of loyal subjects?

Indian Daily News.—The Indian Mirror writes:—It was generally thought that the Prince of Wales during his visit to India would "skip" such tracts as are threatened with famine; but from his revised tour programme, it is evident that he will do nothing of the kind. The whole of Rajputana just now is writhing in the foul embraces of the famine-monster. And yet the only place dropped out of the Prince of Wales' programme or tour in Rajputana is Ajmere. His Royal Highness will visit the other States—Jeypore, Bikanir, Udeypore, Jodhpore, Alwar, etc.—just as usual. But the distress in Rajputana is said to be increasing. Fodder has become as scarce as anything, and relief works are daily increasing in number. The resources of the ruling Chiefs are bound to be strained to their utmost, and when every pice that they could spare is being required for the saving of precious human lives, it is hardly fair—it is hardly decent—to require them to divert any of the money that would otherwise flow into this channel, and go to save people from starvation and death, for the purpose of giving a fitting reception to the Prince and Princess of Wales. For every pice they spend on such reception, they will have to deprive starving people of the succour they so badly need. Surely this is not as it should be. Though the Royal couple may make no more than two or three days' stay in every State they visit, their reception would cost each State something like two lakhs of rupees in round numbers. These two lakhs would enable many men to keep the body and soul together for at least a week. And yet the money must be diverted from its legitimate purpose—that of saving lives—and spent on the reception of the Royal couple. This is not only unfair to the Chiefs and their subjects—it is also unfair to the future King and Queen of India.

14TH OCTOBER 1905.

Gentleman.—Apropos of Royalty, all loyal English subjects have their Prince and Princess of Wales much in their minds at this present moment, and the deep sympathy of every mother's heart goes out to the Princess in this trying moment, when, even for a comparatively short space of time, she has to say adieu to her adoring children. Few perhaps realize what an heroic effort it must cost the Princess thus to part from her beloved children for the long journey to India, but the Princess ever puts duty before inclination, and much as it tries her, she feels that it is essential that she should take part in her husband's Indian visit, thus making herself personally acquainted with his future distant subjects, and most important of all, in this venture, is the fact that for the very first time in history a future Queen-Consort of England will see and converse with the native women in their own homes and be able to impress them with her own personality and charm. As we all know, the Princess has had all her lovely trousseau for her visit to India made in England and entirely of English material, in this encouraging to the best of her power English trade. But it is not generally known perhaps how, not only as regards wearing apparel, the Princess of Wales par preference gives first and foremost her patronage to things English, but in furniture and china and knick-knacks generally.

The Princess loves to have all her rooms filled with flowers, and has a particular fancy for one great mass of bloom, or one very large hot-house plant or fern, as the case may be, to fill a recess in boudoir or corridor; and amongst her most charming possessions in the line of specially made English china, to her delight, are a set of several lovely big white china pots, almost as large as those associated in our minds as being made of wood to hold orange trees in any ordinary conservatory. These were an idea of the Princess's own, and ordered by her just before taking possession of Marlborough House for her private rooms. Of exactly the same height and depth, they are one and all of a dead white ground, but each varied by one particular English wild flower, such as a dog-rose or forget-me-not, and these again looped, each blossom separately, by a narrow riband of a different shade on each pot; thus to a pale blue flower a pale pink riband, and the design is finished off with band and old world lover's knot.

Graphic.—The saying that this country deserves to hold India because she always gives the very best of her children to the service of the three hundred millions of Asiatics under her rule receives fresh illustration in the approaching visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the land of Ind. Their Highnesses are of our "very best," and it is indisputable that India's gain will be England's loss so long as they remain in the East. Most happily, timely rain has saved the crops in most of the menaced districts, while there appears to be some abatement of the plague in the Punjab. So far as can be foreseen, therefore, there seems to be every likelihood of a good time for the illustrious visitors before they embark for their voyage home. The great military review or manœuvres arranged for by Lord Kitchener will present to them merely a sample of the constituents of the Anglo-Indian Army. In the picturesque plain around Rawal Pindi, standing out against the Lower Himalayas, they will see the chivalry of both East and West represented in its most varied types. But Sikhs, Hindoos, Mahomedans, Buddhists, Zoroastrians, and Christians will be at one in their appreciation of the honour paid to them by the British Shazada and his charming consort. And for the matter of that, this military sense of loyal gratitude will also be in evidence at every great city included in their extensive itinerary, right away down to Mandalay, where King Theebaw used to have a gong sounded after dinner to notify other sovereigns that he gave them permission to sit down to table.

Illustrated London News.—To transform a battle-ship into a gentleman's yacht is a feat of practical necromancy which might reasonably be supposed to baffle the combined ingenuity of dockyard superintendents, master ship-builders, and decorative designers. Yet this apparently impossible feat has been accomplished. The famous war-ship, H.M.S. Renown, has undergone a wonderful "sea change," and now with its beautiful polished decks and its smart white paint with bright green touches on the gunwale, looks exactly like a Royal yacht fit for the ruler of a great maritime Power. Britain is still Mistress of the Seas, and Britain's monarch should have a private yacht worthy of his great position.

Much of the interest and charm of this extraordinary transformation is due to the assistance of the well-known specialists, Messrs. Waring and Gillow, who were entrusted by the Admiralty with furnishing and decorating the state rooms for the use of their Royal Highnesses in connection with their forthcoming visit to India. The firm have had throughout their preparations the artistic suggestions of both the Prince and Princess of Wales, whose innate love of simplicity, exquisite taste, and fine judgment in the selection of colours have been of the greatest value, not only because it enabled the decorators to learn the personal wishes of the Royal travellers, but also because it lent a specific and distinctive note of refinement to the simple but very artistic scheme.

It will be within the recollection of the public that the Ophir, in which the Prince and Princess of Wales made their Colonial tour, was also fitted up and decorated by Waring and Gillow. In the case of that ship conditions were entirely different. The Ophir had previously been a passenger boat in the service of a well-known line, and, although much refitting was required, the transformation effected was in no sense so complete as it was on the Renown, which has hitherto been a battle-ship simply; and, as everyone knows, the difference between a liner and a battle-ship, so far as passenger accommodation is concerned, is enormous. The more recent task which Messrs. Waring and Gillow had set them was, therefore, far more difficult. They have accomplished it with a brilliant success, which has elicited not only the approbation of the Press but also the warm approval of the personages more intimately concerned.

It has not been found necessary to carry out great changes of a structural nature. Special suites of rooms for the use of the Princess have been made on the upper deck; but otherwise little has been altered on board since Sir John Fisher used the Renown as his flag ship. Her Royal Highness's apartments open on to the promenade deck. White, with its keynote of cheerfulness, is the principal colour used. The day-saloon, with bed-room and bath-room attached, is upholstered with cream challis patterned with pink rosebuds, and the electric lights have pink shades.

In the fore-cabin, or dining-room, French cream tissue bordered with a wreath lattice of pale blue has been used.

The after-cabin, or drawing-room, is furnished in an effective French tissue of pink and blue. The curtains are of the same material as those in the dining-room, and the electric-lights are enclosed in opaque glass with shades of pink.

The Prince of Wales's bed-room is upholstered with a handsome printed linen, the furniture being of fine mahogany. The fittings throughout are of silver plate, and so are the swing-cots, which are purposely designed and constructed to minimise the motion of the ship. The special feature of these rooms is their extreme refinement and simplicity.

The ornamentation is almost strictly confined to very delicately moulded panelling, which is relieved by some fine old mezzotints from York Cottage.

It is chiefly upon the panelling, draperies, and upholstery that the decorators' artistic efforts have been concentrated, with the result that the state rooms, which in their old guise were typical examples of the heaviness and gloom which generally characterise a ship below deck, have disappeared as if under a magic touch, and lightness, brightness, and elegance have taken their place. The finished beauty of the plated fittings, the judicious harmonies of colour, the practical devices for securing comfort and ministering to the convenience of the Royal passengers, and the general note of quiet taste are noteworthy points to be emphasised in connection with the work. One can be sure that their Royal Highnesses will enjoy their temporary home on the sea none the less for the simple artistic surroundings—surroundings which are so largely due to the initiative of their own refined and perfect taste.

King.—Quite quietly, and without any previous announcement, the Renown and the Terrible weighed anchor on Sunday morning and left Portsmouth for Genoa, there to await the coming of the Prince and Princess of Wales to embark for Bombay. Genoa is justly proud of her position as Italy's chief seaport, and has honoured the memory of the two men who did so much to give her that distinction. To the Duke of Galliera, who interested himself in the harbour works, and Raffiela Rubattino, founder of one of the great Italian shipping firms, statues have been raised; and in addition to her other charms Genoa can claim to have, in the grounds of the Villetta Dinegro, one of Italy's most beautiful parks, and one which is even held to rival the Pincio Gardens of Rome. It is expected that the Prince and Princess of Wales will leave next week, as they are due at Bombay early in the second week of next month. A glance at the itinerary for the first month's travel in India shows that it was not without reason that a specially comfortable train has been prepared for the Royal tourists. They are to visit a round dozen of towns in that time, and will not be staying a clear week in any one of them.

Pioneer.—Among the typical Indian displays that are being arranged for the Prince and Princess of Wales are elephant processions at Gwalior and Benares respectively. These will be on a large scale and should be very effective, as at each of these places the local surroundings lend themselves to ceremonies of this kind.

It is officially stated that the report which has found credence in some quarters that the salt duty will be reduced or abolished in connection with the Prince of Wales's visit is entirely without foundation.

The Convocation of the Calcutta University will take place this cold weather on the 1st January, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales being present on the occasion.

The Baluch Sardars will be assembled at Quetta to meet the Prince and Princess of Wales during their Royal Highnesses' visit there from the 12th to the 16th March.

Mr. Valentine Chirol, foreign editor of the Times, will arrive in India by the mail steamer of the 20th instant, and will spend the cold weather out here. The Times representative on the Royal tour will be Mr. Lionel James. Mr. Percival Landon, who is representing the Daily Telegraph, is already at Simla.

Standard.—Amongst the experiences of the Prince of Wales during his Indian tour will be that of ballooning, in order to obtain a more extended view of the country, particularly at Calcutta and other Indian cities. The balloon to be used by the royal party will be the large one belonging to Mr. Stanley Spencer, aeronaut, who crossed from Dover yesterday to join the Peninsular and Oriental liner Ocean at Marseilles for India. Mr. Spencer, who is taking his balloon to Calcutta for the Prince, informed our Dover Correspondent yesterday that the Prince of Wales takes great interest in aeronautics.

Times of India.—A "Bombay Government Gazette" Extraordinary issued last night contained the following notification:—

His Excellency the Governor in Council is pleased to declare the 9th November, 1905, to be a public holiday in the Presidency proper in honour of the occasion of the visit to Bombay of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. His Excellency the Governor in Council is pleased to declare that Saturday, the 11th, and Monday, the 13th November 1905, shall be observed as public holidays throughout the Presidency (except Sind and Aden) on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Bombay.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, during his visit to Lahore, will probably open the new and handsome buildings of Punjab University. A public meeting will be held in Lawrence Hall, Lahore, on Saturday to appoint a reception committee in connection with the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Lahore. Sir William Clark will take the chair.

We are asked to state that the members of the Executive Committee of the Indian Ladies Reception to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales in Bombay have received contributions from Rani Sahib Luxmibai of Baroda, and the Dowager Begum Sahib of Bella and others. It has been brought to the committee's notice that ladies in the mofussil are desirous to join this movement, and to meet their wishes it is announced that ladies of respectable families who wish to do so should send their names and donation, to the Honorary Secretary, Lady Jehangir, Readymoney House, Nepean Sea Road, Malabar Hill, Bombay. Editors of the mofussil newspapers are requested kindly to repeat this intimation.

Whitehall Review.—These are the days of travel, of endless journeyings to and fro, when no corner of the earth is left unexplored by those in search of health, change, and novelty. Of course the forthcoming visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India will once again serve to draw our attention to our great Eastern Empire, even as it was in the never-to-be-forgotten days of the great Durbar. I am afraid that many of us must, to speak truly, confess that our knowledge of India is very limited. Our thoughts are usually so centred in our own little world that we cannot spare time to think of those subjects of the King-Emperor in a country so far off. Probably the visit of Their Royal Highnesses will do much to help to render India fashionable, and draw much closer the bonds between East and West. Let us hope this may be so. I am sure that the people of India and their institutions would prove worthy of our most careful study, and I should not be surprised to see some Indian notions adopted in our fashions next summer.

Englishman.—There will be a big gathering of the Punjab Imperial Service troops at Lahore for the Prince of Wales' visit and His Royal Highness will witness a grand parade on the 30th November or 1st December. It is hoped that each Chief will lead his own troops past the saluting point. The camp will be pitched at Ichra, about two miles south of Government House, and it is expected that the Chiefs of Nabha, Jind, Bhawalpur, Patiala, Kapurthala, Faridkot, Sirmoor and Maler Kotla will all be present with their troops.

Madras Mail.—The Mhow correspondent of the Advocate of India writes under date the 11th instant the following particulars of the new special train that has been constructed for the use of the Prince and Princess of Wales on the occasion of their forthcoming visit:—

I had the advantage of seeing at the railway station here this morning six carriages of the new train constructed by the Rajputana-Malwa Railway at their Ajmer shops, which will be used by the Prince and Princess of Wales over all the metro gauge railways in India. The appearance of a section of the train here was due to a trial being made of the saloons over the Mhow Ghauts to ascertain by actual experience that all was right. The six vehicles which drew up here had an imposing appearance, suggesting the American Pullman car, and painted in cream and lake, they look truly royal and magnificent. The six coaches were sufficient to occupy the whole length of the Mhow platform.

Although there was some objection to giving information I was able to learn a few particulars which I am sure will interest you. The train when complete will comprise two Royal saloons of 58 feet long, two Staff carriages of 54 feet, one dining car, 51 feet, one kitchen car, 51, three bogie composites and three bogie, "thirds," one tourist's carriage and brakes. This will complete the composition and make up a train of 13 vehicles of over 220 yards in length. The design and construction of the Royal "Special" is entirely new, and has been carried out at the Ajmer shops from the plans of Mr. A. T. Houldcroft, Carriage and Wagon Superintendent. Notwithstanding the fact that the order was not given until May last, and materials had to be procured specially after the designs were complete, the work has been carried through well within time, which is a feat in which the Ajmer shops may take pride. The result is, I have no hesitation in saying, a train which is without its equal for elegance and comfort and easy running in India, and, possibly, in the whole of the East.

One thing which interested me much was the electric fittings and their marvellous completeness. The principle adopted is the Vicarino-Crawford system, which is the very last word in electric plant for railway purposes. Its mechanical excellence practically does away with any possibility of break down, and it has this further advantage, that it has been adapted to the climate of India. Mr. A. A. Crawford, one of the inventors, having made a long series of experiments in this country. I had an opportunity of examining this plant closely, and it appears that every possible contingency has been provided for, including stationary dynamos for long halts. The electric fittings, supplied by the Bombay Electric Company, are magnificent in design, and besides the lamps there are fans, stores, grills, water heaters, cigar lighters, tea kettle, and even a bed warmer. For completeness in this respect the train is very far ahead of anything hitherto attempted in this country and up to the highest standard reached in Europe or the United States.

These are but a few rough details of the six carriages I saw. I heard that the trip over the charts proved an entire success.

There was plenty of room and the brakes were sufficient to stop the train at any point, including a gradient of 1 in 40. Only the vacuum brake was used, as it was decided to take the train down without the ghaat brake. The running was beautifully silent, and notwithstanding the fact that this was the first trip not a single box ran hot. The six-wheeled bogies under the Royal cars are also a new feature on vehicles for this gauge. They are the first of the type. The radial action of the bogies is exceptional with the object of providing for the sharpest curves, and the capacity of the cars may be judged from the fact that in leaving the shops they easily negotiated a curve of not more than three times the carriage length. I give you this somewhat impressionist view of the new Royal train. To my mind it is a wonderful piece of work, and eloquent testimony of what can really be done in an Indian shop.

17TH OCTOBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—A public meeting was held in the Lawrence Hall, Lahore, on Saturday evening with the object of appointing a Reception Committee in connection with the forthcoming visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to the capital of the Punjab.

In the unavoidable absence of Sir W. O. Clark, owing to illness, the chair was taken by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Reid. In his opening speech the Chairman said the object of the meeting was to appoint a committee to devise means for welcoming Their Royal Highnesses in a manner worthy of the occasion and of the capital of a province whose loyalty had been so conspicuous in the past. To those who had the honour of meeting or seeing His Most Gracious Majesty the King-Emperor during his visit to India in the cold weather of 1875-76, the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses would be doubly auspicious, and he had no doubt that the younger generation would be at least equally anxious to do homage and honour to the representatives of their King and Queen. The last 30 years had brought great changes in India and in the Punjab in particular, and the residents of Lahore had now an opportunity of showing—by giving Their Royal Highnesses a fitting welcome—that the spirit of loyalty had in no way diminished during that period. Applause.)

Mr. Younghusband, Commissioner of Lahore, said Mr. Justice Reid had expressed the feeling of all those present, and indeed of the whole city and station, when he said that they desired to give a fitting welcome to the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Government had, as was right and proper, prepared a programme of what Their Royal Highnesses would be invited to do during the course of their visit, and it might be as well that he should give an outline of it. The royal party would arrive on the afternoon of the 28th November, about 3 P.M. They would at once drive round to see the outskirts of Lahore and the fort, passing the camp of the Ruling Chiefs near the fort, then along the Grand Trunk Road and through the Anarkali Gardens to the Town Hall, where an address would be presented by the Municipal Committee. After this ceremony they would pass down the Mall to Government House. In the evening there would be a reception in Montgomery Hall which all Viceregal durbars would be invited to attend. The morning of the 29th would be spent in receiving visits from the Ruling Chiefs; in the afternoon a visit would be paid to the Lady Aitchison Hospital, and at night it was proposed that there should be fireworks and illuminations in the Shalimar Gardens and that the roads thither should be illuminated. That entertainment would be given by the public, and would afford the native public an opportunity of showing some hospitality to Their Royal Highnesses. The next morning would be spent in returning the visits of the Ruling Chiefs: in the afternoon Lady Rivaz would give a purdah party for purdah ladies at which

Her Royal Highness the Princess would be present, and the Prince of Wales would pay a visit to the Aitchison College. In the evening there would be a ball in the Montgomery Hall. Next day there would be a visit to the Fort, and in the afternoon a garden party.

It had been suggested that the public might decorate the streets through which the royal procession would pass and give the entertainment at Shalimar. It had also been suggested, and he thought the idea was a good one, that the school children of Lahore should be given an opportunity of seeing their future Emperor and Empress, and it was proposed that stands should be erected along the route from the station and all the school children of Lahore should be invited to witness the procession from these stands. All this would cost money. Some time back it was decided to call a public meeting early in October to consider the matter, and in the meantime a small sub-committee was asked to work out a scheme of what could be done and what it would cost. The committee had done a lot of work, and they estimated that the cost of the programme he had outlined would be about Rs. 25,000. He did not think that a fitting welcome, worthy of the capital of the Punjab, could be given to Their Royal Highnesses for a smaller sum than that. This calculation included Rs. 2,000 for the decoration of the Town Hall. The Municipal Committee had offered to contribute a sum of Rs. 10,000 to the total expenses, which would leave about Rs. 15,000 to be raised by public subscription.

The Commissioner then proposed the following resolution:—

“That the gentlemen named be invited to form a committee, whose functions will be to arrange for the decoration and illumination of the roads along which Their Royal Highnesses will pass on their arrival and subsequently on ceremonial visits during their stay in Lahore, to arrange for a display of fireworks and illuminations at Shalimar in honour of Their Royal Highnesses, and to invite subscriptions from the public for these objects, and that the gentlemen nominated by the committee be invited to form an executive sub-committee with power to add to their number, to carry out the objects for which the committee is appointed:—

Mr. Florence seconded the resolution, and Mr. Ganpat Rai proposed the addition of certain names to the committee:— This proposal being accepted by the meeting, the resolution was briefly supported by Mr. Justice Lal Chand, and carried unanimously, a vote of thanks to the Chairman concluding the proceedings.

Egyptian Gazette.—The inhabitants of Port Said are already beginning to prepare for the forthcoming visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales and to all appearances, local Britishers are determined to give Their Royal Highnesses a fitting welcome. The arrangements which have so far been made for the Royal trip are as follows. Their Royal Highnesses will leave London on the 19th instant and proceed to Genoa, where they will embark on the 21st on the H. M. S. Renown. This warship will be accompanied by H. M. S. Terrible, Suffolk, and Lancashire as far as Port Said, where they are expected to arrive at midday on the 26th instant. All four vessels will be moored in the Dutch Basin, which is being specially reserved for them. The Royal party will probably proceed to Cairo on the evening of their arrival, or, at the latest, on the following morning, spending a day or two in the Capital. They will afterwards return to Port Said and re-embark on the Renown, which, on resuming her voyage, will be accompanied by the Terrible—the other two ships remaining here for station orders. In the Red Sea the two ships will probably be met and escorted by a detachment of the East Indian Squadron to Aden before their final departure for India.

Englishman.—Elaborate preparations are being made at Government House, Lucknow, in view of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales. Their Royal Highnesses will stay here two days. Government House has been thoroughly renovated, and an electrical installation is now approaching completion. The latter work is being carried out by Messrs. Balmer, Lawrie & Co., at a cost of about Rs. 27,000.

Standard.—The manoeuvres round Rawal Pindi will probably be extended, owing to the desire of the Prince of Wales to see the army at work. Lord Kitchener is making a tour of the military stations, which are included in the Punjab programme; and he has inspected the ground about Attock and Rawal Pindi with a view to arranging the manoeuvre schemes.

The Peshawar, Rawal Pindi and Lahore Divisions will be employed under Lieutenant-General Sir Edmund Barrow, Major-General J. H. Wodehouse, and Major-General F. W. Kitchener, the Commander-in-Chief's brother. The brigade commanders will be Major-Generals J. B. Woon, R. A. P. Clements, Brigadier-Generals B. Mahon, J. A. H. Pollock, R. B. Adams, Sir J. Wilcocke, H. A. Abbott, and Colonel W. DuG. Gray. These latter commands comprise the troops from Nowshera, Mardan, Abbottabad, Sialkote, Jullundur, Sirhind, Umballa, Multan, and Ferozepur.

The three divisions will furnish a fine force of British and native troops, and although the numbers taking part are not yet fixed, the field state will probably show nearly 50,000 men, under the chief command of General Sir Bindon Blood.

The naval band which is accompanying the Prince on the Renown is under the direction of Mr. E. C. Stratton, the warrant officer of the Royal Naval School of Music at Eastney Barracks, Portsmouth. The band comprises 35 to 40 men, specially selected from ship and shore stations.

Times of India.—Improvements costing nearly half a lakh of rupees are being made to Government House in connection with the forthcoming visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the principal of which is an installation of electric light, which is being carried out by Messrs. Balmer, Lawrie & Co., of Calcutta, at a cost of nearly Rs. 30,000.

World.—In Calcutta we are already beginning to make our preparations for a worthy and fitting reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and, as a favourable first impression is most important, it is very satisfactory to hear that the Royal tourists are to be spared the usual painful drive through the evil-smelling slums which disfigure the outskirts of the City of Palaces, and will instead steam down the river from Howrah railway station to Princep's Ghat—that spot endeared to so many of us exiles from home as the place where we occasionally shake the Calcutta dust from off our shoes and embark on the liner's tender—where they will land and drive past the Eden Gardens to Government House, a route on which Calcutta is seen at her best. In spite of the disloyal vapourings of blustering Bengali boycotters, the second city in the Empire may be depended on to give a warm and loyal welcome to the Heir to the Throne and to the first Princess of Wales who has visited us.

18TH OCTOBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—A frontier correspondent writes:—It is considered likely here that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales may venture beyond Peshawar to have a look at the famous Khyber Pass. A bungalow at Landikotal is, at any rate, being put in order for their possible reception.

The Bombay Government notify that during the forthcoming royal tour arrangements can be made for two representatives of the native press to accompany the royal party in the Bombay presidency. The native papers are advised to combine to appoint joint representatives as the European papers have done, and permission to accompany the royal party will, ceteris paribus, be given to representatives whose reports will be available to the largest number of the leading journals.

A resolution was unanimously passed adopting the Commissioner's views and appointing a strong and representative Executive Committee.

Indian Daily News.—In view of the ensuing Prince of Wales's visit to India, I should like, writes a correspondent to the Times of India, to be cleared of a misgiving which often troubles my mind. I object to the Prince being called "His Royal Highness" in India. To me it appears that His Highness might more fittingly be called "His Imperial Highness", inasmuch as he is the Heir Apparent or the Crown Prince of the Emperor of India. His Majesty the King-Emperor, among his various titles, has that of "Emperor of India". Naturally to the people of India this title should appeal foremost, and since in India His Majesty should more fittingly be addressed "His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of India"—occupying as His Majesty does the highest situation that a man can occupy in the present world, as His Excellency the Governor of Bombay said during the Town Hall meeting. I shall be gratified to know why the Prince of Wales should not be more appropriately addressed "His Imperial Highness", since he is of the blood of the Emperor.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—The King gave the Prince of Wales a farewell dinner at Buckingham Palace last night. Over forty guests were present including Lord Minto.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—Throughout the Prince of Wales' visit the Sabbath will be strictly observed, and when travelling on that day necessary arrangements will be made for morning or evening services. No shooting will take place on Sunday. Nothing definite is known regarding the proposed visit of the Prince of Wales to Simla and it seems quite possible that the visit may not take place.

We are asked to state that the members of the Executive Committee of the Indian Ladies' Reception to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales in Bombay, have received contributions from Rani Sahib Luxmibai of Baroda, and the Dowager Begum Sahib of Bella and others. Indian Daily Telegraph.—Arrangements will, if possible, be made, whereby small parties of officers of H.M.S. Renown will enjoy some sport and sight-seeing in India during the Royal visit.

Daily Telegraph.—To-day Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by the fervent prayers and cordial good wishes of millions of their future subjects, start on their second great Imperial tour. It is significant of the magnitude of the British Empire that it is impossible for the most industrious and enduring of Princes to comprise within the limits of a year a visit of inspection to its chief landmarks. Naturally, the children of the hearth had the first claim upon the Royal family and the remarkable tour of 1902 left a deep impression upon the minds and memories of hosts and guests alike. Nobody has forgotten the plain words in which the Prince of Wales so tersely summed up the lessons he had learnt in the course of that instructive round of family visits. "England must wake up." Everywhere within the Empire as without its boundaries, foreign competition is, or should be, spurring on the captains of our national industries to enable them to hold their own in the race in which it was once "England first and the rest nowhere." In our great Indian dependency the Prince of Wales will encounter the same phenomena as extorted from him the historic phrase at the Guildhall. There, too, in a world we have opened for commerce, and have endowed with that atmosphere of peace and order in which alone commerce and industry can thrive, it requires all our genius and business aptitude to enable us to hold our own. But it is not this aspect of the Imperial problem which will appeal most to Their Royal Highnesses on this occasion. It has been well said that if every other relic of England's work in the world perished irrecoverably, and India alone remained, it would suffice to prove the might and valour and justice of a great governing race of men. We have made our mistakes there as elsewhere; we have trusted there as elsewhere to the spontaneous resource of British genius "to muddle through" difficulties which might have been anticipated. But permeating all, in the civil as in the military sphere, there have never been wanting the dogged resolution, the cool courage, and the love of even handed justice which have made our Indian Empire possible, and the lot of its inhabitants happier, or, at worst, less unhappy, than their forefathers had known through countless generations back to the dawn of history. M. Cambon, in his felicitous speech at the banquet given by the Chairman of the London County Council to the members of the Council Municipal, talking as a Parisian, said, "In every time and under all Governments the Parisians have had a passion for criticism. They criticise themselves about everything, but they find a delicious pleasure in speaking ill of their Government and of their municipal administrations." We can assure the admirable representative of France that in so saying he has riveted another link in the golden chain of the entente. What Parisians say about themselves, their Governments, and their municipal administrations, Englishmen of the average type are always saying about the British Empire. They love it in their hearts, but "they find a delicious pleasure" in "crabbing" it with their tongues. It is a curious trait of corporate character, and it sometimes undergoes a morbid development which experiences unhealthy joy when a learned Babu comes to England and tells us his countrymen are ground down under the iron heel of a despotism which the most "fluent" does not venture to describe as corrupt. We have governed and are governing India in a spirit of justice and consideration for the wants of the inhabitants, and it is part of the irony of nature that some of the greatest and most perplexing problems which confront the "Raj" are the direct results of the "Pax Britannica" which India has enjoyed for so long a spell in her chequered, eventful, and blood-stained history.

Their Royal Highnesses will learn, from the testimony of their own eyes and ears, that India has not stood still since the memorable visit of their august father just 30 years ago. It had been a favourite scheme of the Prince Consort, first suggested to him by Lord Canning, that the Heir-Apparent to the Throne should visit the Indian possessions of the Crown. Prince Albert, prematurely cut off, died more than a dozen years before one of his dearest dreams was realised. Even in 1875, when His Majesty—then Prince of Wales—undertook his memorable tour in India, there was much heart-searching and no little anxiety in the minds of many Indian experts as to the risks of the experiment. But considerations for personal safety have never weighed with our reigning House, and the then Prince of Wales accepted with unfeigned enthusiasm the advice of Mr. Disraeli's Government to pay a State visit to India. "The event of the Prince's coming", wrote Lord Napier of Magdala—and there is no sounder judge then living—"is a great one for our prestige in India. It is a want that has been unfulfilled since the time of the best Moguls. The shadow of it rests in the mind of the old Zemindar, who holds with pride the family sunnud given by Akbar". As the biographer of Sir Bartle Frere—chosen as it were by acclamation to act as the Prince's guide—truly says: "It requires an effort of the imagination to realise that—like the act of homage done in public to the liege lord in the feudal ages of Europe—the regulated splendours of an Indian Durbār still constitute a recognition, a symbol, and a picture of existing fact, and an indication of the source and degrees of authority, which have a practical effect and influence on the minds of those who witness them." The same authority adds that "the tour from first to last had been beyond all expectation successful." We may safely anticipate an equally beneficial result from the visit of the present Prince of Wales, who at the age of forty treads the path in which the king walked when he was but thirty-four. India, as we have said, has not stood still during these last 30 years, and the Prince and Princess of Wales will visit extreme districts of the Empire, which even the boldest and most sanguine of Indian rulers dared not recommend His Majesty to traverse in 1875-76. The railway communications of India have been quadrupled since the last Prince of Wales was there. Peshawar, which will mark the most northerly point of the Royal tour, was not only beyond the reach of railways 30 years ago, but as Frere wrote to Lord Salisbury, "armed robbers are always prowling about at night, and after dark our own people do not generally go about without arms or armed attendants. Sentries and pickets are always posted as if in face of an enemy, and anyone who goes at night beyond their lines, or who at any time passes the frontier, may expect to be shot at by our neighbours." To-day the city and suburbs of Peshawar are as safe as Battersea and Chelsea. Or to take another instance: a visit—alike indispensable and delightful—will be paid to the Maharaja Sindhia, at Gwalior, in a couple of hours from Agra; in 1875 such a call entailed a drive of 70 or 80 miles. Early in the next year the Royal travellers will pay in ease, safety, and comfort a visit to Mandalay, via Rangoon, which, when His Majesty made his tour, was not incorporated in the Empire. Quetta, which lay outside the safety zone in 1875, will now be visited as a matter of course, and when the time comes for leaving India, the Prince and Princess of Wales will depart from a port—Karachi—which had hardly any importance when their Royal father was in India but which to-day numbers over a hundred thousand inhabitants, and exports hundreds of thousands of tons of wheat from the productive fields of the Punjab. It is impossible to expect too much from the Royal visit; our prestige in the East stands higher to-day than it has ever stood, and there is every reason to believe that an entente with Russia will soon relieve the rulers of the greatest of British dependencies from the anxieties and expense which the possibility of border complications inevitably involves. England speeds her Royal travellers—true missionaries of Empire—with every good wish, and will hail them on their return, after a journey which may God grant will be propitious, with increased gratitude for the Imperial services which our Reigning House has never withheld, and which its members alone can perform with the dignity of their unique and magnificent position.

Evening Standard and St. James's Gazette.—There is nothing that has endeared King Edward VII. to his subjects so much as his universal good humour and tact, and it is these qualities which have enabled him, during the short period of his reign, to cement our friendly relationship throughout Europe, and to bring us closer to the Dependencies of the Crown. It seems only the other day that the Prince and Princess of Wales returned from their successful tour in the Colonies. Now they are to visit India, where the Heir Apparent goes for the first time to represent His Majesty in our vast Eastern possessions.

The preparations for this tour, fraught with so much importance, have of a necessity required the most elaborate planning and forethought, and everything that can make both the voyage and the visit as easy and enjoyable as possible has been done. A good deal of State pageant must attend the journey, and it is more or less imperative that the son of the Emperor should arrive in the East in Imperial fashion.

A special train, with dining and day saloons and sleeping apartments, will convey the Prince and his party across France to Italy, where they will be entertained at a farewell fête organised by the King and Queen of Italy, prior to joining their ship at Genoa.

The work of converting the huge battleship Renown, which is destined to carry the travellers, was completed over a week ago, when, accompanied by the cruiser Terrible, she left Portsmouth, having on board a large number of the suite, who will have the advantage of getting used to the sea by the time they arrive at Genoa, and be in readiness to receive the Prince and Princess on Saturday next.

A huge naval pageant has been arranged for the following Monday, when the royal travellers will be escorted through the Straits of Messina by the fleet, which will leave Malta the day before, and consists of His Majesty's ships Bulwark, Queen, Formidable, Implacable, Venerable, Irresistible, Goliath, Prince of Wales, Leviathan, Venus, Sentinel, and fifteen destroyers. These will meet the Renown off Cape Pellarò, and the manoeuvres will begin with a royal salute, and terminate with a grand display of illuminations in the evening, before the fleet returns to Malta. The life on board promises to be very enjoyable, provided the travellers are favoured with good weather. For the transformation of the huge battleship provides—in addition to the ship's full complement—provision for a company of about one hundred, composed of ladies and gentlemen of the suite and their personal attendants. All the officers—including the captain and the commander—have given up their cabins to the visitors, extra cabins being formed in the empty casements of the guns, that have had to be vacated, only those required for saluting purposes being left.

The special suites of rooms reserved for the Prince and Princess have been handsomely fitted up—those of the Princess being built on the promenade deck. This site has been specially selected on account of Her Royal Highness being a bad sailor. All the cabins are heated throughout and ventilated by electricity. A spacious dining-room, capable of seating some fifty guests, with a charming retiring or drawing-room leading out of it, have been arranged in the Admiral's apartments for the use of the royal guests. For in spite of the fact that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is a Vice-Admiral, and as such will be superior in rank to any officer on board the Renown, His Royal Highness will not fly his own pennant during the voyage, but will rank simply as a royal visitor. Every possible amusement to relieve the monotony of the life on board has been thought of. Games of every kind, including ship's croquet, quoits, bull-board, and so on, are provided. The decks have been covered with linoleum to deaden all sound, and roofed in with an immense awning; this will allow of dancing on board, as well as supplying a shady place, which should prove an inestimable boon during the time the travellers are in the tropics.

A library of well-chosen books, including several recent works on India, specially selected by the Princess, and a number of Hindustani grammars have been placed on board—for it is a curious fact that no member of the party has an acquaintance with the native language.

Preparations have also been made for publishing a paper on board, news for which will be collected by means of wireless telegraphy.

Upon their arrival in Bombay, the Prince and Princess will be received by Lord Curzon, and once in the East they will find a programme of enormous length has been prepared. India is laying itself out to entertain its royal visitors with lavish Oriental hospitality.

Excellent sport will be provided for the Prince, who is an expert shot. Not only is His Royal Highness taking out a great assortment of guns for this purpose, but he has also a taxidermist attached to his staff, in order that the more valuable skins and trophies of the chase may receive immediate attention.

For the convenience of the royal guests a special train de luxe has been built to Lord Curzon's order. This far surpasses in grandeur any train that has hitherto been seen in India. It consists of dining and sleeping cars and special apartments for the use of the Prince and Princess. The apartments destined for the use of the Prince are upholstered in green morocco, and those furnished for the Princess in delicate French grey; the whole train being on the outside painted cream colour and ornamented with the royal arms, while the inside is decorated with highly polished woods, the various natural colours of which have been wonderfully preserved

Of the gowns and jewels taken by the Princess much has been written. The latter alone have been insured for £50,000; but this does not include the magnificent collection of orders and badges which the Prince is taking, nor yet the collection of English-made jewels, in the form of brooches and scarf pins, etc., destined to be distributed amongst various people with whom he will come in contact. In addition to these the royalties are taking huge quantities of their own photographs, for which they have given special sittings, as well as no fewer than forty-four oil paintings of King Edward, in the uniform of a field marshal, and 520 large colour prints from the same, which are intended for the adornment of public buildings, Government residences, courts of law, etc., throughout the Great Empire of India.

Indian Daily News.—It is now settled that the 15th King's Hussars will come down to Calcutta during Christmas week for escort duty in connection with the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and will be under canvas on the Calcutta maidan as there are no cavalry barracks available in Calcutta.

It is a great number of years since Calcutta has had a cavalry regiment in her midst, and, if memory serves us, the last corps to visit us from an up-country station was the Behar Light Horse who encamped on the Ballygunge maidan in the year of the Calcutta Exhibition.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—Mr. Brodrick entertained the Prince and Princess of Wales at the India Office to-day. Lord Minto, Lord Lansdowne and the Marquis of Bath were present.

Sketch.—The Prince and Princess of Wales leave this country under happier auspices than they did when they set out for their great Colonial tour, for the nation was then under the deep shadow of Queen Victoria's death. Again, vast as is the Indian Empire, it seems to many of us to be now, in a sense, nearer and more familiar than are certain portions of Greater Britain, if only because there is such a constant coming and going between England and India. The King's visit there is vividly remembered by many of the older Anglo-Indian officials and by many of the native Princes by whom he was welcomed with such enthusiasm, and they are looking forward to greeting the Prince of Wales. The presence of the Princess will, of course, add greatly to the interest of those Eastern potentates who are accustomed to regard sovereignty as essentially masculine, and that in spite of the fact that the last ruler of India was a Queen.

Daily Chronicle.—In view of the departure this morning of the Prince and Princess of Wales for India, the King and Queen gave a family luncheon party at Buckingham Palace yesterday afternoon, at which the three elder children of the Prince and Princess were present. Many hundreds of persons who had witnessed the return of the Royal procession from Aldwych waited outside the Palace to see Their Royal Highnesses—probably for the last time for many months. The arrangements for the departure to-day have been completed. The Prince and Princess, with members of their suite, will drive in a plain carriage and without escort to Victoria Station (S. E. and C. R.) at about half-past eleven in the morning. The suite in attendance on Their Royal Highnesses will be Sir Walter Lawrence, Lieutenant Colonel Sir Arthur Bigge, Lady Eva Dugdale, Hon'ble Derek Keppel and Captain Viscount Crichton. The King, and possibly the Queen, and other members of the Royal Family, will go to the station to see the travellers off, and in their case also all ceremonial is to be dispensed with. The departure side of the station is to be reserved, and covered with crimson carpet. Many distinguished persons will attend to see Their Royal Highnesses off, and the railway authorities have been asked to provide extra accommodation for the large body of permit holders. The Royal waiting room is to be thrown open, and a special train will be in waiting. After bidding good-bye to relatives and friends, the Prince and Princess are to be conducted to the principal saloon, and the special will start at twenty minutes to twelve for Dover. It is due there at twenty-five minutes past one, and the Royal travellers will go at once on board the special steamer onward, in which the journey to Calais is to be made. She is timed to reach the French port at a quarter to three, and the Prince and Princess will arrive at Genoa at a quarter to five to-morrow afternoon, when they embark forthwith on H.M.S. Renown for India.

Daily Chronicle.—It is thirty years within a few days since our present King Edward, then Prince of Wales, visited India. He left London on October 11, 1875, and reached Bombay on November 8, just one day earlier than that on which the present Prince and Princess of Wales are expected to arrive. The two tours will also last about the same length of time; but the parallel is not in all respects complete. On leaving Bombay King Edward went south to Goa, Ceylon, and Madras before visiting Calcutta and returning by the north of India and the Punjab. Since those days the centre of interest has shifted largely to the North-West Frontier, and accordingly the present Prince goes North from Bombay to Rajputana and the Punjab before visiting Calcutta and returning by the south of India. The other main difference is that on this occasion an embargo has been laid on all presents. Lord Kitchener was unfortunately compelled to give up his project for a great camp of exercise and military review at Delhi; but the Prince telegraphed out that he wanted to see something more of the Indian army than a ceremonial march-past; so three days' manoeuvres at Rawalpindi have been substituted for the Delhi camp. The occasion will not be so magnificent; but Rawalpindi is the Aldershot of India, so it will probably be just as workmanlike.

Bombay, where the Prince lands on November 9, has been seriously affected by the plague in recent years; but before the plague came it was running Calcutta hard in the race for being the premier port of India, and it possesses probably the finest water front in the world. The Apollo Bunder consists of a magnificent line of modern buildings, resembling Piccadilly fronted by a Paris boulevard, and with the Green Park replaced by the Bay of Naples. Here the Prince will be received by the chiefs of Western India, ranging from great rulers like the Gackwar of Baroda to petty Mahratta chieftains, whose robber ancestors left them little but their swords. The streets of Bombay are broad and fine, and contain one of the motliest crowds in the world. From Bombay the Prince goes to Indore, and thence to the Rajput States of Udaipur, Jaipur, and Bikanir. These Rajput nobles are the proudest chivalry of our Indian Empire, warriors and sportsmen to a man. The Rajput despises any occupation save that of war, and hence in these piping times of peace, when he has been compelled to turn his sword into a ploughshare, he makes but a poor husbandman. His desert home breeds little but sand and horses, but those are of the finest.

From the chiefs of Rajputana to the Sikh chiefs of the Punjab, who stood by us so nobly at the time of the Mutiny. But for the Sikh chiefs of Patiala, Jind, and Nabha, who supplied the army before Delhi with provisions, and the Sikh soldiers who flocked to our standard at the time of trouble, the siege of Delhi must have been raised, and the history of the British Empire in India might have been different. The Prince will visit the Golden Temple at Amritsar, which is the centre of the Sikh religious worship, while at Lahore he will hold a durbar of the Sikh and other chiefs of the Punjab. From Lahore he goes to the frontier at Peshawar, where he will visit the Khyber Pass, the famous gateway of every invasion of India from the north, and the scene of our latest frontier war in 1897.

It is the virile Muhammadan invaders from the north that have left us, in the great monuments of Mogul architecture, the finest buildings in India, some of the finest buildings in the world. The cities in which their greatest work is seen stretch in a straight line across the middle of Northern India from Delhi to Fatehpur Sikri; and it is to this belt of country that the Prince will next turn his attention, visiting the famous buildings of Delhi, Agra, and Lucknow, and the native States of Gwalior and Bhurtpur. The proceedings at Delhi have been shorn of some of their importance by the scarcity, but nothing can rob the seven great cities which have succeeded each other in the neighbourhood of Delhi of the interest of their historic ruins, or modern Delhi itself of the associations which all Englishmen feel with the heroes of the Mutiny—the Ridge where the little army held its own through the weary months of a blazing Punjab summer, and the gate where Nicholson fell. At Agra the Taj Mahal, the glory of the world's architecture, with its surrounding gardens and approaches, has been restored to all its original perfection by Lord Curzon.

From this feast of architecture the Prince will proceed to the social gaieties of Calcutta. The great week of the Indian capital is the Christmas week, when there are several days' racing, and the Viceroy's Cup or Indian Derby is run. It had been hoped that the Prince would reach Calcutta in time for these festivities, but the date would not fit in, and he will only reach it on December 29, at the tail end of the great week. Nevertheless, he will create a week of his own by holding an Imperial durbar, while the Princess holds a drawing room. While in Calcutta, the Prince will lay the foundation-stone of the Victoria Memorial Hall in honour of his grandmother, whose name is still venerated in India.

At the time of the King's visit in 1875, Lower Burma belonged to us; but Upper Burma was still subject to native rule, and King Thibaw had not even come to the throne. Prince Edward, therefore, did not cross the Bay of Bengal to Rangoon, and missed one of the great contrasts of our Indian possessions; for in India the double burden of caste and poverty has taken the heart out of the people, and life is sad and monotonous, but in Burma there is no caste and no poverty; the people clothe their bodies in silk and their faces in jollity; the only drawbacks are malaria and mosquitoes.

To this favoured land the Prince will pay a flying visit, going for a trip up the river from Rangoon to Mandalay. After Burma the Prince will go to Madras and Bangalore, the great feudatories of Mysore and Hyderabad, and the friendly neighbouring Power of Nepal. The Nepal Terai is famous for its sport, and the King's best day in India was one that he spent hunting wild elephants with the aid of tame ones in Nepal under the escort of Sir Salar Jung. A similar experience, no doubt, awaits Prince George. After leaving Nepal, Simla and some other hill stations will be visited, and then a move will be made to Quetta, which rivals Raval Pindi as one of the great forts and strategic centres of our frontier defences and rivals Peshawar as an outpost towards Afghanistan.

From the barren mountains of Baluchistan the Prince will journey through the equally barren plains of Sind to Karachi, thus leaving India by a different port from that where he landed; for Karachi is very jealous of its position as the port of Northern India. The Prince leaves Karachi on March 19, and will thus have spent a little over four months in the country.

Daily Mirror.—Everybody knows that to-day the Prince and Princess of Wales start on their Indian tour. But how many people have any clear idea in their minds of what that word "India" signifies? Even of those who have been in India and lived there a long time, there are few who really grasp either the romance or the responsibility bound up with the British rule. Stop for a moment to think of the size of India.

It does not perhaps convey much to you to say that it spreads over close upon a million and three-quarter square miles. But think of the Continent of Europe without Russia, and then reflect that India is larger even than that—bigger than France and Germany and Italy and Austria and Spain and Switzerland, with all the little northern Powers thrown in. The people under British rule in India are seven times as many as the people of the British Isles. They speak among them as many as 117 languages. And they are all subjects of the Emperor of India, which will in the natural course some day be one of the titles to be borne by the Prince of Wales, who is now setting out to view his splendid inheritance. Never before have all the races of India been united under one stable Government. Never has there been so long a period of peace in the land. The former state of India was unceasing strife between its different nations. Gradually Britain conquered them, one after another, until the whole country was reduced to order, and the strong could no longer prey upon the weak. And now equal justice is meted out to all by the carefully-picked and laboriously-trained officials who go out from Britain to govern in the Emperor's name. There is a misty, foggy idea in certain minds that Britain ought now to retire from India. Such people argue that, although it may have been right for us to take the country in hand when it was rent by internal wars, our task is now done; and that the natives have the right to ask us to go away and let them govern themselves without any further aid. Even if the majority of the natives wanted to be rid of British rule, which they certainly do not, should we be justified in giving way to their wish? No, we certainly should not. And the reason? The reason is simply this: that if we left India to herself she would very soon be in the same state of constant civil war as she was when we went there. So for some time yet the government of that great land, with its 291 million inhabitants, will be carried on by this little land, with its 40 million inhabitants. It is not a perfect Government. It has one glaring fault in common with all highly-organised systems: it costs a great deal of money. Also, it occasionally makes mistakes, which is lamentable, but human. But, taking a broad view, we may safely say that never before have the peaceable working classes in India been so well off as they are now, and that, after all, is the safest test.

Evening News and Evening Mail.—The Prince and Princess of Wales, who have started to-day upon a journey that will take many months in completion, will leave our shores amid a chorus of heartfelt good wishes from every section of the people, but amongst those who are wishing them a safe journey and the best of all good things during its continuance there are probably few who realise the very arduous undertaking upon which the Heir to the Throne has embarked. Four months' travel in India sounds to most of us like a very delightful holiday and so indeed it might be to one who could map out his own itinerary and devote himself to his own amusement, but to one in the position of the Prince of Wales, four months of travel under an officially mapped-out programme is no light undertaking. To begin with, India is not England, and even under the best conditions that can be obtained long journeys are infinitely more trying than the stay-at-home Briton can possibly conceive. But apart from the wear and tear involved in covering a vast amount of ground, the task which the Prince has set himself is a tremendous one. He has set out to make himself known to the millions in India, and in turn to know as much of them as may be in the time at his disposal, and when we remember the voyage of himself and the Princess in the Ophir to other portions of the British Empire, we must acknowledge that at such a task he works hard. It is thirty years since King Edward, himself then Prince of Wales, visited our Indian Empire, and since that time great and far-reaching changes have taken place. The vast country has developed in many ways, and the administration has become more complex and more highly organised, and that means that there is more to be seen and more to be done than there was when King Edward paid his visit. Indeed, one might feel heartily sorry for the Prince if one did not know that hard-worked as he will undoubtedly be, everything will be to him a labour of love. In wishing God-speed to the Royal pair let us therefore disabuse ourselves of the notion that the Prince is going to combine a leisurely tour of sight-seeing with intervals of tiger-shooting. He will doubtless do these things, but for four months after they land in India he and the Princess will be two of the busiest people in the Empire.

Globe.—The embarkation of the Prince and Princess of Wales for a State visit to the wonderful Empire created by British genius and fortitude in Asia happily synchronises with every appearance of prolonged "peace and goodwill" throughout the civilised world. There may be some chafings of disappointed ambitions, here and there, for a brief period, but when the depths of the international situation are plumbed, even the most timorous cannot discover anything suggestive of armed strife. This is more especially the case in the East, both Middle and Far, and there is something like certainty that before the illustrious travellers return that prospect will have become crystallised into a brightened world for mankind at large. India itself has not even one "little war" either on hand or within sight; from the now snow-clad Hindoo Koosh to the perfumed Isle of Spices the sword is, for once in a way, sheathed, as if to harmonise with the visit of the son and daughter-in-law of England's Imperial Peace-maker. But before their extensive tour come to an end five months hence they will have had convincing proof that the sword still possesses all, and more than all, of the sharpness and strength which, in times past, carved out and gave permanence to a far more solid and beneficent rule than ever existed previously. The armed hosts which formerly swept down from the northern wilds left behind them when expelled little but bitter memories of brutal tyranny and ruthless depredations. That "dream in marble," the Taj, was brought into being by forced labour of the cruellest character, involving tens of thousands of deaths, and as the Royal tourists view the beautiful edifice there will not be wanting in their minds a sense of thankfulness that the British Raj has never associated itself, regrettable as some of its earlier proceedings undoubtedly were, with the enslavement of human beings for such purposes. Humanity is essentially as free in India as in any other part of King Edward's Imperial dominions, and year by year the native races are being slowly but surely indoctrinated with the fundamental principles of self-Government. But it would be both fatal and foolish to hurry the process; Asiatics do not quickly accommodate their minds to principles of Government, or even of administration, radically differing from those which they have long grown accustomed. Thirty years have elapsed since King Edward, then occupying the same august position as his Heir-Apparent now fills so worthily, personally toured through the great Asiatic peninsula. Great changes have happened since that date—changes by conquest, armed and unarmed. Giving precedence to the latter as, perhaps, the more beneficial in the long run, the continuous extension of railways and irrigation works of proved utility represents no mean conquest. Just now some large districts are threatened with a scarcity of food grains unless more rain falls. But while the supply of grain has been immeasurably augmented by the irrigation of vast tracts previously unproductive, railway transport can always be depended on to convey surplus supplies from the more fortunate localities on to the less fortunate. That was not the case thirty years ago to nearly the same extent; the memory of the Orissa famine, which carried off ten millions of starved people, still lingered in the thoughts of men as a horror which might be repeated. Armed conquests have happily conduced to the same beneficent purpose. Upper Burma and Chitral afford convincing testimony that the economic, not less than the political, condition of the peoples absorbed into British India has improved immensely. Both countries used to be dominated by internecine warfare; neither was ever really at peace, in the full sense of the term. But the magic influence of strong, settled rule, with its accompaniments—honest, capable administration and strict justice between man and man—have produced an almost miraculous change for the better. It is also indisputable that the rectification and strengthening of the land defences of the peninsula have largely helped to tranquillise native apprehensions of a repetition of those dreadful incursions of northern invaders which spread devastation and ruin throughout the unhappy land. Upper Burma, following the example of Lower Burma, now plays a leading part in the production of rice for the peninsula proper, while the erstwhile Mullah-ridden tribes between the Malakand Pass and Chitral devote themselves more and more to profitable industries instead of following the evil promptings of ambitious fanatics.

The itinerary of the Royal couple has been so planned as to admit of their making personal acquaintance with most of the native potentates now reigning. It is a wise and far-sighted arrangement; from the Nizam downwards, these great feudatories will esteem the visit as the highest compliment that could be paid by their Suzerain. In such matters they are extremely sensitive, being ever watchful lest Their Royal positions should not receive the recognition to which they consider themselves entitled. It hardly needs to be stated that every care will be exercised to prevent such suspicions; the strictest equality will be exercised, we are in a position to affirm, in honouring the crowned hosts of the Heir-Apparent and his fair Consort. Equality, that is, within the established rules of precedence, a code well understood by every native Monarch. But it should not be forgotten that these proud potentates are very different from what many of them were when King Edward travelled from Court to Court. They have been taught that the Suzerain Power insists on good administration and the dispensation of justice as the foremost duties of every Ruler, whether a Maharaja, a Nawab, or a British Lieutenant-Governor, and the majority are now as eager to comply with that prescription as they were formerly prone to spend themselves and their revenues on ostentation.

United India and the Native States.—The authorities of the Aligarh Mahomedan College have been informed that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will be pleased to visit their college on March 6th. This is a feather in Aligarh's cap. A unique compliment from Royalty!

United India and Native States.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, we learn, will travel on their forthcoming Indian tour in an entirely new train constructed in the Lilloah Carriage Shop of the East Indian Railway. This train, we understand, was constructed by Native labour under European supervision from raw material. The vehicles comprising this train are reported to be in point of length, breadth, height and weight, far in advance of anything previously used in India or on British Railways.

Daily News.—The Prince and Princess of Wales, who yesterday set out for India, will carry with them not only the cordial wishes of the British people, but also some measure of lively sympathy. Since the tour was first proposed the horizon has become heavily laden with clouds, and a number of startling events have made the Prince's task even more arduous than it would otherwise have been. It cannot be said that the heir to the throne will encounter a thoroughly contented population. The official classes themselves are rent into rival camps, comprising, on the one hand, the purely military faction, and on the other hand those who bitterly resent Lord Kitchener's rough and ready triumph over Lord Curzon and the civilians. Many members of Indian Civil Service are, indeed, at issue with both these forceful men, and all alike have lost faith in a Home Government represented by Mr. Brodrick. The temper of the natives is also aroused. To begin with, vast territories are still cursed by plague and famine—those twin Nemesses of over-taxation. The efforts to subdue these evils have been, doubtless, sincere but they have not been successful. Nor has it been recognised that one of the first essentials of good government in an Oriental country is extreme economy—a point never forgotten by Lord Cromer in Egypt. The continual scourge of plague and famine lends weight to the growing demand for political emancipation, which has been resisted so stoutly by both Lord Elgin and Lord Curzon. Finally, we have at the moment all the causes of disquiet inflamed by Lord Curzon's last infiction upon India—the singularly ill-advised partition of Bengal. This act of wanton dismemberment has provoked a violent agitation among the natives, together with national manifestations of mourning and a boycott of British goods. This last form of protest may prove temporary, but it is thoroughly effective while it lasts, and is important as a symptom.

"We are all of us members for India"—we quote Sir Henry Fowler's most famous utterance—and the time is coming when this mighty constituency, which is by far the most important partner in the British Empire, will again demand the attention which we are so slow to give it. Our rule in India is something which stands by itself; there is no parallel to it in history. In the main, that rule has been just as to its aims, else it would long ago have been swept away. Yet we shall make a great mistake if we think that the Indian problem is solved. In the opinion of men like Sir John Seeley, that problem is only beginning to arise. A certain class of experts see in Russia the chief enemy to our predominance in the East. That is the view of a man like Earl Roberts or Earl Kitchener. It has also been the belief of Lord Curzon. But the invasion of India by Russia is a distant and visionary peril compared with the menace occasioned by the gradual permeation of European ideals. India is learning the secret of our own self-reliance, and the day is approaching when she will insist upon stepping out alone. This will only be a catastrophe if we obstinately resist the tendencies which are actually and inevitably promoted by our own influence and example. India should be permitted to do for herself everything of which she is capable. We should encourage her growth, not check it.

It is, of course, true enough that India is only part of Asia as a whole, but her contact lies not with Russia so much as with Japan. From that direction arises the real challenge against British and, indeed, European ascendancy in Asia. If Indians are led to imagine that we are depending upon Japan for their defence—which is the meaning of the new Alliance—the challenge may develop more rapidly than we expect or desire. We are far from suggesting that there is any reason for permanently treating Asia as a continent subject to Europe, but we do question the wisdom of a policy which promotes nationality at Tokyo while seeking to crush nationality at Calcutta. We should take a broader and deeper view of the relations between the whole East and the whole West. In a few months there will be a Liberal Government in power, and it is to be hoped that the Secretaryship for India will cease to be a dangerous sinecure for a statesman who has been proved incapable in another department of state. It will take much quiet, firm tact to restore those traditions of thorough, reticent statesmanship which have been ruthlessly shattered by Mr. Brodrick, Lord Curzon, and Lord Kitchener during the last few months. Nowhere has the insecurity which results from Mr. Balfour's usurpation of power worked more serious harm than in the dim, mysterious lands which are preparing to welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales.

In reply to a communication conveying the good-wishes of the City of London to the Prince and Princess of Wales on their visit to India, the Lord Mayor yesterday received the following letter:

The Prince and Princess of Wales direct me to ask you to be good enough to express their sincere thanks for the good-wishes for their approaching visit to the Indian Empire, which you (as its Chief Magistrate) have conveyed to Their Royal Highnesses, in the name of the City of London, as also for the kindly suggested reception of Their Royal Highnesses within its walls on their return.

The Prince of Wales earnestly trusts that by this journey the British Empire may derive some such lasting benefits as those which were the results of that memorable visit of His Majesty to the East thirty years ago.

During the varied and absorbing experiences of the coming months, Their Royal Highnesses will not forget that they carry with them the assurance of the sympathy and goodwill of the citizens of London.

Believe me, my Lord Mayor,

Yours very faithfully,

ARTHUR BIGGE.

The Mayor of Windsor sent a telegram to the Prince and Princess of Wales, wishing them, on behalf of the Royal borough, a safe journey. He has received the following reply:

The Prince and Princess of Wales desire to thank you and the residents of Windsor most warmly for the good wishes expressed for Their Royal Highnesses' journey.

Madras Mail.—A proposal has been made to arrange for an Association Football Match to be played in Bombay, during the Royal Visit, for the Championship of India between the Royal Dragoons, who defeated the Dorsets in the final in the Durand Football Tournament, and the Seaforth Highlanders, who wrested the honours from the Cheshires in the final in the Rovers' Football Tournament. Both are crack teams, and if the proposed arrangement proves successful, the public will be treated to a fine display of Soccer. It is also stated that arrangements are being made to hold a motor-car carnival in connection with the People's Fair.

Newcastle Daily Chronicle.—Yesterday the Prince and Princess of Wales left for India, where there awaits them a welcome which will not be less enthusiastic than that accorded to the present King when he made his memorable journey to the Dependency exactly thirty years ago. It was on October 11th, 1875, that the former Prince of Wales set sail, and he arrived in Bombay on November 8th, afterwards visiting Baroda, Goa, Ceylon, Madras, Calcutta (where the historic reception of the Indian potentates took place), Benares, Lucknow, and Nepal, sailing from Bombay on the return journey on March 13th, 1876. The present Prince and Princess of Wales have gone overland to the Mediterranean, where they will embark on the battleship Renown. They are due at Bombay on the 9th of next month, and will afterwards make a trip through Rajputana to the Punjab, where the North-West Frontier will be seen. A tour of the chief cities of India will follow, going east a visit will be paid to Burma and before leaving the Dependency the Heir-Apparent will receive the homage of the Native Rulers of India. The East is not changeless, as we are often told, and least of all when it is brought into contact with the European. In many respects the India of to-day is the same as the India of thirty years ago, but in others it is vastly different. Especially so, of course, is this the case so far as British rule is concerned. India is larger by far than it was when the future King Edward went there. There was a North-West Frontier even then, but it has been pushed a good deal further in the past three decades into the interior of Asia, until to-day the Indian Empire is coterminous with the dominions of the Tsar of Russia and the Emperor of China. And on the east too, India has extended her borders, for Burma has become British territory, and the eastern boundary of our possessions there runs along the back blocks of China by the sources of the mighty Yangtsekiang.

Far away to the north, too, Lhasa has been unveiled, and if Tibet has not been added to the dominions of the Emperor of India steps have been taken to guard against the stealthy encroachment of others. And even so far as the native races are concerned vast changes have come about. In 1875 there was no justification for calling in question the loyalty of India. Still the Mutiny was not a very distant tragedy. To-day it is forgotten, or, if not forgotten, has become a mere historical episode which has given no legacy to-day. The Indian races have not become Angloised, and no wise man wishes that they may; but, short of that, English and European thought and culture have left their impress upon at least the educated classes of Native Indians. British administration is understood by the Indian mind, and the humblest ryot appreciates the beneficent character of Imperial rule. It was the spirit of adventure that first took Englishmen to India to lay the foundation of an empire of which Alexander and Napoleon dreamed; but we do not remain in India for the purpose of exploitation. And that fact is understood to the full by the peoples of India. It may be shown perhaps that our occupation of India is not entirely unselfish; and it is certainly true that we have there great, and even vital, interests to conserve. But if we derive benefits from our rule in India, the advantages to the teeming peoples of the peninsula, of good government, of the preservation of the balance between creed and creed and race and race, and of protection from covetous nations beyond the borders, are certainly greater. There has recently been some unfortunate friction in connection with the re-arrangement of the boundaries of Bengal, but this, we believe, will soon be forgotten. To-day India is contented, and it is loyal. And in a few days' time India will demonstrate to the world that it is so.

Pioneer.—It has now been arranged that the State Ball at Calcutta during the Royal visit shall take place on the 4th instead of the 9th January. This change is due to the fact that the Renown will have to make an early departure for Diamond Harbour on the morning of the 10th January. The Prince and Princess of Wales will in consequence proceed direct to Diamond Harbour from Darjeeling and embark for Rangoon on the evening of the 9th January instead of returning to Calcutta.

21st OCTOBER 1905.

Daily Telegraph.—The train conveying the Prince and Princess of Wales and their suite, en route for India, arrived at Genoa this afternoon. A special pier had been constructed at the harbour, and this was richly carpeted and adorned with floral decorations. Although Their Royal Highnesses are travelling incognito, the local authorities had assembled to greet them, and a considerable crowd, including the members of the British colony, had gathered.

After exchanging courtesies with the officials the Prince and Princess immediately went on board His Majesty's ship Renown. That vessel, with the cruisers Terrible, Suffolk, and Lancaster—the last two having arrived yesterday from Malta—will sail to-morrow for Suez, where other war vessels will take up the duty of escorting the Prince and Princess of Wales to India.

The Prince and Princess of Wales were received by Mr. Keene, the Consul-General, and Mrs. Keene, together with Commodore Tyrwhitt. Mrs. Keene presented the Princess with a magnificent bouquet of orchids and white lilac. After a short conversation with Mr. Keene and Commodore Tyrwhitt, Their Royal Highnesses entered a launch, and accompanied by the Commodore, and escorted by other boats belonging to the British warships, proceeded on board the Renown, which is moored in the outer harbour.

The Renown will start at six o'clock to-morrow morning.

The Princess of Wales has graciously accepted the proposal of the British Chamber of Commerce for Italy to send a bouquet of flowers on board the Renown, and has expressed her thanks through Sir Arthur Bigge to the members of the Chamber of Commerce for their kind wishes. The flowers will be contained in an artistic flower-pot of Signa (near Florence) earthenware.—Reuter.

English Review.—The Prince and Princess of Wales are well on their way to India in pursuit of the pleasant office of acquiring a more than nodding acquaintanceship with the freemen of their future Empire. Thus is completed a voyage of discovery which began with 'the cruise of the Ophir' and the 'Wake-up-England' speech, already become a classic instance. Their Royal Highnesses left Victoria Station on Thursday, the bearers of a message of hope and good-will to the many millions of the King's subjects in the great dependency. A large gathering had assembled at the station on the occasion of this prelude to a long and arduous undertaking, including Their Majesties the King and Queen, several ministers directly interested, and the relatives and more intimate friends of the royal travellers. The Prince and Princess will arrive at Calcutta in time to greet Lord Curzon, the outgoing Viceroy, and it is to be hoped that their presence will do much to pour oils on the troubled waters that have arisen in connection with the differences between the military and civil authorities and the larger and more important questions that have resulted from the division of Bengal into two separate provinces. To the many millions of the diversified and historic populations of Hindustan, the coming of the Prince and Princess will lend a needful and august touch of reality to the almost legendary awe with which they regard the Imperial house of Britain.

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE PAPERS PUBLISHED IN BENGAL FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 21ST OCTOBER 1905.

Amrita Bazar Patrika.—Reverting to the subject of the Royal visit, the Amrita Bazar Patrika writes that a more inopportune time for the visit could not have been chosen owing to the seething discontent prevailing in Bengal. As a result, there is no joy in the heart of the people at the prospect of the visit, and they will not be able to accord Their Royal Highnesses the hearty welcome which they would otherwise have done.

The journal now declares its astonishment at the address which the Bombay Corporation intends to present to the Prince, and enquires who is responsible for placing the fiction before His Royal Highness that "British rule in India makes no distinction of colour or creed." If it is regarded as the people's duty to accord a hearty welcome, it is equally a duty of the people not to welcome His Royal Highness with "lies on our lips." Do not let His Royal Highness carry home a wrong impression but let it be the duty of the people to lay all the facts clearly before him—their inability to rejoice at his visit owing to the partition, and some other equally retrograde measures of Lord Curzon, and their preference for some other rule than the one-man government which has proved disastrous.

Amrita Bazar Patrika.—The Amrita Bazar Patrika disapproves of the action of His Majesty the King in requesting Lord Curzon to delay his departure until the reception of Their Royal Highnesses in India. If this has been done to soothe His Excellency's feelings owing to his recent humiliation, the Patrika contends that His Majesty should show the Bengalis equal sympathy. They are his subjects, while the Viceroy is his temporary servant. Why, therefore, should His Majesty feel for his servant and not his subjects? To encourage such a ruler as Lord Curzon, is to encourage his successors to follow in his wake. The journal "deeply regrets that to be kind to a servant our Sovereign should be so unkind to his subjects."

Bombay Samachar.—Writing about the revised programme of the Royal tour in the Presidency, the Bombay Samachar says:—We are very much disappointed to find that only Bombay and Karachi will be visited by Their Royal Highnesses during their tour in the Bombay Presidency. The studious omission of Gujarat and Kathiawar from the programme of the Royal itinerary is difficult to account for. The climate of both these provinces is very salubrious during the months of November and December, and a tour through them would have benefited the health of Their Royal Highnesses. Perhaps the authorities purposely omitted Gujarat and Kathiawar from the Royal programme out of a laudable desire not to tax the crippled resources of these provinces at a time when the agricultural outlook is far from cheerful. We admit that there is much force in his view of the matter, but at the same time we cannot lose sight of the fact that the primary object of the Royal visit is to make the Heir-Apparent to the British throne acquainted with the true condition of his Indian subjects. This object will be frustrated if the Prince were taken only through those parts of the country which are in a prosperous condition. Besides, the masses are longing to see the faces of the august visitors, and it would be a solace to them in their present distress to know that the Prince actively sympathises with them and is anxious to become personally acquainted with their wants and wishes.

Kaiser-i-Hind, Rast Goftar, Sanj Vartaman, and Akhbar-Soudagar.—From the revised programme of the functions in Bombay during the forthcoming Royal visit it appears that the Bombay Government have not exercised due care in fixing the time of disembarkation of Their Royal Highnesses. According to the present arrangements Their Royal Highnesses will land at the bandar at 4-30 p.m. The reception at the bandar followed by the presentation of the Municipal address and the reply thereto will occupy full one hour, so that Their Royal Highnesses will not be able to leave the bandar until it is near sunset. By the time they enter the native town darkness will have set in so that the swarms of spectators assembled in the hope of catching a sight of the Royal visitors will be sorely disappointed. The heavy cost at which wooden platforms for the school children are being put up on the line of the Royal route will be so much money thrown away. It may be noted that the present King-Emperor when he visited India landed at the bandar at 4 p.m. As the days are short in November and the sun goes down comparatively early, no inconvenience will be felt by Their Royal Highnesses if they are made to land at the bandar half an hour earlier than now arranged. We fervently pray that the Government of Lord Lamington to make this much-needed change in the programme before it is too late. [The Rast Goftar, the Sanj Vartaman and the Akhbar Soudagar make similar remarks.]

Mahratta.—"The Government of India have officially contradicted the rumour that the salt duty would either be reduced or entirely remitted in commemoration of the Royal visit. The promptitude with which the contradiction has been given is wise, because it will save in time a lot of hopeful speculation, which would have made the disappointment when it might actually come the keener. But we cannot equally applaud the determination on the part of the Government not to signalise the Prince's visit to India by granting the people any boon whatever."

Praja Bandhu Kathiawar Mitra, Surya Prakash, Satya Vakata, and Gujarat Mitra.—The Praja Bandhu, along with a number of other Gujarati weeklies, strongly disapproves of the rumoured intention of Government to dispense with the ceremony of firing salutes in honour of the Kathiawar Chiefs during the forthcoming Royal visit. It says:—It appears that in the ranks of the higher officers of Government there is none who possesses the requisite tact and judgment to plan the arrangements on important State occasions without injuring the feelings of any one. We all know how the Chiefs assembled at Delhi on the occasion of the Coronation Durbar were subjected to humiliation and indignities. Such treatment of the Chiefs is apt to give rise to grave discontent in the minds of the native public. We had thought that the authorities would avoid a repetition of the mistakes made at the time of the Delhi Durbar. But it seems there will be a bungling on the forthcoming occasion too. It is said no salutes will be fired in honour of the Kathiawar Chiefs, and that some of these Chiefs have in consequence abandoned their intention to proceed to Bombay to meet the Prince. We do not credit the last statement, because Native Chiefs are lacking in the courage and independence to threaten Government in this manner. None the less it is incumbent upon Government to drop their intention of not firing salutes in honour of Chiefs and accord to them all the honours to which they are entitled during their stay in Bombay. The Gujarat Mitra disapproves of the reported attitude of the Kathiawar Chiefs in refusing to proceed to Bombay unless salutes are fired in their honour. It thinks that such an attitude savours of perversity and want of common-sense. In its opinion the Chiefs are bound by considerations of loyalty to their Sovereign to go to Bombay to welcome the Prince. It thinks that Government are justified in dispensing with the firing of salutes on the occasion, as it would cause no end of inconvenience and difficulty to observe the ceremony in Bombay next November.

Desha Shewak.—The Desha Shewak (Nagpur), of October 16th, referring to the intended visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to India states that arrangements are being made on a large scale to accord a grand reception to Their Royal Highnesses and thousands of rupees have been collected for the purpose. This is all right, but surely the object of Their Royal Highnesses in visiting India is not merely to pass their time in banqueting balls and witnessing pyrotechnic displays. As the Prince is to be the future ruler of India it is advisable that such arrangements should be made as will enable him to see the condition of the people of India and the state of the country. But how is this to be effected? The authorities in India wish the Prince and the Princess to pass their time in India in merry-making, so that they may carry away the impression that universal prosperity reigns in the country and that the people are happy and contented. They have, therefore, arranged that the miserable condition of the people of Ajmere-Merwara and the Punjab, where famine prevails at present, and the dark side of the Indian administration shall not come to the notice of the Prince. The people of India, however, wish to bring their really wretched condition to the notice of the Prince, but they are unable to do so.

Andhraprakasika, Madras.—"In India there are many men of position and education. They are the political leaders of the country. It will suffice if His Royal Highness gives audience to such representatives of the people in Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, etc., and hears the grievances set forth by them. It is not necessary that a reply should be given to their representations. His Royal Highness is requested to take a few graduates with him on return home and give them technical and scientific education, and also do, before leaving India, some important act, such as the establishment of a leper hospital, laying of water-pipes, etc., to commemorate the visit. There are many beggars in India, and the Police will not let them appear before His Royal Highness. His Royal Highness should, out of pity for them, abolish one of the taxes—land assessment, salt-tax, etc.

Panjabe.—Lord Curzon has succeeded in goading the people of Bengal to such a state of desperation that they are sure not to go out of their way to profess for the Prince a loyalty which they do not honestly feel. There is no controlling the emotions of the human heart. And the best method by which the people are to be confirmed in their loyalty to the British throne does not after all lie in the policy of repression and despotism which Lord Curzon has lately been practising towards our countrymen in Bengal. We consider it mean and cowardly on the part of the powers that be to do violence to the tenderest susceptibilities of the Bengalees, tax and strain their loyalty to a breaking point and then appeal to them in the name of loyalty to play the rôle of hypocrites and humbugs and approach the Prince of Wales with lies on their lips and fulsome adulation in their mouths. This is exactly what they seem to be doing at the present moment. For an attempt is being made to hector and bully the Bengalees into a demonstration of spurious loyalty in order that the Prince be sent home rejoicing and may have nothing to complain of, on the score of want of enthusiasm and ardour, and the lack of loyal devotion on the part of the people. The London Standard observes 'that anything will come of the threat to refuse a loyal welcome to the Prince of Wales seems altogether unlikely. And why pray? Because, you are bold enough to hope that the people would be obliged to accord a loyal welcome to the Prince, at the point of the bayonet. Why talk of threats where none have been used. What the people say is that with despondency and despair gnawing at their vitals—that with the iron rankling in their scared and lacerated souls they would not be able to get up a show of rejoicing at the Royal visit, and must not be expected to take any part in the festivities that the officials propose to hold in commemoration of that visit. They have prescribed to themselves a self-denying ordinance because of the monstrous and unheard of outrage that Lord Curzon has offered their beloved mother-country. They are in mourning now, and, cast as they are into the lowest depths of dejection and despondency, they would be less than human if, at the bidding of the very men to whom they own all their present sufferings and woes, they were to dry their tears, close up their sobs, and putting on a dismal glad face approach the Prince with hypocritical professions and deliberate lies on their lips. This they would not do even if their lives were to be forfeited, as the people are sure to keep aloof from the reception of the Royal couple in Calcutta—a few toadies and lickspittles, who have been sporting and pawning their household goods, their jewels and precious stones to be able to procure the wherewithal for large subscriptions to the Wales' Reception Fund, may dance attendance on the King's son, but they need not count—the whole affair is sure to be altogether too tame, stale and unprofitable. This much for Bengal. We find that in Rajputana the gaunt spectre of famine is already stalking over the land. There is famine in every Indian State, and the resources of Indian Princes are being strained to their utmost by the calls entailed upon them by the present condition of affairs. Every pice that the Princes could spare ought now to go towards the saving of precious human lives. If they were to divert the money into other channels and play the handsome to the Prince by inviting him to their territories, it would mean only so many deaths from starvation to their subjects,—deaths that would lie on their conscience to their dying day and hand them down to the scorn and execrations of generations yet unborn. The Prince cannot, therefore, visit Rajputana, and yet to leave Rajputana out of such a tour is almost the same as leaving Hamlet out of the play of Hamlet. The visit ought therefore to have been postponed. We hope to revert to the subject by and bye."

Vakil.—The Vakil, Amritsar, of the 11th October 1905, says that it is rumoured that in honour of the coming visit of the Prince of Wales to India duty on salt will be abolished altogether. If this is so the removal of the impost will be certain to make the people feel thankful to Government. No civilised Government, besides, taxes necessities of life like salt, and it does not look well that the British Government should lag behind its compeers in the matter.

Sipahi.—The Sipahi, Cawnpore, of the 10th October after offering greetings to the Prince of Wales at his approaching visit to India, says that it is just thirty years since His Highness's father, now King-Emperor Edward VII, visited this country in the same capacity in which His Highness is going to do so now. In 1875, the year of His Majesty's visit, a great storm burst over Ahmedabad. A similar catastrophe has preceded the advent of His Royal Highness in the present year. King Edward was welcomed at his landing in, and bid farewell to at his departure from, India by, one and the same Viceroy, Lord Northbrook; but His Royal Highness will be welcomed by Lord Curzon, and bid farewell to by another Viceroy, Lord Minto. A severe famine occurred in India two years before King Edward's visit, while His Royal Highness is paying his visit to the country in the midst of actual famine. His father's special trains ran during day as well as during night; but His Highness' specials are to run by night only so that even when he has 'done' the whole country, he will know little of the land and of its inhabitants. Lord Lytton held a durbar at Delhi two years after King Edward had visited this country, but Lord Curzon held a similar durbar two years before His Highness' advent. It was several years after King Edward's visit that a British force had to be despatched to Afghanistan. Tibetan, Afghanistan and Russian complications are impending at the present time, and God forbid that His Royal Highness' visit should become infamous on account of any of those complications becoming serious. His father was not accompanied by the queen when he visited India, but His Royal Highness is coming out with the Princess of Wales, so that Indian Princes and Princesses will respectively show their hospitality to and wait upon the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Oudh Taluqdars come to the end of their resources (or find themselves impoverished) in entertaining even a single District Officer so that even the biggest native princes will have a bad time of it in having to receive and entertain the occupants of three special trains. But let the consequences be what they may! An Indian, however miserable a life he may be leading, thinks it his every day duty to show hospitality to strangers in general whereas His Royal Highness is his would-be Emperor, and hence he must welcome and give him a right royal reception.

23RD OCTOBER 1905.

Daily Mail.—Lord Charles Beresford, with the Mediterranean Fleet, left Malta to-day to meet the Prince of Wales off Messina to-morrow morning. The Renown will be greeted with a Royal salute, and afterwards evolutions by battleships and destroyers will be gone through, while in the evening general illuminations will take place on the warships, and Bengal lights will be displayed. Passing through the Straits of Messina, the cruisers will convoy the Renown to Port Said, and the battleships will return for a night attack on Malta on Tuesday, and will enter the harbour at 10-30 A.M. on Wednesday. The battleship Renown, with the Prince and Princess of Wales on board, left Genoa at half-past seven o'clock on Saturday morning, escorted by the other British warships. As the battleship and her escort were leaving the harbour they passed the Italian Fleet, with which they exchanged salutes. Outside the harbour at eight o'clock the Prince's flag was broken and was saluted by the escorting vessels.

Englishman.—The following units of the Punjab Imperial Service Troops will take part in the Review in Lahore for the Prince of Wales on the 30th November or 1st December:—Patiala, four squadrons Lancers and two battalions infantry; Bahawalpur, two companies mounted escort and two troops transport train; Jind, one battalion infantry; Nabha, one battalion infantry; Kapurthala, one battalion infantry; Sirmur, one Company Sappers; Faridkot, one Company Sappers, Maler Kotla, one Company Sappers.

The proposal to commemorate the Royal Visit to the United Provinces by the erection of a medical college has taken definite shape. After the reception of the deputation, headed by the Maharaja of Ajodhya, by the Lieutenant-Governor, it was resolved to proceed with the scheme, and to provide for the erection of a college with hospital, medical museum, library, and a boarding house for students. The talukdars formed themselves into a committee with power to add to their number to collect subscriptions, and the sum of Rs.3,66,000 was subscribed on the spot. The Maharaja of Balrampur has subscribed three lakhs, and other subscriptions announced are Sir James LaTouche Rs. 2,000 and Maharaja of Ajodhya Rs. 25,000. The Maharaja of Ajodhya has been appointed president of the committee. It has been decided to hold a public meeting of the nobility and gentry of the United Provinces on 7th November at Lucknow to take further steps, and the Lieutenant-Governor has been requested to arrange for the foundation of the college to be laid during the Prince of Wales' visit to Lucknow in December. The Maharaja of Balrampur has been especially thanked for his munificent donation towards the scheme.

Four brigades of cavalry, four divisions of infantry with a complement of artillery will take part in the manoeuvres near Rawalpindi. A large number of troops from frontier stations will be used, and it is intended that a detachment from the Khyber Rifles shall share in the operations.

The Motor Union of Western India are arranging a motor carnival in connection with the people's fair to be held at the time of the Royal visit to Bombay. The Prince and Princess are both enthusiastic motorists, and the Prince's own motor, a powerful thirty-six horse-power car, arrived by last mail from England. Prizes will be offered for: (1) The best decorated and illuminated car; (2) the best decorated car; (3) the car with illuminations and floral decorations; (4) decorated and illuminated motor cycle; with special prize for lady drivers. The judging will be performed by a Committee, which will include General Greenfield, Commanding Bombay district, Lady Jenkins and others.

The Maharaja Scindia of Gwalior will, as at present arranged, meet the Prince and Princess of Wales a few miles outside his Capital and the public entry to the famous fortress should be an impressive sight. The Maharaja will entertain a large party during the Royal visit and the festivities will probably include a Durbar, State Banquet, a parade of the Imperial Service troops and a tiger shoot.

Englishman.—Permanent memorials of the Prince of Wales' visit to Calcutta will be left in the shape of the alterations in Dalhousie Square and of the new garden—the gift of Lady Curzon—which is being laid out opposite the Esplanade. It would appear that the paths in the latter are to take the form of an Union Jack. The removal of certain statues to Dalhousie Square seems to show that it is the intention of the Government to surround the tank with the figures of past Lieutenant-Governors.

Indian Daily News.—The Burma Railways have taken in hand the preparations for a train of vehicles for the use of the Royal suite. The carriages built for the Lieutenant-Governor, which will be reserved for the Royal party, are being specially overhauled, and everything possible to render them worthy of accommodating Royalty will be done. Other carriages to accommodate His Royal Highness's suite are also in hand. In fact the whole train, when it is turned out, will, it is expected, be a grand spectacle.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—Yesterday a deputation headed by the Maharaja of Ajodhya waited upon His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to enlist his sympathies in the scheme for commemorating the approaching visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, by the establishment of a Medical College in this Province.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor in replying to the deputation said:—

You have asked me to meet you here to-day to discuss the question of the establishment of a Medical College in this Province. You wish that a College should be founded to commemorate the visit to the United Provinces of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. In my opinion this would be a worthy memorial, and one that would be cordially approved by His Royal Highness. For the establishment of a College would involve the building of a first-class hospital fitted with every modern convenience and comfort, and it is known to the world that both His Majesty the King and His Royal Highness have consistently shown the deepest interest in all plans for alleviating the sufferings of the sick. The idea of a Medical College for this Province has been before the public for 35 years. It was in May 1870 that the late Maharaja of Vizianagram wrote to Sir William Muir, the Lieutenant-Governor, offering a contribution of two lakhs to be devoted to the establishment of a Medical College. The Maharaja was deeply impressed with the conviction that such a College would benefit thousands of his countrymen, and he requested that the College should bear the name of His Royal Highness Albert Edward Prince of Wales, now His Majesty King Edward VII, Emperor of India, and should commemorate his visit to India. Sir William Muir who had previously strongly advocated the scheme again addressed the Government of India. He pointed out that while every other chief administration in India possessed the means, as a domestic institution, of educating its youth for the higher branches of the medical profession, those means were wanting in our Province, although in wealth and population we were second only to Bengal. The Government of India, however, while recognizing the merits of the plan for the institution of a Medical College and convinced of the valuable results that would be produced, felt themselves unable to entertain the proposal to assist in the maintenance of the proposed College. Sir William Muir in consequence of this decision was debarred from accepting the munificent gift offered by the Maharaja, and was obliged with much regret to abandon the schemes, though with an expression of a hope that it would hereafter be revived.

History is now repeating itself. We are again about to welcome to India the heir to the Crown of this Empire, and I trust that at the present time it will be possible to arrange for the necessary annual income of the College; but my hands will be greatly strengthened if I can point to proof that the people of this Province have their heart in the scheme, and are willing to make sacrifices to attain it. In matters of this kind the Local Government and the people should work together. The Local Government has a serious responsibility of doing the most with the means at its disposal for the welfare of the Province. I wish to put aside any project which might be considered a fad of my own or a fad of any other individual. In giving precedence to reforms I wish to select those which are desired by and are certain of the commendation and support of the people at large. Such projects alone are likely to succeed, and I am ready to do all in my power to push them on. Now the institution of a Medical College is to my mind a project of this kind. The medical school at Agra is an eminently useful and necessary institution. Many improvements have been introduced of late, and it is the aim of Government that the school shall be made thoroughly efficient. But it does not and cannot give the best and highest education that can be provided. We want to raise the standard of medical education and give to our university students a training which will make them as physicians and surgeons inferior to none. We shall open up a career of noble and beneficent work to educated men who will permanently reside in our cities, though we should not grudge if they take up their profession in Rajputana, Central India and the Central Provinces, and we shall welcome students from those places. We may look forward to the time when by the higher studies and research of those most gifted among our students many medical and surgical problems specially affecting India will be solved. We may hope that our trained physicians will appropriate much that is valuable in Native systems of medicine, and combine the experimental knowledge of the East with the science of the West. At the same time the residents of our large towns will be able to obtain competent medical advice in serious ailments.

If a College is to be established it must be a first rate residential College. It must aim at the moral elevation of its students even more than at their intellectual training. Our students will we trust be honourable and self-respecting men as well as good physicians and surgeons. Besides a hospital, class rooms, library, museum and laboratories, we want residences for the students and professors, and suitable recreation grounds. All this will cost much more than the sum estimated for buildings in 1871 when the advantages of a residential College were not appreciated. But if you are in earnest about the project; if you know of no better memorial of the visit of His Royal Highness; if you can think of no scheme that will be of greater benefit to all classes of our people, you are justified in requesting me to find funds for the maintenance and development of the College, provided you show your desire for it by collecting subscriptions towards the cost of the buildings.

Morning Post.—A naval review will take place to-morrow morning between Cape Pellaro, in Calabria, and San Placido Calonerio in Sicily in honour of the Prince and Princess of Wales. After the review the British Squadron will execute manoeuvres to the south of the Straits of Messina. To-morrow evening the ships will be illuminated.

His Majesty's battleships Bulwark, with Vice-Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, Venerable, with Vice-Admiral Grenfell, Leviathan, with Rear-Admiral Lambton, Queen, Formidable, Implacable, Irresistible, Goliath, and Prince of Wales, and the cruiser Venus and the scout Sentinel, with 15 destroyers, have left Malta to escort the Prince and Princess of Wales on board the Renown through the Straits of Messina.

His Majesty's battleship Renown, with the Prince and Princess of Wales on board, left Genoa at half-past seven o'clock this morning escorted by the other British warships.

As the battleship and her escort were leaving the harbour they passed the Italian Fleet, with which they exchanged salutes.

His Majesty's despatch vessel Surprise has arrived at Port Said where she will await the arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales, who are due on the 27th instant.

The King of Italy having telegraphed to the Prince and Princess of Wales his greeting on their entering Italy, the Prince of Wales replied cordially thanking King Victor Emmanuel for his good wishes, and expressing the hope that the ties uniting the Royal house of Savoy and the British Royal family would long continue.

On January 31 the Prince will proceed by motor-car to the shooting camp, where he will remain until February 4. On returning from camp, he will proceed to Bangalore. Sir Krishnamurti, the Minister, with the sanction of the Maharaja, has allotted one lakh of rupees for an elephant hunt.

24TH OCTOBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Maharaja Scindia will, as at present arranged, meet the Prince and Princess of Wales a few miles outside his capital, and the public entry to the famous fortress should be an imposing sight. The Maharaja will entertain a large party during the Royal visit, and the festivities will probably include a darbar, a State banquet, a parade of the Imperial Service Troops and a tiger shoot.

The famous collection of Kashmir postage stamps belonging to Mr. E. Radcliffe, Forest Officer, Kashmir State, has been purchased by the Kashmir Darbar for £500 in order to be presented to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales on the occasion of his visit to Jammu in December next. This collection has been freshly arranged according to the most recent philatelic lights by Rev. C. B. Simmons of Baramula and housed in a magnificent album.

The ceremonies at Indore during the Royal visit will include the decoration of the Chief of Sillana and the opening by the Prince of Wales of the King Edward Hall. At Gwalior there will be a tiger shoot extending over two days, a parade of State troops, and the opening by the Prince of Wales of the Victoria Memorial Market.

Daily Mail.—The Globe publishes the following account of the illuminations arranged for the Mediterranean Fleet:—

At 6-30 the squadron forms in double quarter line, the leading ships being six cables apart, and destroyers in line abreast, ahead of the leading ships. At 7 p.m. the port column will burn red lights and the starboard column blue lights, while the destroyers will burn three white lights. One and a half minutes afterwards all lights will be thrown overboard, and the ships will then alternately burn red and white and blue and white lights, the destroyers burning green lights. At 7-5 all these lights will be thrown overboard.

The order for the firing of Very's lights states that all large vessels will be provided with four pistols, and destroyers with three pistols. Half the pistols are to be pointed upward and outward on each side of the ships. On a signal being made from the flagship Dulcarn at 7-7 p.m. red and green lights will be fired alternately by all ships and destroyers. At 7-8 p.m. each ship and destroyer will fire four Very's lights in rapid succession, to be followed by two bouquets of rockets fired one each by the two rear battleships inclining inwards so as to form an arch.

At 7-12 p.m. the searchlights will be thrown in the air to form an arch, the fleet being reduced to a speed of six knots. With the firing of a Royal salute the fleet will part company with the Renown and return to Malta.

Daily Mirror.—During the absence of the Prince and Princess of Wales one of the chief amusements of their little children will be the following of the course of the Royal tour by the aid of special maps and picture-books. The places the Prince and Princess are to visit have all been marked off and dated in these books by the Princess herself, so that the children know from day to day exactly where the travellers are. Their parents' progress to the Far East is also being followed on a big revolving globe, while a map hangs on the wall where every day the flags representing the Renown and accompanying ships are moved on a little further. All last week nursery and schoolroom regulations were in abeyance, and treats and privileges the order of the day for the children, while the day following the Royal departure the Queen, assisted by Princess Victoria, entertained her grandchildren at tea, and took leave of them until to-morrow, when she herself goes to Sandringham.

Now, however, all this is past, and regular work and play has begun at York Cottage, where the arrangements made by the Princess for her children's well-being and education are being carried out. "Early to bed, and early to rise", is the Princess of Wales's motto for her offspring, and there are many more luxuriously-reared children than our future King and his brothers and sister. They get up at seven o'clock, the little boys indulging in a cold tub, and taking a run round the garden before breakfast. This is served at eight o'clock, and invariably begins with a big basin of porridge, or bread and milk. Lessons and a walk, ride, or drive with their tutors follow, and in this Princess Mary takes part, as she also does in some of her brothers' lessons. A walk, drive, or occasionally a bicycle ride, fills up the afternoon hours till tea, at which the Queen and Princess Victoria are frequent visitors.

Just now the Royal playrooms are a paradise of new toys and games. With a view to softening the parting, various purchases were made at different toy shops in Oxford-street, Regent-street, and Knightsbridge. Thus are passing the hours which divide parents and children. Perhaps there are a few more treats and privileges than usual to make up for the constant companionship of their dearly-loved mother, for their grandparents are very indulgent. This indulgence may account for the little speech made by Princess Mary just before the Prince and Princess of Wales came back from their tour round the world. To a lady who said "How glad you will be to see your parents back again", she replied, "Oh, I shall, though", with a tiny sigh, "mother is a little tiresome sometimes". Yet the little ones will doubtless do their best to carry out the maternal instruction, "Be good while I am away".

Daily Telegraph.—Messina was most animated all day to-day over the expected arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales and the squadron coming from Malta to pay them homage. The weather was the most brilliant the South can produce, and the water limpid and smooth; so that the manoeuvres of the British ships were visible from the shore, and aroused the greatest enthusiasm. Cheers for Great Britain were on all lips, and good wishes for the safe journey of Their Royal Highnesses were wafted on every breeze. The straits presented an unusually beautiful sight, there being many English craft present, all decorated, while martial music gave pomp to the occasion, which was one the people of Messina will not soon forget.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—The Standard's suggestion that on the conclusion of their Indian tour the Prince and Princess of Wales should extend their journey to the Far East, chiefly in order to convey the good wishes of the King and of the British nation to the Emperor of Japan, is not likely to be taken up. The Indian tour will be a sufficiently protracted one for the Royal party, and if Their Royal Highnesses visit the Far East and are entertained by our allies it will be on some future occasion when the scars left by the late war have been somewhat obliterated and normal conditions of progress have been established.

Times of India.—Through the courtesy of the Secretary to the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company, we have been furnished with the following interesting note on the construction of the special saloons built by the company in their Ajmer factory in connection with the approaching Royal tour in India:—

The Royal Saloon is 58 feet long over buffers and is divided into two spacious verandahs, one at each end, one reception room, one sleeping and dressing room, also an attendants' compartment which is provided with its own bathroom. It has gangways with through connections to the Staff carriages.

The body is made without any side entrance, and the sides of the carriage are made up into strong girders. The sides throughout are fitted with glass frames, louvres, and viro gauze, also with spring sun blinds. When entering the carriage to the Royal compartment, one is at once struck by the verandah, which is a floral design of a very handsome pattern, made of solid brass work picked out with bronze and gold laquer. It may be mentioned, that the design for these verandahs with gates, columns and arches, complete, was sent to England in June in the hope that it would be ready to be sent out to India in time. It was, however, found impossible to get this work done at home in time; accordingly, the whole has been made up in Ajmer, at one-tenth the estimated English cost. Of the design and finish of this art metal work any skilled manufacturer might be justly proud. Although the castings are most intricate and complicated, not one single "waster" was made in casting the whole of them. The verandah floor is covered with a thick rubber matting. The entrance door to prevent any jamming, is fitted with ball bearings and suspended from above. Entering the compartment, one notices the variety of woods used in the construction. It is as unlike a railway carriage as possible. There are no brass racks, but handsomely carved fret-work trays are placed on each side; brackets, book shelves and small cabinets, are found in the numerous recesses. A writing table is placed against the partition opposite the entrance; on the left is a handsome Chesterfield settee, on the right a "what-not", on the side of the writing table is a comfortable chair arranged as a cosy corner; two pin cushion chairs and two easy chairs are suitably placed. The carpets are of a very handsome Persian pattern. These were also made in Ajmer at the jail there; and the whole harmonises perfectly. The roof is of alhambra with a pretty border picked out with very high class Indian art colouring. The whole of the mouldings in the roof are of light wood, the slender columns on the sides and doors tend to heighten and lighten the appearance of these rooms. A few of the woods that are used may be mentioned:—Bird's eye maple is combined with silky oak, red bean, Moulmein teak, Bombay black wood, Huon pine, Australian curly teak, red cedar; a collection of the Empire's finest and most beautiful timbers. Electric fans are provided; and the lights carefully placed to diffuse and give a comfortable reading light. Through the winter it is necessary to keep the carriage warm; this is provided for by electric foot warmers and other heaters, and electric stoves which can be regulated.

Sleeping and Dressing Room.—The same style of decoration is used, but the pattern of the carpets varied; they are, however, Indian made. The bed is of special construction, double spring mattresses being used, each can be raised or lowered to make a soft bed or a firm bed by bringing into contact one or two sets of the spring mattresses as desired. There is a large cheval glass with plenty of wardrobe and drawer accommodation. Both the wardrobe and drawers are a handsome combination of the same class of woods used in the reception room. The mirrors of the wardrobe are made to reflect at right or other angles to the cheval glass which renders them very useful for dressing purposes. Over the bed is a very handsomely arranged open cabinet having a fine piece of fret work carving which forms a rack at the top. At both sides are electric light brackets. Over the bed are fixed ceiling fans, and there are other bracket electric fans, conveniently placed. At the head of the bed are the call bell pushes for the attendants, the switches for the light regulators, for the electric fans, and also two peg coolers worked into the cabinet over the head of the bed. Proceeding to the bath room there is a fine large porcelain bath and wash-stand of ample size. These items were to have been in marble, but owing to a strike of Italian workmen could not be procured; but for this the wash-stand would have been one slab of marble supported by silver pillars, it is, however, of porcelain, which has made a good substitute. Doulton tiles cover the floor and sides. The bath room is fitted with hot and cold water, and near the wash-stand is a shampooing spray. The bath is fitted with shower, douche, wave, etc., of hot or cold water, the hot water is electrically heated. A Pasteur filter is provided, wardrobes, mirrors, cork mats, water bottles, sponge rack and every desirable appliance. To prevent the carriage running top heavy tanks for the water are fixed in below the floor, with a small tank only on the roof which is filled automatically by magnetic float contact switching on the current to electrically worked pumps.

In the attendants' compartment there are provided comfortable spring mattresses, wardrobes, refrigerators, wine chest, and also small electric hot plate, electric kettle, and casseroles; so that tea and other refreshments may be prepared on the Royal car itself, if desired, at once.

The Under-frame and Bogies.—These are worthy of special mention. As stated, the carriage is 58 feet over the buffers, and notwithstanding its great length, has traversed curves of 150 feet radius. The bogies have been carefully studied. The construction is entirely new specially designed by the Carriage and Wagon Superintendent, and is the first of its kind ever constructed for this gauge. To improve the running of the carriage nothing has been omitted. The centre of gravity has been placed as low as possible; this, although complicating the design, has certainly been a factor in the smooth running of the carriage. The side springs are compensated throughout, the elliptical springs are as long as possible, and have as large a centre as the gauge permitted. Centre pivots are very special, and made to run on ball bearings, also to travel through a range of $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch longitudinally, to provide for Timmis' patent bogie lead, which is arranged on each of these bogies; this lead was only fitted to the two Royal cars. It is beyond doubt, that, although the Royal cars are longer than the other cars, they run at the highest speeds most comfortably. The whole of the channels for the frame were welded into one length in Ajmer. The special bolsters were cast also in steel in the Ajmer shops. In the bogies are compensators of nickel steel, ball bearing bases of high carbon steel, rubbing pieces of chrome steel and ordinary cast steel, all of which types were made in one day by the Tropenas steel process in the shops. The landing plates between the saloons for the gangways are specially designed, and do not interfere with either the frame or the body. They fit in the space between two, and give ample clearance on the curves. The frame is very amply braced, and gives all the strength required and at the same time the whole frame is as light as is considered compatible with the requisite strength.

25TH OCTOBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—A special post office will be attached to the tour camp of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales throughout the course of the tour in India. Postal covers intended for delivery to any member of the Prince's staff, retinue or following, or to anyone on duty with or attached to the camp, should be addressed simply "Prince of Wales's Camp, India", without the addition of the name of any post town. If the name of a post town is unnecessarily added the covers will be sent to that post town whether this be the shortest route or not.

Englishman.—The Prince of Wales during his stay at Quetta in March will receive visits from the Khan of Kelat and the Jam of Las Beyla. Their Royal Highnesses will visit New Chaman on 15th March.

The Royal Visit has had the gratifying effect of stirring up the railway companies in India to a princely display of generosity to a poor but deserving institution. Not only are the special representatives of the press in attendance on Their Royal Highnesses to be conveyed free of charge over all the railways included in the route, but they are to be accommodated in a special train which will either precede or follow the Royal train—it has not quite been decided which. Until the point has been settled the enterprising pressman will be torn between two emotions. On the one hand he would naturally grasp at the opportunity of keeping well ahead of the proceedings. On the other hand his loyalty shrinks from a precedence which would seem to involve an invidious, and, in other countries, conceivably a dangerous distinction.

Madras Mail.—During his stay in Bombay His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will lay the foundation stone of the huge new docks that are now under construction, and which, it is hoped, will be completed before the end of 1912. The amount of work to be done is enormous, and when the docks are completed they will be among the finest in the world, covering a water area of nearly 500 acres, while the length of quays will be 10,000 feet inside, and 6,035 feet outside along the harbour frontage. Every possible convenience for passengers, troops and goods will be provided, and the docks will thus be a credit to the port of Bombay, whose revenue, we learn, ranks third in the British possessions, that of London and Liverpool only being ahead of it.

Manchester Guardian.—It is announced that Tongsa Penlop, the ruler of Bhutan, has accepted the invitation of the Indian Government to meet the Prince and Princess of Wales. Until the mission of Colonel Younghusband to Tibet the Bhutanese had held no intercourse with British India since the time when it was originally broken off, in the early sixties, by some diplomatic discourtesy to a British envoy. They were a doubtful, if not a hostile, quantity on our eastern frontier there. Bhutan flanks the Chumbi valley on the east, and the Chumbi valley is the only really accessible route between India and Tibet. Their accession, therefore, to the number of "friendly" States on the Indian frontier is a matter of some military importance. But the question is—how has this accession been brought about? When Colonel Younghusband started on his "mission" to Tibet he had to reckon with the possibility of opposition along the only possible route—an opposition which would be simply a continuation of the policy of Bhutan since 1865. But in 1865 India was a comparatively remote power, and Bhutan threw off a foreign relationship which did not recommend itself to it. But when the "mission" came in force Bhutan was unable to resist British intrusion. A road was constructed through the country, and Tongsa Penlop accompanied the mission to Lhasa. He was, in fact, a hostage for the good conduct of the Bhutanese. Afterwards he was decorated with the K.C.I.E., and now he assents to be presented to the Prince and Princess of Wales. Bhutan has ceased to be an independent State and has come under British influence. Tongsa Penlop's visit to the Prince of Wales is therefore no mere act of courtesy. It is necessity; it is the outward and visible sign of the loss of his country's independence. This new annexation—for such it virtually is—will have to be carefully watched, for the sole interest that Bhutan has for India is as a lever of influence in Tibet. The home Government had its work cut out to restrain the hot-heads at the end of the Tibet expedition, and the acquisition of Bhutan seems capable of developing into the fourth or fifth evasion of the home Government's wishes in regard to Tibet of which the Indian Government has been guilty.

The Press Association is informed that the Tongsa Penlop, the ruler of Bhutan, will, on the invitation of the Indian Government, visit India on the occasion of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The Press Association adds:—

The importance of this step is evident when it is borne in mind that since 1865, the Indian Government has had no intercourse with that country, and that the improved relations which are indicated by the acceptance of the Government's invitation are one of the results of the recent Mission to Tibet and of the tact and diplomacy of Sir Frank Younghusband in availing himself of the opportunity to ascertain the attitude of Bhutan and to enter into friendly relations with that State.

With the overshadowing interest of Lhasa but little attention was attracted to the good work which the British Commissioner then began in Bhutan, and which has since been steadily pursued, with the happy result now announced. To indicate the political importance of a good understanding with the Bhutanese, it is only necessary to point out the fact that Bhutan, lying to the east of the Chumbi Valley, flanks the only practicable route into Tibet, and that the people are allied by race with the Tibetans and are of the same religion. Thanks to the policy pursued with the chief by Colonel Younghusband, the attitude of Bhutan was friendly during the Mission to Lhasa, but up to that time this was a matter of considerable doubt. The country was quite unknown, and since the situation arising out of the gross indignities which were heaped upon a British envoy in the early sixties, when he was turned out of the country, India has had no dealings with Bhutan. During the Younghusband Mission an agreement was entered into with the Bhutanese ruler, who consented to the construction of a road through his country and gave Colonel Younghusband an assurance of friendship with India. He then himself went to Lhasa with the Mission, and on January last was made a K.C.I.E.

The question of keeping in touch with the country was not allowed to rest here, for some time afterwards Mr. Claude White, Political Officer of that portion of the frontier, was sent to Punakha, the Bhutanese capital, to invest the chief. The British envoy was received with great cordiality, was allowed to travel through parts of the country never before visited by Europeans, and returned to India after a journey of the greatest geographical and political interest. The next step in cementing the new good relations was to invite the Tongsa Penlop to come to India and pay his respects to the Prince of Wales, an invitation which has been accepted. There is ground for the highest satisfaction that the ruler of this important State, whose attitude gave rise to some apprehension, should now have given such undoubted evidence of friendship—a state of things which is only one of the minor results of the recent Mission to Lhasa.

Pelican.—In connection with the Prince of Wales's Indian tour, there is a good story told of an incident which occurred when the King, then, of course, Prince of Wales, visited India. Things were much more primitive then than nowadays, for the custom of native Indian rulers staying in England for lengthy periods had not been introduced. Indeed, it was a rare thing for native rulers to leave their kingdoms, and as for mixing with Europeans, dining with them, wearing European clothes, eating European food, and drinking wine, as is done freely and openly nowadays, such things were absolutely undreamt of.

The native princes met English officials on special occasions, but at the ceremonial banquets which accompanied them they neither ate nor drank. And as for mixing with the English socially or in the way of sport the mere idea of such a thing would have produced something akin to a social earthquake. Nowadays, as we all know, everything is different, very different.

But to get back to the yarn. During the then Prince of Wales's tour a certain Maharajah called to pay his respects. He presented the Prince with a bejewelled sword, the value of which was computed at £12,000, and bending low said,

"If it be your Highness's will to test it, behold, my neck is ready". Although the Prince accepted the sword he naturally did not accept the invitation. Had he done so there would have been no special risk. Which brings me to the point of the story. The sword was made of native gold, and it was so soft that it was almost possible to turn the edge with the fingers.

Times of India.—His Highness the Rana of Porebunder will arrive at Grant Road Station, Bombay, at 7-15 A.M. (standard time) on the 26th October. The officer commanding 113th Infantry is to furnish a guard of honour consisting of native officer and 50 men, to be at the station at 6-25 A.M. and the Rana will be accommodated at His Highness the Aga Khan's Bungalow in Pedder Road, Cumballa Hill. A salute of 11 guns will be fired on his arrival.

His Highness the Thakore Sahab of Gondal will arrive at Grant Road station by the same train and a similar guard of honour will be furnished. The Thakore Sahab will stay at Middle Bungalow, Jeraj Garden, Warden Road. A salute of 11 guns will be fired.

His Highness the Raja of Rajpipla will also arrive by the same train and will be received with corresponding ceremonies. The Raja will stay at Rupjee Moor's bungalow, Walkeshwar Road.

A systematic effort is being made to secure the general decorating of Bombay on the occasion of the Royal visit. It surely needs no words of ours to commend this movement to the support of all classes of the community. To Bombay belongs the honour of welcoming Their Royal Highnesses on the occasion of their landing in India. In Bombay Their Royal Highnesses will form their first impressions of the Indian Empire, which will naturally be the most striking. Therefore we hope that every citizen, no matter where his house or business premises may be situated, will do something in the way of decorating them, so that the whole city may wear a gay and festive appearance.

Whilst this applies to the city as a whole, it applies with special force to those parts of it on the route to be followed on the State drives. Here every occupier and property owner should take particular pride in decorating his premises, so that the Royal Visitors may be met on every hand with unmistakable evidences of welcome. As there appears to be some confusion in the public mind as to the routes for the two State drives on November 9th and 10th, we give the routes in detail so as to avoid all possibility of error.

On the day of the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses, starting from Apollo Bunder at about 5-30 P.M., the following route will be traversed:—

What we have said of the decorations applies with equal force to the illuminations. Every building, no matter how remotely situated, should evidence participation in the general rejoicing, and everyone on the line of route should feel that he has a special responsibility in seeing that there are no gaps or weak points in a spectacle which should be unique in the annals of the city. Here again, to avoid all possibility of doubt and confusion, we reproduce the carriage route for illuminations on Tuesday, the 14th November:—

Times of India.—On November 9th the Royal party are timed to arrive at the Bunder at 4-15 p.m., instead of 4-30 p.m. as originally stated. The introductions at the Bunder and the presentation of the Municipal address will probably not occupy more than 30 to 45 minutes. Their Royal Highnesses will therefore probably leave the Bunder between 4-45 p.m. and 5 p.m. and should therefore drive through the City in daylight.

His Highness Maharaval Mansingh Prithisingh of Dergar-Baria arrived in Bombay yesterday morning by the Ahmedabad mail train and alighted at the Church Gate Station. He proceeded to the Great Western Hotel, where he stays till the conclusion of the Royal visit.

His Highness the Thakur Sahab Bhavsingji, K.C.S.I., of Bhavnagar, will arrive in Bombay on the 5th proximo by a special train. His Highness will stay in a bungalow at Peddar Road.

Shrimant Sardar Sahab Shankarrao, Pant Sachiv of Bhore, arrived in Bombay yesterday by the Poona passenger train, and alighted at the Victoria Terminus, where he was met by Mr. Mirza Abas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government. With him was a retinue of 85 followers, some of whom carried guns and swords. A few of the Chief's own Body-guard were in attendance at the station and they escorted him to a Parsee gentleman's bungalow on the Malabar Hill, where he will put up during his stay in the city.

His Highness the Jam Sahab of Navanagar will arrive at the Grant Road station, Bombay, at 8-48 A.M. (Standard time) to-day.

The Officer commanding 113th Infantry will furnish a guard of honour—strength, 1 native officer and 50 rank and file, to be at the station at 7-55 A.M. (local time). The Jam Sahab will reside at His Highness the Aga Khan's bungalow, Mazagon. A salute of 11 guns will be fired from Colaba North Battery at 8-9 A.M. (local time).

26TH OCTOBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The Mysore correspondent of the Madras Mail says:—Their Royal Highnesses according to present arrangements, are timed to arrive in Mysore on the afternoon of Monday, the 29th January. On the same afternoon the Prince and the Maharaja will exchange visits, and the dinner in the evening will be private. On Tuesday, the 30th January, the Capital will be inspected, and historic Seringapatam will be visited, the Royal party returning to Mysore after luncheon. On the same evening there will be a State dinner, followed by fireworks. At 2 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon (the 31st January) a departure will be made by motor-car for the shooting camp, and the run is timed to occupy three and a half hours. The 1st, 2nd and 3rd of February will be spent in the shooting camp, and the return to Mysore will be made on Sunday, the 4th idem. Their Royal Highnesses leaving privately for Bangalore the same evening.

Madras Mail.—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will hold a review of the troops at Secunderabad (increased by the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders from Poona) on the 9th February.

Owing to the daily increase of work in the Chief Secretariat of the Madras Government owing to correspondence in connection with the Royal visit, a special department has been formed to deal with such matters expeditiously.

Madras Mail.—How many people realise the immense amount of time and trouble that is being taken to make Their Royal Highnesses's visit to India a success? To take one "mere detail" let us look at the recently completed narrow gauge Royal train which will convey Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales through parts of Southern India. It has occupied a large portion of the Negapatam S.I.R. workmen during a whole year, and, at a cost of Rs. 70,000, is complete to the last detail in everything that can make for comfort during the long journeys that Indian travelling means. It consists of three large saloon carriages. Let us look first at the dining car. It contains three tables, each seating four persons. The light polished wood chairs are built on the American "turn-table" fashion, and are most comfortable with their padding of cool green brocade. Each car has three electric fans, and three groups of electric lights on the ceiling. In the dining car the curved ceiling is of highly polished dark teak-wood, and all electric light fittings, racks, etc., are of oxidised silver, while numerous cupboards line the sides, each ornamented with beautifully carved wood panels, done in the S.I.R. Workshops. Beyond the dining car is a carefully thought out "matey room" fitted with sink for washing up a wine-bin, racks for plates, etc., while beyond again is a model little kitchen, complete with the latest thing in cooking ranges, cupboards, plate-racks, and water laid on.

Now turn, and walk back through the dining saloon just taking note of the luxurious carpet, the inlaid almirahs in the corners with plate glass panels, past the small room in the passage set apart for His Highness's valet and look into the Prince's beautifully fitted bathroom, with a large English bath, and then on into His Royal Highness's saloon. Here we have a look of solid comfort that makes one feel for an instant that one must have wandered into a London Club by mistake. The comfortable chairs, and the large sofa, or rather settee, are all upholstered in dark green leather, plain except for the Royal Arms and Motto in the centre of the back. On one's right as one enters is an escritoire, with numerous pigeon-holes, and a green shaded electric reading lamp, and a Bridge table further on to relieve the tedium of the journey. The amber coloured brocaded satin curtains, which are now against the sides of the carriage, can be swung across on their oxidised silver rails to screen off half the saloon when that wide leather-covered settee, by pressing a small spring, suddenly has turned itself upside down, and behold a luxurious mattress and bedding! all neatly done up in a canvas hold-all, has been made into a comfortable bed for His Royal Highness. In this saloon, as in the Princess's, the ceiling is white moulded, with a faint touch of gilding—nothing overdone, but all in the best of taste—the carpet are of softest velvet pile and the windows are provided with three sets of shutters, glass, venetians, and mosquito proof. The electric light fittings, racks and the handles of almirahs are in dull silver.

Beyond the handsome glass door, with the Royal Arms on it, we walk straight into the Princess's saloon, and a long vista it looks from the end of one saloon to the end of the other. For Her Royal Highness, as is only fitting, the furniture and appointments are more dainty than what we have looked at so far. Pale green brocade gives a cool appearance to the furniture, which is of lighter make, on the whole; but the large settee is capable of a similar transformation into a comfortable bed with spring mattress. And here again are brocaded curtains, amber colour with a touch of pale green, which can swing across at will, dividing the saloon into two. Beyond is the most charming bath-room; the walls lined with grey-green tiles, studded with oxidised silver, the washstand in faintly tinted marble, pink and green veined. A white moulded almirah and the large mirrors are all in harmony and good taste.

The S.I.R. is to be congratulated on a carefully thought out work, beautifully finished.

Pioneer.—The senior students of the Colvin Talukdars School are to have the honour of doing escort to the carriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales during Their Royal Highnesses' visit to Lucknow. The school riding master is taking them in hand betimes to ensure their doing themselves credit on the occasion.

Rangoon Gazette.—We understand that the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's Japan, the splendid vessel which was launched from their Dalla Dockyard in the early part of this year, is to have the honour of carrying the Royal party on the river in January. The fittings will be suitably rearranged, and the ship painted white, with yellow funnel. The Mogoun will act as tender. The Togo will run between Barr street jetty and H. M. S. Renown.

The Japan has a length over-all of 326 feet with a beam of 46 feet and a depth of hold of 11 feet. On her trial trip she made 14½ knots on the measured mile.

The vessel is lit throughout with electricity. She was built on the Clyde by Messrs. Wm. Denny and Bros. of Dumbarton, and sent out in pieces to Rangoon, where she was erected by the Company's dockyard staff under Mr. J. P. Hay, the Manager of the Flotilla Company. The Japan is built of galvanised steel throughout.

United India and Native States.—We learn that the Maharajah of Jeypore, the Maharajah of Bobili, the Rajah of Venkatagiri and the Rajah of Kapileswarapuram (Godavari District) have undertaken to put up triumphal arches at various points on the route, on the occasion of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to Madras.

United India and Native States.—The sum sanctioned by the Government of His Highness the Maharajah of Mysore for the entertainment of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales is Rs. 3,23,000. Is so much needed or can Mysore afford such a large sum? Can we not ask with a contemporary whether "Mysore is rich enough to incur that expenditure at a time when pressing important measures are waiting to be introduced"? When Lord Curzon indulged in the function of the Delhi Durbar, India rightly protested against the wasteful extravagance. But now Mysore with a small proportion of the income of the Government of India spends as much on a week's tamashas. We yield to none in our loyalty to our distinguished visitors. Due honour must be paid to them. There is, however, a limit for the expenditure to be incurred. Such a huge sum may gratify the Government of India but it is a waste of extravagance all the same. "In entertaining the august visitors Mysore need not lose its head, and saddle the people with expenditure from which recovery will not be quite easy. The programme it has fixed upon is too ambitious, and the Maharajah and his councillors ought to perceive this."

Christian Million.—As a matter of State policy the tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales through India is a step in the right direction. As the future Emperor of the vast dominion in the East, it is to his advantage to make himself acquainted at first hand with the native princes and rulers, and to see for himself the condition of the people. His last visit was only a fugitive one, and was part of his journey round the world. The present one is to be devoted entirely to India. The visit is needed. All is not as it should be in our Eastern dependency. There are signs of discontent, which may easily swell into loud murmurings. While the loyalty of some of the native Princes is beyond question, there is reason to fear that the military rule of Lord Kitchener is straining the loyalty of others. There are indications that the desire for self-government is growing among the ablest of our Indian statesmen. The social condition of the natives is not at all that it should be. The perpetual recurrence of famine, with all its consequent horrors, is making them sullen and rebellious. In Bengal also there is far more discontent than is comfortable even to our self-satisfied minds. For this, and other reasons, we are not sorry that our future King has undertaken this voyage. Of course, he will see things and wear things through official eyes and ears, but he is gifted with an independent mind, and probably will be able to form his own opinions on what he does see and hear. At any rate we join with all his future subjects in wishing him and his consort "bon voyage."

Daily Mail.—Lovely weather has prevailed since the Renown left Genoa. The Prince and Princess are in excellent health, and find the warship most comfortable and steady.

The Prince's standard was hoisted on the Renown at eight o'clock last Saturday morning, and was saluted by the escort-cruisers Lancaster and Suffolk, and by the Italian Fleet, which was just entering Genoa as we left.

At ten o'clock all the officers were presented to the Prince, who wears the uniform of vice-admiral on board, and at noon a short Trafalgar Day service, including Nelson's last recorded prayer, was read to all assembled on the quarter-deck, while the band played the "Death of Nelson."

The Prince then ordered the ship's companies to splice the main brace in memory of our greatest admiral.

On Sunday Divine service was held on the quarter-deck in the forenoon, and the Renown steamed round the Bay of Naples in the afternoon, the Princess taking photographs of the finest views.

Egyptian Gazette.—There is nothing that has endeared King Edward VII to his subjects so much as his universal good humour and tact, and it is these qualities which have enabled him, during the short period of his reign, to cement our friendly relationship throughout Europe, and to bring us closer to the Dependencies of the Crown. It seems only the other day that the Prince and Princess of Wales returned from their successful tour in the Colonies. Now they are to visit India where the Heir-Apparent goes for the first time to represent His Majesty in our vast Eastern possessions.

The preparations for this tour, fraught with so much importance, have of a necessity required the most elaborate planning and forethought, and everything that can make both the voyage and the visit as easy and enjoyable as possible has been done. A good deal of State pageant must attend the journey, and it is more or less imperative that the son of the Emperor should arrive in the East in Imperial fashion.

A special train, with dining and day saloons and sleeping apartments, conveyed the Prince and his party across France to Italy, where they were entertained at a farewell fête organised by the King and Queen of Italy, prior to joining their ship at Genoa.

The work of converting the huge battleship Renown, which is destined to carry the travellers, was completed over a fortnight ago, when, accompanied by the cruiser Terrible, she left Portsmouth, having on board a large number of the suite, who had the advantage of getting used to the sea by the time they arrived at Genoa, in readiness to receive the Prince and Princess last Saturday.

A huge naval pageant took place on the following Monday, when the Royal travellers were escorted through the Straits of Messina by the fleet, which left Malta the day before, and consists of His Majesty's ships Bulwark, Queen, Formidable, Implacable, Venerable, Irresistible, Goliath, Prince of Wales, Lerian, Venus, Scutinel, and fifteen destroyers. These met the Renown off Cape Pellaro, and the manœuvres began with a Royal salute, and terminated with a grand display of illuminations in the evening, before the fleet returned to Malta.

Upon their arrival in Bombay, the Prince and Princess will be received by Lord Curzon, and once in the East they will find a programme of enormous length has been prepared. India is laying itself out to entertain its Royal visitors with lavish oriental hospitality.

Excellent sport will be provided for the Prince, who is an expert shot. Not only is His Royal Highness taking out a great assortment of guns for this purpose, but he has also a taxidermist attached to his staff, in order that the more valuable skins and trophies of the chase may receive immediate attention.

For the convenience of the Royal guests a special train de luxe has been built to Lord Curzon's order. This far surpasses in grandeur any train that has hitherto been seen in India. It consists of dining and sleeping cars and special apartments for the use of the Prince and Princess. The apartments destined for the use of the Prince are upholstered in green morocco and those furnished for the Princess in delicate French grey; the whole train being on the outside painted cream colour and ornamented with the Royal arms, while the inside is decorated with highly polished woods, the various natural colours of which have been wonderfully preserved.

Of the gowns and jewels taken by the Princess much has been written. The latter alone have been insured for £50,000; but this does not include the magnificent collection of orders and badges which the Prince is taking, nor yet the collection of English-made jewels, in the form of brooches and scarf pins, etc., destined to be distributed amongst various people with whom he will come in contact. In addition to these the Royalties are taking huge quantities of their own photographs, for which they have given special sittings, as well as no fewer than forty-four oil paintings of King Edward, in the uniform of a Field Marshal, and 520 large colour prints from the same, which are intended for the adornment of public buildings, Government residences, courts of law, etc., throughout the great Empire of India.

While the Prince and Princess of Wales are passing through the Suez Canal en route to the East, the elder members of the British community in Egypt will, no doubt, recall the interest that was excited by the departure of our present King, then Prince of Wales, for the East in 1875. Then the Royal itinerary included Cairo, and the Prince rejoined the transport Serapis at Suez, reaching Aden on the 1st of November and Bombay on the 8th, the eve of his birthday. The present Prince of Wales will reach Bombay on that auspicious date, and we do not doubt that the 9th of November will be celebrated with even greater manifestations of joy and patriotism than usual, owing to the presence among our fellow-subjects of the Heir-Apparent and his gracious consort.

Since the last visit Egypt and India have changed. Under the enlightened rule of His Highness the Khedive and the guidance of Lord Cromer and a devoted and energetic band of officials, Egypt, from a bankrupt despotism, has become one of the most enlightened and progressive of Oriental States. The Sudan, once a province where corrupt and tyrannous officials made their fortunes or lost their lives, a drain on Egypt's resources and a breeding ground for the forces of violence and fanaticism which were to lay it desolate, has become a well-governed and promising country, to-day a useful recruiting ground and a valuable commercial asset, to-morrow one of the most productive regions of Africa. In Egypt, as in the Sudan, justice has been purified, education is making great strides, and in all that concerns the material side of human development the country has progressed astonishingly in 1875.

India, too, has changed, though the history of India shows more ups and downs, more alternations of war and famine with peace and prosperity, than that of Egypt in the last generation. Upper Burma has been annexed; Mysore has been restored to its Royal house, and remains a well-managed and in some ways a model principality; the industrial and commercial development of the country has increased enormously; railway communications have been extended, and despite the savage backwardness of some and the proud conservatism of others among the many races of our great dependency, education makes rapid progress. Wars have, it is true, retarded in some degree the development of the Indian Empire. The hill tribes have given constant trouble and still require the vigilant watch of our frontier garrisons. Anglo-Indian armies have entered Kabul and Kandahar, Mandalay and Lhasa, and events beyond the North-Western Frontier have made a reorganisation of the Indian Army a necessity. It is unfortunate that this reorganisation should have led to a dispute between one of the ablest of British soldiers and the most energetic and far-seeing of recent Viceroy of India, but it will be in some measure a consolation to Lord Curzon to be able to welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival to the dependency which he has so ably and so justly ruled.

H. M. S. Launceston arrived here this morning and moored in Navy Bay. She reports having experienced bad weather and a high sea. H. M. S. Renown and Suffolk have been sighted. They are expected to arrive about 3 P.M.

H. M. S. Renown, with the Prince and Princess of Wales on board, arrived here at 3-30 P.M. The vessel moored opposite the Canal Company's office at 4 P.M. As the Renown entered the harbour both the Prince and Princess were to be seen on the bridge. The latter carried a Kodak, while the Prince was engaged with a telescope.

From fifty to seventy-five small crafts assembled to meet the Renown in the harbour, and followed her to her mooring. The quay is gaily decorated with flags and bunting and looks very striking and pretty. The Port Said and Suez Coal Co. and Messrs. Cory Bros. and Co. made an especially fine display with flags.

H. M. S. Suffolk arrived at 3-45 and moored alongside the Surprise in Navy Bay.

A number of visits have been paid on H. M. S. Renown by the local authorities, including His Excellency the Governor.

The furnishing and decoration of the principal Royal apartments on the Renown have been carried out by Waring and Gillow, Ltd., who, it will be remembered, also prepared the Ophir for Their Royal Highnesses's visit to the colonies. The treatment throughout is of a simple character that is characterised by the refinement which Waring and Gillow invariably associate with their decorative work.

The Princess's day saloon, with the bedroom and bathroom attached, is upholstered with cream challis having a border of pink rosebuds, and the electric lights having pink shades to match. The fore-cabin, or dining-room, is upholstered with curtains of French tissue bordered with pale blue. The furniture in this room is practically the same as it was before the vessel was commissioned for His Royal Highness's voyage, but several fine mezzotint engravings were sent from York Cottage, and a handsome arrangement of electric candelabra for the table was added.

The after-cabin, or drawing-room, is furnished in an effective French tissue of pink and blue, the table cloths are pale blue bordered with white silk and fringe, and the curtains are of the same material as those in the dining-room, the electric lights being enclosed in opaque glass with shades of pink.

The Prince of Wales's bedroom is upholstered with a handsome printed linen, the furniture being of fine mahogany.

The apartments throughout are painted in white enamel and have plated fittings, and electric fans are provided in each, while those occupied by the Prince and Princess have heating apparatus in addition.

The floors of all the apartments are covered with very fine matting. Numerous semi-structural alterations have been made for the accommodation of the Commodore and the suite, the bridge-house having, for instance, been divided into two rooms which will serve as lounge and reading rooms. These are furnished in oak with blue curtains trimmed with white.

The whole of the deck is covered with cork matting so that it will serve as a cool promenade.

Englishman.—When the present King, then Prince of Wales, made his historic tour through India the whole country was roused into an extraordinary display of enthusiasm and loyalty. It is related of the many thousands who assembled on the banks of the Hugli to watch the landing that they were moved by an emotion that had previously been deemed impossible in Oriental crowds. The majority of the uneducated, who had the vaguest ideas of England and the English, had the most amazing beliefs with regard even to the form and appearance of regal personages. But those days are passing away. The Indians have imbibed an education, and with it the consequent spirit of criticism. But it does not follow that the Prince of Wales will be greeted with less enthusiasm and loyalty because the purpose of his visit is understood, and because the limitations of royalty are more properly realised. There have, of course, been some attempts to discourage the visit, but on the whole it seems to be the general belief that the forthcoming tour will provide a fitting climax to the emotions that were aroused by the Durbar. The people of India reverence their Sovereign as a god, and there can be little doubt that the tour will, indeed, be a royal progress, watched by the expectant eyes of millions. But for the fact that the Government has issued the strictest orders regarding the scale of hospitality, many Indian Princes would have beggared themselves in the attempt to show their devotion to the Throne. But the Prince is not even able to accept the smallest gifts, and the people of India will not have much practical opportunity of proving how they appreciate the benefits of British rule. Still, loyalty may be demonstrated in a thousand ways, and already it is possible to discern signs of the magnitude and reality of the welcome that awaits Their Royal Highnesses.

Unfortunately it is impossible for the Prince with the limited time at his disposal to gain a clear idea either of the extent or of the variety of the riches and resources of the country. He will visit only a few of the places and spots of historical or other interest in India, and catch but a glimpse of the activities called into being by the presence of the English. The Native States to be visited are Indore, Udaipur, Jaipur, Bikanir, Mysore, and Hyderabad. These would seem to have been selected for the reason that they afford the best evidence of the propriety and order which has been induced in Native States as a result of the precepts and example of the Indian Government. No less than a couple of weeks is to be devoted to Nepal as a result possibly of the friendliness that was displayed by the Prime Minister of that country during the recent trouble in Tibet. This part of the tour will excite the greatest general interest, for Nepal is still to all practical purposes a closed country. Almost as many European travellers have entered Kabul as Khatmandu, and the British Resident at the latter place is kept almost a prisoner, having no liberty to move about the country. As a special concession Lord Roberts, on the eve of leaving India, was permitted to visit the capital of Nepal, but even he was restricted as to his route. The royal party will not, like him, be taken over the worst passes in order to impress them with the difficulty of invading the country, but camping out in Nepal should certainly afford a change from the luxury of travelling in special trains in India, as even the harmless, necessary dak bungalow does not exist, and the roads are atrocious. A week, which is to be crowded with festivities and ceremonies is to be spent in Calcutta, which is to thus have a larger opportunity than any other town in India of demonstrating its loyalty.

It has apparently been settled that the visit to Peshawar will include a journey through the Khyber, the pass which so many soldiers believe is the channel through which invasion will one day pour. There is nothing very imposing about the Khyber, but the Afridis are probably the most interesting of all the Pathan tribes; though it is a question whether they are so interesting when they are on their best behaviour as when they are on their worst. But Quetta is as important as Peshawar in the military sense, and though the tour programme makes no mention of the fact, it is highly probable that the royal party will proceed from Quetta to New Chaman to touch, as at Landi Kotal, Afghan soil. At all times the Indian army has been an object of fascinating interest to the European traveller, and a very special display is being organised for the benefit of Their Royal Highnesses. The concentration in the tract of country between Hassan Abdal and Rawalpindi will include the flower of the Indian Army, for practically all the troops are to be drawn from the Northern Command. The march past is to take place on a plain which will permit of a cavalry charge on a large scale, which should prove one of the most impressive spectacles witnessed during the whole tour. The royal party will not neglect Burma, the most picturesque portion of the Indian Empire, and the trip up to Mandalay will prove how successfully Upper Burma, not so very long ago a prey to anarchy under its own rulers, has been restored to peace and order by the methods which prove the British genius for rule. Agra, Delhi, Cawnpore, Lucknow—these are names which remain in the memory of every globe trotter, and they will have for the royal party associations of a very pleasant kind. But, after all, the visit of the Prince of Wales to India has its greatest significance not in the places he will see, nor in the hospitality with which he will be received, but in the indication it affords of the deep and abiding interest which is taken in India by the Throne. The King himself, doubtless, has not forgotten his memorable progress through the country 30 years ago, and all the indications point to so cordial a welcome for the Prince of Wales that he in turn is certain to carry away an abiding impression of his visit.

Indian Daily News.—A public meeting will be held at Lucknow on November 7th under the presidency of the Lieutenant-Governor to launch the project for a Medical College at Lucknow in honour of the Royal visit. Four lakhs have been promised, the Maharaja of Balrampur having subscribed three lakhs.

At a meeting of the Senate to be held at the Senate House, College Square, on November 11th, the Registrar will lay before the Senate the following Resolution of the Syndicate:—

“Resolved unanimously: That the Syndicate do recommend to the Senate that the Honorary Degree of Doctor in the Faculty of Law be conferred on His Royal Highness George Fredrick Ernest Albert, Prince of Wales, on the ground that by reason of eminent position and attainments, he is, in their opinion, a fit and proper person to receive such Degree.”

Pioneer.—In view of the forthcoming festivities at Bombay, several Chiefs from the Southern Mahratta country and their suite are proceeding to Bombay. The Chief of Miraj leaves to-morrow morning; the Chief of Kurandwal, to-morrow evening; and the Chief of Mudhol, on the 1st November.

Pioneer.—It is probable that the Lama of Tashi Lampo from Shigatse, with a retinue of Tibetan officials, will be present in Calcutta during the Royal visit. The great Lama will be as interesting a figure in the various ceremonies as the Tongsa Penlop of Bhutan.

28TH OCTOBER 1905.

Egyptian Gazette.—The Prince and Princess of Wales are off to India this morning, with the warm farewells of the Royal family and the nation to give them heart and hope for a great tour. They will be away for six months; and news of their doings will be read from day to day with unflinching interest. It is a much wider tour than the King was able to make in 1875, for it will extend into Upper Burma and include many cities which he did not see; and present circumstances make it in all ways a more important tour. The intervening thirty years have not only seen immense developments of railway enterprise, irrigation, and the whole administrative system, but have strengthened the hold of the Crown upon our Indian Dependency. It follows, of course, that such a tour means hard work. The Prince's great resourcefulness in speech and personal tact will be taxed as it never was in Canada. That he will acquit himself royally and very worthily is, however, taken for granted—a fact of more significance to his popularity as Heir-Apparent than everybody pauses to consider. But one may hope that he will find the journey pleasant, and full enough of interest to keep his labours light.

Those who hoped that the Prince and Princess of Wales would pay a visit to the town of Port Said have been doomed to disappointment, as their Royal Highnesses have not quitted the harbour for a single moment.

Great interest has been evinced on the part of the population in the visit of the Heir-Apparent, and large crowds watched the arrival of the British warships from the quays. As the Renown steamed slowly into the harbour H.R.H. the Princess of Wales was seen to take quite a number of snap-shots of the various points of interest, in which occupation she was assisted by one of her ladies-in-waiting.

As soon as H. M. S. Renown had moored H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, who was on the upper bridge, retired to his private saloon in order to receive the officials who went on board to welcome him, the first of whom was Mr. D. A. Cameron, H.B.M.'s Consul, who remained on board for half an hour. He was followed by Major Watson, A.D.C. to the Khedive, representing His Highness, Mr. Doyen, of the Suez Canal Company, the police commandant, and a few others.

Subsequently Major Watson, Captain Tottenham (H.M.S. Lancaster), Captain Wemyss (H.M.S. Suffolk), and Commander Bruen (H.M.S. Surprise) had the honour of dining with Their Royal Highnesses.

Shortly after 9-30 this morning the Prince and Princess of Wales, with a few of their suite, left H.M.S. Renown and proceeded direct to the Surprise, where they remained till nearly 5 P.M. During the morning the ship's band played, and continued to do so until lunch was served.

This evening the Prince and Princess will go on board H.M.S. Lancaster, and the Prince is expected to ring the silver bell which was presented to the vessel by the ladies of Lancaster a few weeks ago. Later in the evening the Royal party will probably visit H.M.S. Suffolk. H.M.S. Powerful arrived here at 2-40 P.M. to-day and is moored at black buoy No. 7.

The Renown and Powerful are expected to leave between 8 and 9 to-morrow morning.

The Royal party are due at Port Said again, on their return from India, on April 29, with the same escort of vessels as they have left with.

All the ships in the harbour were decorated yesterday.

Graphic.—The departure of the Heir-Apparent and his engaging Consort on a five-month's visit to India is, to a large extent, a repetition of the pilgrimage made by King Edward just thirty years ago, when he filled the same position at the foot of the Throne. Great changes have happened in the Land of Ind since that far-off date—changes, we are happy to believe all for the firmer grounding of our rule in the affections of the native population. But it is an essential Asiatic trait of character for the ruled to wish to see the ruler with their own eyes; and although the Prince of Wales is not exactly the actual ruler, even the most ignorant ryot will accord him homage as the son and heir of the Emperor-King. It was the chief weakness of the famous East India Company that it had no personality to put in evidence. Except among the educated classes—the merest fragment of the population in the aggregate—the conclave in Leadenhall Street came to be considered a mysterious abstraction, neither divine, nor human, nor hybrid. It was personified as "Jan Koompani Shaib Bahadur," but it was never deified by any sect, as Queen Victoria, Colonel Nicholson and Sir Richard Temple have been. In the case of the Prince and Princess of Wales, there is no veil between them and the countless myriads they will visit during the longest Royal itinerary India has ever experienced. They will see and be seen with all the publicity of the English life; and when they embark at Karachi early in next March, natives who saw them will, for years to come, make perpetual boast of the fact as the most noteworthy incident in their lives.

Illustrated Mail.—Until the spring of next year the Prince and Princess of Wales will be absent from England on their Indian tour. They left England on October 19, and are due to arrive in India on November 9, and from then until they leave in March of next year their time will be spent in visiting the chief towns throughout the continent of India.

At Bombay, where the royal party land, they remain until November 14, and then go on to Indore, Udaipur, Jaipur, Bikanir, Lahore, Peshawar, Jammu, Amritsar, and Delhi, arriving at the last-named place, where the Commander-in-Chief's camp is situated, on December 12. From Delhi the Prince and Princess will travel to Agra, and then on to Gwalior, where they will remain until Christmas Day. Lucknow is to be the next town visited, followed by Calcutta, where New Year's Day will be spent. After leaving Calcutta, Darjeeling, Rangoon, Mandalay, Madras, Bangalore, Hyderabad, Ellora, Benares, Nepal, Simla, Quetta, and Kurrachee will all be visited in turn, the party leaving the last-named place on March 19 of next year.

After departing from India, it is announced, their Royal Highnesses will visit Athens, and stay with the King and Queen of Greece for a short time, afterwards re-embarking for Venice, and taking the short land journey across to the English Channel, arriving in England at the end of April or the beginning of May next.

The Royal train, which has been specially constructed for the occasion at the works of the East Indian Railway at Lillooah, near Calcutta, is said to be one of the most perfect that has ever been built. The vehicles comprising this train, which were constructed from raw material by native labour, are in point of length, breadth, height, and weight far in advance of anything previously in use in India or on British railways.

The entire train when made up consists of nine saloon carriages, seven of which are 71 feet long, and weigh forty-five tons each, while the other two form the front and rear brake vans, and are 63 feet long, and weigh thirty-five tons. The total length of the complete train is 630ft., and its weight is 383 tons. Each carriage is connected by collapsible gangways making it possible to walk from one end of the train to the other and forming a fine promenade for Their Royal Highnesses while travelling.

The nine carriages of the train consist of two Royal saloons, three saloons for the staff, a dining-car, a kitchen, and two brake vans. The front brake van is used for railway officials, while the one at the rear of the train carries a native doctor, the staff of clerks and servants, and provides space for the enormous amount of luggage being carried by the party. The two royal saloons have been provided, one for the Prince and the other for the Princess, and consist of day and night apartments, a compartment for a personal servant, and a luggage room.

The most magnificent car of all is the dining-saloon, which is 50ft. long, 8ft. wide, and panelled in rosewood, walnut, and oak. It seats twenty-four persons at small tables, and contains every convenience for dining in comfort.

After the tour of the Prince and Princess the train, which was built to the order of Lord Curzon, will be used as a State train for the Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

Indian Daily News.—The names of officers specially appointed by the Local Governments to assist Press representatives in obtaining accommodation, etc., are Messrs. S. N. Edwards, I.C.S., Bombay; P. L. Barker, I.C.S., Lahore, Delhi and Simla; W. E. M. Campbell, I.C.S., Agra, Lucknow and Benares; J. A. L. Swan, I.C.S., Calcutta and Darjeeling; Lawrie, Rangoon; Major Strickland, Mandalay; A. Y. G. Campbell, I.C.S., Madras; R. M. C. Moss-King, I.C.S., Bangalore; J. B. Wood, C.S., Quetta; and J. W. Johnstone, I.C.S., Peshawar. In the Native States Press representatives will be the guests of the Durbar, and at most of the places visited they will be elected honorary members of the local club or clubs during their stay.

Ladies' Field.—The Prince and Princess of Wales were almost constantly with the King and Queen during the few days prior to their start for India. As on the occasion of their trip to the Colonies, Their Royal Highnesses commended their children to the care of Their Majesties, and that the charge will be fully and devotedly carried out goes without question. The Prince and Princess had a magnificent send-off, and it was characteristic of Royal custom that, while the travellers drove to Victoria in an open carriage, the King and Queen, for once not the central figures, arrived at the station in a closed brougham. The Princess, who commenced her long journey in a dark blue costume, was evidently somewhat affected while the farewells were being said, and Their Majesties also found the ordeal a little trying. Those on the platform included Prince Arthur of Connaught, Prince Francis and Prince Alexander of Teck, Lord and Lady Lansdowne, Count Albert Menesoff, Lord and Lady Bath, Lady Carragh, Mr. and Mrs. Brodrick, and the members of the various Royal Households. The Royal children went to Sandringham on Saturday. The arrangements by which the Prince of Wales will keep in touch with the King during his tour are very complete. Mr. Stanley Spencer has gone to India with one of his largest balloons for the use of the Prince, who is anxious to have a bird's-eye view of some of the Eastern cities.

Morning Post.—The Prince and Princess of Wales spent to-day on board His Majesty's despatch vessel Surprise, which is moored off the Navy House, Port Said. In the afternoon their Royal Highnesses visited the cruisers Suffolk and Lancaster, which are moored alongside the Surprise.

In the evening the Prince and Princess went on board the cruiser Powerful, Vice-Admiral Sir W. H. Fawkes's flag-ship, which arrived to-day on her way to the Australia Station. The Vice-Admiral gave a dinner in honour of Their Royal Highnesses, the captains of the escorting squadron, the Governor, the British Consul, the manager of the Suez Canal, and several Anglo-Egyptian officials being asked to meet them.

The Renown will enter the Canal to-morrow morning. She is due at Suez at midnight and will anchor in the roadstead till noon on Sunday, when she will proceed to Aden, escorted by the cruiser Terrible.

Rangoon Gazette.—An interesting description of the forthcoming tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales through the Indian Empire appears in the October issue of the Empire Review. The writer is Mr. Arthur Savvrell, and he illustrates his description with a map showing the country to be traversed by the Heir-Apparent, while the journeying of the King on the occasion of his visit thirty years ago is also indicated. "When their Royal Highnesses sail from Karachi on their homeward voyage in March they will have seen as much as could possibly be seen of the Indian Empire in the space of five months. Its army and fortified places, its seats of government and commerce, its religious and historical monuments, its agricultural wealth and means of transport and communication, and its many nations, tribes, and kindreds will, as it were, have been passed in review before them. The Royal visitors will have travelled from the golden shores of Malabar to the dark and desolate hills of the far North-West; across the deserts of Rajputana and down the rich valley of the Ganges; from the brown hills and pagoda-dotted plains of Burma to the rolling uplands of the Deccan. They will have seen the broad streets and modern buildings of Calcutta and the immemorial temples of holy Benares; the palms of Madras and the pines of the Himalayas; the Taj Mahal at Agra and the railway terminus at Howrah; the Dewan-I-Khas and the Circuit House which is being fitted up for their reception at Delhi."

Rangoon Gazette.—Extensive railway arrangements are being made by the Burma Railways in connection with the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales and party to Mandalay. There will be three distinct trains run from Rangoon to Mandalay. The first, called the pilot train, will carry Press Correspondents, baggage, servants, and railway officials connected with the way and works of the line. The second train will be the Royal train, consisting of eight Royal carriages for the use of His Royal Highness and party, the two saloons of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, together with a kitchen tender, the saloon of the Agent of the railway and a couple of other carriages for attendants. The railway officials who will accompany the Royal train are the Agent, the Traffic Manager, the Locomotive Superintendent and the Consulting Engineer for Railways. The third train, which is really a supplementary train, will carry railway, military and civil officers, and the rest of the baggage of the Royal party. The catering for the Royal train has been given by the Burma Railways to Messrs. Wutzler and Co., of Mussoorie, the catering of the pilot and supplementary trains being placed in the hands of Messrs. Arthur Barnes and Co. of this town. The Rangoon station will be profusely decorated and illuminated. It is expected that Their Royal Highnesses will leave Rangoon at dusk and arrive at Mandalay the following afternoon. The Mandalay station will also be decorated. From Mandalay the Royal party will proceed to Promo by river, and the same three trains will bring them down to Rangoon. The Railway authorities are also arranging to have shamianas erected at the halting stations en route, where refreshments will be served free to the public.

Times of India.—The following were the arrangements made for escorting the Prince and Princess of Wales through the Straits of Messina on their way to India:—

The Mediterranean Fleet, under Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, consisting of the battleships Bulwark, Queen, Formidable, Implacable, Venerable, Irresistible, Goliath, Prince of Wales, and cruisers Leviathan, Venus, Sentinel, and 15 destroyers will leave Malta at 4 p.m., on Sunday, October 22, and meet the Renown at 10 a.m., on Monday, October 23, off Cape Pellaro. The big ships and the destroyers will be dressed with masthead flags and a Royal salute will be fired. Various evolutions will be performed, and at 7-40 p.m. the ships will illuminate with coloured lights. The fleet will part company with the Renown on the evening of Monday, October 23, and proceed to Malta.

It is notified that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will hold a levée at Government House, Calcutta, on Friday, December 29th, cards to be sent to the office of the Military Secretary to the Viceroy not later than Wednesday, December 20th.

Sardar Shrimantrao Ragunath, alias Balasaheb Patvardhan, the Chief of Kurundwad, arrived in Bombay yesterday morning and was met by Mr. Abbas Ali Baig, on behalf of the Government, at the Victoria Terminus. The Chief is staying at Walkeshwar.

A programme of motoring trips for their Royal Highnesses from Bombay to Mahim and Bandora, with a longer one to Vehar or Thana, is being arranged. On board H.M.S. Renown, there are three Argyll cars which are being brought out for the Royal use, but it is not improbable that the Prince and Princess and staff will be driven in cars, the driving of which will be entrusted to the Bombay Motor Car Co., Ltd., whose representative, Mr. Arthur Hoare, returned to Bombay by the S.S. Moldavia yesterday.

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE PAPERS PUBLISHED IN BENGAL FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 28TH OCTOBER 1905.

Bengalee, 22nd October 1905.—A correspondent writing to the Bengalee suggests that, if it is not too late, the Royal visit should be postponed, as the people of the province are plunged in too deep a sorrow to join in festivities. The Bengalis regard their Sovereign as an incarnation of the Deity and they welcome him as such, but their demeanour towards him must on this occasion, of necessity be silent and solemn and devoid of pomp and grandeur.

The Bengalee is not insensible to the advantages which are likely to accrue from the "heir to the Throne meeting his future subjects face to face," but will there be any chance of this, considering that the Prince will be surrounded by an impenetrable phalanx of officials? If, however, His Royal Highness gets an opportunity of seeing his future subjects, he will realise the truth of Sir Frederick Treves's observation that an Indian never smiles. The reason need not be asked. In Bengal he will find them weeping.

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE PAPERS PUBLISHED IN THE BOMBAY PRESIDENCY FOR THE WEEK ENDING 28TH OCTOBER 1905.

Kaiser-i-Hind, 22nd October 1905.—The entire population of Bombay is eager to take part in the festivities and rejoicings attending the visit of Their Royal Highnesses, and thousands of people from the mofussil are expected to pour into the city on the occasion. The notification, however, which has been issued by Government regarding the holidays to be observed in honour of the Royal visit, will come as a damper upon the public enthusiasm over the event. Only the 9th November has been declared a close holiday under the Negotiable Instruments Act, while the 11th and 13th November have been declared to be holidays subject to arrangements being made for urgent work under the new holiday regulations. The result of this arrangement will be that banks will remain open on all the days of the Royal visit except the 9th November, and private offices will in all likelihood follow suit. The arrangement seems to have been made out of regard for the convenience of the commercial class, but it will press hard upon employes in private firms. We would suggest, therefore, that all the three days should be declared to be public holidays under the Negotiable Instruments Act. Further, the 14th November, the day on which the city will be illuminated, should also be declared a public holiday. The Bombay Government, we cannot help saying, have acted illiberally in the matter of granting holidays on the forthcoming occasion. It may be noted that during the Royal visit of 1875 an entire week was observed as a public holiday. When lakhs of rupees are spent upon organising festivities, it is meet that the public should be given adequate facilities for participating in them.

Sanj Vartaman, 25th October, Kaiser-i-Hind, 29th October, Akhbar-i-Soudagar, 25th October.—The slight alteration made by Government in the time of landing of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales is a welcome change, but it does not go far enough. Under the present arrangements Their Royal Highnesses will leave the bandar at 5 p.m., i.e., only half an hour earlier than originally contemplated. Now according to the current year's almanac the sun will set on the 9th November at 5-37 p.m. In view of the circuitous route by which Their Royal Highnesses will drive through the native town, it is certain that they will not be able to complete their journey to Government House before it is dark. Even an ordinary carriage starting from Apollo Bandar and driving at full speed along the Royal route would take more than one hour to reach Government House. The time taken by the Royal cortege will necessarily be greater still. In fact it is certain that it will grow quite dark by the time the Royal procession reaches the J. J. Hospital. The spectators assembled in thousands at Grant Road, Chowpati and Walkeshwar Road will not consequently have an opportunity of seeing the august visitors by daylight. Besides, the statement made in the Press Note that Their Royal Highnesses will probably leave the bandar by 5 p.m., is apt to give rise to a good deal of speculation. Why should the arrangements be left in a state of suspense and uncertainty? The Hon. the Chief Secretary considers that 30 to 45 minutes will be sufficient for going through the formalities at the bandar. We think this estimate is much below the mark. We beg to suggest that with a view to obviate all difficulties in this connection the time of departure from the bandar be fixed at 4-30 p.m. punctually. The heat of the sun is very mild between 4 and 5 p.m. in November, and the Royal visitors are not likely to suffer any inconvenience on this score. As regards the wooden stands that have been erected for children along the line of the Royal route, we are very glad to note that their strength and stability have been satisfactorily tested by the Children's Entertainment Committee. But no adequate arrangements seem to have been made for sending so many children to their homes safely through the surging crowds after the Royal procession has passed. We would suggest that the services of a few policemen be requisitioned to escort the children back to their homes. The police will have a number of duties assigned to them on the occasion, and the protection of the school children should be one of them. It is said that in view of the belated hour of the Prince's landing and the crowds of spectators that are expected to throng along the Royal route, the authorities of several schools have refused to undertake the responsibility for the safe conduct of the children back to their homes. If this rumour be true, we cannot too strongly condemn the decision which the school-masters have come to. They should not shirk their responsibility, although it is meet that they should share it with the police. We trust that the arrangements made in this connection will be published betimes so as to set at rest the anxiety of the parents regarding the safety of their children. [The Kaier-i-Hind writes:—The Press Note says that Their Royal Highnesses will land at the bandar at 4-15 p.m., but it is not clear whether the hour is stated according to standard or local time. It is generally conjectured that local time is mentioned in the Note. If so, we think it would be past 6 o'clock and quite dark by the time the Royal cortege reaches Chowpati. The complaints of the public on this score will be obviated if Government announce that the hour of landing mentioned in the Press Note should be understood to be according to standard time. The Akhbār-i-Soudagar, on the other hand, expresses unqualified approval of the change in the time of landing of Their Royal Highnesses.]

Gujarati Jain, 22nd, October.—The Gujarati strongly condemns the alleged extravagant expenditure proposed to be incurred by Government and the Native Chiefs on the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. It thinks that these costly demonstrations will create a false impression in the minds of the august visitors about the wealth, prosperity and contentment of the Indian people. It deplores the intention of the Government of India not to reduce the salt tax in honour of the Royal visit, and points out that it is inconsistent to hold celebrations, on the one hand, in honour of Their Royal Highnesses on a scale of Oriental magnificence, and to refuse, on the other hand, to follow the Oriental custom of announcing a substantial boon to the people on such an auspicious occasion. The Jain protests against the large sums which the Kathiawar Chiefs intend to spend on the occasion of the forthcoming Royal visit. It suggests to the Agent to the Governor, Kathiawar, to place a check on the extravagance of the Chiefs in view of the threatened distress in the province.

Kesari, 24th October.—It was stated in our Bombay correspondent's letter published in the last issue that Sir Bhalechandra and others were inducing those house-owners whose houses face the public road through which the Prince of Wales is to drive in Bombay to observe the day of the Prince's arrival as a gala day. Sir Bhalechandra and his followers seem to have become angry with our correspondent for his having communicated the above news to us. We think their whole action in this matter is utterly foolish. We know that 15 Ward Committees have been appointed in Bombay to induce the landlords to decorate and illuminate their premises, and that Sir Bhalechandra is the Chairman of the Girgaum Committee. It is meet that the Prince should be publicly welcomed by our leaders in Bombay, but we see no reason why private landlords should decorate or illuminate their houses. It is the duty of our leaders not to carry the manifestation of loyalty to an extravagant excess. To ask every householder to decorate his premises is to be guilty of sheer meddlesomeness. If the householders incur any expense on such decorations, they will recoup themselves by taxing their tenants. Thus ultimately the burden will fall upon the shoulders of the poor. Rich men are at liberty to spend any amount of money they like in manifesting their loyalty, but to try to induce every householder to do the same is utter nonsense. If the people are to observe the day of the Prince's arrival as a gala day, let our rich leaders supply them with the necessary funds.

Jam-e-Jamshed, 27th October.—Preparations are in full swing for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.... Considering what the Press will have to do to keep the public well informed from day to day, of the movements of the Royal visitors, it would not be asking too much if we requested the authorities to adopt such special measures as may be deemed advisable to facilitate the work of representatives of newspapers. Already the Imperial and Local Governments have made certain special arrangements towards this end, but the facilities that have been promised will not suffice. In this city itself we doubt if the newspaper representatives will, in the crowd and rush, find easy access to the big ceremonial gatherings and tamshas, and obtain sufficient assistance for fully and correctly describing the many events and functions in honour of Their Royal Highnesses. In order that they might be enabled to do their work satisfactorily and well, we would request our obliging Police Commissioner, Mr. Gell, to issue special "badges" to the representatives of the Press, as was done on the occasion of the Delhi Durbar. These badges proved of immense value to the newspaper reporters and others in the work that fell to their lot on the occasion..... If such badges were presented to the various newspapers in numbers proportionate to their influence and importance, and if orders were issued that the bearers thereof should have every facility put in their way for freely moving about and obtaining information, it will be deemed not only an obligation on the newspapers but on the public as a whole. Neither Mr. Gell nor the Reception Committee could reasonably object to such special facilities being put in the way of the representatives of the more respectable section of the Press, both Anglo-Indian and native. No apprehensions need be entertained of these badges being misused or the special facilities put in the way of the Press being abused by any one. We should in addition to this appeal to the Honourable Mr. Edgerley, Mr. Gell and the Reception Committee request the authorities to put on the Editors' Table, day after day during the season, such information as is likely to be of use and interest to the public. This will be found not only useful by the Press, but will tend to save the officials entrusted with the arrangements the worry and trouble of providing separate information to inquisitive reporters on various heads..... Anyway we look forward to sufficiently elaborate measures being taken by the Government and the Reception Committee for assisting the representatives of the Press in their arduous and trying labours during the Royal visit.

Jam-e-Jamshed, Sanj Tartaman, 27th October.—We understand from a reliable source that several well-known Parsi gentlemen, who ordinarily wear European dress, have sent written protests to His Excellency the Governor's A.-D.-C. against their being compelled to wear a Parsi puggree or fenta on the occasion of the Prince of Wales' levée. They urge that they would cut a very ridiculous figure at the levée if they are compelled to wear a puggree with European evening dress. One of the protestants, who is a graduate, writes as follows to the A.-D.-C.: "I have got with me neither a Parsi puggree nor a Parsi dagla, as for years past I have been wearing European dress. It would be a real hardship to me if I were compelled to wear a puggree with evening dress; and so far as I know this new-fangled rule has created dissatisfaction among many of my Parsi brethren who habitually wear European dress." If the rule is to be strictly enforced, I would request you to place this letter before His Excellency the Governor. Certainly I would not care to make myself the laughing-stock of the gentlemen assembled at the levée by appearing in the ludicrous combination of evening dress with a native puggree. The Sanj Tartaman requests the authorities to pay no heed to the above protest. It says:—The position taken up by the protestants is quite untenable. So long as these gentlemen do not object to being recognised as Parsis, where is the harm if they put on their national dress? We know of many respectable Parsi gentlemen who ordinarily wear European dress, but who do not disdain to cast it off for a time and to appear in native dress on solemn occasions, either of rejoicing or mourning. If the idea of wearing a native puggree is repugnant to any Parsi gentlemen, they had better keep themselves away from the levée altogether rather than masquerade at the function in a dress which is not their own. Even the Prince himself will desire to see native gentlemen attired in their national dress and not disguised in European costume.

Mahi Kantha Gazette, Deshi Mitra, Prakāsh.—The Mahi Kantha Gazette, along with two or three other Gujarati weeklies, makes strong comments on the alleged intention of Government to dispense with the firing of salutes in honour of Native Chiefs during the forthcoming Royal visit. It says:—We cannot understand what has led the authorities to lower the dignity of Native Chiefs by refusing to accord to them the honours due to their high position on such an important State occasion. If there is any truth in the rumour, it means that the responsible officers of Government are bent upon humiliating and riding rough-shod over the feelings of these Chiefs. We hope, however, that this defect in the arrangements will be set right before it is too late.

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE NEWSPAPERS PUBLISHED IN THE PUNJAB FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 28TH OCTOBER 1905.

The Sat Dham Parcharak (Jullundur), of the 20th October 1905, remarks that the Maharajas of Gwalior and Benares have decided to parade elephant processions on the occasion of the coming Royal visit. The Editor is of opinion that side by side with pageantry like the above a procession comprising the crores of starving, naked and homeless natives, whom famines have driven out of their birthplaces and compelled to live by begging, should also be paraded so as to show His Royal Highness the seamy side of India.

The Vakil (Amritsar), of the 23rd Oct. 1905, remarks that the well-wishers of the country will be sorry to learn that the rumour regarding duty on salt being abolished altogether in honour of the Prince of Wales' visit to India is wholly unfounded.

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE NEWSPAPERS PUBLISHED IN THE UNITED PROVINCES FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 28TH OCTOBER 1905.

Muhammad Nur Khan, ex-risaldar, a Mutiny veteran, writing in the Agra Akhbar (Agra), of the 21st October, suggests that just as Lord Curzon honoured Indian Mutiny veterans by giving them seats in the Coronation Darbar at Delhi, so the Government would do well to honour them again by inviting them to pay their respects to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales either at the Lahore or Agra (sic) Darbar. The veterans should further be honoured by grant of medals and exemption from the operation of the Arms Act in commemoration of His Highness' visit, and the officers among them allowed seats in law courts, and given the title of captains. Should these suggestions be adopted, it would greatly stimulate the devotion of Indian soldiers and induce people to readily enlist in the army, and the task of recruiting officers will be greatly facilitated in future.

The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 26th October, says:—There can be only one opinion as to the idea in Lucknow to commemorate the visit of the Prince of Wales to that city by the establishment of a Medical College, and we are very much gratified that the scheme has the cordial approval of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of these Provinces. In addressing the influential deputation that waited upon him in connection with his scheme, the Lieutenant-Governor gave an interesting and succinct account of the previous attempts to found a Medical College for these Provinces, and how the munificent offer of the late Maharaja of Vizianagram, who belonged to another Presidency, could not be accepted by the Local Government of India those days on account of the refusal of the Government of India to support the scheme financially. As Sir James La Touche pointed out, history is now repeating itself, and the idea which could not be carried out in 1870 has a much better chance of fruition in 1906. We particularly wish to commend to our readers the following words of the Lieutenant-Governor:—"I wish to put aside any project which might be considered a fad of my own or a fad of any other individual. In giving precedence to reforms I wish to select those which are desired by, and are certain of the commendation and support of the people at large. Such projects alone are likely to succeed, and I am ready to do all in my power to push them on. Now the institution of a Medical College is to my mind a project of this kind." If our rulers would follow these principles in the introduction of reforms, there would be greater sympathy between the Government and the people, nor should Lord Curzon be leaving the legacy of a discontented India to his successor. The subscriptions promised to the proposed Lucknow Medical College are an indication of earnestness of purpose, and we hope the Nawab of Rampur and other magnates will follow the munificent example of the Maharaja of Bahrampur. The College, it is needless to add, will be neither denominational nor sectional.

Observer.—I am bound to confess that what is known as the "swadeshi" movement has been occupying the thoughts of most people in India this week, to the exclusion of other topics. Hitherto it has been considered that the movement was practically confined to Bengal. That is no longer the case. It has reached Madras, and it has reached Western India. It is being vigorously propagated at Ahmedabad and in other districts of Gujarat, and in the Deccan. I was talking yesterday to an experienced official from a great district of the Bombay Presidency, which lies rather off the main routes. He told me that in the principal town in his charge they woke up one morning recently to find the walls covered with inflammatory "swadeshi" placards. Meetings in support of the movement had been held even in remote townships far from the railway. Widespread under-currents are quietly at work, and the symptoms manifested are a striking and not altogether reassuring indication of the way in which movements of the kind can be suddenly organised in India. In Calcutta the unrest continues, and the boycott of English goods is being strenuously maintained. There have been one or two active disturbances. A number of students and clerks recently assaulted an inspector of the Calcutta police. Seventeen of them were arrested, but they were privately admonished and discharged. Last Saturday a small riot occurred in Calcutta between some shopkeepers and some "swadeshi" stalwarts. A man asked for a piece of Indian-made cloth, and was sold Manchester cloth instead. His subsequent expostulations produced a purely native free fight, in which many were injured.

I do not wish to minimise the situation, but at the same time would counsel calmness and firmness, above all calmness. The first duty incumbent upon the British in India is to keep their heads. The "swadeshi" movement is not new. It had for its original object the encouragement of indigenous industries, and received the support of the Anglo-Indian Press. When the partition of Bengal was announced prominent Bengalis seized hold of the movement and copied the Chinese by declaring a boycott of English goods. Professional agitators in other parts of the country were communicated with, and the movement was energetically extended until it has reached its present dimensions. Practically, however, the active boycott is confined to Bengal, and elsewhere the propaganda is limited to frothy talk; while so far the great city of Bombay has not been affected at all.

Now it has to be remembered that the partition of Bengal is really a wise and prudent measure, which probably inflicts no injustice upon a single human being. It has raised certain important issues, such as that of jurisdiction, which are still unsettled, but it does not really affect the daily life of a single person who is protesting against it. But the agile-minded Bengalis saw in the scheme an opportunity for promoting their sentiment of "nationalism," and they seized it with alacrity. Even if the partition was ten thousand times a mistake it would have to be carried through now; but it is not a mistake. My own belief is that the "swadeshi" movement in its present exaggerated form will have collapsed a month hence. It is economically unsound, alike for merchants and consumers. The boycott is condemned by most moderate natives and by a large section of the native Press.

Meanwhile, Bombay has had its own share of excitement, though of a milder kind. The movement in favour of shorter hours in the textile mills produced a slight disturbance last Sunday. The hands from a number of mills which had commenced to close at sundown attacked a mill which was continuing to work by the electric light. Some windows were broken, the records in a time-keeper's hut were destroyed, and a few policemen were assaulted; but the timely intervention of Mr. Gell, the Commissioner of Police, who promptly arrived on the scene with a strong force, prevented serious trouble. The offending mill ceased work, and there has been no recurrence of disorder. By Thursday practically every mill was working twelve hours instead of the fourteen or fifteen hours which had hitherto prevailed. This great and human reform has really been accomplished in a month, and with very little friction. The Millowners' Association met yesterday, and formally endorsed the continuance of the twelve hours day for a limited period, while declining to bind itself permanently to observe a limitation confined to Bombay only. The Bombay millowners say, with some reason, that if they adopt a self-denying ordinance those mills in the interior which are working for an iniquitous number of hours should be compelled to follow suit. The jute mills on the Hooghly are believed to be working for fifteen hours daily, though the "swadeshi" patriots of Calcutta are silent about it. Nevertheless, it is hoped that similar voluntary movements may be carried through in other centres and that the hours of adult labour may be reasonably restricted throughout India without recourse to legislation.

Despite these alarms, the preparations for the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales are being steadily pushed forward, and it is fully expected that by the time the Royal visitors arrive the country will have resumed its normal conditions. India, be it remembered, is a place where excitement and unrest grows and spreads very slowly at first, then suddenly blazes forth, then as rapidly subsides. In a few weeks the arrival of the Royalties will be absorbing public attention, to the exclusion of all other considerations. One curious and significant expectation which is being widely expressed is that during his visit the Prince may declare some great boon which the King-Emperor has resolved to confer upon his Indian peoples to mark his sense of the importance of the occasion. The natives of India always look for some mark of special favour from their rulers in honour of great events. In this instance the hope has taken the form of looking for a wholesale remission of the salt tax; and the Government have found it necessary to issue a formal announcement that the tax will not be abolished. As a matter of fact, the reductions in the salt tax already made have appreciably lowered the prices paid by the poor for that commodity. Another rather odd announcement which appeared yesterday was that throughout the visit the Sabbath would be strictly observed. The Prince will not shoot on Sundays, and, says the official notice quaintly, "when travelling on that day is necessary arrangements will be made for morning or evening service." As a class, Englishmen in India are not conspicuously devout, and the intimation is being regarded as rather in the nature of an admonition.

30th Oct. 1905.

Pioneer.—It is notified that his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will hold a levee at Government House, Calcutta, on Friday, the 29th December next, cards to be sent to the office of the Military Secretary to the Viceroy not later than Wednesday, the 20th December. The Earl and Countess of Minto will hold a Drawing Room at Government House, Calcutta, on Tuesday, the 19th December, cards to be sent in by the 11th December.

Pioneer.—It is expected that one of the most imposing ceremonies to take place here during the Royal visit will be the presentation of a new standard to the 6th Dragoon Guards (Carabineers). The regiment is rehearsing the ceremonial of bidding farewell to the old standard and receiving the new one.

Pioneer.—Two Hindu twins (girls) are being exhibited in Poona. They are to be taken to Bombay for Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to see them. They are joined at the back, with their faces in opposite directions. They have separate legs and feet, and when one goes forward, the other drags behind.

Standard.—Jammu, which Lord Curzon is visiting in order to invest Maharaja Sir Pratap Singh with the fuller powers conferred on him, is the capital and head-quarters of the Government of Jammu and Kashmir, though the Court occasionally goes to Srinagar to avoid the heat. The Maharaja succeeded his father in 1885; but then, and for some time afterwards, he was rather under a cloud. The country was misgoverned, there were stories of intrigues with Russia, and the Maharaja was very much under the influence of an astrologer. Four years after his accession, the administration of the State was placed in the hands of a council, the leading member of which was his brother, Sir Amar Singh, who has done much to deliver Kashmir from the reproach of being the worst ruled feudatory of the Indian Empire. The Maharaja was subsequently allowed to assume the presidency of the council, and of late years he has shown himself so amenable to the advice of the British Resident that he has now been restored to his former authority, the council being abolished. Last year his principal wife gave birth to a son, an event which seemed likely to deprive Raja Sir Amar Singh—a far more capable man than the Maharaja—of his chance of succeeding to the gadi. But the child died a few months ago, from an accident, it was reported, though darker rumours were current, and Sir Amar Singh is again heir-presumptive. He has a son living, the little boy who was one of the Viceroy's pages at the Chapter of Orders in the Palace at Delhi during the Coronation Durbar week. His Majesty the King when Prince of Wales visited Jammu. The late Maharaja Ranbir Singh had built a palace for his reception on the summit of the ridge overlooking the city; but the walls shook in such an alarming fashion when the salutes were fired that His Royal Highness preferred the safety of his tents. The Prince and Princess of Wales, who visit Jammu in December, will probably stay at Satwari, three miles from the capital, which is more picturesque than healthy. At Jammu the King saw a polo match played by wiry horsemen from Baltistan, a devil dance by Lamas from Tibet, and an illumination of the city; and the same, with other distractions, will, no doubt, be provided for Their Royal Highnesses.

Times.—The official account of the tour in India of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will be written by Sir Walter Lawrence, K.C.I.E., chief of the Prince's staff. The work will contain the only authoritative record of this memorable journey through the Indian Empire, while the various territories visited will suggest a comprehensive survey of their condition and a discussion of many important problems connected with their Government and administration, for which Sir Walter Lawrence's long experience of Indian affairs has eminently fitted him. It will be published in two illustrated volumes by Mr. Edward Arnold, 41 and 43, Maddox-street, London, publisher to His Majesty's Secretary of State for India in Council, as soon as possible after the conclusion of the Royal tour.

Times of India.—A stranger coming into Bombay just now might almost be excused for asking if the city expected a severe shock of earthquake. Most of the larger buildings are hung with dozens of ropes, which stretch from their topmost ridges to the ground some distance away from the walls, and others are surrounded with networks of scaffolding, while at every open space workmen are to be seen busily engaged in the erection of camps and temporary buildings. Bombay is indeed full of preparation; looking forward to the day now but little more than a week distant, when Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales arrive. For the gateway of India is determined that the first loyal welcome to Their Royal Highnesses when they set foot on Indian soil shall be a worthy forerunner of the demonstrations that await them throughout the Empire.

The systematic way in which the arrangements are being gradually carried to completion promises well for their final success. The Decorations and Illuminations Committee have been whipping up every frontage holder along the routes of the Royal processions and that selected for the illuminations, and it is hoped that when Their Royal Highnesses drive through the streets there will not be a blank space on either hand throughout their progress. The aim of the Committee is to have every window and verandah well filled with spectators, and there ought not to be much difficulty in securing that; it is most likely that the roofs will be crowded as well, while the low, long stands that are being put up will make sure of a very lively throng wherever there is an open space available. These stands, which look rather unbeautiful by the street side for the present, are each several hundred feet in length, and when they are crowded with school-children in their holiday outfit they will present some of the prettiest sights along the way of the procession.

There are few cities which lend themselves more readily to the art of decoration than Bombay. In the Fort the large open spaces in the streets, and in the native town the narrow twisting roads with their high houses, are equally effective in showing off any display that may be made, particularly as regards illuminations. Lord-Lamington on a recent occasion referred to the exceedingly pleasing impression that was created in his own mind when he first landed in Bombay and saw the streets of the Native town hung with brilliant draperies and coloured stuffs in his honour. There are signs that a great display of decorations will be made for the Prince and his Consort. The illuminations bid fair to exceed anything that has yet been seen in Bombay and will be on a most gorgeous scale. It would be an amusing pastime for an off-day to calculate how many million butties will be glimmering on the grand illumination night, the night on which the Prince leaves. Fifteen miles of streets are to be illuminated, and on the Government buildings alone which are being decorated by the Public Works Department, well over a lakh of small lights will be utilised. This includes the University Buildings, and with them the Rajabai Tower, which will be lighted up to the very top and will probably be one of the prettiest "pieces" in Bombay.

No one will have more scope for carrying out some exquisitely pretty pieces of lighting than the Municipality, to whom belong some of the best points of vantage in the city. The Municipal Building itself has a splendid front for illuminations, and for weeks already workmen have been engaged there. The Wellington Fountain and Floral Fountain, the statue of the late Queen-Empress, the Back Bay slope of Malabar Hill, and other favourable spots have all been included in the lighting scheme worked out by the Municipal Executive Engineer. At the fountains combined light and water effects will be the order of the day, the Queen Victoria statue will be brilliantly illuminated by reflected lights, none of the lights themselves being visible; and the slope of Malabar Hill will be in a constant blaze of coloured fires. Besides these the Municipality will illuminate the Crawford Market and various fire stations and police chowkies, the four railway bridges which occur in the line of route, and from end to end of the bridge, and so on. The Victoria Terminus will be a magnificently illuminated pile of buildings, numberless butties outlining its architectural features; while a loyal inscription which is a play upon the initial letters G. I. P. is being placed in the space over the grand entrance. Experiments have been carried out in many parts of the town with small patches of illuminations, and judging by these glimpses some handsome effects will be seen.

At the People's Fair, which is being got ready on the Esplanade Maidan, it is estimated that amusement will be found for some 10,000 people nightly. The fair has been laid out under the direction of Khan Bahadur H. C. Murzban, who is a past master in a task of this kind; and, by-the-way, he must be especially interested in his occupation from having assisted in the ceremonies attendant upon the Indian visit of the present King-Emperor, as Prince of Wales, thirty years ago. About half the maidan has been utilised and rows of booths, which will be occupied by native shopkeepers, stretch from end to end of the fair. The side bordered by the Esplanade road is taken up by an enormous switchback, nearly quarter of a mile long; elsewhere there is a laughing gallery, with looking glasses which reflect distorted pictures, after the model which was such a great success at the Exhibition in Bombay last Christmas; a shooting gallery, maze, magic art booth and native theatre are among the side shows and refreshment booths for different classes of people will be opened. Last but not least, arrangements have been made for some excellent music, the bands of the 10th Hussars, Royal Scots, Connaught Rangers and 121st Pioneers all having been engaged to play on different evenings. The fair will be informally opened by the Prince and Princess driving through it on the 10th November, and will remain open for ten nights, the Motor Carnival which has been arranged taking place on the last evening. Owing to the inability of the Electric Light and Gas Companies to supply current or gas for the fair the committee have erected their own electric light plant, and the chief light of the fair will be a grand centre fountain illuminated with coloured electric lights. The middle of the water a revolving lantern holding a scroll in her hands with the words: "The sun never sets on the British Empire." #

Across the Harbour preparations are being made for the Prince and Princess to pay an informal visit to the famous cave temples of Elephanta. The short trip over the water will be made in the Port Trust's tug Rose and the start will be made from the harbour wall at Prince's Dock, a point of departure chosen in preference to the Apollo Bunder because the tide will be too low for the Rose to come up to the latter place. On approaching the island the Royal party will be taken to the right of it, the south-eastern side, instead of to the left, and the landing will be made at a spot across the island directly opposite to the familiar stepping stones which have to be negotiated by the ordinary excursionist, and which it is interesting to note are the remains of a rough pier that was built for the last Prince of Wales' visit. Barges have already been taken out to the island for a short pontoon pier to serve as a landing stage, and the Royal visitors will cross the island to the caves by the new military road, ponies and a rickshaw or two being ready for them on their arrival. After seeing the caves their Royal Highnesses will probably have tea, and the island will be quitted from the same side by which it was approached. As the trip will be made towards the end of the afternoon, it will be dark when the party returns, and it is hoped that on their way back the Prince and Princess will have a view of the whole of the shipping in the Port illuminated. Presumably the ships of the Royal Navy and the R. I. M. will be fully lighted up; it is believed that the P. and O. ships are also going to illuminate and other shipping agents will doubtless not be behind in their loyalty.

There are signs of elaborate preparations being made for the ceremonial functions in which the Prince is to take part. For the reception ceremony at the Apollo Bunder the skeleton of an extensive shamiana is already in evidence, and an ornamental arelway through which their Royal Highnesses will drive out into the city has been handed over to the painters for some days, while preparations are going forward for the dais in front of the Yacht Club Chambers where the Corporation addresses will be presented. Similarly, a huge platform is being put up and other details got ready on the Crescent site for the laying of the foundation stone of the new Museum; and work in connection with the new road of the Improvement Trust which the Prince is to declare open is also being pushed on.

The two most notable functions in which the Prince will take part in Bombay are those attending the laying of the foundation stones of the New Dock and the Museum; the first-named especially will be a very striking ceremony, for the Port Trustees are making arrangements for some 7,000 people to witness the proceedings. Five thousand of their number will be their own employes of all classes. To accommodate this small army of spectators an amphitheatre about a quarter of a mile in circumference has been formed on the site of the new dock, the slides sloping away in shallow terraces from the spot where the Prince will stand. The actual stonelaying will be rather a curious ceremony of its kind inasmuch as the stone will be at the bottom of a large pit 32 feet deep, the surrounding ground not having yet been cleared away. The sinking of the pit is still in progress, and gangs of coolies are working hard at it day and night chanting as usual as lustily as a village choir.

On Saturday afternoon His Excellency the Governor paid a return visit to his Highness Shri Javantsinghji Vibhaji, the Jam Sahab of Nawanagar at his temporary residence at Mazagon, Bombay. A deputation consisting of Mr. Merwanji Pestonji Devan of Nawanagar, Sodha Shri Kesarisinghji Commandant Ramsinghji of the Nawanagar Imperial Lancers, and Mr. Shivlal P. Gosalia, Prant Vakil, proceeded from the Maharaja's bungalow to Government House, Malabar Point, to escort his Excellency. Shortly afterwards Lord Lamington, who was accompanied by the Hon. Mr. S. W. Edgerley, Chief Secretary to the Government, Colonel Richard Owen, Military Secretary, Mr. J. H. Du Boulay, Private Secretary, Captain E. H. Bayford, A.-D.-C., Mr. Mirza Abbas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government, and Risaldar Bahadur Sheik Abdul Hamid, Native A.-D.-C., started from Government House in a carriage drawn by four horses, and escorted by his body guard. On arriving at the bungalow a guard of honour presented arms. As His Excellency alighted from the carriage he was received by the Jam Sahab on the steps of the bungalow and conducted to the diwankhanna, where several officials of the Nawanagar State including Kumar Shri Mehurabha Sahab, A.-D.-C. to the Jam Sahab, Dr. Dadabhoi C. Revinta, Medical Officer, Jadeja Shri Mansinghji, Private Secretary, and Mr. Nanabhoi A. Parekh were present. After ten minutes' conversation a presentation of flowers and pan and attar was made to His Excellency and party, and the visit came to a close. The usual salutes of guns were given on the arrival and departure of His Excellency.

His Excellency the Governor also paid a return visit to His Highness the Raja Sahab of Rajpipla State. A deputation consisting of Dr. Patel and Messrs. Hormukhram, Bapurao and Nariman, waited upon His Excellency to escort His Excellency to His Highness's bungalow. His Excellency was attended as in the case of the last-mentioned visit and was met as he alighted from his carriage by His Highness, who conducted him to a seat on his right hand in the dinner hall. The Chief Secretary and the personal staff of His Excellency and the Oriental Translator were seated to the right of his Excellency. His Highness himself gave attar, flowers and pan to the Governor and to the Chief Secretary to Government in the Political Department; and Kumar Digvijayasinghji, heir-apparent of Rajpipla, gave attar, etc., to the officers present with His Excellency. The ceremonies attending His Excellency's arrival were repeated at his departure, a deputation sent by His Highness accompanying His Excellency back to Government House. The bungalow occupied by the Raja of Rajpipla during his stay in Bombay, is richly furnished and has a reception hall 72 feet by 36 feet. It has a nice garden and carriage drive in the front and the whole compound was tastefully decorated with flags and bunting in honour of His Excellency's visit.

The same afternoon return visits were also paid by His Excellency the Governor to His Highness the Raja of Bundela and to the Chiefs of Phaltan, Kurundwad, Miraj and Bhore, similar ceremonies being observed on each occasion.

Salutes of 17 guns each were fired from the Quick Firing Battery at Malabar Hill on the afternoon of Saturday, the 25th instant, as His Excellency the Governor set out to visit certain Native Chiefs and on his return.

His Highness Sir Sultan Mahomed Shah, the Aga Khan, G.C.I.E., has ordered his estate manager in Bombay, Mr. Jaffur Cassum Moosa, to decorate and illuminate all his properties in Bombay on the 14th proximo, and preparations are being made on an extensive scale to carry out his instruction. Mr. Jaffur Cassum Moosa also proposes to give an evening party to his Highness's principal tenants in honour of the Royal Visit.

31st Oct. 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Captain J. Frizelle, chairman of the executive sub-committee which was appointed to arrange a programme of public festivities in connection with the coming royal visit to Lahore, has received the following letter from Nawab Fateh Ali Khan: "Dear Sir,—A deputation composed of Nawab Muhammad Ali Khan, Quzilbash, Rai Sahib Milkhi Ram, Rai Sahib Mohan Lal, Khan Bahadur Allah Bakh and Quzil Gulam Rabbani, called on me this afternoon to ask for a subscription to the fund now being raised for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in Lahore. On an auspicious occasion like this, when Their Royal Highnesses are doing a great honour to the capital of the Punjab, one of the ancient and historical cities, I have the greatest pleasure in offering to defray the entire expenses of the reception, viz., Rs. 20,000 which, I understand, is the total estimated sum required to be raised by public subscriptions. This sum I am offering on behalf of my brethren, the citizens of Lahore, and I trust that the reception committee will do me the honour of accepting my humble offer. Yours sincerely, (Sd.) Fateh Ali Khan, Quzilbash, Mobarik Haveli, Lahore, 25th October."

Times of India.—We are requested to state that at the suggestion of Their Royal Highnesses the new street which is to be opened on the 10th proximo is to be named "Princess Street," instead of "Prince's Street" as originally arranged.

In connection with the arrangements for the short opening ceremony, we understand that as the available space at the site where the procession will halt is very restricted, the Improvement Trustees have been obliged to decide to issue invitations only in virtue of office or public position in the City.

On the afternoon of November 13th, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, who will be accompanied by Her Royal Highness the Princess, has consented to lay the foundation stone of the New Dock which is now being constructed in Mody Bay. For this purpose a portion of the trench of the west wall of the Dock has been sunk to the full depth of the wall and the concrete footings put in, so that the stone that His Royal Highness lays will actually be the first stone in the permanent work of the Dock. Their Royal Highnesses will arrive from Government House via Frere Road, the entrance to the stand being by Uran Street.

Seats for the accommodation of the invited guests will be arranged on three sides of an amphitheatre in the centre of which Their Royal Highnesses will be seated on a dais facing the assembly. The programme includes the presentation of an illuminated address and silver casket designed by the Principal of the School of Art and made in the Reay Art Workshops, and also the presentation of a bouquet with a suitable holder to Her Royal Highness the Princess.

The Chairman will then request His Royal Highness to step forward to the edge of the trench and perform the ceremony of laying the first stone. This will consist of His Royal Highness turning a wheel which will release the brake of the winch holding the stone in suspension. On the brake being released the stone will descend on to the concrete bed prepared for it and will thus form the first stone laid in the Dock wall.

Times of India.—The native Princes who are entitled to return visits from H. R. H. the Prince of Wales are making suitable preparations to afford a loyal welcome to His Royal Highness at their respective bungalows. Mrs. Awabai Framji Petit has placed her beautiful mansion "Il Palazzo" on the Ridge Road at the disposal of His Highness Nawab Rusulkhanji, K.C.S.I., for the occasion of the return visit, and the mansion and its extensive grounds are being elegantly decorated with flags and banners and festoons, while triumphal arches are being erected over the two gateways, with loyal inscriptions. The Aga Khan's bungalow at Land's End Road where His Highness Nawab Rusulkhanji is going to stay is also beautifully decorated and will be brilliantly illuminated.

Of the other Kathiawar Princes the Thakore Sahab of Bhavnagar and his Dewan, M. J. Patni, will stay in Mr. Rustum Vatchaghandhy's bungalow at Nepean Sea Road, but as it would be rather inconvenient for a carriage and team and escorts and a guard-of-honour to move freely in the compound of this bungalow, Mr. Bomanji Petit has placed his Chateau Petit, Warden Road, at the disposal of the Thakore Sahab for the Prince's return visit. The bungalow at Nepean Sea Road where His Highness is to stay is being decorated and luxuriously furnished under the supervision of the Bhavnagar State Agent in Bombay, Mr. Jehangire Cowasji Clubwalla.

The return visit to H. H. the Jam Sahab will be paid at Tejpal Mansion, situated in Narayen Dabulkar Road, Malabar Hill, and belonging to Mr. Gordhandas Gokuldas Tejpal. Mr. Gordhandas has been making great preparations so that his mansion and the garden grounds shall appear as attractive as possible.

The Dariav Mahal, the charming residence of Mr. Naranji Dwarkadas at Nepean Sea Road, Malabar Hill, will be the scene of return visit by the Prince of Wales to His Highness the Rao of Cutch, who will reside during the Royal visit in Mr. Vasanji Trikamji's bungalow at Narayen Dabulkar Road, Malabar Hill.

H. H. the Rana of Porebander who is staying in the bungalow of Mr. Kamaria Ismail, at Pedder Road, placed at his disposal by H. H. the Aga Khan, has reserved Shanti Bhuvan, at Pedder Road, for the return visit, this house having been placed at his disposal by Mr. Narotum Morarji Gokuldas.

His Highness Nawab Rasulkhanji, K.C.S.I., of Junagadh, accompanied by Shahzada Sherzamankhanji, heir-apparent, Vazier Bauddinbhai, C.I.E., Sardar Becharas Voharidas, Dewan, Mr. Gopaldass Voharidas, Hazur Assistant, Mr. Chotalal Buxi, Mr. Amurji, Mr. C. H. Pandya and about three hundred followers will arrive in Bombay by a special train on the morning of Saturday next. A Government deputation and a guard-of-honour will be present at the station. Subjects of the Junagadh State who are residents in Bombay, both Hindus and Mahomedans, have decided to extend a hearty welcome to Nawab Rasulkhanji on his arrival.

The following arrivals are expected to take place to-morrow:—H. H. the Raja of Sunth at 7-15 A.M., who will alight at the Grant Road Station, and put up in a bungalow at Chowpati; H. H. the Raja of Dharampore, at 4-12 P.M., who will put up in a bungalow at Malabar Hill.

On Friday will arrive H. H. the Raja of Wankaner, at Grant Road, at 7-15 A.M. His Highness will stay at a bungalow in Pedder Road.

On Saturday there arrive at Grant Road their Highnesses the Nawab of Cambay (6-26 A.M.); the Raja of Baria (7-15 A.M.); the Maharaja of Dhrangdhra (7-15 A.M.); the Maharajah of Idar (7-15 A.M.); and the Thakore Sahab of Wadhwan (10 A.M.). The time specified in each case is standard time and their Highnesses will stay at Pedder Road, the Great Western Hotel, Pedder Road, Government House, Malabar Hill and Walkeshwa Road respectively.

H. H. the Thakore Sahab of Bhavnagar is expected to reach Bombay on Sunday, also travelling by train.

H. H. the Rao of Cutch is expected to arrive on the 6th (Monday). He will put up in a bungalow in Narayen Dabulkar Road.

On arriving the Chiefs will in each case be received with the ceremonies due to their rank.

1ST NOVEMBER, 1905.

Englishman.—The guard and escort arrangements in connection with the visit of the Prince of Wales will be much the same as those adopted when the late Prince Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence, visited Burma. The regular escort accompanying His Royal Highness when driving during their stay in Rangoon will consist of 32 military police sowars and officers forming the foreguard with four District Superintendents of Police placed on special duty. The Commissioner of Police and other police officers, all mounted, will be on either side of the Royal carriage, together with six or eight military officers. The mounted rear-guard escort will consist of 32 more military police sowars and native officers with a complement of mounted civil police officers to complete the guard. At Government House there will be a guard of 100 rank and file of the Devons in charge of a Captain and Lieutenant. This will be a residential guard, and will take up their quarters there so long as the Prince remains in Government House. Special arrangements are also being made by the districts on the route from Rangoon to Mandalay. Each district will supply a certain proportion of civil police to help the railway police in guarding the lines. On the river from Mandalay to Prome similar arrangements will be made by the districts concerned to post constables at intervals on the river banks. It is expected that the vessels conveying the Prince and party may anchor in midstream at important stations on the river such as Minbu and Thayetmyo for an hour or so, to give an opportunity to the civil and military officers of the stations of paying their respects to the Prince. It is not certain whether the Prince will land at Thayetmyo as the late Duke of Clarence did.

Indian Daily News.—Rumour says that Lord Curzon will receive an Earldom on the occasion of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, and that it will be conferred upon him in Bombay at the reception of Their Royal Highnesses. Lord Curzon was raised to the Peerage in 1898 but His Excellency will in any case some day be Lord Seardsdale as he is the heir. The Barony dates back to 1761. The Earldom of Seardsdale was a totally distinct Peerage, and was held by the family of Leke, but has now been extinct for over 160 years. It had become united with the Barony of D'Eyncourt or Deincourt, and the co-heirship is stated to rest between Lord Methuen and a surviving son of the late Frederick Tennyson.

Kothare, Mrs. Tribhovandas Vurjeeewandas, Mrs. Hydari, Mrs. Rogny, and Mrs. Abbas Ali Baig.

2ND NOVEMBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—It is not clear if His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will pay a visit to the local Shahi mosque during the period of his short stay at Lahore, says the Observer; and yet the omission of such an important historical building from the programme of His Royal Highness's tour would be both inexplicable and disappointing to the Muhammadan community. The Anjuman-Islamia, Punjab, has, we think, done well in making a reference to the Punjab Government on the point and expressing a hope that this monumental building, which was visited by the Prince's august father when His Majesty came over to India as Heir Apparent to the British Throne, will not be left out from the future Emperor's programme too.

Guardian.—I hear that it is probable that the Prince and Princess of Wales when they visit Peshawar will extend their trip northwards to the Khyber Pass. Nothing definite has been settled, but the Indian Government is having a bungalow prepared for the possibility of such a visit in the little village of Land-i-Kotal, which stands at the mouth of the pass.

Pioneer.—While at Aden His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will unveil the statue to Queen Victoria which is being erected there. The statue has been executed by Mr. John Tweed and was despatched from London some weeks ago.

Pioneer.—The Dewan of Mysore inspected on the 28th and 29th October the shooting camp of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. It is situated on the bank of the Kabbani River, close to the Kakankote State. The forest is abounding in elephants, tigers and bison, and is on a table-land commanding a full view of the surrounding country. Two kheddas have been formed, one for a drive from the Kakankote State forest, and the other from the Begur forest. Herds of elephant have been seen, and arrangements for their capture are nearing completion. The bigger khedda is six furlongs, and the smaller four furlongs in circumference. The river Kabbani, which is frequented by elephants, runs close to both the khedda sites.

Times of India.—It is notified for information that the ceremonial of the 9th November, the day on which Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales are expected to arrive in Bombay, will be rehearsed next week as follows:—

(a) Monday, 6th November (afternoon).—The arrival of His Excellency the Viceroy's procession at the Apollo Bunder and the departure thence of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales' procession. Mounted troops only.

His Excellency the Viceroy's procession will be formed up in column of route on Queen's Road, facing North (towards Chowpatty), with its head opposite the 113th Infantry Hospital, at 2-45 P.M. and will move off at 3 P.M.

(b) Tuesday, 7th November (morning).—The arrival of His Excellency the Viceroy's procession at the Apollo Bunder; the reception of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales on landing there; His Royal Highness's procession from the Apollo Bunder along the whole processional route and his arrival at Government House, Malabar Hill.

Guards of Honour will be mounted—one on the Bunder at 7 A.M., one at Government House at 8 A.M.

The streets will be lined by 6-45 A.M.

His Excellency the Viceroy's procession will be formed up as in (a) at 6-45 A.M. and will move off at 7 A.M.

Afternoon.—A repetition of the morning's rehearsal, if necessary, commencing at 3 P.M.

As we mentioned a few days ago, Bombay Harbour is likely to be the scene of magnificent illuminations during the Royal Visit. Naturally, the lead will be taken by the ships of the Royal Navy which will probably be illuminated by electricity every evening whilst the Prince and Princess are in Bombay. On the night of the day of arrival they will certainly be illuminated and the only doubt, and it is hardly a doubt, in reference to the following evenings arises from the fact that the final decision will rest with His Royal Highness himself. The Prince will be the Senior Naval Officer on the station, and all orders of this nature will be submitted to him for sanction. In addition to the nightly illuminations, it is proposed to have a grand fireworks display, in which all the warships in harbour will take part, on the night of the Prince's departure. This is the date chosen for the illumination of the city, and as it is also the evening on which Their Royal Highnesses make their trip to Elephanta the illuminations will probably begin early, at the time the launch with the Royal party on board is returning across the harbour.

It is not quite clear for the present how many ships of the Royal Navy will be in Bombay to join in these celebrations. The Renown is accompanied by the cruiser Terrible, and there are also in port at present the cruiser Hyacinth, flagship of Admiral Poe, and the Persus, cruiser, which is in dock for the time being, but will be taken out into the harbour to join in the celebrations. The whereabouts of the two cruisers Fox and Proserpine are not known exactly nor whether they will be at Bombay while the Prince is here. Both ships went to Suez with the object of joining the Renown as she came out of the Canal and forming part of her escort for the remainder of her voyage. But according to Reuter's messages they have been sent down to the Somali coast on account of renewed trouble with the Mullah. If the Fox and Proserpine come to Bombay in time there will be six British war-ships to join in the celebrations.

In addition to these the Gabriel, of the Portuguese Navy, is under orders to come from Mozambique for the express purpose of taking part in the celebrations. It is probable also that the Dufferin and Dalhousie, of the Royal Indian Marine, will be in harbour, and these will follow the example of the warships. It is expected that there will be a handsome display by the mercantile shipping, and steps to this end have been taken by Commander Black, Port Officer, who has circularised the ship owners and agents in Bombay inviting them to co-operate. It is known that some of the largest firms are anxious to join in making the display as great a success as possible and are prepared to move their ships out of dock on the grand illumination night. Others will follow suit no doubt, so that in the harbour as well as on land Bombay will be more magnificently illuminated than on any previous occasion.

The British warships in port will be dressed with bunting from eight o'clock on the morning of the Prince's arrival, owing to the day being the King-Emperor's birthday. The time for the arrival of the Renown has been altered from noon till half-past eleven, and the birthday salutes will be fired by the warships, unless the Prince directs otherwise, immediately after those for his Royal Highness. These will hardly be completed before the salutes in connection with the ceremonies attending the Prince's landing begin.

In connection with the visit of the Prince of Wales, the guard and escort arrangement have now been decided upon. During the Prince's stay in Rangoon, his escort will consist of thirty-two military police sowars and officers, who will form the advance guard, with four District Superintendents of police placed on special duty together with the Police Commissioner and other police officers, all mounted. From six to eight military officers will ride on either side of the Royal carriage and a similar number of military police sowars will form the rearguard. A residential guard of a hundred rank and file at Government House will also be supplied. Civil police will assist the railway police to guard the lines between Rangoon and Mandalay. Similar arrangements will be made along the river banks between Mandalay and Brome.

His Highness Sir Sidi Ahmed Khan, K.C.I.E., Nawab Sahib of Janjira, with Her Highness the Begum Sahib and 75 followers, arrived by a special steamer yesterday at 1 p.m. The arrival was private. His Highness is residing at Mount Towers, Mount Road, Mazgaon.

Madras Mail.—Bangalore, 1st November. There was a meeting of the Executive Committee appointed to deal with reception arrangements for the Royal visit, at the Mayo Hall this morning. With regard to triumphal arches it appears that the Municipality, the Carabincers, the Essex Regiment and Queen's Own Sappers and Miners, will each erect a triumphal arch with inscriptions, etc. Other Regiments are likely to assist and it is likely that Mr. B. P. Annaswamy Modelliar may erect an arch on South Parade, whilst the Trades Association are looked upon as another source from which an arch may come. The local schools and orphanages are to be invited to assemble in a certain place to assist in welcoming Their Royal Highnesses on the day of arrival.

Phoenix.—At the monthly meeting of the Calcutta Corporation last evening Mr. J. G. Apear moved that the Corporation should join in the general illuminations and decorations of the town on the occasion of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

and that for this purpose the Corporation should sanction the expenditure of Rs. 10,000. After some discussion the motion was put and carried, a special committee being appointed.

3RD NOVEMBER 1905.

Times of India.—The "Bombay Government Gazette" published yesterday contained the following notification regarding the ceremonies to be observed on the arrival in Bombay of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales:—

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales are expected to arrive at Bombay on the 9th instant in His Majesty's ship Renown.

His Excellency the Governor will be accompanied on board by the Chief Justice, the Bishop of Bombay and the Members of Council, who will be presented to Their Royal Highnesses by His Excellency.

At 3-55 p.m. His Excellency the Governor and the officials who accompanied His Excellency will leave His Majesty's ship Renown to return to the Apollo Bandar.

At 4-5 p.m. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales accompanied by His Excellency the Viceroy and Her Excellency Lady Curzon and attended by his suite, will quit His Majesty's ship Renown.

All arrangements for the disembarkation of Their Royal Highnesses, the embarkation and disembarkation of His Excellency the Viceroy and His Excellency the Governor, will be made by the Director of the Royal Indian Marine in consultation with His Excellency the Naval Commander-in-Chief.

At 4-15 p.m. Their Royal Highnesses will arrive at the steps of the Bandar. A Royal Salute will be fired from the Saluting Battery. A guard-of-honour of British infantry with Band and Colour will be drawn up at the Bandar head.

Their Royal Highnesses will be received at the Bandar by His Excellency the Governor, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's Naval Forces in India, the Chief Justice of Bombay, the Bishop of Bombay, the Members of Council, the Lieutenant-General Commanding Western Command, the Judges of the High Court, the Chief Secretary to Government, the Commissioners of Revenue and Customs, the Major-General Commanding the Division, the Surgeon-General with the Government of Bombay, the Additional Members of the Council of His Excellency the Governor for making Laws and Regulations, the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Bombay, the Director of the Royal Indian Marine, the Roman Catholic Archbishop, the Archdeacon of Bombay, the General Officer Commanding Bombay Brigade, and the Secretaries to Government.

The Consuls-General are invited to be present at the Bandar head.

The Native Chiefs and 1st Class Sardars, assembled in Bombay in honour of Their Royal Highnesses, are also invited to be present.

To all the above, cards of admission will be issued by the Chief Secretary to Government, Political Department.

Their Royal Highnesses will then proceed to a dais prepared for them, where an address of welcome will be presented to Their Royal Highnesses by the Municipal Corporation for the City of Bombay. For this purpose special space will be reserved for the Corporation. The Executive Engineer, Presidency, will send a card of admission to each member of the Corporation whose name is communicated to him by the President of the Corporation.

Seats will be reserved in front of the dais for Foreign Consuls and Vice-Consuls, for all officers of His Majesty's Services, Naval, Military, Royal Indian Marine and Civil, and officers belonging to Corps of Volunteers, then in Bombay and not on duty elsewhere, for 2nd Class Sardars present in Bombay and the officials of Native States. Cards of admission will be sent to the Consuls by the Secretary in the Political Department and will on application be issued to all others by the Executive Engineer, Presidency.

As far as further accommodation is available, it will be allotted to any ladies and gentlemen who may intimate their desire to be present to the Executive Engineer, Presidency, by whom cards of admission will be issued on application.

Their Royal Highnesses will, after the presentation of the Address, proceed to Government House, Malabar Point, attended by an escort detailed under orders which will be issued by the Military authorities, via Apollo Bandar Road, Rampart Row, Hornby Road, Carnac Road, Kalbadevi Road, Bhendi Bazar, Parel Road, Grant Road, Gamdevi Road and Walkeshwar Road. The route from the Apollo Bandar will be lined by troops under orders of the General Officer Commanding Bombay Brigade to such point as he may direct. The seating in the carriages of the Royal cortege will be regulated under the orders of Major-General Beatson. The Commissioner of Police will maintain order and keep the streets clear.

Full dress will be worn by all officers of Government entitled to wear uniform, and morning dress by others.

His Highness the Maharana of Dharampore, with his staff, reached Bombay yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, arriving at Grant Road station. A Government Deputation consisting of Captain Burke, Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department, Mr. Mirza Abbas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government, and Rasaldar Bahadur Sheikh Abdul Hamid, Native A.-D.-C. to His Excellency Lord Lamington, was present to receive His Highness, who drove with them to his temporary residence at Malabar Hill escorted by a party of native cavalry. A salute of nine guns was fired to announce his arrival.

His Highness Maharana Joravarsingji of Sunth, accompanied by the Ranis and attended by forty followers, arrived in Bombay yesterday morning by the Ahmedabad mail train and alighted at the Grant Road station. His Highness was received by a Government deputation consisting of Captain Burke, Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department; Captain Greig, A.-D.-C. to His Excellency the Governor, and Mr. Mirza Abbas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government. Mr. Lalubhai, Dewan of Sunth, who had arrived in advance of His Highness, was also present at the station to welcome the Maharana. After shaking hands with the Government officers, His Highness, accompanied by the members of the deputation, drove in a Government House carriage to the Maharana's temporary residence at Chowpatty, escorted by a party of native cavalry. A salute of nine guns was fired to announce the arrival.

Sardar Shiwram Samant Bhosle, Sar Desai of Sawantwadi, arrived in Bombay yesterday morning with forty-five followers, alighting at the Victoria Terminus station. The Sardar was received by Captain Coghill, Officiating Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department, Mr. Baig, Oriental Translator, and Rasaldar Shaikh Abdul Hamid, Native A.-D.-C. to His Excellency the Governor. The Chief drove to a bungalow at Nepean Sea Road, the representatives of Government accompanying him thither.

The following circular has been issued by Commander Black, R.I.M., Port Officer, Bombay, to those interested in the shipping lying in the harbour:—

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales are due to arrive in Bombay on the 9th instant.

Ship agents, ship owners and ship masters, yacht owners and native craft owners and masters are hereby invited to dress their vessels in bunting on the following dates:—On the 9th, 10th, 13th and 14th.

The 10th is a day on which the whole city will be dressed in bunting. The 13th is the day of the laying of the foundation stone of the new Mercantile Dock. The 14th is the day on which Their Royal Highnesses proceed to Elephanta and return between 6 and 8 p.m., when the whole city and vessels in harbour will be illuminated.

It is requested that as many vessels as possible will be illuminated between the hours of 6 and 8 p.m., on this evening the 14th.

A meeting of owners and tenants of houses in Shaikh Memon Street and Mamadevie Tank Road was held at the house of Mr. Tarachand Ghanasamdas for the purpose of taking steps to decorate their houses on the occasion of the Royal visit. A proposal was made and agreed to that all present should decorate and illuminate their houses in a manner worthy of the occasion, and that moreover every influence should be exerted to induce others to follow their example. A committee of the following gentlemen was appointed to carry out the resolution:—Rao Bahadur Vussonji Khimji, Messrs. Jainarayan H. Dani and Vullubhnarayan.

As announced, Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will attend the service at the Cathedral on Sunday, November 12th, at 6 p.m. No seats will be reserved excepting those permanently allotted by Government, namely, about five rows across the East end. The doors of the Cathedral will be opened for the admission of the congregation at 5 p.m., and will remain open until 5.45 p.m., unless all the seats be occupied before that hour, in which event they will be closed earlier. There will be no admission by the West door. Tickets will be issued for the permanently reserved seats to the head of each of the departments interested.

Englishman.—It is notified that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has been pleased to appoint the following officers as Honorary Aides-de-Camp during his tour in India:—Major Roberts, 1st Duke of York's Own Lancers; Captains Ashburner, Royal Fusiliers; Hill, Royal Welsh Fusiliers; Makins, King's Royal Rifle Corps, and the Hon. W. G. S. Cadogan, 10th Hussars.

The offices directly subordinated to the Government of India at Calcutta, except the issue office of the Paper Currency Department, and the office of the Comptroller General, will be closed on the 3rd January next, in honour of the Royal visit.

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE PAPERS PUBLISHED IN BENGAL FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 4TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Hilavadi, 27TH OCTOBER 1905:—It is a regret, says the Hilavadi [Calcutta] of the 27th October, that the Prince of Wales is coming to Bengal at a time when the people of the country are least prepared to give His Royal Highness a fitting welcome. There is at present universal mourning in the country and not even the worst flatterers of the Government will be able heartily to join any festivities which may be held in connection with the Royal visit. The Times of London says that the Royal visit will be productive of immense good to the country by making its future monarch personally acquainted with its people. But the Indians entertain no such hope. The Prince will come, spend a few days in amusements and festivities with the magnates of the land and go away. The authorities it is certain will take every care to hide the real condition of the country from his view. The Royal visit will, therefore, only occasion a waste of India's money instead of conferring any boon on her. For the Bengalis specially this is not the time for spending any money on festivities. To them a pie is at present as valuable as a gold mohur. To the officials the Royal visit may be a great occasion for merry-making and to Lord Curzon the duty of receiving His Royal Highness may furnish a pleasing opportunity for making an exhibition of his own greatness and power, but the people of the country will not in the least benefit by all that.

Bharat Mitra, 28TH OCTOBER 1905:—The Bharat Mitra [Calcutta] of the 28th October is of opinion that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales would have done well if he had visited before Bengal had been divided, for it sees no enthusiasm for according him a suitable welcome compared with what was done to receive our present Emperor when His Majesty came here as Prince of Wales. Lord Curzon has destroyed all feelings of joy and true loyalty of the people, specially of Bengal. The latter are in a state of deep mourning on account of the partition. What reception can be expected from such people? Some people in Calcutta go to the length of asking the people not to go to see the illuminations and fireworks which are going to take place during the stay of His Royal Highness in Calcutta, and that there should be a general stoppage of business for a day. Mr. Brodrick asked Lord Curzon to postpone the partition, to which the latter replied that it could not be stopped and that the agitation was subsiding. The same paper says, "If what the Bengalee says is true it affords a further example of the strength of mind and veracity of the present authorities."

Hilavarta, 30TH OCTOBER 1905:—The Hilavarta [Calcutta] of the 30th October is sorry that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales should be coming to India at such an inopportune moment, when the condition of the people appears to be so deplorable that they would not be able to accord their Royal guests a befitting welcome. India will be in mourning instead of rejoicing. Even the sycophants will not be able to join with an open heart. The Times of London expects the Royal visit to bear good fruit, since the heir to the British Crown will meet his would-be subjects face to face, and have an opportunity of conversing with them, but the paper is unable to understand this, for who would show him the real state of things?

SELECTIONS FROM NEWSPAPERS IN BOMBAY FOR WEEK ENDING 4TH NOVEMBER.

Gujarati, 4TH NOVEMBER 1905:—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will land on the shores of India for the first time on Thursday next, and from the 9th to the 14th November Bombay will witness demonstrations of enthusiasm and loyalty, which will no doubt gratify the hearts of the Royal visitors.... Their Royal Highnesses will visit twenty-nine leading cities or places of note, including nine Native States, and wherever they go they may take it that they will meet with a cordial and loyal reception. The mind of the country has unfortunately got out of tune owing to various circumstances, and Pluvius has once more showered his gifts in a capricious manner, thus causing grave anxiety in many places. Their Royal Highnesses will know little about these rifts in the late. But that they do exist cannot be seriously denied. His Royal Highness is an heir to a glorious throne and the inheritor of an Empire which is almost unique in the history of the world. The sacred responsibilities attaching to such a position might well-nigh appal even a courageous heart. But fortunately for the Emperor of India the burden of actual administration rests upon the shoulders of his official representatives. If this arrangement has its advantages, it has also its disadvantages, and we trust that even amidst pomp and splendour Their Royal Highnesses will succeed in finding out the innate feelings of the people, educated and uneducated, and in understanding the magnitude of the problem of the moral and material advancement of India. The memory of Victoria the Righteous is revered throughout the length and breadth of the country, and her Proclamation of imperishable fame is the Magna Charta of the Indian people.... The whole problem of India's progress and administration is defined and solved in that famous document, and no English administrator or politician can ever force the interests of the British Government in this country or be really loyal to the memory of that illustrious Empress, who dare whisper even a breath of suspicion against the sanctity of that charter under the cloak of subtle plausibilities or political exigencies of the hour.... We beg of Their Royal Highnesses to go through their lengthy tour and observe the country and its inhabitants in the spirit which inspires that charter. Pomp and pageantry, however unavoidable, are after all of evanescent glory, but the spirit of the Proclamation is a priceless heritage. May that high-souled spirit inspire the occupants of the British throne, British statesmen and administrators and conduce to the stability and glory of the British Empire and the moral and material elevation of the inhabitants of India. A more loyal, law-abiding, intelligent and appreciative people no alien Government had under its rule in the history of the world. If England has done a good deal for the Indian people, surely India has done no less for England's glory and moral and material greatness. Such and like thoughts are uppermost in our minds at this moment, and inspired by such thoughts we beg to offer to Their Royal Highnesses our earnest, enthusiastic and loyal welcome. Her Royal Highness is the first Princess of Wales to honour this land with her presence, and the whole country will hail her with joyous greetings.

Gujarati, Kaiser-i-Hind, and Rast Gofar, 29TH OCTOBER 1905:—We can confidently assert that the welcome extended by the Bombay public to the Prince and Princess of Wales will not be heartfelt and sincere for more than one reason. In the first place, the presence of an autocratic and unpopular Viceroy like Lord Curzon during Their Royal Highnesses' stay in Bombay will chill public enthusiasm over their arrival. Secondly, the thoughts of the poverty of India brought about by British rule and the decline of her indigenous industries will also act as an effectual check upon demonstrations of loyalty on the part of the public. Already complaints are being made in several quarters that the public do not show any eagerness in undertaking to illuminate their houses on the occasion. It is possible that a few native gentlemen might under the influence of official pressure illuminate their premises, and the school children arrayed on the stands may greet the Royal visitors with hurrahs as previously tutored by their masters. But these will be mere hollow demonstrations, not emanating from the hearts of the people. It is true that the present King-Emperor, when he visited India thirty years ago, was accorded a sincere and genuine welcome throughout the country, but in those days the people were dazzled by the glamour of British rule and were unable to understand the evils of a foreign yoke. This state of things has now changed. When the people are now told to co-operate in welcoming the Prince, they ask point-blank what advantage they are likely to derive from the Royal visit, and how the Prince will become acquainted with the real condition of the country by completing an extensive tour through India in the short period of two or three months. They further express the fear that costly demonstrations in honour of Their Royal Highnesses will engender a false notion in their minds as to the prosperity and contentment of the Indians. So long as the visit does not promise any real benefit to the country, the people are not to blame if they show apathy in welcoming the Prince. [A correspondent of the same paper remarks that the demonstrations in honour of Their Royal Highnesses will benefit nobody in the country except title-hunters. The Kaiser-i-Hind emphatically disapproves of costly demonstrations in honour of Their Royal Highnesses in view of the threatened distress in several parts of the Bombay Presidency. It prays that the money spent on the reception of the Prince be utilised in relieving the distress of the famine-stricken people. The Rast Gofar prays the Government of India to abolish or at least reduce a substantial portion of the duty on salt in commemoration of the Royal visit. It deplores that the Government should have disclaimed any intention to remit the tax at a time when a fat surplus is confidently expected in the next Budget.]

Indu Prakash, 30TH OCTOBER 1905:—A correspondent writes to the Indu Prakash: "Will you allow me to raise a protest against the highly objectionable attempt which is being made to manufacture artificial demonstrations of loyalty on the occasion of the approaching Royal visit? Landlords owning property in the streets through which the Royal party will pass are personally importuned to paint their houses and to make arrangements for illuminating them on the days on which Their Royal Highnesses will drive through the streets of the city.....Lest a false impression be carried away by Their Royal Highnesses as regards the material condition of the masses in India, I would suggest that the landlords and tenants in question should hang from their windows, or paste on their walls, placards in bold characters stating, 'All this is done to order and should not be taken to mean that we are very rich or that we have absolutely no grievances whatsoever.'.....Bombay will turn out its hundreds of thousands in gala dresses to take a passing glimpse of Their Royal Highnesses. Advantage will be taken of this to make the Prince believe that the ever-ringing cry of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji about the poverty of India is an Oriental lie. In order to effectually remove such an impression the public will be well advised to post in prominent places placards bearing the following inscriptions: 'Welcome to Bombay the Beautiful,' 'Remember India, the famine-stricken, the plague-ridden, the down-trodden,' 'Pray preserve the hen that lays golden eggs,' &c."

Oriental Review, 1ST NOVEMBER 1905:—"In accordance with past traditions" befitting the wealth and greatness of Urbs Prima in India, preparations are being made for according a right royal and magnificent welcome to the Royal visitors. Just now the city is in its halcyon days, and its chief industry enjoying a period of unprecedented prosperity. Plague is at its lowest ebb. The threatened famine in Gujarat and Central India has been averted by the recent rains. As far as Western India is concerned, the people are in a happy mood to receive Their Royal Highnesses. A programme of festivities has been proposed that will be unsurpassed in its variety and magnificence.... We must add here that the Government of Bombay has given every help to the preparations for a welcome to Their Royal Highnesses and has worked hand in hand with the Executive Committee of the Royal Reception Fund. His Excellency Lord Lamington and the Honourable Mr. Edgerley have with their usual geniality made things as smooth as possible, and everything has proceeded most successfully under their able guidance. It is so consoling to see that Europeans and Indians have worked in unison and with unsparring zeal in carrying out the vast preparations for the various festivities to the satisfaction of all. It is also pleasant to note that the Government has treated Europeans and Indians with equal courtesy. We hope that Their Royal Highnesses will carry away the pleasantest impressions of the love and loyalty of all classes in the city of Bombay.

Jám-e-Jamshéd, 4TH NOVEMBER 1905:—The public must have been gratified by the several reassuring statements that have been from time to time made in the course of the last few days in regard to certain points connected with the forthcoming tamasha. The first thing that must have been noted with satisfaction is the fact that the Reception Committee have completed the list of the schools invited to participate in the welcome of Their Royal Highnesses and to share in the fête to be given in honour of the event. All the schools have been put on an equal level, and all apprehension has been removed as to any invidious distinction being made, or any mistake being committed through oversight in regard to the treatment that is due to all the representative institutions in this respect. The public must have also read with pleasure and satisfaction of the test that has been made of the stability of the stands erected for the children.....We repeat our request to Government made in our issue of Wednesday last as to the granting of a sufficient number of holidays to permit the people to enjoy themselves sufficiently and give Their Royal Highnesses a right royal ovation everywhere during their few days' stay in this city.....Every class, creed and profession is desirous of making these few days a season of festivities and rejoicings on the largest scale possible. Why do Government then grudge the public the few extra days they want to make their welcome to their future Emperor and Empress a really noteworthy and memorable event? Did anybody complain against the closing of the offices for a week when the King-Emperor visited Bombay thirty years ago, that Government are so chary of doing the same thing this time? Or do they imagine that the sentiments of public loyalty are less warm, and the people less enthusiastic in their desire to welcome the Prince and Princess than they were in the seventies? And there can be nothing but ridicule for the notion, if it were at all entertained, that Bombay feels itself to have grown so much in importance, since the King-Emperor's visit, that its conceit would not permit it to think of devoting so many days as it did then to merry-making and rejoicings in honour of its future sovereign and his gracious consort. Business is bound to be paralysed during the days that the Prince and Princess are to stay in our midst; and the Government, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Banks would, by grudging two or three extra days, only create the impression that they do not mind the reception of Their Royal Highnesses proving a tame and halting affair. There is an inconsistency in keeping Government servants, private office assistants, and the business community generally, at the desk, and at the same time, expecting the people of Bombay to manifest every possible sign of joy and happiness in finding the Prince and Princess of Wales in their midst. We trust that those in whose hands the matter rests will promptly set about doing the right thing, and save themselves from the reproach of having marred the popular rejoicings on this historic occasion. We pass from this to another point we touched upon the other day, viz., having two illumination nights. The initial cost being once incurred, it would not make much of a difference whether the illuminations are kept up for one night or two. The public will not surely grudge spending money for a little extra oil or gas to give sufficient édat to the occasion.....And the same thing could be said of the Municipality, the Banks and the other public bodies and corporations, as well as firms and business houses. The trams are to be stopped on the illumination night, making it practically impossible for the families of the more respectable among the poor and the middle classes to stir out of their homes to witness the illuminations. We are not quite convinced as yet that the trams could not have been conveniently allowed to run from Grant Road along Hornby Road, which transfers from the former place to Park, etc., in ... order to assist the residents in the outlying districts of the town to travel down to the City and witness the illuminations. But if the Police authorities think that this could not be managed, then there is all the greater reason for keeping the illuminations another night, letting the trams run freely that night, and shutting out the private garrihawalas, if need be, in order to let all classes of the inhabitants have an opportunity of seeing the illuminations. These are some of the more important points that we think it necessary to touch upon in order to prevent disappointment and heartburning among the masses of the population—by no means less loyal and devoted subjects of His Majesty than their richer and more fortunate fellow-residents.

Indu Prakash, 31st October, Jām-e-Jamshed, 1st November, Evening Jām, 4th November.—The Press communique published in our issue of Wednesday last notifies that the Royal party are timed to arrive at the Apollo Bandar at 4-15 P.M. instead of at 4-30 P.M. as originally stated, and that, therefore, the Royal party will be able to start from the Bandar between 4-45 P.M. and 5 P.M. The change will not, we are afraid, meet with the entire satisfaction of the public. No doubt, it is a great improvement upon the original arrangement; still the public would like to see the Royal party start from the Bandar at an even earlier hour. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, are timed to leave the Bandar between 4-45 P.M. and 5 P.M., and the sun will, on the 6th of November, set at 5-37 P.M. so that there will be left to the Royal party only 37 minutes of daylight for reaching Government House, which is an impossible task. From the Apollo Bandar to Government House via Sir J. J. Hospital and Chowpatty is a pretty long distance, and the drive would, even if there were to be no stoppages, occupy more than thirty-seven minutes. How much more time, then, will it take to reach Government House when the Royal party may have to stop, at least to slacken the pace extremely at many places en route, by way of courtesy to people who will be ready to present Their Royal Highnesses with bouquets and flowers? It will be quite dark before the Royal party passes even half the route, and many loyal citizens will have to go home disappointed, without seeing their future Emperor and Empress. There is another reason, and that a strong one too, why there should be a further change in the programme. It ought to be well borne in mind that the young pupils from the various schools, who are to be accommodated on the stands specially erected for the purpose, should, on no account whatsoever, be detained after dusk, for even while it is daylight it will greatly tax the resources of the teachers in charge of the urchins to manage them and find the way for them through the densely crowded streets, and after sunset the task would be beyond the resources of the teachers. We, therefore, strongly advocate a further change still in the right direction in the programme. If the present arrangement is persisted in, a great many people, especially in Grant Road, Chowpatty and Walkeshwar Road, will have to go disappointed without seeing Their Royal Highnesses. [The Jām-e-Jamshed, the Evening Jām and several other papers of the week bitterly complain against the inconvenient hour selected for the landing of Their Royal Highnesses.]

abnormal rush of visitors to Bombay is already sending up the fares of hackney carriages, we do not understand why the authorities have chosen to notify that on the night of the illuminations the trams will stop running after 7 P.M. To the thousands that stay at places inconveniently distant from the People's Fair and the chief centres of illumination in the Fort, the stoppage of trams will be a veritable hardship. Why call the fair a People's Fair and close up the only cheap mode of conveyance to it available to the middle and the lower classes in Bombay. We do not know if the authorities have given due consideration to the matter. The railways can hardly be expected to cope with the local traffic. But some arrangement can be arrived at by which trams could run to Colaba by Hornby Road and return via Elphinstone Circle to Borj Bunder. Some such convenience is absolutely necessary for the thousands that cannot afford to engage hackney carriages. The authorities owe a duty to the poorer portion of the public, and we trust that they will reconsider their decision and modify it in a way that will enable Bombay's poor to join in the festivities organized in honour of the heir-apparent to the British throne. We do not know if Their Royal Highnesses would like the poor and middle class population in the city to be thus kept away from the festivities in their honour.

Jām-e-Jamshed, 2nd November 1905.—We shall not deny that the Bombay Government must have found it a very difficult task to decide the question of native full dress in connection with the Prince's levée on the 10th instant. So many kinds of dresses are being worn now-a-days by natives, and such grotesque combinations are being made by fashionable and so-called progressive Parsis, Hindus and others that it must have indeed proved an unenviable task for the official or officials entrusted with the drawing up of the levée dress regulations to decide what should constitute a full dress in the case of the different native communities. We have more of sympathy than blame for those responsible for the regulations published the other day. The incongruity of the combinations suggested therein is too patent to escape comment and even protest. But there could be no doubt that this has been primarily due to a desire on the part of the official or officials concerned to consult, as far as possible, the wishes of the Anglicised natives who prefer European dress and, at the same time, to prevent them from losing their racial characteristic when they appear before His Royal Highness. The result, however, has been that those responsible for the drawing up of the regulations have created the impression of being either unimaginative or cynically humorous. There are, indeed, many who are asking how they could have failed to imagine what a grotesque combination English evening dress would make with a native turban. Anyway the orders, published some days ago, need revision, and we hope Government will not object to meet the wishes of those who have protested in the matter. They could very easily and justly lay down that no native who appears in English dress would be given admission, and that proper national dress will have to be worn by every one who is desirous to appear at the Prince's levée. That would simplify matters and prevent the irritation that is now so widely prevalent. The combination of English evening dress with a native turban is the last thing in which any sensible, self-respecting native would venture to appear at the levée, and Government House must make up its mind either to let the natives appear in English evening dress without a head-gear, or prohibit the wearing of evening dress altogether, and insist upon what is called dupla or jām-e-pichai. In regard to what has fallen from a certain set of Parsi janjis as to their having no pajama or jeans and no dupla for the Prince's levée, we should think that it would have been a kindness to the community not to press such an argument into service. Men who would not or could not undergo the expense of having these in return for the honour they are to have of appearing before the Prince can have no right to feel themselves annoyed or injured by being told that the function is not for such as they.

SELECTION FROM NATIVE PAPERS PUBLISHED IN MADRAS, FOR THE WEEK ENDING 4TH NOVEMBER 1905.

The Andhraprakasika (Madras) of the 28th October, stating that it does not matter much whether the salt tax is abolished or not exhorts the Indian patriots to request His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to see that an Act is passed empowering the people to distil and sell their own liquors subject to a reasonable duty. Since such a step is a profitable concern, both to the Government and the people, the suggestion will be acceptable to him. In the absence of such an Act, the various fruits grown in India are simply wasted. Not only is their value thus lost to the country, but a large sum of money is also wasted in the purchase of foreign liquors. All the leaders of the people are therefore requested to unite and memorialise His Royal Highness to obtain an Act beneficial both to the rulers and the ruled.

SELECTION FROM NATIVE NEWSPAPERS PUBLISHED IN THE PUNJAB, FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 4TH NOVEMBER 1905.

The Victoria Paper (Sialkot), of the 24th October 1905, remarks that the remission of Income Tax will constitute a permanent memorial of the forthcoming Royal Visit to India, and requests the Finance Minister of the Viceregal Council to move in the matter.

5TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Pioneer.—The Maharaja of Sikkim and his son will be the guests of Government at Calcutta during the Royal visit. It will be the first time that His Highness has travelled so far.

Pioneer.—As the Aligarh College is to have the honour of a special visit from the Prince of Wales, who is to halt some hours there on his way between Nepal and Simla on the 6th March, it is only natural that the authorities are anxious to organise some permanent memorial of an event so notable and so full of encouragement for the future. It has long been the wish of those who have charge of the affairs of the College to organise a Natural Science branch with an equipment corresponding to the standard College in other respects. What is wanted is a professorial chair, two or three scholarships, a laboratory and a class room with the necessary furniture and appliances. There is no question that if the liberality of Mahomedans of light and leading would provide an endowment sufficient for meeting these requirements, there could be no better way of recognising the signal distinction that the College is receiving in His Royal Highness's visit.

6TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Daily Express.—Bombay is in a high state of excitement about the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales, who arrive here by the Renown on Thursday.

The city is already bursting into decorations, and is aflame with the splendour of the Native Princes, Rajas, and Maharajas, who arrive at the Victoria terminus at the rate of half a dozen a day. Each chief is met by a representative of Government House, attended by a train of retainers, carefully calculated, according to rank of the visitor.

The other day I saw one of these potentates arrive. He was met by his tribesmen and his friends. They offered their fealty, assured him that of all the constellations his star was the brightest, and put around his neck a garland of flowers. The ceremony would have been more telling but for the fact that His Highness was very stout, and that his splendid turban and decorations were supported by a European frock coat, doubtful trousers, and boots that did not fit.

Other receptions, where the Raja had stuck to his native costume, and carried it off with an Oriental majesty of mien, were impressive, and gave little hints of the rich pageantry that is being arranged for the Prince and Princess. Many of these Rajas have taken bungalows at fancy rents, where they can live in State with their own regiment of attendants about them.

The wide streets in the Fort district and the narrow native bazaars are pulsating with ceremonial colours, and a wonderful sight will meet the eyes of the Royal visitors as they enter the "Gateway of India."

The only shadow on the preparations is the illness of the Viceroy. His promised visit is arousing nearly as much enthusiasm as that of the Prince himself. He was to have spoken at the Byeulla dinner to-morrow, and as he was unable to get here in time the dinner has been postponed.

Lord Curzon will probably arrive in Bombay on Tuesday. He will officially welcome the Prince and Princess, and then immediately resign office, handing over the reins to his successor, Lord Minto. He may, however, accompany the Prince and Princess over a part of the tour as a private friend. He will go to Cairo for the winter.

Globe.—Since it was known that the Prince of Wales was to visit India, several of the Indian Princes in whose territories tigers are to be found have been sedulously preserving the animals in order that His Royal Highness may be sure of getting a good bag. In one State of which information has reached us, not a single tiger has been permitted to be killed for nearly a year, but there is no need to suppose that any one has suffered thereby. The man-eater is comparatively a rarity, and there is no difficulty in compensating the villagers for the loss they suffer in cattle through the tigers being preserved. Generally, indeed, they make a very good thing out of it.

Standard.—The commencement of the momentous week of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales finds Bombay in a state of glowing elation and excitement. The sole shadow is the illness of the Viceroy. It is now officially announced that Lord Curzon will not arrive until Tuesday, thereby compelling a postponement of the Byeulla dinner, which had been fixed for Monday, when a great speech was expected from His Excellency. The interest taken in Lord Curzon's presence is intense, almost rivalling that attaching to the Royal visit.

The noble city, which is the watergate of Western India, is rapidly draping herself in festal attire, and there is every evidence that the decorations will be on a magnificent scale. The wide Fort, the narrow streets, and the native bazaars, steeped in Oriental colour, form together an unequalled background for the ceremonies and the Royal progresses.

For the past few days the centre of animation has been the Victoria terminus, where the ruling Princes and native potentates have been arriving in rapid succession. Each Chief has been met by a Government House representative, and accompanied by a train of retainers suitable to his rank. In many cases the distinguished visitors have been also met by a deputation of their subjects or fellow tribesmen, who go through the picturesque ceremony of garlanding the potentate with flowers. The effect is sometimes impressive, but occasionally a trifle comic when the object of this attention is stout and elderly, and dressed in semi-European costume.

Several Rajas are occupying bungalows hired at high rents, and these temporary dwellings. There is, indeed, a great gathering of chiefs to come to Bombay to welcome India's future Emperor. Nearly all the Chiefs with whom the Bombay Government on the political side is directly related are here. First among them is His Highness Sir Shahu Chhatrapati Maharaj, Maharaja of Kolhapur, who represents the younger branch of the family of the great Sivaji, founder of the Mahratta Empire, the Kolhapur dynasty having been established by Sivaji's grandson, whose mother, Tarabhai, is the heroine of Mahratta history. The present Maharaja is well known in England, having been present at the King's Coronation. The Rao of Cutch is descended from a family of Jaraja Rajputs, who, after founding a principality in Sind, invaded Cutch in the middle of the fifteenth century. The gallant Maharaja of Idar, better known as Sir Pertab Singh of Jodhpur, the Rajput State of which he was regent during his nephew's minority, joins the Prince of Wales' staff as aide-de-camp. He is an aide-de-camp to the King, Honorary Commandant of the Imperial Cadet Corps, has won distinction as a soldier and sportsman, and is the beau ideal of Rajput chivalry.

The Mahometan Nawab of Junagadh is the ruler of an out-of-the-way but prosperous State in Kathiawar in which is situated the famous shrine of Somnath, the gates of which were taken away by Mahmud of Ghazni, and recovered, as Lord Ellenborough believed, by our army in Afghanistan. The Nawab also owns the Gir Forest, the last haunt of the Indian lion. He traces his descent to a Pathan soldier of fortune who, a couple of centuries ago, set himself up as a ruler in Kathiawar, after expelling the great Moghul's deputy governor. The Thakur Sahib of Bhavnagar, the Rana Sahib of Porbandar, and the Thakur Sahib of Gondal, other States in Kathiawar, are Rajputs. The Porbandar Chief belongs to a tribe which claims descent from Hanuman, the monkey god. Sir Bhagvatsinhji of Gondal took a medical degree at Edinburgh. The Mahometan Nawab of Janjira is descended from Abyssinian admirals who served under Aurungzeb. The Chief of Miraj, a Brahmin, boasts of ancestors who were thanked for their services by the Duke of Wellington, then General Wellesley, during his campaigns in the Deccan. The Mahometan Nawab of Cambay, a Shahi Moghul, is descended from a man who was Viceroy of Ahmedabad under the Kings of Delhi. All of them are here, looking forward with eager expectation, which no amount of Oriental stolidity can conceal, to making their loyal salaams to His Royal Highness the Shahzada.

Times of India.—The following telegrams have passed between His Excellency the Viceroy and His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, upon His Royal Highness' arrival at Aden:—

From His Excellency the Viceroy to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

On the arrival of Your Royal Highnesses at the first outpost of the Indian Empire may I venture to offer to you a loyal and enthusiastic welcome to Indian waters?

All India has no other desire than to make your forthcoming visit a memorable and unbroken success.

From His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to His Excellency the Viceroy.

On our arrival in Indian waters the Princess of Wales and I wish to take the earliest opportunity of sending a warm message of esteem and goodwill to you and to the people of India.

We are much touched by your kind message of welcome.

withstanding the early hour of the morning a large number of people was present at the station to receive His Highness, who, on alighting from the train, was received by a Government deputation consisting of Captain Burke, Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department, and Be-saladar Bahadur Shaikh Abdul Hamid, Native A.D.C. to His Excellency the Governor. After receiving floral presentations Nawab Jaffer Ali Khan proceeded to a Government House carriage which had been sent for him, when a guard-of-honour of fifty rank and file drawn from the 104th Rifles, which was drawn up at the station, presented arms. His Highness, accompanied by the gentlemen forming the Government deputation, drove away to his residence at Pedder Road. A salute of eleven guns was fired to announce the arrival.

His Highness Maharaja Colonel Sir Pertabsinhji of Idar, A.D.C. to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, arrived by the Ahmedabad mail train on Saturday morning. Sir Pertab Singh was met at the Grant Road Station by Mr. P. W. Monie, Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department; Mr. Mirza Abbas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government, and Captain Meynell, A.D.C. to His Excellency Lord Lamington, who represented the Bombay Government. Araya Samaj, of which His Highness is a member, had sent a deputation, who welcomed the Maharaja and garlanded him. Accompanied by the members forming the Government deputation, His Highness stepped into a Government House carriage, when a guard-of-honour of fifty rank and file detailed by the 104th Rifles presented arms. His Highness, after receiving floral presentations, proceeded in his State carriage and four, with the members of the Government deputation, to his residence at Pedder Road, a guard-of-honour of fifty rank and file supplied by the 104th Rifles being mounted at the bungalow. Eleven guns were fired to announce the arrival.

His Highness Maharaja Shri Mansingji of Baria and his staff were also passengers by the same train. His Highness was accompanied by the State Dewan Mr. Biralal Mansukhram and a modest retinue of twenty-five followers. The Government deputation, which received His Highness at Grant Road Station, was composed of Captain Pottinger, Political Officer, Captain Greig, A.-D.-C. to His Excellency the Governor, and Mirza Abbas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government. Amongst several native gentlemen who were present at the station to welcome this Chief was the Honourable Mr. G. K. Parekh. His Highness, who was received outside the station by a guard-of-honour presenting arms, drove to the Great Western Hotel.

His Highness Nawab Sir Rasulkhanji of Junagadh, K.C.S.I., was also one of Saturday's arrivals, and as this was the first visit of His Highness to Bombay after his installation on the gadi great enthusiasm prevailed amongst all classes of His Highness' subjects residing in Bombay, who were present in large numbers at Grant Road Station to give their Ruler a hearty and cordial welcome. The approaches to the station were also thronged with people. A portion of the platform was covered with a Persian carpet, on which sofas and chairs were arranged, and round this gathered numerous Mahomedan, Hindu, and Parsi gentlemen who were anxious to garland and do homage to their Ruler. The crowd on the platform was so large that the Station Master and Inspector D. Comen of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Police had to take special precautions to avoid accidents. Amongst those present were Mr. Gordhudas Goculdas Tejpal, Sir Harkisondas Narotumdas, Kt., Messrs. Gordhudas Khatau Mackenji, Veerchund Deepchund, C.I.E., Rao Saheb Karamsey Damji, Messrs. As the special train conveying His Highness and suite entered the platform the crowd on the platform sent up a ringing cheer, which was taken up by the people outside. On stepping out of the train His Highness was received by a Government deputation formed of Captain Burke, Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department, Captain Gray, A.-D.-C. to His Excellency Lord Lamington, and Mr. Mirza Abbas Ali Baig, Oriental Translator to Government. The reception by the Government deputation being over, His Highness Sir Rasulkhanji Shahzada Sherzumakhanji, Vazir Bahudinbhai and Sardar Behecherdas were conducted to the seats provided for them, where floral presentations occupied several minutes. His Highness then proceeded to a carriage sent from Government House, when a guard-of-honour of fifty rank and file, with band and colour, which was supplied by the 104th Rifles, gave the salute. His Highness accompanied by the Government deputation and escorted by a party of Native Cavalry proceeded to a bungalow of His Highness the Aga Khan at Land's End Road, Malabar Hill. A salute of eleven guns announced the arrival of His Highness.

On arriving at his bungalow His Highness was received by Mr. Camaria Ismail Cassam on behalf of His Highness the Aga Khan, who had also sent a telegram of welcome. Mr. Camaria then garlanded His Highness and presented him with the usual "nazrana." A number of Mahomedan and Hindu merchants made floral presentations and submitted "nazrana" to His Highness. In the evening other gentlemen, including Mr. Carrimbhai Ibrahim, Mr. Rehmubhai Allana and others, also paid a visit to His Highness, and presented gifts of welcome.

As the train ran into the station cheers were given and as His Highness alighted Mr. Jehangir C. Chubwalla advanced up to the saloon and garlanded His Highness and presented him with a superb bouquet. His Highness acknowledged the compliment, and then in company of his Dewan, Mr. Patni, walked up to the seats which were arranged on the platform and there received further floral offerings. The usual salute of guns was given both at the arrival and departure of His Excellency.

Lord Lamington also paid return visits to the two Chiefs of Kurundwad on Saturday afternoon.

Times of India.—The camp erected at Chowpatti for the accommodation of the Political Officers from Gujerat, Kathiawar and Southern Maratha Country and for the Rajkumars of these provinces is now almost fully occupied. All the arrangements regarding the construction of the camp have been made by Mr. H. S. Davies, Agency Engineer, Kathiawar, and his assistant, Mr. Goudas H. Parekh. The camp contains over sixty tents, two being allotted to each officer. A large dining room and a drawing room with nicely arranged furniture have also been provided for the use of the officers and their families. The following officers are now staying at the camp: Lieutenant-Colonel W. P. Kennedy, Agent to the Governor, Kathiawar; Lieutenant-Colonel J. Davies, Political Agent, Wadhwan; Lieutenant-Colonel G. E. Hyde Cates, Political Agent, Savantwadi; Lieutenant-Colonel H. M. Abud, Political Agent, Cutch; Major J. Talbot, Superintendent, Imperial Service Troops, Kathiawar; Captain W. Beale, Political Agent, Halar; Captain R. S. Pottinger, Assistant Political Agent, Kolhapur; Captain N. S. Coghlin, Administrator, Radhanpur; Lieutenant R. T. C. Burke, Administrator, Sangli; Mr. W. L. B. Souter, District Superintendent of Police, Khandesh; Mr. H. Pogson, District Superintendent of Police, Kathiawar; Mr. J. W. Mayne, Principal, Rajkumar College, Rajkot; Mr. P. Hide, Vice-Principal, Rajkumar College; Mr. H. S. Davies, Agency Engineer, Kathiawar; and Canon J. H. Beck, Chaplain of Ahmedabad; Lieutenant-Colonel W. B. Ferris, Political Agent, Wadhwan; Major H. D. Merweather, Political Agent, Palanpur; Mr. P. J. Mead, Political Agent, Rewa Kantha; and Mr. A. S. A. Westropp, Political Agent, Surat, are expected to arrive in Bombay in a day or two.

One of the most attractive and picturesque features of the forthcoming ceremonies will be the Takht Taus, which is the name of the throne intended for the use of the Princess of Wales at the Indian Ladies' Entertainment. The Takht has been designed by Mrs. Mohammed Ali Rogay, Lady Cawasji Jehangir, and Begum M. J. Nasrullah Khan after the pattern of the Peacock Throne of the Emperor Shah Jehan on which his Imperial Consort, Empress Arjuman Banoo Begum Mumtaz Mahal, used to sit on ceremonial occasions. It is lined with gold cloth. The peacocks are made of gold embroidery and are of the very best Surat workmanship. Two peacocks are on each side, right and left, and three behind the throne.

There is a canopy which is lined with gold cloth and frilled and adorned with a crown most beautifully worked. The Takht will also be covered with valuable gold cloth. It will be draped most artistically and picturesquely under the able supervision of Lady Cawasji Jehangir, who has spared no pains to make the Indian Ladies' party a great success.

At the request of Nawabzada and Begum M. J. Nasrullah Khan the Takht is being constructed by them and will be lent to the Committee for the occasion. Afterwards it will be preserved as a priceless heirloom in the family of His Highness the Nawab of Savahin, nephew of Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan.

We are informed that in commemoration of the visit of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales a social gathering and evening party of all the past and present students of the Rajkumar College, Rajkot, has been arranged by Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan, and will take place at Hashmat Mahal, Chowpatti, on Sunday next at 9.50 p.m.

A large majority of the past students of the College are now Chiefs of the Bombay Presidency, who with all the Kumars have been invited.

The last of the troops from up-country stations detailed for duty in connection with the Royal visit arrived in Bombay on Saturday morning. They consisted of His Excellency the Viceroy's Bodyguard, which detained at the Victoria Terminus and is now encamped near Wodehouse Bridge, the bands, drums and colours and two companies each of the Royal Scots and Connaught Rangers from Poona and Ahmednagar respectively, who were sailed down to the Sassoon Dock and are now in camp on the site of the old Colaba Depot.

At a meeting of the Marwari residents of Bombay held yesterday it was resolved that the members of that community should decorate and illuminate their houses in honour of the Royal visit to the city.

7TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Daily Graphic, Tuesday.—The Prince and Princess of Wales have already reached the "first outpost of the Indian Empire," and have received a telegram of greeting from the Viceroy, Aden, although it is nearly five days' steaming from Bombay, is subject to the Government of India, and is administered as part of the Bombay Presidency. As a port of call and as a naval station its importance is very considerable, but as a place of residence there are few less desirable on the earth's surface. The real gate of India in modern days is Bombay, and although nearly a week must elapse before the Brown reaches this beautiful city, where East and West are so marvellously blended, already preparations for the Royal visit have begun. The Native Princess are arriving in Bombay in large numbers to welcome the Heir-Apparent to the Throne of England and of India, and the city is adding elaborate decorations to its normal wealth of colour. Nowhere will the Prince of Wales find a warmer welcome than in Bombay, and nowhere will he see the East arrayed in more attractive garb. Few cities, indeed, in any part of the world possess the variety of charm that Bombay can show. It is an epitome of all that is best in India, an ideal entrance-gate to the great empire that lies behind.

Indian Daily News.—When on November 9th Bombay gives to the Royal visitors the enthusiastic welcome which her citizens have been preparing for months past, exactly 50 years will have elapsed since King Edward VII. landed there, as Prince of Wales and Heir-Apparent of Queen Victoria, who only assumed the Imperial title a year later. The horizon of the vast majority of the inhabitants of India is a very narrow one, stretching no further than the personality of the district officer, often not so far as that; Governors, Commanders-in-Chief, and Viceroys, the countryman may have heard of, but they are generally mixed up in his mind with some confused idea of the British "Raj," the existence of which he recognises with perhaps more indifference than active interest, so long as he is left alone. With the Sovereign and his family the case is different, and there are few villages where there is not some definite conception of the "Kaiser" and his son the "Shahzada." The idea of a personal ruler is a familiar one to every Indian, often, perhaps, almost inseparable from that of a beneficent deity to whom is due a reverence and an active loyalty which can hardly be felt for representatives not of Royal blood. To the bulk of the people the notion of the constitutional Monarch is inconceivable, and in British India the Emperor is regarded as the sole fountain of all administration.

In the great cities, amongst the educated classes and the Feudatory Princes, there is, of course, a clearer understanding of the position of the Emperor and his representatives, but the active feeling of loyalty towards the Sovereign and his family is no less marked. Thus, to all classes the approaching visit will be a source of genuine satisfaction, which will be expressed everywhere in the welcome prepared for the Prince and Princess, whether in British territory or in the States of those Chiefs whom they can find opportunity to visit. Outside India the tour should serve to arouse an interest not always felt in the great Peninsula which contains nearly three-fourths of the total population of the British Empire. It may well serve, too, as a practical lesson in the geography of a country which, to those who have no personal knowledge of it, is so difficult to realize.

Many changes have occurred in the 30 years since the last visit of a Prince of Wales to India; perhaps none is greater than the increased facility of communication due to the extension of railways. The mere statement that in 1875 India had only 7,000 miles of railway, whereas she has now over 27,000, does not convey the significance of this extension half so well as the constant instances of places visited by rail in 1905 which could only be reached from a railway. Indore, the first halting place after Bombay, will be reached by train. It was visited in 1875, but the rail-head was then only at the Nerbada river, whence to Holkar's capital there was a long drive up the "ghats," which mount to the plateau of Central India, 1,800ft. above the sea. It is only within the last few years that the next stopping place, Udaipur, has been connected by rail with the main line at the famous and romantic hill fortress of Chitor. In 1875 Jaipur communicated by rail with Agra, but for many years after that there was no railway nearer to Bikanir than the terminus of the branch line to the great salt lake of Sambhar. Now the line has been continued to Bikanir and on to Bhatinda in the Punjab. Until they leave Bikanir, on November 27th, the halts of the Royal party will, after leaving Bombay, have been all in the territory of Feudatory Chiefs. Lahore, the capital of the Punjab, will occupy five days, and on December 2nd Peshawar, the most northerly stage on the journey, will be reached, a point far beyond the railway in 1875. Near Rawalpindi the Prince will witness the manoeuvres of a large force, European and Native, of the Indian Army. It had been intended to carry out these in the more historic neighbourhood of Delhi, but unfortunately the drought has rendered this impossible in a country so dry that, even in a normal season, special arrangements for water would have been necessary. The next stay will be at Jammu, the winter capital of the Maharaja of Kashmir, who will only just have been restored by Lord Curzon to a position of authority in his State before receiving his guests.

A day at Amritsar and longer visits to Delhi and Agra are essential to the completeness of a tour in Upper India. Nor could the capital of the Maharaja Sindhia be neglected, especially now that Gwalior can be reached in two or three hours by rail from Agra, instead of, as in 1875, only by a carriage drive of 70 or 80 miles. The journey from Gwalior to Calcutta will be broken by a three days' visit to Lucknow. Out of the fortnight between arriving at and finally leaving Calcutta, on January 12th three days will be given to a trip to Darjeeling, whence the finest of all views of the Himalayas obtainable from a hill station will, it is to be hoped, be unmarred by cloud. The Prince will appropriately be in the metropolis of British India on the anniversary of the proclamation of the Imperial title at the great Assemblage at Delhi on January 1st, 1877. Here, too, he will be able to lay the foundation-stone of the Victoria Memorial, which its designers have sought to make an ornament to the capital and a lasting monument to the memory of the great Empress. When on January 13th the Royal party reaches Rangoon, and thence proceeds to Mandalay, they will enter regions unvisited in 1875, regions, indeed, which, in so far, at least, as regards Upper Burma, it would then have been out of the question for the Prince to visit. The era of the growth of the British Empire in India by annexation of the internal States had ended long before 1875. With the conquest of Upper Burma, in 1875, a limit was practically put to its expansion in other directions. In many ways Burma will, perhaps, be the most interesting part of the expedition. From Rangoon to Madras the journey will be by sea, thence to be continued by rail to Mysore, Bangalore, and Haiderabad. This part of the programme of the former visit was omitted in consequence, it was said, of an outbreak of cholera. In Mysore the Prince will be the guest of the young Maharaja, who was installed on coming of age in 1902. Thirty years ago the State had not yet been restored to native rule, after its 50 years of British administration, since the deposition of the Maharaja in 1831.

The three days given to Haiderabad cannot fail to be of supreme interest, both from the fact that it is the capital of the largest and most important of the Feudatory States, and from the attractiveness of the city, its curiously cosmopolitan population, and its surroundings. In 1876 the Nizam was a child, the State being governed by a Regency with Sir Salar Jung at his head. Now the Nizam has taken the reins of Government entirely into his own hands, to the great benefit of his country, after the period of intrigue and corruption which followed on the death of the great Minister. It is at this stage of the tour that a relaxation from the arduous labours of ceremonial will be taken in a shooting trip of five days. In 1876 nearly a month could be given to shooting in the Nepal Tarni, under the guidance of the great "Mayor" of the palace and keen sportsman, Sir Jung Bahadur. Now the Prince has to pay for the greater extension of his journey by the curtailment of his sport.

A flying visit to the curious rock fort of Daulatabad, and the neighbouring cave temples of Ellora, will be followed by a long railway journey to Benares, and a stay of ten days at Bettiah in the Nepal Tarai, where, no doubt, there will be meetings with the successor of Sir Jung Bahadur. At Aligarh, on March 6th, the visitors will see the famous Mahomedan College to the institution and development of which the late Sir Syed Ahmad devoted his best energies. A couple of days will be spent at Simla, which can now be reached by railway instead of by the wearisome carriage journey from Umballa, which was necessary thirty years ago. Thence there is another long railway journey across the Punjab, down the Indus Valley, and up through the mountains to Quetta, the capital of Baluchistan, of which province some account was given in The Times of October 12th. When the heir of Queen Victoria was in India, Quetta was practically inaccessible, at any rate for one whose life was too valuable to risk. At Karachi, on March 19th, the shores of India will be left, and here the changes of a generation are particularly noticeable. From an isolated port carrying the trade of Sind only, Karachi, by the linking up of the railway, has become the natural outlet of the great granary of the Punjab, which already, in the busy season, sends down some 7,000 tons of grain daily for export. The growing importance of the port is shown by the increase of its population from 56,753 in 1872 to 116,063 in 1901.

The Prince is particularly fortunate in the choice of Sir Walter Lawrence as the head of his staff. None but the late Private Secretary of a peculiarly energetic Viceroy could claim so wide a knowledge of India, of its Native Chiefs, and of its principal officials, from Peshawar to Madras, and from Karachi to Mandalay. In General Stuart Beaton is found an officer who, in addition to a wide experience of the Indian Army generally, has enjoyed special opportunities of acquainting himself with the irregular forces of the Feudatory States and with the trained contingents volunteered by them for Imperial service.

Standard.—The great city of Bombay, which is throbbing with expectancy of the Royal visit presents a curious and interesting spectacle. To a visitor, Bombay is always a somewhat bewildering place, owing to the strange contrast which it exhibits of Eastern and Western associations. One part of the city is full of hotels, public offices, and stately buildings, in ultra-modern style, while in close juxtaposition are to be seen picturesque native dresses and the bazar, with its genuinely Oriental characteristics.

At the present moment the incongruity is increased by the preparations for the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales. In the native quarters floral decorations in the ancient Eastern mode are alternated with strings of electric lights. The balconies are draped with costly old Indian rugs and Cashmere shawls. Not far off, the Maidan is being prepared for a popular fair, with all the accompaniments of roundabouts and switchback railways. A concourse of wild-looking up-country natives is gazing at the decorations and the tiers of flimsy stands which are arising in every direction—the whole effect on the mind being a sort of combination of Earl's Court and Arabian Nights.

Bombay is transforming itself also into a military centre, owing to the concourse of troops brought in and encamped in the various open spaces. All the streets in the early morning are about equally beset with the khaki of the British regiments—cavalry and horse artillery—and the processions of great Native Chiefs driving from the stations, attended by glittering escorts of Lancers and their own train of followers, displaying a profusion of barbaric finery.

Times of India.—Strains of martial music echoed through the streets of Bombay at an early hour yesterday morning as the troops of the garrison and those specially drafted in for the Royal visit took up their stations for a rehearsal of the proceedings which will attend the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales when they land in two days' time. By six o'clock the troops were in the streets and a short while later the route of the Royal procession was lined by military and police from the Apollo Bunder to the neighbourhood of Dhobitalao, where Their Royal Highnesses will enter the native town by way of the Kalbadevi Road. The disposition of the men was directed by Colonel Fearon, 2nd Yorks, and Colonel Turner, R. G. A., and troops of all arms took part. The Royal Garrison Artillery were in position near the Bunder, then came the 2nd Royal Scots, 2nd Yorks Regiment, 2nd Connaught Rangers, and further up the Bombay Great Indian Peninsula and Bombay, Baroda and Central India Volunteers and men of several Native Infantry regiments. The police sepoy were stationed a few yards in rear of the military lines, and near the Wellington Fountain and Crawford Market contingents of the 10th Royal Hussars were in readiness to assist the mounted police in dealing with the exceptional traffic which may be expected at the junctions of roads at these places. At the Apollo Bunder a guard of honour of the 2nd Royal Scots with the regimental band was mounted at the head of the steps leading up from the landing stage.

For a couple of hours there was a busy scene at the Bunder. Lieutenant-General Hunter, Brigadier-General Greenfield and Major Fraser, D.A.A.G., directed the proceeding and His Excellency the Governor, who was present on horseback, took an active interest in the arrangements. The Hon'ble Mr. S. W. Edgerley, Secretary to the Political Department of Government, was also present, and an important part of the morning's duties fell upon Mr. Gell, Commissioner of Police, and Colonel Owen, Military Secretary to His Excellency the Governor, and other members of His Excellency's staff. Mr. R. J. Kent, Executive Engineer, Presidency, under whose directions the Bunder is being prepared for the reception ceremony, and others attended.

The chief interest from the spectacular point of view was centred in the arrival of the Viceroy's procession and the formation and departure of that of Their Royal Highnesses. The Viceroy's escort came down to the Bunder at a trot, and a very picturesque appearance it presented, while the smart bearing of the men was generally commented upon, the procession including Royal Horse Artillery and British and Native Cavalry as well as His Excellency's Bodyguard. A brief halt was made as the Viceroy's empty carriage arrived at the spot where His Excellency will dismount, and then the cortege clattered away into the back ground.

The next business was to form up the procession of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess, and the small amount of open space in the streets surrounding the Bunder made this a difficult task. The Rajkumar Cadets in their attractive uniform of khaki, with red belts and light blue pugarees, arrived and took up a position near the Yacht Club; and on the other side of the shamiana leading from the landing stage were the cavalry and with them the Bombay Light Horse, the latter parading in admirable order, under Major T. W. Cusie. Eventually only part of the escort accompanied the Royal carriage under the archway of the shamiana and the artillery and part of the cavalry joined the procession as it passed by Wellington Fountain. The procession then passed through the streets along the entire route to Government House, where the presence of the Prince's guard-of-honour of the Connaught Rangers made the rehearsal complete.

The following instructions appear in the Indian Army Orders with regard to the dress to be worn by officers on State or other occasions when His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is present:—

- (i) Review Order (mounted or dismounted as the occasion requires) will be worn on State occasions, at Levées and Balls, and when otherwise specially ordered, or when so noted on the invitation card. Helmets need not be taken to Balls, but must be taken to Levées.
- (ii) Mess Dress will be worn on all other occasions of evening entertainments or dinners.
- (iii) Drill, or Undress, Order, dismounted.—Frock-coats, patrol jackets, or serge frocks, with helmets or forage caps (as prescribed for the Staff, Department, or Corps to which the officers belong) will be worn by officers to whom an interview may be accorded by His Royal Highness, and also when attending garden parties or other afternoon entertainments for which no other dress is specifically prescribed.

The British India Steam Navigation Company's S.S. Lama, which arrived in Bombay yesterday morning brought, His Highness Maharao Shri Khengarji Savai Bahadur, G.C.I.E., Rao of Cutch, who landed at the Apollo Bunder about nine o'clock. His Highness was accompanied by his brother Kuvar Shri Kalaba; Kuvar Vijarji, Kuvar Shri Godji; Mr. Chumilal Sarabhai Dewan; Doctor Damania, Medical Officer; and Mr.

Pallonji Bejanji of the Political Department, Bhuj. A large number of Cutchis thronged the pavilion at the Apollo Bunder, and when His Highness landed the rush at the pavilion was so great that it was with difficulty that he could penetrate through the crowd and reach his carriage outside. His Highness was almost covered with garlands, and as soon as one load of flowers was taken off, others were hung round his neck. After receiving the floral presentations His Highness accompanied by his sons and Colonel Abud drove to Mr. Vusanji Trikamji's bungalow at Malabar Hill in a carriage and four placed at his disposal by Mr. Camaria Ismail on behalf of His Highness the Aga Khan.

The Chief of Ichhalkaranji and the Chief of Vishalgadh, Feudatory Chiefs of Kolhapur State, arrived in Bombay on Sunday morning from Poona and alighted at the Victoria Terminus accompanied by 75 followers. The arrival was private. The Chiefs are staying in a bungalow at Girgaum.

Sardar Bhivarao Madhavarao Potins, a first class Sardar of the Deccan, also arrived yesterday, and is now staying at Girgaum.

8TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Bystander.—Like Alexandria, with which it has often been compared, Bombay is a curious blend of the East and the West. This hybrid character of the Liverpool of India is strikingly manifested in its architecture—an amalgam of Indo-Saracenic, Gothic, and Renaissance.

The peculiar conformation of Bombay may be readily understood by the homely comparison to an outstretched hand, held palm upwards, cut off at the wrist—represented by Salsette Island; the thumb stands for Malabar Hill, and the forefinger, Colaba Point, while between thumb and forefinger lies Back Bay. Following up the parallel, the commercial quarter, Bombay proper in short, lies in the ball of the palm, fringed by the Harbour.

The new arrival will, no doubt, find the first view of the city from the sea impressive, and even fascinating—a vista of white palaces set in an amphitheatre of greenery, which, on landing, resolves itself into commonplace public buildings and commercial houses.

It is significant that the two most imposing buildings in the first view of the city from the sea are the railway station and an hotel. The Victoria Station, perhaps the most ambitious, architecturally, and the most gorgeous of any railway station in the world, is popularly considered the greatest lion of the city.

The Taj Mahal Palace Hotel, a remarkably striking building of considerable architectural pretensions, is a very effective blend of Indo-Saracenic and Renaissance.

Bombay, which is, teste Sir Edwin Arnold, one of the most remarkable cities in the world, with a native town which is in some respects the most characteristic in India, is, however, rather perfunctorily treated by the ordinary globe-trotter. Having seen the Secretariat, University, Post Office, and other public buildings, the exterior of the Towers of Silence, and made a hurried trip to the Caves of Elephanta, he is off to Calcutta and the North-West.

Indeed, many tourists consider Bombay can be adequately done in a few hours.

The Parsee Towers of Silence, the typical sight of Bombay, can only be seen from the grounds, though the gruesome adjuncts—the vultures—are obtrusively in evidence on the tops of the towers. The excitement among these ghoulis carrion birds when a funeral approaches is horribly significant of the prominent part they take in it. Altogether, as a sight, the world-famed Towers of Silence are disappointing.

Malabar Hill, where the Towers are situated, is the West End of Bombay, and it is said that the bungalow residents near have been known to claim a reduction of rent on account of annoyance caused by the bones that are sometimes dropped in their compounds by the vultures!

Commercial Intelligence.—To-morrow the Prince and Princess of Wales land at Bombay and will spend the next four months in touring through our greatest Dependency. Exactly thirty years have elapsed since King Edward VII as the Prince of Wales paid his memorable visit to India.

During the interval remarkable changes have been wrought on the face of the country by the development of irrigation and railways. Thirty years ago India had no more than 7,000 miles of railway. To-day she has over 27,000 miles, carefully chosen to open up not only the richest agricultural districts and the principal mineral deposits but also the poorer districts most liable to famine.

To railways each successive Viceroy seems to attach greater importance. The significance of the railway development of the past thirty years is, perhaps, in no way better indicated than by the fact that more than half of the great centres of Indian life to be visited by the Prince were without railway communication in 1875 and could only be visited after a tedious, and in some instances perilous, journey by more primitive means. In the east, Mandalay and Darjeeling had no railway communication; in the west, Karachi, the chief town of Sind, then of little importance, but now fast becoming one of the greatest ports in the Eastern Hemisphere, and the "Gateway of Central Asia," could only be reached by sea; Lahore was as far as the railway had penetrated in the North and North-East; while in the South, Mysore, now the centre of an extremely profitable gold-mining industry, was eighty miles from the nearest point on the Madras railway. Here is a list of the places to be visited on the present tour, distinguishing between those provided with railway communication since His Majesty's visit:—

In India the Royal tour has already aroused intense enthusiasm, and the one-quarter of the population of the British Empire which dwells outside the great peninsula will doubtless find a new pleasure in the reports of its progress.

A number of provincial crop reports and general memoranda on the cotton, sugar cane, and indigo crops were received by the last mail. The second memorandum on the cotton crop (dated Calcutta, October 16) relates to the whole of the early crop and so much of the late crop as has been sown up to the end of September. Provinces, together representing 87.5 per cent. of the total cotton crop of British India, report an increase from 8,057,000 acres to 10,339,000 acres, or an average increase of 15 per cent., the marked increases being in Bombay and Madras. Other provinces, representing in all 12.2 per cent. of the total crop of British India, report an aggregate contraction of 135,000 acres, or 9 per cent., the noticeable decreases being in the United Provinces and the North-West Frontier Province.

The net result in respect of all these British Provinces is an increase of about 1,240,000 acres, or 12 per cent.

As regards the Native States, Hyderabad shows an increase of 84,000 acres, or 3 per cent., and the Bombay States (including Baroda) an increase of 426,000 acres, or 30 per cent. The October forecasts have not yet been received from Central India and most of the Rajputana States. Taking for these States the figures as reported in their August returns, the total area in all the Native States is now a little over 5½ million acres.

For the whole of India (British as well as Native) the total area under cotton reported up to date is 17½ million acres.

Except in the Panjab and the United Provinces where unirrigated cotton has suffered badly from want of rain, the present condition of the crop is good, and the prospects are generally favourable. More rain is, however, required in certain areas, particularly in Bombay.

Daily Mail.—Lord Curzon arrived in Bombay this morning to receive the Prince on Thursday. He looked well, though evidently suffering from an affection of the throat.

At the station were assembled Lord Lamington, Governor of the Bombay Presidency; Rear-Admiral Poc, General Hunter, and the Princes of Western India—a brilliant group, among whom were the Nawab of Junagadh, the senior Chief of Katia-war, and Sir Pratab Singh, a picturesque veteran in the magnificent uniform of Commander of the Imperial Service Cadets.

After greetings, Lord Curzon was conducted to his carriage, and drove through the native town to Government House escorted by the Viceregal Bodyguard—blue turbans, white tunics, pennons of scarlet and white fluttering in the sunlight. Lady Curzon, in a second carriage, was followed by a long retinue of Princes and officers, civil and military. The popularity of the Viceroy was demonstrated by the enthusiasm of the Native as of the European.

Lord Curzon will leave Bombay after receiving the Prince, in order that his precedence as representative of the Emperor may not interfere with the preparations for the Prince, which are almost complete.

The city is festive under many-coloured raiment, which cannot altogether veil the distinctive character of the architecture for which Bombay is famous among the cities of the world.

The natives manifest keen interest in the visit of "our Raja," as they have named the Prince.

Glasgow News.—To judge from all the available indications, the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales in India is likely to surpass in brilliance anything of the kind we have hitherto seen. Some foretaste of what is to be expected was given by the reception of Lord Curzon in Bombay, where he has come to welcome the Royal pair on their arrival to-morrow. A feature of that reception, which must have been particularly gratifying to the retiring Viceroy, in view of recent events, was his evident popularity with all classes, native as well as British. And it would seem that that popularity is being extended by anticipation to the Prince and Princess themselves. There is no doubt, from what we know of the Prince and Princess, and their amiability and kindness of disposition, that when they come to make personal acquaintance, so far as that is possible with their Indian subjects, they will win for themselves a still wider popularity and a warmer affection.

Globe.—Egypt, perhaps, had some little reason in its disappointment at the Prince and Princess of Wales not landing once on Egyptian soil, during their stay at Port Said and Suez. Shortly before the Royal Squadron arrived it was reported that Their Royal Highnesses would probably visit Cairo, and the fact of the Khedive's starting for Cairo from Alexandria the day before encouraged this hope. Egypt would have been gratified in the extreme by such an honour, and close as the relations now are between this country and England—more frequent as are becoming the Khedive's visits to London—it would seem that such an interchange of courtesies could only enhance the position of England and Egypt. The Governor of the Suez Canal and the Khedive's Aide-de-Camp were among the dignitaries who waited on the Prince and Princess when the Renown dropped anchor in Port Said Harbour, but the only return visit known is that of the Earl and Countess of Shaftesbury to the Governor.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, however, appeared to enjoy immensely their brief stay at Port Said, a respite, as it was, for Her Royal Highness from the rough weather encountered in the Mediterranean. Their Royal Highnesses were sailing about the harbour throughout Friday, visiting the ships of the squadron—lunching on the Surprise, taking afternoon tea on the Lancashire, where the Prince rang the silver bell presented by the ladies of Lancaster, and in the evening the Royal party dined on the Powerful with the captains of all the four warships. A ball followed, and the Royal launch did not return to the Renown before midnight. The ship was a brilliant spectacle as she emerged from the canal at Suez by night, beautifully outlined by her illuminations.

Madras Mail.—The lighting arrangements for the Falaknama Palace during the stay of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales having been entrusted to the well-known firm of Messrs. Osler and Sons, assistants from their Calcutta Branch are busy at Falaknama fitting up a complete electric installation for the occasion. The same firm also attends to the arrangements in the same line required for the Shikar camp. Special telegraph wires are also being put up in connection with the same camp.

Pioneer.—The processions, of which details are given below, of His Excellency the Viceroy and Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to and from the Bandar, respectively, on the 9th instant, will be an imposing spectacle, and one that will long be remembered by those who are privileged to witness it. Regulars, Imperial Service Troops, Cadets, and Volunteers all find a place in the Royal procession:—

The casket to hold the Address of Welcome from the Bombay Municipal Corporation to the Prince and Princess of Wales assumes the shape of a cabinet, gracefully curving outwards towards its base. A very striking feature in it is a map of India, which is shown in the front panel. Sea is represented in cold silver, while land is in silver gilt; mountains are shown in high relief. All important towns are marked in precious stones. Calcutta, Bombay, Allahabad, Rangoon, and Dacca are represented by emeralds. Other towns, numbering fifty, are set with carbuncles and rubies. On the opposite side are a pair of pannelled doors. The one on the left shows a map in relief of Bombay as it was in 1661, composed of seven distinct islands. On the other side is a map of modern Bombay, illustrating what reclamation has done to convert the seven islands and marshy swamps into what is now known as the prima urbs in India. The ornamentation around the map of India and the two panelled doors is very striking and effective. It is of pierced floral scrolls in 18 ct. gold, in which are shown peacocks and parrots, studded with rubies, sapphires, emeralds and olivines, giving the true colourings of birds. On the front face and at the bottom corners are embossed views of the Municipal buildings and Rajabai Tower, while the opposite side shows the King's and Queen's statues in Bombay. The upper portion of the easel is of silver, decorated with Eastern design and surmounted with His Royal Highness's crest in solid gold, the Royal Crown with lions guardant; and above it is a cap of ruby velvet, making the whole a perfect model. Below the crest and above the map of India is a replica of the star of the K.C.S.I. while on the opposite side is that of the K.C.I.E. in silver, gold and enamels. The sides of the cabinet are decorated with panels in antique silver, copies of those on the pedestal, of the equestrian statue of the King in Bombay. One shows His Majesty, then Prince of Wales, receiving the Indian Chiefs on his arrival in Bombay thirty years ago, while the other shows His Majesty receiving the deputation of Indian ladies. Above each of these panels are shown in solid gold the Prince of Wales's Coat of Arms, and the Arms of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, and above these again, gracefully designed Indian scrolls finished in antique silver. The whole is mounted on a solid ivory base with the Prince of Wales's plumes at each corner in silver, and this again is fitted on an ebony and silver plinth.

Times of India.—At a meeting of the Bombay Grain Merchants' Association held yesterday, it was resolved to decorate Masjid Bunder Road from Masjid Bridge to the Jakaria Masjid and to address a letter to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay requesting that the carriage of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales might be stopped on the 10th instant for the purpose of garlanding them when passing through Masjid Bunder Road.

N.B.—The order of the procession of H. E. the Viceroy from Government House to the Apollo Bunder is, with a few items excepted, the same as the above.

The Bombay Brigade Orders yesterday contained the following particulars in regard to the Royal procession tomorrow:—

Letter from the Hon'ble Sir Pherozeshah M. Mehta, K.C.I.E., President, Municipal Corporation, Bombay, to the Hon'ble Mr. S. W. Edgerley, I.C.S., C.I.E., Chief Secretary to Government, Political Department, Bombay.

Sir,—I had the honour of addressing you in my letter through the Municipal Secretary, No. 3352, dated the 14th October 1905, inviting the attention of Government to the previous precedents, notably that on the occasion of the landing of the King-Emperor when Prince of Wales, regarding the inclusion of the President of the Corporation among the notable personages invited to receive Their Royal Highnesses at the landing at the Bunder. The only reply received was an acknowledgment of the receipt of letter.

2. I had subsequently the honour of respectfully placing before His Excellency the Governor a copy of the above letter addressed by me to you.

No further communication was received by me, but on November 1st, a public notification, No. 7050, was issued by Government in which I found that neither the President of the Corporation nor the Municipal Commissioner, who had hitherto been invariably included in such notification, had been asked on this occasion to receive Their Royal Highnesses.

4. In these circumstances I thought it proper to convene an informal meeting of the Members of the Corporation to advise me as to what course I should pursue.

At that meeting, at which 54 members were present, it was unanimously resolved that I should respectfully represent to Government that while fully recognising that it could not be the wish of Government to minimise in any way the important position of the President and the Municipal Commissioner as representatives of the Corporation and the City or that Government could wish not to fully recognise their position as such a very strong feeling prevails, both in the City and in the Corporation, that the omission in the manner above described of the representative heads of the Municipality and the City had been considered as a disregard of the importance of the City and as calculated to seriously wound the feelings of the people.

5. The Corporation feel that the importance of the City as a unit in the administrative divisions of Western India entitle its representatives, both President and Commissioner, to a special and marked consideration, which no question of ordinary official precedence should be allowed to affect. They also consider that this recognition is in no way affected by the fact that the Corporation as a body is to present an address to Their Royal Highnesses.

The City claims, that, among those who "receive" Their Royal Highnesses, the President of the Corporation and the Municipal Commissioner should have an equal and prominent position.

6. I may mention that the City's feelings on this matter extend also to the Sheriff though, as he is an Officer of Government, I do not feel justified in representing his claims.

7. It was unanimously felt at the meeting that no step should be taken that would in any way mar that harmony and good feeling which the City is anxious and determined shall mark the reception of its distinguished visitors. It was therefore considered that the best course would be that I should communicate to Government the unanimous sentiment of the meeting and to pray them to reconsider the question and pass such order as will promote the fullest harmony and cordiality of feeling on this great and unique occasion.

9TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Englishman.—In connection with the Royal visit, the Madras Banqueting Hall is being throughout fitted with electric lights and fans. In Government House itself several structural alterations are being made. An installation of electric fans is being set up. Hot water installations are also being laid on to the baths. The Royal apartments will be furnished with an entirely new suite of furniture, which has been ordered. The whole of the Royal party will be accommodated in Government House. The entourage which will join the party on their arrival in India, will be placed in a camp pitched close by in the Government House compound. The resources of the Governor's fine stables have been strengthened by the supply of horses from the Remount Depot at Hossur and the Bodyguard will also be increased by an additional half squadron from the 30th Madras Lancers.

A public meeting was held to-day in the Court House, Secunderabad, presided over by Major Levers, Cantonment Magistrate, to concert measures for celebrating the visit in February next of Their Royal Highnesses. As the party will only drive through the cantonment on their way to the parade ground, it has been decided to decorate the route thence from the Hussain Sanger tank to the parade on a grand scale. A large sum of money was subscribed on the spot and an influential committee was formed to carry out the details. In addition to the grand stands which will be erected for the school children, there will be a fete for the latter.

Evening News.—The arrival to-day of the Prince of Wales in Bombay upon the birthday of his father, the King-Emperor, means to him this, that he sets foot in a country which will one day be his own, greater in extent than the whole of Europe, excluding Russia. It embraces $1\frac{1}{2}$ million miles and a population of 295,000,000. Of his own countrymen the Prince will find there fewer than 100,000; while his language is spoken by few more than a quarter of a million. Of native languages there are scores, and twenty-three of them are the tongues of not less than one million people each. Hindi and Bengali alone claim respectively sixty-one millions and forty-five millions.

The romance of this visit will, of course, appeal to the imagination of the Prince, as was the case when his father was there. When his suite saw King Edward dancing in the Dewan Khas, the private hall of audience of the old Emperors of India, then they realized what this visit meant. Here it was that the last King of Delhi underwent his trial after the Mutiny. Seated upon an old bedstead throne, he heard judgment passed upon him—sentence of banishment to the Andamans. And as he listened, his eye was fixed upon the legend, inscribed in Persian upon the walls, "If there is a Heaven on earth, it is this, it is this!"

And as the grand ball, scintillating with the lights which flashed upon its jewelled marble walls, rang with the sound of the music to which the future King-Emperor danced, it occurred to thoughtful old "Crimes" Simpson as he watched: "To realise the significance of this incident one ought to imagine the conquest of Great Britain by the Great Mogul, and the son of that potentate visiting London, and holding a Durbars in Buckingham Palace. That would be the counterpart of what takes place here to-night."

Indian Daily News.—Sir,—Will you kindly give me the indulgence of a few lines in your next publication. I have noticed in the issue of your paper of the 7th instant, that the Madras Municipality have generously voted Rs. 10,000 to feed the poor and treat the school children on the occasion of the Royal visit.

Our City Fathers have not been behind hand in showing their loyalty, for as everyone knows the city is being brushed and cleaned up; there will be fireworks, illuminations, addresses, and presentations, but not a single Commissioner has apparently given the large number of the poor of this city a single thought. Do they not think for a moment that a "poor heart has its joys sometimes," and that the poor having been on the lookout for some charity at the hands of the City Fathers ever since the moment the joyous news was cabled out of the Royal tour; the rich and the middle class will try and attend to all the sports, theatres, and other celebrations of the city; can the poor afford it? Are they to be forgotten because they are unfortunately the poor? "No, certainly not," their cause will appeal to the hearts of our liberal Commissioners, whose Chairman is a noted figure for his deeds of charity. Let me suggest something to help towards this kind act. The Commissioners should vote a certain sum of money to be distributed as follows:—

(a) A certain sum to be allotted for the purchase of native sweets to be given to each man, woman or child, as they exit from a rope enclosure on the maidan.

(b) Let each parish priest be allowed a rupee per head for each member of a family to receive at the door of their respective churches a hamper of fresh meat, vegetables, etc.

(c) Let the children of the different schools be accommodated on the maidan, and all together at a given time on the arrival of the Royal visitors, sing the National Anthem, and "God bless the Prince of Wales," the military bands being in attendance.

(d) A certain sum to be sent to the Lady Superioress to treat the little ones in their own schools.

(e) The students of all the native schools be also invited to take part in the festivities on the maidan.

(f) The evening to be concluded with illuminations and fireworks.

This sort of celebration will not only be welcomed and enjoyed by all, but will be a lasting memento of the visit of our present Prince and Princess, our future King and Queen.

Indian Daily News.—Although similar as far as views of ancient monuments are concerned, yet there is a most marked difference in the programme observed during the visit of the Prince of Wales in 1876 and that of 1905 to that most interesting of Indian cities—Agra. The usual arrival (on Saturday, 16th December) and Municipal address and reply; then a reception, in camp of ceremonial visits from Central India Chiefs commence the functions. In the evening there will be a garden party with its attendant free and easy accessories. The next day being Sunday the Royal couple will go to church and then take an afternoon drive to the Taj. The Royal visit in 1876 compares very favourably with the present programme. Then, the Prince of Wales was accorded a truly gorgeous reception and escorted to the camp pitched on the old ground whereon the cavalry action was fought on the morning of Greathed's arrival with the relieving force from Delhi. Dr. Russell, the historiographer of the tour, describes the procession from the Railway station to the camp as one of "truly oriental pomp." Sir John Strachey apparently was well aware of the singular uses of the elephant for processional purposes, and the elephant procession then formed—the Prince himself seated on the leading elephant—was one of the most striking displays of the tour. It was a coup de théâtre well conceived and admirably executed. Later, Sir John and Lady Strachey held a magnificent levée at the Dewan Khas in the Agra Fort in 1876, at which most of the Central India Chiefs were received by His Royal Highness. Then came that lovely night at the Taj Mahal. The peerless mausoleum was visited under the most favourable conditions imaginable. Then, too, the placid bosom of the Jumna was gemmed, as it were, with tiny boats of earthen ware, large as a coffee cup, bearing their cargoes of oil and cotton-wick, which multiplied their fires in the mirror of the waters of the river. It formed an effective display of weird interest. Such a display was unequalled for magnificence, and was pronounced as one of the sights which His Royal Highness could never hope to see again. The visit to the Fort, on December 18th, during the present tour will be made before breakfast, after which return visits will be made to the Native Chiefs. After lunch the unveiling of the Queen's statue will conclude the ceremonial part of the Agra visit. On the 19th a drive to Fatipur Sikri will doubtless be enjoyed by the Royal visitors with the sights of its fallen greatness. Secundra does not appear in the programme, though it may be the subject of a drive. The last day will be a quiet one, which may be utilized by a visit to the Convent and Catholic schools which have been of great benefit to Agra. The Dufferin Hospital and other evidences of meritorious useful work may be brought to the notice of the Princess while the Prince is out shooting. On the 21st the Royal party will leave for Gwalior where the Maharajah of Gwalior will doubtless be responsible for the good time his guests will have during Christmas. On the day after Christmas Lucknow will welcome its future King and Queen. The usual Municipal Address of welcome and reply will initiate the ceremonials in the capital of Oudh, after which the drive, escorted by the Oudh Light Horse and Royal Dragoons, to Government House closes the programme of the arrival. After breakfast visits will be received from the Nawab of Rampore of whom better accounts now appear to throw a mantle over the follies of his youth, and who, it is hoped, will in future render a more satisfactory account of his stewardship. The Raja of Tehri will also be received. The Taluqdars of Oudh, whose number was legion and has since 1876 been considerably modified by casualties in various ways, will show up in their velvet hats and aigrettes and gorgeous coats and doubtless will impress the Royal guests by their variety in taste. The usual Taluqdars' fête has been eliminated from the programme and will be substituted by an evening party at Hoosemabad by the Europeans of Lucknow. The Royal guests would, we are certain, have preferred an oriental display such as the Taluqdars' fête which is always one of the events of a big visit to Oudh. A dinner which is described as "state" will be given at the Chutter Munzil Club on the evening of the 27th. The next day is apportioned for a "drive in cantonments." The Prince would have, like his illustrious father, preferred a pigstick at Unao perhaps. However the visit concludes with a drive. And then the Royal party come south to the capital, where a period of fête and gorgeous display will await them.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—The Onlooker of October 21st writes:—The visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India will, amongst other things, go a long way towards dispelling any unfavourable impressions which may have arisen in the native mind in consequence of the conditions of our new treaty with Japan.

The strength of our position in India lies very greatly in the fact that we have caught and tamed its fighting races, and that they have fought not only against us, but shoulder to shoulder with our own troops. . . . Since therefore they see nothing derogatory to our honour in the fact that we are ready to avail ourselves of their own services in the field, it is not likely that our prestige will suffer in their estimation because we have added yet another eastern race of proved fighting ability to the sum of our military resources. The somewhat antiquated fears which have been expressed on this head need not be taken very seriously, and any modicum of truth which they may contain will be effectually dispelled by the bodily and visible presence of the heir of the great Kaiser-I-Hind. For it is very certain that the pomp and circumstance of kings is one of the most potent influences which can be brought to bear on the native mind. That, of course, is why we surround the King's representative in India with attributes of power far surpassing those of any other of our great pro-Consuls, and superior even to those of almost all the reigning Sovereigns of the world. From this point of view it is doubly satisfactory that Lord Curzon is to remain in India long enough to receive the Prince and Princess of Wales. If he had left the scene of his memorable rule on the very eve of their arrival it would have been universally felt that he had been deprived of an honour which was rightfully his. And the millions of natives over whom he has borne sway for so long would inevitably have concluded that he, the Kaiser-I-Hind's representative, had been intentionally slighted by the King and his Government. And that, it is scarcely necessary to say would have been a grave misfortune, since it is of the highest importance that the Viceroy's position should always be one of unassailable dignity. It was the neglect of that consideration which rendered so damaging the publication of the correspondence between Lord Curzon and Lord Kitchener, since it revealed the two great rulers as ordinary men, possessed of ordinary mortal weaknesses, and if the Government failed on that occasion they have at least done their best to repair the harm by removing all possible grounds for the belief that the Viceroy could by any possibility be going home in disgrace. . . . It would be well if during the progress of the coming ceremonies we were to begin to take a greater interest than is our wont in the welfare of our—great dependency. It is, with all its faults, a fine work that we are doing in India. But our personal share in it, the share of those who stay at home, is for the most part limited to the comparatively passive work of sending some of our sons to take part in its administration. It is our glory that those whom we send are our best. Soldiers and civilians they are of the most zealous and most energetic that we possess. But there our part in the enterprise is at an end, and we are content to remain in a state of ignorance of the difficulties and trials which they have to face, as well as of the many problems connected with our rule.

The visit of the Prince of Wales to India would, under any circumstances, be an event of the first imperial importance, but the fact that the Princess is accompanying him on the journey that begins to-day enormously add to its significance and its value.

Not only is it the first time that the wife of the Heir-Apparent has visited her husband's future Eastern possessions, but the Duchess of Connaught, while in India, having very rightly restricted her activities to the district included in the Duke of Connaught's military command, the approaching tour will be the first occasion on which a Princess of the Royal house of England will have been seen by the various peoples of England's greatest dependency.

To-day the Princess is called upon to face an ordeal which has been undergone by so many wives of the public servants of the Crown who have to choose between the claims of husbands in far-off lands and the care of children at home. Although the separation from her children is but temporary, the Princess makes no secret that she feels it very keenly, the more so that the elder Princes are now of an age to really feel the loss, which on the occasion of the Colonial tour they were too young to appreciate.

From a public point of view, at any rate, the Princess has chosen wisely and well to accompany her husband through the series of brilliant adventures which await them and to take her part of the homage and honours and greeting which will be so lavishly bestowed and so splendidly expressed.

And it is certain that when the day of home-coming dawns the Princess may look for an enthusiastic welcome home from her fellow-countrymen, a welcome which will not merely be the expression of the real affection in which she is held, but an acknowledgment of the patriotism that has caused her to put aside her personal feelings and to leave her boys and girl for months, to do her part in cementing the ties that bind India to the English throne.

Madras Mail.—One of the most attractive and picturesque features of the forthcoming ceremonies in Bombay will be the Takhta Taus, which is the name of the throne intended for the use of the Princess of Wales at the Indian Ladies' entertainment. The Takhta has been designed by Mrs. Mohammed Ali Rogay, Lady Cawasji Jehangir and Begum M. J. Nasrulla Khan after the pattern of the Peacock Throne of the Emperor Shah Jehan on which his Imperial Consort, Empress Arjuman Banoo Begum Mumtaz Mahal, used to sit on ceremonial occasions. It is lined with gold cloth. The peacocks are made of gold embroidery and are of the very best Surat workmanship. Two peacocks are on each side, right and left, and three behind the throne.

There is a canopy which is lined with gold cloth and frilled and adorned with a crown most beautifully worked. Takhta will also be covered with valuable gold cloth. It will be draped most artistically and picturesquely under the able supervision of Lady Cavasji Jehangir, who has spared no pains to make the Indian Ladies' party a great success. At the request of Nawabzada and Begum M. J. Nasrullah Khan the Takhta is being constructed by them and will be lent to the Committee for the occasion. Afterwards it will be preserved as a priceless heirloom in the family of His Highness the Nawab of Saschin, nephew of Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan.

Morning Post.—To-day the Prince and Princess of Wales will land at Bombay, one of the fairest cities in the East, and will receive from her citizens the enthusiastic welcome which they have been preparing for them for many months. Just thirty years have rolled on since King Edward VII, as Heir-Apparent of Queen Victoria, made a tour through India and by his suavity and unaffected kindliness did much to give life to the feeling of personal loyalty which was created by his Imperial mother, the first Sovereign who had since the dawn of history ruled over all India. The natives had never seen their Sovereign, but her private and personal virtues became known and enthroned Her Majesty in the hearts of many millions of her distant subjects. Their feeling of affection for the Royal House was much strengthened by the gracious courtesy of the Duke of Connaught and his Royal Consort during the time His Royal Highness commanded a division in Bengal and the Bombay Army. Men, the fortunes of whose houses have been carved by the sword, were impressed at the sight of a son of their Sovereign exiling himself from his native land to command a branch of the Indian Army. To an Indian Prince there is but one profession—the profession dignified by danger. In many a distant home seated of an evening around the village fire the Sepoy on furlough told his companions with pride about the great Queen's son, who could address them in their own language. The Prince and Princess of Wales will no doubt deepen the spirit of personal attachment for the Royal House which prevails among men of all classes and creeds in India. From the day he lands to the day he leaves, the Prince of Wales will see much to interest him and much to afford him subject for serious and earnest reflection. He is about to travel through the length and breadth of one of the most deeply interesting and one of the finest countries in the world. Any monarch might be justly proud of having as subjects the toiling millions of the vast and varied Continent of India, for a more patient, simple, kindly, law-abiding set of men do not exist. To increase the moral and material progress of these toiling millions must ever be the first and chief aim of our rule. We have given them what they never had before, security and personal freedom and the prosperity and comfort which accompany them. But we must not be blind to the poverty and misery which must always result from an economic revolution. The old industries are perishing under the stress of foreign commerce. We must beware of the hardship caused by the perfection of our revenue system. We must free the yeoman from the bondage of the usurer by teaching him to read and write. The vital principle of the Government of India has been, and must always be, a perpetual striving towards improvement. It has a right to take pride to itself for having accomplished so much when we remember the Empire has grown with the rapidity of the Prophet's gourd.

A little more than two centuries have elapsed since Mr. Humphrey Cook and his men took possession of Bombay in the King's name, and it then was a pestilential swamp containing a few fishermen's huts; it is now one of the most beautiful and stately cities in the world. The five days given to Bombay will be full of interest. There are many sights to be seen, many noble institutions which owe their existence to the generosity of the native citizens to be visited. The palatial Home for Sailors, whose foundation-stone was laid by His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, was the gift of a great loyal Feudatory. The University Hall and the University Library, with its adjacent lofty, graceful clock tower, built after the form of the Campanile of Giotto at Florence, were constructed from funds supplied by a Hindu millionaire in the days of his prosperity. The native quarter, with its bazar, is the most picturesque in the East, especially as regards its population. Here all races have met: Persians in huge shaggy hats and British sailors in white; the strong, lithe, coal-black Afredee seaman; tall, martial Rajputs; peaceful Parsees in cherry-coloured silk trousers; Chinamen with the traditional pigtail; swaggering Mussulmans in turbans of green; sleek Marwarces with high-fitting, parti-coloured turbans of red and yellow. The richness and variety of the outlines of the narrow and curving, but not crooked, streets take hold of the imagination. The manytinted houses, the colours white, yellow, and red, the luxurious or wild carvings lavished on the pillars of wood, the balconies, the rosettes of the windows, and the architraves of the roofs give an air of refinement, of subtle grace, which defies description or criticism.

From Bombay the Prince of Wales will proceed to Indore, situated on the great plateau of Central India, 1,800 feet above the sea. And refreshing will be the change from the languid air which swoons around the coast at Bombay to the cool, crisp breezes of Central India. In Central India two Mahratta military leaders, Scindia of Gwalior and Holkar of Indore, alternately held the pre-eminence. After the Marquis of Hastings had crushed the wandering bandits of Central India and brought to a successful close the Pindari War (1817), which gave a death blow to Mahratta supremacy, Scindia and Holkar both became protected Native States, and Indore, Holkar's capital, was selected as the headquarters of the Agent to the Governor-General for India. It is a modern town, of no architectural or archæological interest. From the capital of the great Mahratta Chief the Prince will proceed to Udaipur, the capital of the oldest and proudest of the Rajput Chiefs, men who claim their descent from the sun or the moon, and whose ancestors have for ages exercised sovereign power. The prospect from the terrace of the palace at Udaipur is one of the most perfect in the world. A valley bounded by violet hills, a city of white marble on the margin of a silver lake. From Udaipur the Royal party will proceed to Jaipur, and during their stay of two days will pay a visit to the ancient capital at Amber, a city of ancient temples and ruined palaces—a city of the dead. The Royal fortress built on the side of a hill, with its massive walls, fairy kiosks, and slender balconies, was a fit home for knights of old.

From Rajputana the Prince goes to Lahore, the capital of the Panjab, and from thence to Peshawar, our northern outpost, which is the great landmark of the strength of our power. Near that important strategic centre, Rawalpindi, he will witness the manoeuvres of a large force, European and native, of the Indian Army. He will see the British soldier, the Sikh, the Afghan, and the Gurkha drawn up side by side: drilled and disciplined soldiers eager and ready for any contingency. The bond which holds these mercenaries together is respect for their officers, loyalty, and belief in British prestige. It is criminal folly not to supply our native troops with the number of European officers necessary to lead them to victory, and it is not wise to proclaim from the housetops that we are afraid of any Power. The Sikh, the Gurkha, and the Afghan do not fear the Russian.

A day will be spent at Amritsar, the cradle of the Sikh faith. At Amritsar will be seen the Golden Temple, which stands upon a platform of marble in the midst of a marble lakelet. When the Muhammadans were hunting the Sikhs like wild beasts bands of Sikh horsemen would make a dash through the Muhammadan troops in order to reach Amritsar and have a bath in the sacred tank. After leaving Lahore the Prince of Wales proceeds from Upper India to Calcutta.

At Delhi he will see the memorials of the Great Siege. At Delhi and Agra the Prince will see some of the most beautiful buildings in the world erected by the splendid line of Emperors to whose Throne his House has succeeded. From Agra the Prince will pay a visit to Gwalior, the capital of Scindia's wide dominions. There are few places better worth visiting on account of its fine architecture of the best Hindu period.

There is also the historic fortress which stands bold and definite, built on a block of basalt capped with sandstone, rising three hundred feet above the plain. The early English travellers used to speak of it as the Gibraltar of the East. For the Prince and Princess of Wales Scindia has arranged an elephant procession on a large scale, a barbaric display full of colour on account of the rich trappings. The journey from Gwalior to Calcutta will be broken by three days at Lucknow.

There is no more sacred spot for Englishmen than the Residency Gardens, over the churchyard which lies below. Beneath the shade of some wide-spreading trees there are a multitude of graves around which are growing bright flowers, and the paths are radiant with roses. The inscriptions tell us the spot contains the sacred dust of heroes. The buildings of Lucknow illustrate the architectural decline of the Moghuls, which was as rapid as their political decline and due to the same causes—an excessive love of mere splendour and show.

It is not by splendour and show our dominion was founded, and it will have to be maintained by very different means. So wrote the chief directors of the East India Company to the great Marquis. He had provoked them by informing them that he had built without their knowledge a palace costing a hundred and fifty thousand pounds. They also drily remarked that his silence on this subject was all the more inexplicable because in one of his despatches he had mentioned an expenditure of eightpence. Bishop Heber, in speaking of the palace that Wellesley built, says it has narrowly missed being a noble structure. It is, however, whatever may be the faults of its details, a splendid pile, and standing on one side of a magnificent green plain it is seen to the greatest advantage from every point of view. It is not its architectural work, but because it has been the residence of a great line of statesmen and rulers that the Viceregal Palace is interesting to every Englishman. In that palace the Prince will see the portrait of Lord Clive, who planted at this Grove of Plassey the Indian Empire as firmly as he plants the stick in the ground. There he can gaze on the calm, intellectual countenance of Hastings, whose daring genius first began to erect the stately fabric of the Empire, and standing in Peer's robes is the proud Wellesley, who continued the mighty work. There is Dalhousie, who crowned the edifice, and Canning, who with patient courage saved it from destruction. During his stay at Calcutta the Prince of Wales will lay the foundation-stone of the Victoria Memorial, which her Indian subjects are about to erect as a monument of their loyal attachment and admiration for the great Empress. Her noblest memorial, however, will always be the Royal Proclamation in which she proclaimed her deep personal concern in the welfare of the Princes and peoples of India.

On the 13th of January the Royal party reaches Rangoon, and thence to Mandalay. The welfare of the people and the safety of the Empire demanded the annexation of Upper Burma.

Though only a quarter of a century has elapsed since Mandalay was captured and the occupation of Upper Burma was followed by violent and concerted outbreaks of robbery and dacoity, complete tranquillity has long since been established.

The people, lightly taxed and well-to-do, are contented with our rule; order and quiet prevails even in remote districts which, under Burman rule, were the permanent centres of rebellion and crime. From Rangoon the Royal party proceed by sea to Madras, which is full of interest to those who take an interest in that romantic tale—the rise of British dominion in India. From Madras the Royal party proceed by rail to Mysore, Bangalore, and Hyderabad. At Mysore the Prince will be the guest of the young Maharaja, who three years ago was installed on coming of age. There never was a wiser and more statesmanlike act than the restoration of Mysore to native rule after its 50 years of British administration by the late Marquis of Salisbury. It proved to the native Princes that the British Government intended to adhere strictly to the Royal Proclamation of 1858, their Magna Charta of independence, as long as they on their part fulfil the obligation of that Charta, which states: "We desire that their, as well as our own subjects, should enjoy that prosperity and that social advancement which can only be secured by internal peace and good government." From Mysore the Prince proceeds to Hyderabad, where he will receive a royal welcome from the Nizam. No Royal House has better profited by English aid than that of Hyderabad, under which we trust the dynasty of the able Turcoman may long flourish in peace.

From Hyderabad the Prince will pay a visit to the wellknown caves of Ellora, and from thence a long railway journey to Benares, the centre of Hindu religious life. After a visit to Simla the Royal party will make a long journey across the Punjab down the Indus Valley to Quetta, the capital of Baluchistan.

They will have left civilisation a century behind. A few years ago the great military cantonment was an ordinary Baluch town. On the 9th of March the Prince and Princess of Wales will sail from Karachi—sixty years ago a small fishing village, now one of the great seaports of our Indian Empire.

Pioneer.—An enlightened Deputy Collector of these Provinces, who has devoted much of his leisure to literary work calculated to make the English better understood by his countrymen, Quazi Azizuddin Ahmed, has brought out in the vernacular at this propitious moment a life of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. There must be thousands of people in India at the present moment desiring to know something of the illustrious visitors who are just reaching the shores of the country, and with education now filtering down below the College stratum, this biography in Urdu and Hindi will just supply their want. The author who has so opportunely set himself to supply the need deserves well of the republic.

Pioneer.—The Viceroy arrived here this morning and was met at Victoria Terminus by Mr. Lamington, the Chief Civil Naval and Military officers, the Consuls and prominent citizens. Beyond receiving and replying to an address from the local Chamber of Commerce to-morrow, His Excellency takes part in no public functions before receiving the Royal visitors. This morning the streets, which are already decorated for the Royal visit, were lined by troops, and His Excellency, escorted by the 10th Squadron Hussars, as well as by his own Bodyguard which arrived here a few days ago, drove by the shortest route to Government House. His Excellency was not looking well and appeared to feel the heat.

Yesterday morning Bombay had its first ceremonial arising out of the Royal visit, as the Viceroy and Lady Curzon arrived, and were received with all due honours. The streets were lined with troops, and there was all the pomp and ceremony which marks the public reception of the Viceroy. But a function of this kind loses some of its characteristic importance and impressiveness when public expectation is raised to the highest pitch on account of the arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales within the next twenty-four hours. All who are to share in the reception of the Royal visitors are now gathered here, and Bombay is besides filled with a multitude of people who will to-morrow crowd the streets in their thousands and give a loyal welcome to Their Royal Highnesses. It is calculated that a hundred thousand persons have flocked into the city within the past week, and the normal population has thus been expanded in a manner that makes every street swarm with life already, and causes the gathering of crowds on the slightest occasion. There are Native Chiefs with their retinues and followers, who bulk largely in the stream of traffic that pours through the thoroughfares; European visitors are everywhere in evidence, while the military camps accommodating the extra troops that have been drafted in for escort and other duties, are visible along the sea face. There have been frequent rehearsals of the reception at the Apollo Bandar and the procession therefrom along the route to Government House, and no sooner do the Cavalry and Artillery appear than crowds of interested spectators line the roads and watch the movements again and again repeated. The 10th Hussars and the 33rd Light Cavalry, with "P" Battery, R. H. A., are already familiar although they are not yet in the full brilliance of their uniforms, khaki only being worn in these rehearsals, so it is also with the Body-guard. The Rajkumar Cadets and the detachment of Kathiawar Imperial Service Cavalry, are to share in the pageant of the Royal procession. When the rumble of guns and the clatter of hoofs is heard public traffic is stopped to some extent, and we get an idea of all that will delight us to-morrow.

Orders have now been issued as to the form which the Royal procession will take, and the following details may be given:—Police Officers will take the lead, followed by two Staff Officers. Then come a squadron of 10th Hussars, with their regimental band; P. Battery and one squadron of the 33rd Cavalry and Kathiawar Imperial Service Cavalry. Following these again will be orderlies and trumpeters preceding.

The Staff of the Western Command and Sir Archibald Hunter, Lieutenant-General Commanding. A troop of the 10th Hussars will come next immediately in front of the carriage in which the Prince and Princess will be seated, the escort being the Governor's body guard and Rajkumar Cadets.

The General Officers Commanding, Poona Division and Bombay and Ahmednagar Brigades, with their Staffs, will follow, then more orderlies and trumpeters, with the Bombay Light Horse and another squadron of the 10th Hussars. These will precede the carriages with the suite of Their Royal Highnesses, and following on will be a troop of the 10th Hussars and a squadron of the 33rd Cavalry.

All this should form a fine military display and the route, probably as far as Crawford Market, will be lined with troops; there will be nothing wanting to give full effect to the procession as a spectacle. The route to be followed is such a long one, passing as it does through part of the native town, that it will be impossible to line the streets throughout with troops, but the cortège will in itself be a brilliant one.

Within the last few days Bombay has given itself over to decoration and a few hours hence the finishing touches will be put to this. One sees new flags and bunting in abundance. Venetian masts and streamers, a few triumphal arches, inscriptions of welcome and loyalty and myriads of tiny coloured lamps and Chinese lanterns, etc., which will be lighted for the illumination to-morrow evening. Some of the narrower streets are spanned by lines of paper flags, while at commanding positions along the route brightly ornamented wooden stands have been erected to accommodate spectators. From the Apollo Bunder to Malabar Point the Prince and Princess will pass through some of the most densely populated parts of the city, and when they will see the teeming life of Bombay in all its varied aspects. Yet again later Their Royal Highnesses will see the other quarters of the city, for the second procession will take place when the Prince lays the foundation stone of the new docks, south of Victoria dock. There will thus be two occasions on which people will have their chance of seeing and welcoming the Royal visitors, and it is certain that the popular welcome will be of the heartiest kind. The whole city is full of expectancy and pleasant anticipation. Mirza Shujaat Ali Khan, Persian Consul-General for India, accompanied by his Secretary, arrived in Bombay yesterday to take part in the reception of His Royal Highness the Prince and Princess of Wales, and drove to the Persian Consulate. The Vice-Consul and representatives of the Persian community received him at the station.

The revised programme of the Royal visit to Calcutta is as follows: December 29th, 4 P.M.:—Public arrival at Prinsep Ghat, presentation of Municipal Address, State processions to Government House; evening, small dinner and levée. 30th Races and dinner with Lieutenant-Governor at Belvedere. 31st attend cathedral service, proceed by river to Barrackpur; return 1st January; parade in the morning and in the afternoon the Prince will attend the University Convocation. The Princess attending a purdah party. In the evening there will be a State banquet at Government House. 2nd—public reception on the Maidan and a reception at Government House; 3rd—garden party at Government House; after dinner a drive through the city to see the illuminations. 4th—the Prince will possibly shoot; dinner at Government House and a State Ball. 5th—lay the foundation stone of the Victoria Memorial Hall; dinner with the Commander-in-Chief. 6th—leave Calcutta at 4 P.M. for Darjeeling.

Rangoon Gazette.—It is announced that Mr. Jacob Sassoon in order to commemorate the Royal visit has offered to build a modern hospital for Europeans in Poona in the compound of the Sassoon Hospital at a cost of about two lakhs. The present Sassoon Hospital has not sufficient accommodation and the authorities have to refuse patients. The present building will be preserved for natives, while the new hospital which Mr. Jacob Sassoon proposes to build will be exclusively for Europeans.

Sir P. M. Mehta in a letter to the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bombay regarding the Corporation meeting held yesterday says: A very strong feeling prevails both in the city and in the Corporation that the omission in the manner above described of representative heads of the Municipality and the city has been considered as a disregard of the importance of the city, and is calculated to seriously wound the feelings of the people. The Corporation feel that the importance of the city as a unit in the administrative divisions of Western India entitles its representative, the President and the Municipal Commissioner, to special marked consideration which no question of ordinary official precedence should be allowed to effect. They also consider that recognition is in no way effected by the fact that the Corporation as a body is to present an address to Their Royal Highnesses. The city claims that among those who receive Their Royal Highnesses the President of the Corporation and Municipal Commissioner should have an equal and prominent position. I may mention that the city's feelings on this matter extend also to the Sheriff, though as he is an officer of Government I do not feel justified in representing his claims. It was unanimously felt at the meeting that no step should be taken that would in any way mar that harmony and good feeling which the city is anxiously determined shall mark the reception of its distinguished visitors. It was, therefore, considered that the best course would be that I should communicate to Government the unanimous sentiment of the meeting and pray them to reconsider the question and pass such orders as will promote the fullest harmony and cordial feeling on this great and unique occasion.

Times of India.—We invite special attention to the following important announcements, because they intimately affect the convenience of all who are taking part in to-day's ceremonies.

The public are informed that unless invited to be present on the occasion of the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay on the 9th November they will not be permitted to approach the Apollo Bunder or its vicinity after 1 p.m.

Holders of white tickets should approach by Church Gate Street, Esplanade Road, and proceed to the shamiana via Apollo Bunder Road.

Holders of pink tickets should approach either by May or Queen's Roads and proceed to the enclosure via Lansdowne Road.

Apollo Bunder Road will be closed at 3-45 p.m. and Lansdowne Road at 4 p.m.

As the Police cannot undertake to call up carriages after the ceremony is finished, ticket holders are advised to bring with them a second syce, who will be in a position to locate the spot at which their carriages have been parked, and be in readiness at the enclosure to call them up when required.

Owing to the limited space at the disposal of the Police for parking purposes, ticket holders are requested to alight and re-enter their carriages with the most despatch.

No motor vehicles will be permitted—

(i) On the occasion of the arrival at the Apollo Bunder of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

(ii) On the occasion of the reception at Government House.

(iii) On the occasion upon which banquets are given at Government House.

In the night of the illuminations, no motor vehicles and no conveyances drawn by bullocks will be permitted.

No fours-in-hand will be permitted at any of the functions during the visit of His Royal Highness.

A Press communiqué from the Bombay Government runs as follows:—

It is requested that all gentlemen will be in their places early this afternoon. Subject to His Royal Highness's commands an endeavour will be made to carry through the programme a quarter of an hour in advance of advertised times so as to allow as much daylight as possible for the progress through the City.

A great number of requests have been received that during the drive of the 10th Their Royal Highnesses' carriage should stop in order to allow communities or societies of members of communities to present flowers. It has been quite impossible to meet all the loyal requests of individuals, but the following has been arranged under the commands of His Royal Highness to do what is possible to meet the wishes of the various communities:—

(1) to stop the carriage at Chowpatty—corner of French Road—where the Hindu community will present bouquets; this is the point nearest the Babulnath Temple;

(2) at Wadia's Agiari in Girgaum Road, where the Parsi community will present their offering;

(3) opposite the Juma Masjid in Shaik Memon Street, where the Sunni Muhommadans will present their offering;

(4) at Masjid Bandar Road near the Mumbadevi Temple, where the Jains and Hindus who reside on that side of the Island will present their offering; and

(5) at Graham's Naka on Chinch Bandar Road, where the Shiah Muhommadans will present their offering;

Bouquets only will be offered.

As two of these halts occur before the cortege reaches the new Princess Street, the Royal cortege will leave Government House at 4 p.m. instead of 4-30 p.m. as notified.

Times of India.—Exactly thirty years ago, when the present King, then Prince of Wales, came to India to make the personal acquaintance of his august mother's loyal subjects in the Indian Empire, the Apollo Bunder, "The Gate of India," was a very different place from what it is at the present day; but be the environments ever so altered the loyalty of those who are privileged to own allegiance to the British Raj in these sunny climes has undergone no alterations, unless it be that the bonds of union have, if that were possible, grown stronger than they were in those comparatively remote days. At that period the European population was not nearly so large as it is now, and Western ideas were then only commencing to take root. It was an open question whether the seed sown would yield a crop of acceptable fruit. There were some, and not a few, who prophesied that the westernising of India would not argue well for the continuity of British prestige. The croakers were wrong.

The Prince of Wales came, he saw and practically conquered. He was the son of England's greatest Queen and the people realised the fact. His reception throughout the country was such that even a Monarch might have envied it. The people liked him; he liked the people; the feeling of esteem and confidence was mutual.

And now his only surviving son, the present Prince of Wales, with his consort, will be amongst us to-day, and it can be safely said that no Royal personage will ever meet with a warmer and more sincerely genuine welcome than that which awaits them both. On all hands there are evidences of the people's pleasure in welcoming the King's direct representative. When King Edward the VII, as Prince of Wales, landed at the Apollo Bunder the preparations for his reception must have impressed him very deeply; but since then Bombay has advanced and with a rapidity that few could have foreseen. To compare the Bunder of then with the Bunder of to-day is about the same as comparing the London of to-day with that which existed a hundred years ago. When King Edward first set foot on the Bunder there was hardly a building on it, whereas to-day there stand upon it some of the finest edifices one would come across on the proverbial "day's march;" for instance the stately Taj Mahal Hotel, the Yacht Club Chambers, Green's spacious restaurant, and the long line of pretty residences contiguous to the Taj. At all times they make an imposing show, but dressed as they are now in a wealth of flags and bunting they present a picture of brightness that does the heart good and makes one declare that "they know how to do these things in India."

And from the Bunder throughout the town the decorations are elaborate. Even the smallest shop-keeper along the line of route to be taken by the illustrious visitors has done his utmost both in the matter of decoration and of illumination.

Only a few hours now remain before the guns announce that His Majesty's ship Renown has taken up her moorings off the Bunder Head. At noon she is expected, but the Royal visitors will not be visible to the general public nearly till five hours later. Still there will be plenty to be seen from the Bunder.

At a quarter past three Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Curzon will embark in a steam launch and go on board the vessel to welcome the Royal guests. Fifteen minutes later, His Excellency Lord Lamington, in company with the Chief Justice, the Bishop of Bombay, and the members of His Excellency's Council will leave on a similar mission. Then, after a wait of three-quarters of an hour, which will not seem long seeing how much there will be to admire on the Bunder Head in the way of dainty toilettes, imposing uniforms and native gorgeousness, Their Royal Highnesses will come ashore. There will be plenty of opportunity to have a "good look" at them, for all the Chiefs and high Government officials have to be present. When this has been gone through, the Royal footsteps will be directed to that portion of enclosure where the Civic Fathers are to be assembled and here the time-honoured address will be read by the President of the Corporation.

As is customary on such occasions a copy of this will have been sent to His Royal Highness so that he may have plenty of time to consider his reply thereto. After replying, the Prince and Princess will enter their carriages and start the journey to Government House, Malabar Point. The route to be taken by the procession is along Rampart Row, Hornby Road, past the Crawford Market, down Esplanade Cross-road through Kalbadevi Road, Bhandi Bazaar, Parel Road, Grant Road, Gamdevi Road, and Walkeshwar Road. A good part of the route will be lined by troops and the huge crowds of all kinds and conditions of men, women, and children along it will give Their Royal Highnesses a chance of realising how heterogeneous is the population King Edward so successfully rules. It is hardly too much to say that almost every nationality under the sun will be represented on this unique occasion.

After dinner to-night Lord Curzon will take his departure. To-morrow His Royal Highness will have more than enough to keep him busy. At half-past ten the Native Chiefs will start paying their visits, but of course this will not be of much interest to the general public. Their Native Highnesses will quietly drive up to Government House, be conducted to the Royal presence, make their "salaams" and depart. At 4-30 Their Royal Highnesses will have to start out for a drive throughout the native town. During the drive the Prince will open a new street and subsequently drive through the People's Fête on the maidan, opposite the Municipal offices. The rest of the day will be filled up by a banquet, a levée at the Secretariat and a Purdah party at Government House.

On Saturday, when the ordinary mortal looks forward to enjoying the luxury of a half holiday, His Royal Highness will find the day almost too short for him. After breakfast he will have to make a round of calls on the Chiefs who paid their respects to him on the previous day. In the afternoon the Prince is due to lay the foundation stone of the New Museum, the site of which is on that magnificent piece of open land in front of the P. and O. Offices. From this function he will visit the Dockyard and Flagship, both of which will appeal to him, knowing how warmly he is attached to all that concerns the Navy. While His Royal Highness is doing this the Princess will proceed to the Town Hall where the Native ladies of Bombay will present her with an address. The long drive back to Malabar Point will be followed by a dinner, after which there will be a reception of Native Chiefs and a general reception.

The next day will be Sunday, and the only items on the official programme for that day are a drive which has not been definitely fixed and attendance at Divine Service at the Cathedral in the evening, to which the same condition does not apply.

On Monday the Prince will spend the morning in completing his return visits to the Native Chiefs and in the afternoon he lays the foundation stone of the new dock—one of the most important public works ever inaugurated in Bombay. A visit to the Yacht Club probably follows, and at night Their Royal Highnesses will visit the Byculla Club, where a Ball has been arranged in their honour.

The morning of Tuesday will be devoted to interviews.

In the afternoon the Prince and Princess make a trip to the Elephanta Caves, and at night take their departure from Bombay. This will be a great night in Bombay—the Dewali on a scale never dreamed of. Their Royal Highnesses will drive through the illuminated streets on their way to the station, and judging from the preparations that have been made they will see nothing finer in the way of illuminations during the whole of their tour through India. Every class of illuminant is being employed and the variety of structural lines will make up a picture that will be rarely if ever witnessed in any other part of the Globe.

Times of India.—The album to be presented by the Parsi, Hindu and Mahomedan ladies of Bombay to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales on Saturday next has been despatched by Messrs. Barton Son and Company of Bangalore. The souvenir contains forty water-coloured types of Indian beauty, as well as illuminated addresses in several of the native languages, and the signatures of the donors, running in all to about sixty pages, eighteen by twelve inches. The cover is of solid silver, the front depicting the Princess of Wales with her Ladies-in-waiting receiving a deputation of Indian ladies. In the left hand top corner there is a miniature view of Bombay harbour, depicting the Renown steaming in, and the corresponding corner shows the Town Hall of Bombay, where the reception is to be held. The two bottom corners contain two embossed coats-of-arms in fine gold and the centre space is devoted to the following inscription:—"Presented to Her Royal Highness Victoria May, Princess of Wales, by the Ladies of Bombay, 11th November 1905." The reverse cover is ornamented by a border displaying the Shamrock, the thistle, the rose and the lotus and the Prince of Wales's plumes in silver and gold. The centre is frosted and contains in floral type the words "Reminiscences of Bombay in 1905." The backing is of silver also ingeniously contrived to represent Russia leather.

Times of India.—Another informal meeting of the members of the Bombay Municipal Corporation was held, yesterday afternoon, in the Municipal Council Hall, to consider the reply of the Corporation with reference to the representation of the Corporation against the omission of the name of the President from the list of gentlemen who are to receive Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their landing at the Apollo Bunder this afternoon. The Hon'ble Sir Pherozeshah M. Mehta was cheered as he entered the hall and also when he rose to address the meeting.

Sir Pherozeshah said that he was very glad to be able to inform the Corporation that the representation which he, in consultation with the Commissioner, had made to the Government had been met with the most generous response. (Hear, hear.) He might inform them that he had a talk with the Hon'ble Mr. Edgerley about the matter, who very frankly and openly explained to him all the circumstances in consequence of which the notification objected to was issued, and on looking at all the papers he was convinced that nothing could have been remoter from the intention of the Government than to pass in the slightest degree any slight or slur on the Corporation. He was glad to say that the Government fully recognised the position of the Corporation in the city. (Hear, hear.) Their idea in regard to this matter was to work up the occasion in such a way that—although opinions might differ on the point—the Corporation would be the crown in the whole affair. But while intentions and wishes might be of that character it happened that sometimes when a change was suddenly made, it was difficult to explain it to a number of people and to remove the impression which under these circumstances a measure of that sort might well be calculated to produce.

The Government had fully recognised that, and they pointed it out in their reply, as it was pointed out to himself. Their intention was to give the Corporation an exceedingly suitable place in the whole arrangement. They were very willing and it was a pleasure to them to be able to do anything to remove any misunderstanding which might exist on a subject of this character. That was a very satisfactory explanation, and he was of opinion that the Corporation had been treated with a liberality and broad-mindedness such as they had always received from His Excellency the Governor and from the members of his Government. (Hear, hear.) He hoped the Corporation would consider that the way in which this matter had ended was one of the happiest kind. The visit of a Prince of Wales was an event which occurred once in a quarter of century, and he was sure that whatever might have been the result of their action in this matter the city would have greeted Their Royal Highnesses with a loyalty, enthusiasm and cordiality which had always marked its reception of the Royal Princes. (Applause.) He thought the citizens of Bombay would recognise the liberal spirit in which their feelings had been treated in this matter. He for one after having gone through all the facts was convinced that no intentional slur had ever been meant, and he thought that the Corporation and the city might well congratulate themselves on the liberal and generous manner in which they had been dealt with by the Government. (Applause.)

The President then read the following extracts from the letter of the Chief Secretary to Government in reply to the Corporation's representation:

"I am to say that it appears to His Excellency the Governor in Council that your letter has been written under a complete misapprehension of the idea which the function arranged for the landing of Their Royal Highnesses was intended to embody, and consequently of the place assigned to the Corporation and its President therein. There has not as yet been time to fully consider your previous letter to the acknowledgment of which you refer, and the notification embodying the programme for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales had been approved and settled quite independently of the receipt of that letter. I am only to say in this particular connection that the precedent of 1875 had been most carefully considered in deciding what would be appropriate on the present occasion. It was obviously, in the changed circumstances of the city, an entirely unsuitable precedent to follow, and any idea of a landing in the dockyard with its relatively limited accommodation was rejected in favour of utilizing the fine open space lying behind the Apollo Bunder.

"In passing to an explanation of the particular arrangements considered most suitable on the present occasion, I am to fully accept your assurance that the Corporation recognise that it could not be the wish of Government to minimise in any way the important position of the President, the Municipal Commissioner or the Sheriff. So far from any idea of that kind being amongst the motives of Government, it is on the contrary the fact that they have sought, at a considerably increased expenditure, to provide the worthiest setting that the city can offer for the reception and manifestation of the welcome accorded to Their Royal Highnesses by the public of Bombay and their constituted representatives.

"I am to say that His Excellency the Governor in Council most fully agrees that the consideration to be accorded to the representatives of the city as such is in no way to be governed by questions of official precedence, but they cannot follow the Corporation in their view that their desire to present an address on such an occasion does not affect the question of what the arrangements must be. In the experience of Government, the whole character of the ceremonial is altered by acceding to such a desire expressed by the Corporation.

"With the ordinary procedure that is followed when the Corporation desire to present an address you are of course acquainted. Presentations are made of certain officials, foreign Consular officers and Native Chiefs, and the Personage then enters a special enclosed part of the Shamiana where he is received by the President and Members of the Corporation and where the address is read. The audience on ordinary occasions is necessarily of the most limited character. What has been done on the present occasion is not in any way to alter the ordinary sequence of the reception, but merely to limit the official presentations and so to lengthen the entrance to that special enclosure as to secure that the President and Corporation may receive Their Royal Highnesses and read their address in the presence of thousands of those fellow citizens whose representatives they are, and as the central figures of a scene probably more impressive than any public function of the kind which has hitherto been carried through in Bombay."

Mr. Jehangir B. Petit asked if another Government Resolution would be issued rectifying the mistake.

The President said the result of the representation was that the President, the Commissioner and the Sheriff had been invited to the Bunder to receive Their Royal Highnesses. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. D. G. Padiye said that the attention of the Government should be drawn to the fact that by the present arrangements the Corporation would not find a place in the pavilion as had hitherto been the case. There was a strong feeling among the public about this. He hoped that in future the Corporation would not be taken out from the pavilion. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. MacDonald suggested that a letter might be sent thanking the Government for dealing with the Corporation's representation in the manner it had done.

The matter was then dropped and the proceedings terminated.

Times of India.—In connection with Royal visit to Madras the banqueting hall is being throughout fitted with electric lights and fans and the space in front of banqueting hall is being lengthened to admit of carriage traffic being arranged with facility. It is estimated that the attendance at Royal levée will bring together a far larger attendance than has ever been witnessed in Madras for many years.

Government House was last year fitted with an electric light installation and is now being fitted with electric fans. Hot water installations are also being laid on to baths, etc. The interior is being redone thoroughly and several alterations being made. Royal apartments are being made comfortable to accommodate the whole of Royal party inside Government House compound.

10TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Daily Chronicle.—The advent of the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay to-day found the city in a state of unparalleled enthusiasm. Despite the fact that since King Edward's visit here, thirty years ago, the city has declined from the second place in the Empire to being only third in point of size, just at the present moment the plague is in abeyance, the autumn harvest has been good, and trade is highly prosperous, while there are no causes of political friction in existence.

When the Renown arrived in harbour she was received by a procession of warships, all gaily decked with flags in honour of the King's birthday. The brilliant sky and deep-blue sea set off to perfection the sombre colours of the warships, diversified by the brown wing-like sails of innumerable fishing boats, come to see the spectacle. The Viceroy and Lady Curzon proceeded at once on board the Renown to welcome the Prince and Princess. The Royal party then landed on the Apollo Bunder, where a platform had been erected for the accommodation of the native chiefs of India, the heads of the Civil Service, and the Viceroy's Body-guard. Facing the dais prepared for the Royal party were rows of chairs for the accommodation of the public, with the members of the Corporation in front.

The first to welcome the Prince, as he set foot on shore, was Sir Partab Singh, the well-known ruler of Idar, the mirror of Rajput chivalry, who attended in his character of Aide-de-Camp to the King. Amongst the other chiefs present were the Maharaja of Kolhapur and the Nawab of Junagadh, the premier chiefs of the Bombay Presidency. All the chiefs were attired in the most gorgeous robes. The Prince, who was wearing a white naval uniform, with the blue Star of India ribbon across it, looked remarkably fit, bronzed and healthy, while the Princess also wore a white frock trimmed with the Star of India blue. Lord Curzon, who accompanied the Prince ashore, looked ill and worn. He walked with a stick, and has lost much of his robust bearing.

After listening to the Corporation address of welcome, the Prince delivered a speech which was sonorously delivered, and created a great impression, particularly the passage foreshadowing the visit of future Princes to India, while the references to Queen Victoria and King Edward were received with the greatest respect.

The six-mile drive from the Apollo Bunder to Government House was one long triumph. Bombay has been called a city of parks and palaces, and its wide streets and great open spaces lend themselves admirably to such an occasion of public display. The Gothic architecture of the public buildings was set off with long ropes of flags, and shields and trophies of all kinds, while flags floated from every pinnacle of the city.

The roadway was crowded with dense masses of natives in all the colours of the rainbow, the scarlet cotton of the working-women being set off by the brilliant silks of the Parsi ladies. Bodies of school children and great masses of mill hands marched to important positions on the route. Tens of thousands of people had come in from the surrounding districts during the night, and hundreds of thousands of spectators crammed every balcony. The native town was packed, and Bhendi Bazaar was never so full before or so enthusiastic.

The ordinary attitude of a native crowd in this country is one of grave respectful apathy. Viceroy and Governor rarely receive a cheer as they thunder past; but the Asiatic can be stirred by a sentiment of personal loyalty, and this was clearly shown on the present occasion, as also on that of King Edward's visit. As the imposing cavalcade of cavalry and artillery swept by, deafening cheers were given for the Prince and Princess, and it would be impossible for their reception to be more loyal and successful.

The city is wholly given up to holiday to-night. To-day was officially declared a public holiday, and Saturday and Monday as well. The streets are alive with people, and are brilliantly illuminated, but the official illuminations are not due until Tuesday. The frank bearing of the Prince and the gracious manner of the Princess have created a deep impression on the people of this city.

Daily Mail.—No lustre of wealth and ornament which the loyalty of India can furnish was wanting in the welcome of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

A picture of the blended imperialism of East and West was unfolded to Their Royal Highnesses as They passed from the Bay through the thronged streets to Government House. Princes formed their escort, and men and women of many creeds, castes, and colours were their heralds.

Booming of guns proclaimed to the expectant city the approach of H.M.S. Renown. Moving to her anchorage on the broad sunlit Bay, she awaited the arrival of the Naval Commander-in-Chief, Rear-Admiral Poë, the first to greet Their Royal Highnesses and learn the fortunes of the voyage. The passage was calm, though hot. All was well on board.

Three hours passed, and the Viceroy embarked amid the thunder of a Royal salute. Leaning on a stick, accompanied by Lady Curzon, he went on board. He was received graciously, with a cordiality not unmingled with regret that to-day should be the eve of his departure from the Empire which he ruled so wisely and so well.

Another interval, and Lord Lamington, the Governor, attended by the Chief Justice, the Bishop, and the members of his Council, mounted the gangway. Formal greetings over, all save Lord and Lady Curzon returned to the shore.

Meanwhile the city waited, and every moment added new colour and animation. Upon the embankment overlooking the Bay stood a pavilion. In the grateful shade of this rich canopy was a gleaming array of Princes, Chiefs, British and native officials, civil, naval, and military.

Rajah and Nawab brought each the wealth of his treasure-house, and clothed himself in magnificence. Jewel-woven gold and silver made radiant their many-tinted splendour, and cast a shadow of eclipse over consuls and civilians.

Here, too, were the City Commissioners headed by the Mayor, who claimed, on behalf of the city, a precedence that was denied him. On either side of this group were ladies who, from a distance, looked like many-coloured tulips.

Soon after four, guns once more shook the warm air as a pinnacle flying the Royal Standard drew near. Preceded by the Viceroy, the Prince stepped ashore, to be welcomed by Sir Partab Singh, resplendent in turban and tunic of many colours; Lord Lamington, Rear-Admiral Poë, and General Hunter. Saluted by the guard of honour, the procession moved under the canopy, where Lord Lamington presented the Princes in the order of their precedence.

Clad in white, with the blue ribbon of the Order of the Star of India, His Royal Highness was in striking contrast by simplicity to the glowing splendours of the Chiefs who saluted him with Oriental gravity. Moving to a crimson dais, in company with the Viceroy and Lady Curzon, the Prince and Princess received a loyal address of welcome from the hands of the Mayor, to whom a suitable reply was made.

Entering a landau, with scarlet-coated outriders, Their Royal Highnesses set out for Government House, the Viceregal party taking another route in order that the Prince might have precedence.

The procession could not be matched for colour and form beyond the bounds of India. Headed by a Body-guard in dark turbans and tunics, the carriage passed through crowded streets. With the Prince and Princess was Sir Walter Lawrence, than whom no man is better qualified to explain the significance of the scene and the multitudinous types that make the Empire of India.

Behind the landau rode an escort of Princes, and in their train came squadron after squadron, each outtravelling the other in magnificence. Nor was the multitudes less varied in colour. Here were Arabs from the desert, Persians in dark gaberdine, fierce Pathans, splendid Sikhs, sturdy little Gurkhas patient Hindus, swarthy men in loin cloths, sad-faced women in coloured saris, Parsis in snowy white, slim Brahmans, and gardens of women.

It is often said that the East has no voice for welcome, but this crowded enthusiasm had to find expression, and the broad streets and open spaces resounded with acclamation.

As the Prince acknowledged the greeting, the procession moved rapidly through the splendid city, which recalls the stately magnificence of Saracenic art and the elaborate beauty of the palaces of the Doges. The natives' quarter brought them to a new world of the Arabian Nights, with its narrow streets, its temples, mosques, and marts.

With every mile the enthusiasm grew, until they came to the palms and bungalows of Malabar Hill, and entered the gates of Government House. Their Royal Highnesses are delighted with their welcome.

10TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Daily Telegraph.—The Prince and Princess of Wales have arrived here. The first welcome which His Majesty's ship Renown received at the close of her long journey came from a flotilla of fishing boats, which put out from Bombay in the earliest dusk preceding the dawn. Their high lateen sails, tipped with orange by the quick Eastern sunrise, could be seen against the purple grey of a heavy sea mist, as they sailed out westwards to their fishing grounds just as the crowded city of Bombay woke to add the last touches to the pageantry of her festival attire. Long before sunrise the streets presented a scene of colour and vivacity which the First City in India, as she proudly names herself, has never rivalled in all her long record of ceremonial welcome and farewell.

The morning drew on cloudless and windless, the long festoons of flags hung unresponsive from masts and roof tops; even the gossamer gauzes with which the route was decorated along Malabar betrayed not a breath of wind to relieve the fierce staring glare of the Indian sun.

Everywhere there was the busy note of preparation. The last ropes of steamers were secured, the last scattering of water from the leather skins of sun-blackened "bhistics," the last touches of greenery or gold in the municipal decorations, the last sheaf of gaudy flags along a King's Road shop-front, the last overhead garland of pink paper roses and real frangipani blossoms was strung from tree to tree beside Chowpatty Hill. Overhead, the kites, in a solemn, airy minuet, protested against their dislodgment from immemorial perches, and the shadows of Bombay's huge buildings shrank upon white blistering pavements. But as the time drew on for the arrival of the Renown a slight landward breeze sprang up, and Bombay became a labyrinth of rippling colour.

Soon after eleven o'clock the first signal was given of the coming of the Prince by the thud and shattering echoes of the saluting gun. In a moment the whole city re-echoed with an incessant salute, in which His Majesty's ships Hyacinth, Terrible, Perseus, Fox, and Proserpine, and the Portuguese cruiser joined as the Renown crept up to her moorings half a mile from the famous Apollo Bandar. There was still a long time to wait before the time fixed for the official landing of Their Royal Highnesses, during which interval a second salute by the naval squadron celebrated the King's Birthday. All the shipping in the harbour and the roads were dressed rainbow fashion, even the huge dredger, which was steadily working away throughout the day, the only thing in all Bombay which kept no holiday.

Towards three o'clock, some time ahead of the appointed hour, the Viceroy and Lady Curzon steamed out in a launch to offer the first welcome of India to Their Royal Highnesses. Half an hour later Lord Lamington, Governor of Bombay, followed with the Chief Justice, the Bishop, and the members of the Council, all of whom were presented to the Prince, and returned to the quay, bringing the larger portion of Their Royal Highness's suite with them. At last a small green steam pinnace shot out from the side of the Renown, and yet another thundering salute echoed over the waters, and half-obscured the battle-ship with its rolling smoke. Very quickly the little boat, with the Royal Standard, differentiated by the Prince of Wales's escutcheon and label, made in to the Bunder, and curved sharply alongside. A moment's delay and then the Prince followed the Viceroy ashore. He was wearing the ribbon of the Star of India over a plain white uniform, with aiguillettes, and looked well and sunburnt after his fortnight's voyage. The Princess then came ashore, dressed in white, with touches of aquamarine blue, and Lady Curzon followed.

As the four ascended the steps of the Bunder they halted for some time to greet the Maharaja of Idar, so much better known to Englishmen as Sir Pratap Singh. It was a significant moment when this old and tried friend of England bowed himself deeply in the old Rajput salute before taking the hand either of Prince or Princess, whose intimate friend he has long been.

The Prince ascended the steps to find a brilliant gathering awaiting him under the idly stirring crimson and white awnings of the great Shamiana. As always occurs on such occasions, the European display was hopelessly outshone by the glowing silks and woven gold of the Indian Chiefs; even under the awning of the Shamiana the play of crimson and myrtle, green, and aquamarine greys, and the embroidered khinkhabs of the small group of Kathiawar Chiefs contrasted splendidly with the audacious gold and opimient yellow of the Rao of Kutch. On all sides the subdued fire of diamonds and huge cabochon emeralds set off the thick gold embroideries and gold-encrusted guards of these great native chiefs, gathered to do honour to the Shahzada, as the Prince of Wales is universally known among the natives of India to-day.

The scene was quiet, but all the more impressive for its quietness, and the shaded light beneath the awning, while outside, in the Apollo Bunder Square, tens of thousands waited in the sun or thronged the windows and very roof tops. On one side the guard of honour provided by the Royal Scots made on excellent foil of regularity, trimness, and colourlessness to the changing hues of the crowd, by whom the Prince passed slowly as the officials and chiefs were individually presented to him.

After inspecting the guard of honour and saluting the tattered fragments of the regimental colours, a move to the open air was made, where Sir P. Mehta, President of the Municipal Council, read an excellent and graceful address of welcome, to which the Prince read his reply clearly and well. Every allusion to the King-Emperor or to the late Queen Victoria was taken up and vociferously applauded; while the delicate point made by Sir P. Mehta that this is the first time any Princess of Wales has ever set foot in India was fully appreciated both by the Princess and by the hearers of the President. After the addresses Sir P. Mehta stepped forward to the dais and presented bouquets to the Prince and Princess, and offered to the latter in the usual Indian fashion. But the Princess, with a smile, accepted the will for the deed, as the hat she was wearing made the ceremony difficult.

There was very little further delay after the formal presentation of a silver casket by the Municipal Council. The Prince and Princess, escorted by Lord and Lady Curzon and Lord Lamington, passed through the dense and enthusiastic crowd to their carriage, and drove away through the decorated streets to the four-mile distant Government House on the extreme point of Malabar Promontory.

It is worth recording that many of the details of this entirely successful reception, such as the inclusion of the magnificent gold and silk official sun-protector and scarlet and gold umbrella, borne behind the Prince in the carriage, are due to the suggestion of Sir Pratab Singh himself. It is only fair, however, to describe this great and successful welcome at the outset of the Prince's Indian tour as due wholly to the unending care and foresight of General Beatson as organiser of the entire Indian travel of Their Royal Highnesses, ably supported by Lord Lamington and the local authorities. In every way it was a brilliant opening to a visit, the importance of which to our rule in India it would be difficult to overstate. The addresses on each side were singularly happy in their choice of both eulogy and reminiscence, and the fact that through all the splendour and the cheering, through all the acts of graceful recognition, and all the words of praise, the dull clank and grind of the harbour dredger was always to be heard, monotonous and regular, lent a significance to the Prince's characterisation of Bombay as a successful and determined pioneer of commerce that was not the least happy accident of the day.

Under these auspices the great tour was begun, and Their Royal Highnesses have to-night the satisfaction of feeling that nothing on one side or the other could have added to the success, the very great success which has marked the first landing in India of the Emperor's Son and Heir.

Daily Telegraph.—The fifth morning out from Aden raises India like a grey wraith of jagged mountain spurs along the horizon to the east. Flat and grey-purple against the dawn, and toughed still with the last skeins of the vapours of the starry night, they stand sentinel about Bombay island and that all-precious inner harbour which nestles between the city and the rugged mainland. The ranges seem but a low-lying confusion at the first, but soon they strain themselves apart, Salsette and Matheran and Khandala, long even before the first sight of Bombay itself is possible. There is another hour's steaming before the uttermost point of Malabar Hill, with its solitary tree and its rock-perched bungalow, slides forward to the north-east, tipping with a flash of white the long recurring line of Back Bay. This is the real sea-front of the huge city, but it is sand-shalowed and useless for shipping. It stretches out unburdened, except for a few rude cock-boats showing where some Pomphlet fisherman are engaged on their eternal search among the cork-dotted nets below the woods of Government House. A moment later the eye can pick out the Rajabai clock tower, and the crowding domes, roofs, and pinnacles of Bombay detach themselves, one by one, from the neutral background across the harbour. For Bombay faces east, not west, and one has to double Prong lighthouse at the extremest tip of the island before one can swing up northerly and deliberately to an anchorage past the tiny little grass-grown fort of Oyster Rock. It is shoal water here, and we thrash up a tawny wash of mud through the full opaque green of the still harbour. At last the backing screws thrust forward the brown, discoloured flood to our very bows, and the anchor plunges with iron wrath into it, tearing behind it the clattering, rusty entrails of the bows, and the long journey is at an end.

Bombay hangs like an Oriental ear-jewel across the sea-mouth of this bowl of bare hills filled with green water. She is at very sea-level, ten miles in length from Siwa to the Prong; to the north she hangs from the forbidding mass of Salsette by four strands of rail and road—and she is the gate of India. Like other gates, she enjoys the privilege and dignity of port-ahood—chiefly ostentation of architecture and a proper recognition of her importance. Also she pays the price that all straightened entries have to pay. For chiefly in the gate is the clash and jar of custom and caste, race and occupation the fierce jostling of the exchanging caravan and merchandise—nay, for what other reason is ready justice administered in the town-gate but this?—above all, the loss of that individuality which the inner 'city' wears.

This is why so many a writer has tried to describe Bombay, and why the result is negative, though using half a lac of words. Simply, it cannot be done. She has no threads of continuity; she has no point of reference, no inner meaning. First and foremost, she stands for a practical need that comes home equally to all those who occupy their business along the west coast of India, and she is little else. It would be easy to tell some scrap of the tale of the moving panorama in the streets; it has been done, not once nor twice, nor thrice. Yet the glowing adjectives of a Chevrillon or a Steevens, the quick and certain classification of an Arnold, will not, when all is said and done, give you more than one aspect of the great metropolis of the West. Jostling each other in the streets of the bazaar there are half the races of India. From hairy hill-men from the north-west, wearing, despite their unkempt toilette, silk damasks and turquoise-studded belts of sambar-skin, bestitched and inlaid with colour, such as no other part of India can rival, to the six-sevenths naked Bhistie, with his solid loin-cloth dividing into three his sweating, burnt-sienna skin, you will find an example of almost every one of the main divisions of the inhabitants of India. But the picturesque side of Bombay is her least important; moreover, if you look you will find that these men are all strangers like yourself. Like you, a transitory necessity drives them into the Empire's gate, but they have no home here, no abiding place, and one and all are counting the days till they return homewards to plain, or coast, or mountain. All, that is, except the colourless and neutral residents of the bazaar, myriad hewers of wood and drawers of water to their vivid and attention-compelling guests, and except also the Parsis. Bombay has been made by the Parsis as much as by ourselves. The Huguenots of the East, they have acquired power and wealth in the land of their exile; and their black-varnished scuttle hats, unbrimmed and ugly beyond even the top-hat of the West, are the fittest emblems of Bombay's unruined commercial prosperity. But the native name for them, "crows," is, in some ways, not unjust. They have reaped where others have sown. The merchant venturers of England cleared their way.

They were shrewd men in the old days, who rented the dowry of the Infanta from Charles II, at £10 a year "for ever." Against the assaults of the natives and the Dutch alike, these Imperial gamblers clung stubbornly to their malarious spit of land between two waters, clung on through long and evil years till their overbearing rival Surat was slowly silted up in the sands of the Tapti, and the impatient tide of commerce felt its way anew southward to its only other outlet.

But in its development Bombay has grown up as such seaports must needs grow. Shanghai, Hong Kong, Singapore, Calcutta itself—all alike suffer this loss of identity beneath the cross-currents of commerce, that leveller of prejudice and pride. It were as inept to quote the Queen's-road as characteristic of Bombay as the bazaar or the wooded gardens and villas of Malabar Hill. Elphinstone Circle, though a trifle out of date, has its own separate story to tell, and the dockyards, the Yacht Club, Mazagaon, and Byculla each has its significance in this kaleidoscopic gallimawfry; only the caves of Elephanta seem meaningless and forlorn. Besides the pepuls and palmettos of the curving shore the dull heavy smell of burnt wood—and of some other burning thing as well—foists raw India upon the civilised senses of half-Europeanised Bombay, and the frock-coated native with a heavily-tinselled cap of velvet, who has just helped his dead father's soul to escape from the charred prison of the skull, climbs into a first class carriage at Marino Lines Station, across the way from the burning ghat, unconscious of any inconsistency. Nothing is inconsistent in Bombay except Elephanta; she has seen too much of too many peoples. She lives fiercely from day to day accepting all as grist that comes to her ever-turning temse. Her very architecture is restless and feverish. Who but those who live hectically in a kind of Asian Vanity Fair would have reared the strange piles of the Victoria Terminus and the Taj-Mahal Hotel? These are the true emblems of Bombay. Despite her magnificence she is but a caravanserai and a starting place, and you scarcely need to move off the white and blue floors of the gigantic rest-house on the Apollo Basin—shades of Mumtaz, they are composed of broken crockery chips!—to know all that it imports, to know of this roaring metropolis and clearing-house of the commerce of five continents. Hither comes as much of the bazaar as you may believe is characteristic of Bombay. Here for a night or two all Anglo-India stays, looks out over the "Queen's Necklace," round the bay, and eats its last of French cookery. Generals and subalterns, collectors, commissioners and Calcutta clerks, globe-trotters, parsons, planters, who remember, as of yesterday, the Ripon riots in Calcutta in 1883, and as young men lined the road along which dead Mayo passed in state in 1873. But no one stays. The incoming and the outgoing tides surge and jostle in the cabined confines of the gate, and all alike are strangers in a strange city. The Prince of Wales invests her with a transient importance, and, with a population which will tax even her wide spaces to accommodate, but when the splendid week is passed Bombay will hear again as the dominant note of her existence the thrumming mills and hoarse cries of the exchange and of the market, which have never ceased within her—they have but been overborne by yet another of those passing excitements of which Bombay is the natural and inevitable scene. She is inscrutable. In some ways—and those not the best, perhaps—she needs insistent care and attention. Her boasted title of the First of Indian Cities rings through the Indian Ocean, but here Death is always a near acquaintance, and plague and famine close companions. Here the up-washed vagrancy of the Arabian Sea is thrown ashore to mingle with the unballasted human trash of all races, that silts downwards to a congenial Smyrna of the farther Levant.

If you seek for romance in Bombay you must seek it among those who cannot get away from her; you must demand it of the Thagi and Dacoity department or the slum missionary, and you may find some one to tell you that strange tale of how, not many years ago, an earnest young police official caused to be arrested an aged mendicant, whose bodily marks corresponded with those of one who had been "wanted" by Government for forty years. Wise, entirely wise, the Viceroy made the telegraph wires hot in the urgency of his counter-order, "Release instantly;" but the man was Nana Sahib himself. It is not uncharacteristic of the place that that dark and restless soul, hounded from place to place, seeking friends, adherents, believers, and finding none from Tibet to Satara, should at last be drawn inevitably into the tortuous currents of Bombay, and that it was here of all places in the East that the last transitory glimpse was caught, as a diseased and beggared outcast, of the infamous figure of the last century. Herein alone is Bombay's romantic side. Of history and pageant she has little, and to-day she is as free from sentiment as the notices in the halls of the local hotels. She has her own business to do and she has no time to waste. She builds hugely, because it is convenient to transact business in ample offices. But she waters the streets and plants trees with coloured leaves for the same reason as that for which she accumulates meaningless finials, unnecessary balustrades, silly rosettes, and gratuitous cusps on the outside of her buildings, and paints their insides with fearsome pre-Victorian patterns and glazes their windows with large lozenges of green and yellow and red glass. Someone has told her it is right to do these things, and she has done them, only too glad to shift to others the responsibility. But her own interests she looks after well enough, and there is not a port in the East, perhaps not a port in the West either, whose prosperity is founded on such stable foundations as those which the scanty subsoil of this overcrowded island-spit supplies.

Englishman.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales landed in Bombay, "The Gateway of India," at the commencement of their long tour through this dependency. It was a day of untarnished splendour. Everything conspired to invest the city's welcome with spontaneity and enthusiasm, which are happy auguries for the complete success of this great enterprise. Since His Majesty the King-Emperor, then Prince of Wales, landed on this island thirty years ago, Bombay has undergone extraordinary changes. It has grown enormously in all directions; its industries have developed; its commerce has increased; its peoples waxed in material prosperity. But these are not days of unchequered fortune, she has been scourged by plague and famine, weighted by the depression of her greatest industry. Now all these adverse influences have passed away. The harvest is abundant, pestilence is almost non-existent and the material well-being of its citizens is greater than at any period in modern times. Add to this the absence of any those causes of friction which sometimes darken the political atmosphere, and there did not exist one spot to dim the brightness of the day. In the roar of welcome from all races, all castes and all creeds which greeted Their Royal Highnesses from their landing at Apollo Bunder until they passed into the grounds of Government House, there was no other feeling but loyalty to the British Raj, devotion to the person of the King-Emperor and joy at the presence of his eldest son and gracious consort.

In India we are not inclined to take much account of weather after the rains, but in this respect to-day was the perfection of a November day. With the rising of the sun a pleasant breeze set in so that instead of the usual smoky mist of early morning everything was bright and fresh and the street decorations looked their best. The benefits of this were most conspicuous in harbour. There was little of the usual hazy veiling of the hills on shore wrapping the shipping in a mist. Islands and mainland stood out sharply. H. M. S. Hyacinth and Persues, the Portuguese gunboat Gabriel and the white coated Dufferin were in bold relief. Apparently many people were alert long before sunrise, for as soon as it was light the streets were alive with pedestrians of all sorts. Many were engaged putting finishing touches upon house decorations, but the majority were wending their way to the Apollo Bunder, which was as crowded at seven o'clock as Epsom downs on a Derby day. Whilst much interest was displayed in the red and white shamiana erected for the reception of Their Royal Highnesses and in the enclosure where the Corporation presented their address, most of the sightseers gazed steadily out to sea, as if they expected the Renown to loom in sight hours before the official time. They were not entirely unrewarded, for towards eight o'clock some big cargo boats steamed slowly out of dock and anchoring in the stream filled up the waste places in the northern part of harbour. Then exactly as eight bells struck the shrill call of a bugle rang out from the flagship. In a trice every vessel in harbour dressed ship. From stern and stem they displayed a dancing array of flags, small craft and even tiny tom-tits in the Yacht Club anchorage bravely playing their part. This graceful salute was in honour of His Majesty the King-Emperor's birthday. Had not this festival coincided with the arrival of the Prince, ships would have been dressed two hours later.

For the last hour the presence of the Renown and her escorts had been dimly indicated on the horizon beyond the outer lightship, and at twenty-five minutes to eleven o'clock sharp the boom of three guns showed that the warships had entered the harbour. First came the Fox and the Proserpine acting as advance-cruisers, steaming abreast. They had been temporarily detached on special duty in connection with renewed troubles in Somaliland, but had rejoined the Renown in time to escort her, across the Indian Ocean and lead into harbour. Next came the Renown, painted in gleaming white, flying His Royal Highness's flag as rear admiral at the fore, the Royal Standard at the main, the Union Jack at the bow, and the white ensign at the peak. The towering bulk of H. M. S. Terrible, also a dazzling white, brought up the rear. In stately array the noble ships steamed slowly up the harbour. The scene was now one of rare picturesqueness and animation. On the harbour side the spectacle perhaps inclined to greyiness. The new service colours of our men-of-war are certainly not artistic, and the sombre tones of the Persus and Hyacinth imitated by the Portuguese St. Gabriel, were scarcely counterbalanced by the rainbow flags and men manning the ships. On shore, however, everything was brightness itself, fluttering flags of gayest hue waving in the crystalline atmosphere, and such a vivid and variegated throng as the East only can produce and it was a cheerful throng, high tones and shrill laughter predominating. The Royal Procession was not near enough to make out the usual hum of the packed spectators.

At eleven o'clock a puff of white smoke from the Hyacinth followed by the sharp report of a quickfiring told of the beginning of the Royal Salute of thirty-one guns. The firing was taken up by Persus and St. Gabriel and answered by the Fox, Proserpine and Terrible. There was a curious contrast between the crack of guns of the inshore warships and muffled boom of those of the escorting squadron, whilst wreaths of smoke, half obscuring the warships conveyed the vivid impression of what a naval battle would be like, fought with black powder. When the smoke cleared off it was seen that the formation of the incoming squadron had changed. The Proserpine and Fox hustled ahead and took up position in line of the warships of the East Indies Squadron, which then moored in this order:—The Proserpine, Persus, Fox and Hyacinth, the St. Gabriel lying just inside the Persus. As the Terrible, owing to her great draught, could not approach the shore, she was sent on a lonely cruise to the north-east, ultimately anchoring opposite the Yacht Club, a mile or so from the shore. The Renown moored at the south of the transport buoy, where the troopships generally lie exactly opposite the Apollo Bunder and outside the Hyacinth as the tide would not allow her to get nearer. At a quarter past eleven o'clock every ship was in her moorings, simultaneously squadron dressed ship, and all vessels in the harbour were now in a gala attire. The first stage in the arrival of the Royal visitors was at an end. A long wait was in store. The Renown was at her moorings three-quarters of an hour before the programme time, and no further major ceremony was due until the state departure of His Excellency the Viceroy four hours hence.

His Excellency the Naval Commander-in-Chief of the East Indies Squadron, Admiral Poe and his staff proceeded on board the Royal Ship and the Commander of the Men-of-War followed, but as this service was rendered in boats it was quietly and expeditiously performed. Yet one other interesting observance remained by a happy thought, the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses arranged to coincide with His Majesty the King-Emperor's birthday. Early in the day the ships dressed in celebration of the event, but the Imperial salute yet remained to be fired and the commands of His Royal Highness were awaited. The crack of the first gun from the Hyacinth, precisely at noon, indicated the hour selected, and a further royal salute of thirty-one guns then roared out from all warships in the harbour except the Renown. The crowd melted away, traffic was almost ceased, and everyone returned to prepare for the great events of the afternoon.

This wait proved more tedious than was expected. With a view of giving Their Royal Highnesses more daylight for their progress through the town, the Viceroy expedited his departure by a quarter of an hour and this brought the whole programme forward. Now the privileged guests who were bidden to receive the Prince in the shamiana began to arrive. Native Chiefs in their gorgeous equipages and still more brilliant robes, High Court Judges in wig and gown, secretaries in uniforms of blue and gold, and Consuls in official dress of a dozen nationalities. The ring of horses' hoofs on the macadam, the distant rumble of guns announced the approach of the Viceroy. As the head of the procession rounded Wellington Fountain the centre of a dense throng of spectators it presented a gallant sight. The Hussars in their spotless summer kit, horse artillery in immaculate white, the dark blue loongis of the native cavalry and the brilliant headgear of the Body-Guards and the splendid men of the Viceregal Body-Guard immediately preceded Lord Curzon's carriage, which drew smartly up under the archway. Lord and Lady Curzon immediately alighted. His Excellency wore diplomatic uniform with the ribbon of the Star of India. Lady Curzon was gowned in an exquisite dress of dove gray, with a large hat to match. It was a source of considerable pain to everyone present to see how ill His Excellency looked. He walked with a stick, and his whole bearing was that of a tired man. But indomitable will triumphed over his physical weakness, and when Lord Curzon stopped to talk with one or another of his friend, his eye kindled and his manner was as earnest and vigorous as in his strongest days. At precisely three o'clock, accompanied by Lady Curzon, he descended the steps, entered the Indian Marine launch Bee, and set out for the Renown. Lord Lamington with a great deputation from Bombay, including the Chief Justice, the Bishop of the Diocese and the Members of Council followed in a quarter of an hour.

The following is the text of the Bombay Municipal Corporation's Address to the Prince of Wales:—

To His Royal Highness George Frederick Ernest Albert, Prince of Wales, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.O.V.O., P.O., etc., etc., and Her Royal Highness Victoria Mary, Princess of Wales, C.I., M.V.O., etc., etc.

May it please Your Royal Highnesses,—We, the President and Members of the Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay, beg to tender to Your Royal Highnesses in the name and on behalf of all its inhabitants an earnest, enthusiastic and loyal welcome on your first landing on the shores of India.

A part of the dowry brought to an English Sovereign by his Portuguese bride, Bombay has been long associated with the Royal Family of England, and may justly lay claim to be a Royal City; and we therefore proudly consider that it is only in the fitness of things, that this City should lead the hearty greetings and rejoicings that eagerly await your Royal Highnesses throughout the length and breadth of this country.

Under theegis of the British Crown and its wise and generous policy of equality, sympathy and toleration, this City has marvellously thriven as an important centre of trade, commerce and industry. At the time when it came to King Charles II, it was an insignificant cluster of islets, as shown on one panel of the casquet which will hold this address, with a sparse population of 10,000 souls, whose only trade was in dried fish and coconuts. Bombay now takes a high place among the great cities of the Empire and of the world, and the foundations of its growth and prosperity are so deeply laid that though we have of recent years passed through dire visitations of pestilence and disense, aggravated by agricultural distress throughout the Presidency, this growth and prosperity have not only not been permanently checked but have continued to increase. We gratefully see in this wonderful transformation the righteous beneficence of British rule, founded in justice and equality, making no distinctions of colour or creed, and extending equal opportunities to men of varied creeds and nations who inherit ancient civilizations from widely separate families of mankind.

It is thirty years almost to a day that we had the inestimable privilege of welcoming Your Royal Highness's august father, our most gracious Sovereign, the then Prince of Wales, on his historic visit to this country, the happy memories whereof are yet cherished throughout the land, among high and low, with pride and affection. We may be pardoned for fondly believing that it was during that visit that His Imperial Majesty first displayed those great qualities of head and heart which have to-day enabled him to play so noble a part in the peaceful destinies of mankind and to win the esteem and admiration of the whole world, and which 'then' contributed powerfully to develop the loyalty of the people of India into personal attachment to the Royal Family of England, the foundations of which had been laid deep in the hearts of the people of this country by the sympathy and solicitude which the great and good Queen-Empress Victoria had constantly shown for their well being and advancement.

We pray Your Royal Highnesses to convey to His Majesty our feelings of unalterable loyalty and personal attachment, and our gratitude for the proof he has once more given of his great care and regard for his Indian subjects in sending not only his Royal Son and Heir to become personally acquainted with them, but to do them the high grace of sending him accompanied by his Royal Consort the Princess of Wales. Her Royal Highness's gracious and kindly presence amongst us cannot but deeply touch the heart of the country, of people of all classes and all grades alike, who will value beyond measure so striking a token of her womanly sympathy and solicitude for them. We joyously hail with heartfelt greetings the first Princess of Wales to set foot on the soil of India.

Now we pray that benign Providence may watch over Your Royal Highnesses' progress throughout this country and bring it to a blessed and happy conclusion, so that it may prove fruitful of results, binding together closer and still more close the ties which unite the two countries, whom a wonderful dispensation of Providence has brought together from distant ends of the world, to the lasting glory of your Royal House and of the great Empire over which it presides.

The following is the text of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales' reply to the address of welcome from the Bombay Municipal Corporation:—"I thank you most sincerely for the kind and enthusiastic welcome which you have given to the Princess of Wales and myself. We are both deeply moved by your touching allusion to her presence here. She is indeed proud to be the first Princess of Wales to have set foot on these shores. The words of your address, eloquent as they are, will not, however, convey to our fellow-subjects in other parts of the Empire what we see here to-day, nor do they render full justice to the efforts and good-will of the citizens of this great western port of India, which culminates in this splendid ceremony. Just thirty years ago, all but a day, my dear father the King-Emperor was standing not far from this very spot, and was saying that it had been the dream of his life to see India. The Princess and I have had similar anticipations and we thank you from the bottom of our hearts for the manner in which you and your fellow-workers have brought these dreams to realisation. In thus following in the footsteps of my father we are but carrying out the tradition established by him and one which I trust, will be repeated as generation succeeds generation. I hope, and indeed I am confident, that the same loving interest in this great continent which has inspired in my father's heart by his visit to India and which has never abated, will equally come to us. If, as we travel through the various countries which make up this great empire, the Princess and I can win the sympathy and goodwill of the peoples of India, we shall secure a precious result from the voyage which we have been privileged to undertake. It is the last stage of our memorable and happy mission of four years ago to His Majesty's great dominions across the seas. Though strangers to this beautiful city we have read much and heard much of your trials and achievements. As the capital of Western India and the port which links this eastern continent with Europe, Bombay has had to adapt herself more perhaps than any other Oriental city to the requirements of modern life. She has to live up to her position and as the threshold of this picturesque and fascinating land of India, that position is somewhat exacting. But if I may judge from a brief impression from the sea and from what I observe here, Bombay does not fall short of her obligations. Apart from the beauty of her buildings and her natural advantages she has thoughts for trade facilities and for what is of equal or perhaps greater importance, for the health and well-being of nearly 800,000 people. I am delighted to be associated with the new dock and with the first large streets which the city improvement trust has constructed. Like all great cities which depend on commerce Bombay has had her vicissitudes and your municipal history has its counterpart in many other cities of our Empire which I have had the pleasure of visiting. Your period of prosperity has endowed you with buildings and other possessions of which you may well be proud. But it has also brought you a population perhaps inconveniently large and you are now wisely grappling with the problems which have beset us in the West, the problems of wide streets and healthy industrial quarters. I wish you, Mr. Chairman, and all who are working for the welfare of Bombay, Godspeed. I can imagine no nobler work than the endeavour of the individual to do something for his town. There is one drawback to journeys such as that on which the Princess and I are now starting. Time is all too short to see everything and to tell everyone who has joined in greeting us how heartily grateful we are. I have inherited from my father and from our late beloved Sovereign your first Queen-Empress a love for India and for Indians. From my youth up, I have associated the name of India with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy and bravery, and I doubt not that these early ideas will be confirmed and strengthened by the experiences which await me in the next few months. We cannot, as we should like, see all your many institutions, but we hope to have opportunities of gaining some insight into those of a similar character in other parts of India. We both hope to carry home with us not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but an interest in India's wants and problems and an acquaintance with the various classes, official and non-official, British and Indian, which under God's providence are labouring to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her peoples. I will not fail to convey to the King-Emperor the expression of your loyal devotion to his throne and person and remembering that to-day we celebrate His Majesty's birthday, these assurances will come to him with special gratification, and I feel sure that this great company will join with me in wishing him very many happy returns of the day."

The whole of the Rangoon river from Kemmending down to the Burma Oil Company's works will be illuminated with floating lights on the occasion of the Royal visit to Rangoon.

In the Royal Manœuvres at Rawalpindi, the northern army will be distinguished from the southern army by a badge to be worn by all officers, non-commissioned officers and men consisting of a small piece of blue cloth placed in front of the helmet. The southern army will have no badge.

Englishman.—The simple and unostentatious farewell which was accorded to the Prince and Princess of Wales on their leaving London was in strong contrast to the splendour of the greeting which awaited them on their arrival at Bombay. They drove to Victoria Station unescorted. They landed at the Apollo Bunder in the midst of a setting befitting the future King and Queen of the British Empire. The contrast serves to focus attention upon the fact that there are two sides to every royal life. On the one hand royalties are quite human, and if the leave-taking at Victoria was made as quiet as possible it was because a family parting was in progress. On the other hand, even in the most constitutionally governed countries, there are attached to royalties powers and responsibilities which place them out of the place of ordinary life into a region which certain classes are accustomed to regard as little short of the divine. Indeed in India the Shastras enjoin that the king is to be worshipped as a god, and the landing effected yesterday will be to millions in this country an event of transcendental importance. There is a limit, of course, to the magnificence of the reception any people or nation can give to those whom they desire to honour, at least in the way of marking their sense of the difference between royalty and humanity in general. The welcome accorded to Their Royal Highnesses at Bombay differs only in degree from those which have greeted incoming Viceroys and others. More guns are fired, the illuminations are more brilliant, the escorts are larger, the crowd is thicker, and so forth. But the limitations which are imposed on human activity by physical disabilities do not extend to the emotions, which even when they cannot be expressed may be felt and may exercise a controlling influence over the thoughts and ideas which induce such qualities as loyalty and reverence. It is, indeed, true that the Royal Tour will enhance the prestige of the Crown in India. To the multitudes the Sircar is a dim and abstract conception, which they acquiesce in without understanding. But to see with their own eyes the heir to the Throne, or, at least, to hear of his actual presence in the country, will present them with the concrete figure which is necessary to stimulate the growth of devotion to the Raj.

In dealing with the effect which the Royal Tour will have upon the masses, it ought not to be forgotten that both the Prince and the Princess are something more than living symbols of the Empire to be honoured as such. The Prince's early training at sea has induced in him all that frankness and openheartedness which we are accustomed to associate with sailors. In speech he is direct and incisive. The tour he made through the colonies afforded him opportunities of drawing attention to the apathy which had begun to be visible amongst all classes as a result of the reaction which followed the Boer war. He called on the British in homely terms to "wake up": words that ran like an electric shock throughout the Empire and had a direct effect in fostering a new spirit of enterprise and energy. It is not altogether improbable that some at least of the Prince's utterances in India will be marked with the same simplicity of diction, though the Royal visitor has inherited enough of his father's tact to make it impossible for him to forget that in India he will be speaking in a country which is aristocratic in constitution as much as in sentiment and tradition. The Princess of course will captivate all hearts by her quiet dignity. The simplicity of her own early life, no less than the atmosphere of domesticity which surrounds the English Court, will enable her to judge more clearly of the home-life of the Indian people, behind the screen of rejoicing. The many noble and pathetic messages sent to India by the late Queen were dictated by the promptings of a naturally sympathetic heart. Our future Queen is no less full of tenderness for suffering mankind and she will carry back with her a real and living knowledge of the condition of the people of this country. In spite of the limitations imposed on the Royal will by the constitution of the Empire, there do, as we have pointed out, devolve upon members of the Royal Family great responsibilities and powers, and the tour through India will thus serve the double purpose of fostering the loyalty of the people and of informing our future King and Queen on those important points, regarding the activities of the people, which can only be gathered from personal observation.

Englishman.—In connection with the tour of Their Royal Highnesses through India the Telegraph Department, which is certainly not the least interesting of the branches of Imperial administration, has issued a small hand-book of "General Instructions for Press correspondents, which, if these gentlemen will only read, mark, learn and thoroughly digest them—especially the injunction to "write legibly"—will save a world of trouble to signallers and sub-editors in four Continents.

Globe.—Most auspiciously, the Heir-Apparent and his fair consort reached Bombay on the anniversary of King Edward's birthday. Thirty years have passed since the King paid a similar visit, and great changes have occurred in the interval. But it is manifest that if there has been any change in the loyalty of the native population, it takes the form of more developed strength and genuineness. In former times, it was largely a product of the fatalism which dominates all creeds, classes, and races in the East. British sovereignty was accepted more because it existed than on account of its intrinsic merits. But since then it has more and more come home to our Indian fellow-subjects that the British Raj secures to them, both individually and collectively, manifold blessings which they never possessed anterior to its establishment, and which would be reft from them en bloc were it to crumble away as the Mogul Empire did. In presence of this promising situation, with peace, order, progress, and prosperity within the gates of India, the eloquent speech delivered by the Prince of Wales on landing was most appropriately phrased in a tone of deep and kindly sympathy with the people over whom he is destined to rule. From first to last, the autocratic note so invariably sounded by certain Continental Sovereigns on similar occasions was happily missing; instead of that lofty condescension, the Prince spoke as a friend among friends. And nothing could have been more felicitous than his reference to the fact that it is the first time on record of the personal visit of a Princess of Wales to the land where the Zenana is still a highly-honoured institution. But although it remains, and is likely to remain for many years, the personal interest taken by the Princess in the better education of Indian purdah ladies is sure to promote that most excellent object.

Madras Mail.—To-day the whole of India joins in offering a most loyal and hearty welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. The sea journey of six thousand miles has been accomplished without the slightest hitch or hindrance; and so happy a beginning, it may well be hoped, augurs well for the smooth and successful accomplishment of the whole tour. Although, technically speaking, Aden enjoyed the honour of extending to Their Royal Highnesses the first welcome to Indian territory (an honour which she enjoyed once before, in the course of Their Royal Highnesses' voyage to Australasia in 1901) the real honour belongs to-day to Bombay, proud in the possession of the titles of the Gate of India and, geographically at any rate, of Urbs prima in India. Bombay, as we all know, has been preparing her welcome to the august visitors for months past; and that welcome will, spectacularly, be one of the grandest and most striking, for there is no city in India which lends itself so admirably to such a display.

The greeting from the people of Bombay, however, warm though it may be, will be no warmer than that which will be extended to Their Royal Highnesses from one end of India to the other. Some parts of India will be luckier than others in being privileged to accord a personal welcome to Their Royal Highnesses, the exigencies of time and distance precluding a tour that would extend to every corner of this huge Empire; but the welcome will be no less warm in the hearts of those who will be unable to manifest it personally. As it is, during their five months of touring, Their Royal Highnesses will touch points 1,500 miles apart between North and South and 1,800 miles apart between East and West. At a rough computation Their Royal Highnesses will travel, within the boundaries of the Indian Empire alone, over 11,000 miles, including the crossing and recrossing of the Bay of Bengal. The tour of His Majesty the King-Emperor in 1875-6 comprised nearly 10,000 miles, but this included the coast voyages from Bombay to Ceylon (with the call at Goa and Beypore en route), from Colombo to Tuticorin, and from Madras to Calcutta. The present tour will be confined to the Indian Empire, but the extent of country covered will be much wider and more diverse than was the case in the Royal tour of thirty years ago.

In one respect, perhaps, we in Southern India may regard the present tour as lacking something of the former tour, for the beautiful West Coast, with its palm-clad shores and background of blue, jungle-clad Ghauts—the real India of the books of our youth—will be missed, as also the teeming, prosperous, picturesque districts of the South, with their superb Hindu temples. However, as we have said, both time and distance preclude Their Royal Highnesses from seeing quite everything that is worth seeing; and what the portion of the tour devoted to South India lacks in extent will, we may be sure, be counterbalanced by the heartiness and enthusiasm of the public welcome in the Presidency City itself. The people of South India are justly reckoned amongst the most loyal, best educated and most law-abiding in the whole of India, and from them the son and heir of the King Emperor and his gracious Consort may be sure of the most respectful and loving homage. In Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Amphil, too, the people of this Presidency possess tried friends and well-wishers whose personal intimacy with Their Royal Highnesses will enable them to speak fully and freely on everything that pertains to the Presidency.

On the broader aspects of the present visit of Their Royal Highnesses to India, which is in fulfilment of the promise given to India in the King-Emperor's message on the occasion of the great Coronation Durbar, it would be possible to say much. The tour is, in a sense, a completion of that former tour of Their Royal Highnesses in 1901 when the great Colonial Possessions of the British Empire were visited. It is well known that Queen Victoria, before she died, approved the plan of sending Prince George and Princess May as "Messengers of Empire," and the reception accorded to them everywhere, and particularly in Australia, was a sufficient justification of her wise foresight. At the same time, the late Queen-Empress fully recognised the educative effect of such a tour on His Royal Highness himself; and in that famous speech at the Guildhall, after his return to England, His Royal Highness showed most clearly yet unconsciously the informing and mind-widening influences that had resulted from his extended journeyings and his personal intercourse with all the best men in the Colonies. It is hardly necessary to say that if the previous tour through the British Colonies resulted in tightening the bond of loyalty on the part of the people and in broadening the mental outlook in the case of the Prince, the present tour in India should have even more striking results of the same kind. As the Times so well observed when Their Royal Highnesses left England:—"Such an event as the visit of the Heir to the Crown—her Crown as well as ours—can only strengthen the loyalty of India, and her confidence that she is not a mere dependency, but an integral and honoured portion of the great dominions which compose the British Empire. But its benefits will be equally great to the Royal Visitors themselves. A Sovereign's first duty, whether he be an autocrat or the most strictly limited of constitutional Monarchs, is to know his people; and he cannot really know them unless he has met them face to face and seen them in their own surroundings."

This is especially true in the case of an Oriental country like India, so widely different from the great Colonies, which are merely, other "Britains across the seas." It has been every truly said that the weakest feature of our rule in India is its impersonal character, and that the strongest link in the chain which binds her to the Empire is her loyalty not to the British Government nor to the British people but to the British Throne. As a writer in the current number of the Empire Review most aptly puts it:—"Ordinarily, India gives few indications of any fervent attachment to our rule. But a close acquaintance with her people shows that underlying a certain amount of discontent there is a sincere and ardent loyalty to the head of the Empire. There may be much dissatisfaction with British rule in certain of its aspects. There is undoubtedly a great absence of popularity in regard to the ruling class as a whole. But these things may and do exist side by side with a warm attachment to the King-Emperor and the Royal Family, who are the personal embodiments of the power which India obeys. There is no paradox here. The truth is that such disaffection as is to be found in India is largely due to the absence of that personal element which the Eastern mind loves to recognise in the rule which claims his submission. When India is reminded that she owes allegiance not, after all, to an administrative machine, to a cunningly-devised system of delegated authority, but to a Person—then she shows that she can be loyal, loyal with a whole hearted devotion which the Western mind can hardly understand."

This being so, the true import and significance of the present visit of the King-Emperor's son and heir, together with his gracious consort, are easily apparent. The Princes and people of India will delight in doing honour to them as the nearest and dearest representatives of their King-Emperor; and Their Royal Highnesses will no doubt, in their turn, have many glowing reminiscences to relate to the King Emperor when they return to England, recalling thereby to His Majesty's memory many incidents of his own tour in India in 1875-76. During those intervening thirty years India has not stood still. It is not in her nature to "progress" as fast as some countries in the West; indeed, in the hearts of the bulk of her people there is a deep-seated feeling that what we call "progress in the West"—material progress and the struggle for life and wealth—is not to be regarded as the summum bonum of human endeavour. But still, the India that Their Royal Highnesses will see will not be altogether the India that the King-Emperor saw three decades ago. The one fact that the railways now extend to 28,000 miles, whereas then they extended only to 7,000 miles is indicative of many other changes also.

Yet in one thing there has been no change, we may be sure, namely, in the warmth of popular feeling for the Royal Family and in the loyal and enthusiastic welcome that the people of India will extend to their future King-Emperor. And nowhere will this feeling be more hearty and conspicuous than amongst the Ruling Chiefs and Princes, who will vie with each other in doing honour to the Royal visitors. Considering the important part that the Ruling Chiefs play in the field of Indian polity, as "co-operators with the British Government and sharers in the work of maintaining efficient administration and equal justice," to use Lord Curzon's words, it is only right and proper that so considerable a portion of the Royal visit should be spent in Native State territories. And there, too, His Royal Highness will be able to indulge in his pet hobby, shooting. His Royal Highness is said to be one of the best shots in the world at feathered game, and he is also a good shot with a rifle. In the jungles of Mysore, Hyderabad and Nepal he will find some of the noblest game in all the world, and we may be sure that he will acquit himself well. The shooting camps, too, will enable Their Royal Highnesses to take some much-needed rest between the more busy and ceremonial portions of their tour.

In his farewell message to the City of London His Royal Highness alluded to "the varied and absorbing experiences of the coming months"; and one and all in India will hope that Their Royal Highnesses' pleasurable anticipations will be fully and completely realised, that their tour will be a perfect success throughout and that they will leave this country on their return to England well satisfied with their new experiences and with the warm welcome and respectful homage accorded to them by the Princes and people of India. With His Royal Highness, too, we may all earnestly express the hope "that by this journey the British Empire may derive some such lasting benefits as those which were the results of that memorable visit of His Majesty to the East thirty years ago."

Morning Advertiser.—Shortly before eleven yesterday the Renown, with the Prince and Princess of Wales on board, entered Bombay harbour. The good ship was an hour before her time, as if to display the eagerness with which the future Emperor of India looked forward to his visit. The day was specially appropriate. Not only was it the King's Birthday, and celebrated with almost as great enthusiasm in Bombay as in London, but it was also the anniversary of the day thirty years ago when His Majesty, also as Prince of Wales, first set foot upon Indian territory. This was a happy coincidence, and it shows that the Prince of Wales is as determined as was his Royal father to fit himself for his great position by acquiring a complete knowledge of the Empire. The Indian visit is in fact the complement of the Colonial tour which the Royal pair made only a few years ago. In the first instance the Prince had the opportunity of witnessing the success of the British Colonies under our liberal system of self-government. Now he will be equally fortunate in observing the progress of India under the British Raj. It is highly gratifying that Lord Curzon, the greatest Viceroy of modern times, should have recovered sufficiently from his recent illness to be able to receive Their Royal Highnesses at Bombay. For the rule of Lord Curzon has summed up and crowned the prosperity of India. Only the day before he had been glancing over the results of his stewardship, and declaring himself to be an optimist as regards the material progress of India. In six short years the advance has been extraordinary. First, the currency question has been settled. Then the problem of defence has been solved in a new form, the adventurous 'Forward' policy having given way to a system under which the various tribes on the North-Western frontier have been organised for its defence into a species of militia. Great progress has been made with the railway system. During Lord Curzon's tenure of power the surpluses derived from the railways have totalled four-and-a-half millions sterling. A railway network is being spread all over India. Irrigation works have also been planted wherever necessary. As a result plague and famine are disappearing, and the Treasury now shows an annual surplus. Education is being attended to in every branch, Lord Curzon's latest idea being the institution of agricultural colleges in all the provinces. Countless other examples of the Viceroy's zeal might be enumerated. But the general result has been to show the peoples of India what a measure of security and prosperity is guaranteed to them by British rule. The recognition of this fact must always be the best defence of India. The visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales, who will travel over India from Quetta to Mandalay, is the connecting link between this successful Government and the Imperial Power at home. It supplies just that personal element which is so effective with Asiatics. And the demonstration is all the more timely because it comes so soon after certain events which might unfortunately have tended to diminish the prestige and effect of the British Raj in our great dependency. Competent observers, whilst doing full justice to Lord Curzon's achievements, tell us that there has been a strong revulsion of native opinion in favour of the retiring Viceroy. The Indian peoples at last begin to realise what Lord Curzon has done, and what they are losing by his retirement. As he has said himself, it is a magnificent property that he is handing over to his successor. And it is well that the Heir to the Throne should have the opportunity of inspecting it at the present time.

Morning Post.—Bombay was astir with the dawn. The intense heat of the present season, which has recently reached 90 degrees in the shade, was this morning tempered by a pleasant sea breeze.

At eight o'clock, on a signal from His Majesty's cruiser Hyacinth, all the ships in harbour, including the Portuguese cruiser Sao Gabriel, were dressed rainbow fashion in honour of the King's birthday.

At five minutes to eleven, a full hour before she was due, the Renown entered the harbour amid the thunder of a royal salute of 31 guns. Twenty minutes later the Prince's vessel anchored about a mile from shore alongside the cruisers Hyacinth and Terrible, while a couple of miles further out the cruisers Proserpine and Fox took their stations in line ahead between His Majesty's cruiser Perseus and the Sao Gabriel. The Renown and her escort, like the other shipping, were dressed in honour of the King's birthday.

As soon as the Renown had come to anchor, Rear-Admiral E. S. Poo, Commanding the East Indies Squadron, and the other official personages paid the usual formal visits to the ship. At noon the birthday salute was fired.

The Bunder had been transformed into a spacious marquee, a large square space being covered in with red and white cloth hangings enclosing Oriental plants. Immediately beyond the landward side of the marquee was a platform for the municipal reception, flanked by sufficient chairs to accommodate some four thousand spectators. The reception ceremony began at three with the arrival of Lord and Lady Curzon at the Bunder. A guard of honour was furnished by the Scots Guards. As the Viceroy went on board the Renown the saluting battery fired a royal salute. Conspicuous among the brilliant crowd which assembled on the Bunder were the native Chiefs including the Maharaja of Kolhapur, the Rao of Cutch, the Nawab of Junagarh, Jam Sahib of Navanagar, Thakor Sahib of Bhaunagar, Raj Sahib of Dhrangadra, the Raja of Rajpipla, the Nawab of Cambay, the Rana of Porbandar, and the Thakor Sahib of Gondal. The Consuls-General and the Judges were present in their uniforms and robes.

A few minutes after Lord Curzon had gone on board the Governor of Bombay, Lord Lamington, followed him, accompanied by the Chief Justice, the Bishop of Bombay, and the Members of the Bombay Council, all of whom were presented to the Prince and Princess of Wales.

At ten minutes to 5 fresh thunders of artillery announced that the royal party had left the Renown, and soon a light green barge flying the Royal Standard at the bow was seen rapidly gliding towards the Bunder. The guard of honour presented arms and the band played "God Save the King" as the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Viceroy, and Lady Curzon ascended the gangway, attended by their suites.

The reception proceeded forthwith, the first to greet the Prince and Princess being General Sir Archibald Hunter, Commanding the Forces, with whom was a distinguished staff, including Sir Pratap Singh, who was present as aide-de-camp to the King.

Lord Lamington presented the Chiefs and notabilities with whom the Prince shook hands. After these salutations the party ascended the platform. The Prince took his place in the middle of the platform, having at his right the Princess and Lord Lamington, and on his left Lord and Lady Curzon.

All remarked with pleasure how extremely well the Prince looked. He wore a white uniform with medals, and the Ribbon of the Star of India. The Princess looked charming in a white dress trimmed with pale blue silk. Her only jewels were a pearl necklace and a turquoise brooch and turquoise earrings. A great shout of welcome mingled with the clapping of hands as the Royal pair stood forth on the platform, and they had no sooner taken their positions than Sir Piroozshah Mehta, President of the Corporation, mounted the steps halfway and read the Municipal address in a loud clear voice in excellent English. It was enclosed in a superb cabinet, an original feature of which is a panel showing a map of India, with the towns indicated by diamonds, rubies, and emeralds.

The address was read out and the Prince of Wales replied immediately after the conclusion of the speech the Royal and Viceregal parties and their suites entered carriages and drove over a long route through the city to the Government House. They were everywhere acclaimed by crowds with enthusiasm.

Nottingham Daily Express.—Every loyal subject of the Empire will give good wishes to the Prince and Princess of Wales, who yesterday arrived at Bombay — the starting-point of their Indian tour. The Princess in particular has the sympathy of all loving mothers in the sacrifice she has been called upon to make in leaving the children to whom she is devoted. It is one of the penalties of her high position, and her fulfilment of a useful duty cannot be accomplished without much natural anxiety as to the precious family left behind. Fortunately, the young princes and their little sister have been remarkably healthy, and the youngest of all is no exception to this satisfactory rule. They are brought up in a very simple and wholesome fashion, and, no doubt, owe their excellent physique to the sensible and reasonable childhood they have been allowed to enjoy. Those who do not know much of India may perhaps have wondered why, under the circumstances, the Princess could not have been left beside her infant son; but all who interest themselves in this most important part of the Empire will feel how gracious an influence the visit of a Royal lady will certainly exercise.

At the time of the death of our venerated Queen Victoria, the evidences of grief for her — fondly called the "Great White Mother" by loyal Indian lips — were especially touching. The poorest women brought their votive offerings of flowers to lay at the feet of her statues. They realised that this mysterious ruler was a woman like themselves, and they knew that she had done her utmost to make them wiser and happier. She had not come in person to visit them, but she had sent as her deputies ladies of high rank who did their very utmost to represent her worthily. It is only recently that the doors of the Zenanas, so jealously guarded for centuries, were opened for the admission of those true missionaries, the English woman doctors. Leaving religion quite out of the question, the good done by the hand of woman doctors in India is so inestimable that it cannot be described. The ghastly custom of allowing widows to be burnt upon the funeral pyre was suppressed at the cost almost of revolt; but perhaps as much suffering has been spared by the gentler revolution accomplished by the brave and self-sacrificing women who year by year go forth to combat with death and disease.

From her girlhood, under the fostering care of a mother who manifested an untiring interest in good works, the Princess of Wales has occupied herself with charitable organisations. She has gone to India well qualified for the noble task of benefiting her poorer and humbler sisters in that country, and will not withhold the precious gift of sympathy from the lowliest. It is easy to picture the enthusiasm with which the ambassadress of the great King in the mysterious West will be received. She will appeal to the popular imagination as the near relation of Queen Victoria, and will do much by her mere presence to cement the ties of loyalty and fidelity. The Princess of Wales is, before all things, an Englishwoman, and showed her patriotism significantly by the fact that the many dresses prepared for the royal progress were all of British manufacture. These things may seem but trifles in the great game of politics, but they have their importance. The journey to India is a well-advised measure, and no part of it is more prudent than the inclusion of the consort of the Heir-Apparent in a voyage undertaken to make him personally acquainted with those over whom he may rule in the future.

Pall Mall Gazette.—The Prince of Wales has opened his Indian progress with one of the appropriate and effective speeches which we have come to expect from him on such occasions. He referred to the inevitable recollections of His Majesty's own visit to India thirty years ago, and spoke of it as a precedent now closely linked with the succession itself. No future heir to the English Crown, we may be sure, will neglect to qualify himself for his boundless responsibilities by seeking in time the acquaintance of those Dominions Beyond the Seas which embody so much of the strength, loyalty, and pride of the Empire. The present Heir-Apparent has given himself a preparation for the duties of government such as few Princes of this or any other country have ever enjoyed. His Indian tour, as he expressed it yesterday, is the culminating stage in a memorable exploration of the British possessions, which will bear valuable fruit in the close affection and understanding between the Empire and its future Sovereign.

Pioneer.—To-day is the birthday of the King-Emperor, and it will witness the landing of the Prince and Princess of Wales in India. No more auspicious date could possibly have been chosen, and Their Royal Highnesses are coming among us in the full assurance of a loyal and enthusiastic welcome. The whole city was astir yesterday, the principal incident to the day, being the arrival of the Portuguese cruiser San Gabriel, which has come from Mozambique via Goa in order to be present during the Royal visit. Salutes were fired and crowds watched the vessel as she came to anchor. Her commander, Senor de Mello, paid a visit to Rear-Admiral Poe on H.M.S. Hyacinth, and the usual international courtesies were exchanged. As the day wore on, crowds gathered to watch the progress of the decorations and enjoy gazing at those already completed. In the evening, all the streets about the Apollo Bunder were congested with traffic, and along the greater part of the route which the Royal party will follow there were throngs of people. The scene was one full of life and colour. Bombay is now a city of flags and streamers, with loyal mottoes on every hand and a wealth of decorative effect. During the night work was continued by electric light in some instances, and workmen are even now busy. The fullest response has been made in the business quarters to the invitation to make the route bright with colour, and the result is likely to be most gratifying to all concerned. There seems nothing lacking now to make the whole scene a brilliant one; but the weather continues intensely hot, and the troops on duty this afternoon will find their labours far from light. The Viceroy in his present weak state of health will also have his strength fully taxed by the ceremonials, extending over some three hours, as His Excellency and Lady Curzon have to go on board the Renown, and afterwards accompany the Prince and Princess of Wales to the landing place, where Their Royal Highnesses will be publicly received at the pavilion on the Apollo Bunder. Lord and Lady Curzon will proceed to Admiralty House on the conclusion of the ceremony, afterwards dining at Government House and then leaving for Agra.

The difficulty which arose owing to the names of the Corporation Municipal Commissioner and Sheriff not being included in the list of those receiving the Prince and Princess was settled yesterday afternoon, when Government conceded the point raised. A lamentable want of tact has been shown officially over this incident, and probably the less said about it the better. The action of Government in yielding at the last moment will possibly be misunderstood, but it was the only course left open to them after their initial mistake of considering the matter one of minor importance. The result was that it assumed a shape which might have had rather unpleasant consequences.

The following message has been sent to Sir Walter Lawrence by the Maharaja of Darbhanga as President of the Bharat Dharma Mahamandal:—

"The Bharat Dharma Mahamandal Association of the orthodox Hindu community of India request me as their President to offer most respectful and loyal welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival in India. The Mahamandal, as a purely non-political body, is mainly concerned with the advancement of the Hindu religion and the social progress of the community. They desire to make public expression of their gratitude at the full measure of religious liberty and the opportunities for progress they enjoy under the rule of His Majesty the King-Emperor, and on behalf of orthodox Hindus to be permitted to hope that Their Royal Highnesses will carry away with them many pleasurable memories of their visit to India and of the sincere devotion of its inhabitants to the British Crown."

The following message has been sent to Sir Walter Lawrence by the Vice-President of the Janakdharma Mandal:—

"I, on behalf of the Janak Dharma Mandal Provincial Organisation of Bharat Dharma Mahamandal, representing a section of His Imperial Majesty's loyal Hindu subjects, members of which assembled to-day at a meeting specially convened for the purpose of thanksgiving to the Almighty for the safe and happy arrival in India of Their Royal Highnesses, do hereby tender humblest homage and loyal welcome to Their Royal Highnesses in our native land."

In connection with the approaching Royal visit to Burma elaborate preparations are being made by the Customs and Port Trust authorities for the decoration and illumination of the Strand Road and Phayre Street, as well as all wharves and jetties under the jurisdiction of the Port Commissioners. The whole of the Customs House and Port Trust buildings will be magnificently illuminated, and the same arrangements in this respect will be adopted as when the late Prince Albert Victor, Duke of Clarence, visited Rangoon.

A public meeting was held to-day at Court House, presided over by Major Trevers, Cantonment Magistrate, to concert measures for celebrating the visit in February next of Their Royal Highnesses. As the Royal party will only drive through the cantonment on the way to the parade ground it was decided to decorate the route thence on a grand scale. A large sum of money was subscribed on the spot, and a Committee was appointed to carry out the details.

Times.—The Prince and Princess of Wales landed yesterday at Bombay and found themselves at once in one of those scenes of opulent colouring and varied magnificence of which the gorgeous East alone retains the secret in our somewhat drab and monotonous modern world. They must have been profoundly impressed by the novelty and brilliancy of the spectacle, which our Special Correspondent describes in our issue to-day, and even more profoundly moved by the enthusiastic loyalty of their reception. The whole city, both native and European, was gaily bedecked in their honour, while triumphal arches with inscriptions in many tongues reminded them of the great variety of races now dwelling together in amity under the protection of the British flag. Vast crowds eager to take part in the stately pageant filled the spacious streets of a city well adapted to do justice to such an occasion, while in the immediate neighbourhood of the Prince and Princess were gathered long-descended Rajput princes and chieftains in their bejewelled robes of State and accompanied by their picture-que and splendid retinues. Personal associations were not wanting to add emphasis, if addition were possible, to the emotions with which the Prince and Princess received their magnificent welcome. It was the birthday of the King-Emperor, celebrated under the Indian sun as loyally as in the grey weather of London. In addition the Prince remembered, and reminded his hearers, that it was just thirty years all but a day since his Royal father received a similar welcome from Bombay when about to realize what had been the dream of his life by seeing India. There is one important difference between the two visits which the loyal address of the Bombay Municipality did not fail to dwell upon. Her Royal Highness is the first Princess of Wales who has set foot on the shores of India, and her gracious presence will add indefinitely, in the eyes of the Indian peoples, to the significance of the Royal visit. To Bombay her presence is peculiarly grateful, because it may claim, as the address set forth, to be in a peculiar sense a Royal city, since it was part of the dowry brought by Katharine of Braganza to Charles II., and has thus been for more than two centuries closely associated with the English Crown. The Prince struck a chord which will vibrate, not only in Bombay, but throughout India, when he said that he had inherited from his father, and from his grandmother, a love for our great dependency, and that it is his earnest hope that he in turn may win the confidence of its people. Nor was he less loudly acclaimed when he expressed the hope that the visits of the heirs to the English Crown will continue from generation to generation.

From a public point of view the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales at the present moment may be regarded as peculiarly opportune. For they, standing aloof from all parties and above all temporary administrations, represent the permanent authority of the British Empire, the essential force which persists through all changes of personnel, and throughout the succession of generations. India has lately witnessed serious disagreement among those who temporarily carry on her affairs—disagreement perhaps partly personal and partly involving real divergences of policy. People have taken sides with a good deal of heat, and differences have not been lessened by public discussion carried on in such conditions. Disagreements of this kind are apt to assume undue proportions in the eyes of contemporaries, and indeed must inevitably suffer exaggeration when each side endeavours to strengthen its case by working out to what are assumed to be final issues the contentions put forth by the other. The Royal tour will tend to reduce such controversies to their true proportions and to place them in the proper perspective. It will very opportunely remind people that Viceroys and Commanders-in-Chief—even great Viceroys and renowned Generals—come and go, but that the Government of India remains. It will remind them that such disagreements may make a great commotion at the moment and may even indicate that mistakes are being made, yet that the mistakes are not irrevocable and that the incidents themselves are but moments in the life of a nation. Time puts a very different complexion upon human efforts from that which they bear at the moment, and sometimes shows that the results are something very different from what the wisest anticipated.

The Prince and Princess, as the representatives of that British Raj which has survived so many vicissitudes and so many mistakes, will help the Indian peoples to turn from the accidents of the moment to the enduring and fundamental characteristics of the British Government of India. They may do so all the more effectively because their visit coincides with a change in the Vicerealty. They will witness the departure of Lord Curzon, who with unsparing devotion has given his great abilities to the service of the people of India, and won for himself a very high place indeed in the line of Indian Viceroys. They will also welcome Lord Minto, who brings a great reputation won in Canada, and who, we doubt not, will with equal energy and devotion apply himself to the numerous problems of Indian Government. The people of India will see a Viceroy go and a Viceroy come, but at the same time they will have with them the heir to the Crown, the representative of the King-Emperor, and the embodiment of that enduring power and that continuing national life which work out the destinies of nations, according to laws of organic growth that the wisest among us are far from fathoming.

Times.—The guns have just announced that the Renown is in sight. Some hours will elapse before Their Royal Highnesses land, but Bombay has been since morning "ready, aye ready" to receive them.

Apart from the question of geographical convenience, it is essentially right and proper that the Heir-Apparent to the Throne should first set foot on Indian soil at Bombay. To begin with, it is through his royal forebears that Bombay, as part of the dowry brought by Katherine of Braganza to Charles II., originally came into British possession. In the second place, of all the chief ports of India none can rival either the natural advantages or even the beauty of its position. The distant view as you approach it from the sea still justifies the name conferred upon it nearly four centuries ago by the Portuguese pioneers of those Western forces which in later days and after many vicissitudes have made Bombay one of the greatest cities of an Empire in many ways unique in the world's history. It is still Bom Bahia, the Goodly Bay. In the far distance the rugged outline of the Western ghats, against which the southwest monsoon breaks with such elemental fury in the early summer months, stands out in purple relief against a cloudless sky, and gentler heights, clothed here and there with tropical vegetation, slope down towards the coast, or rise as islands out of the large and almost land locked bay on the northern entrance to which the city has grown up. Bombay itself lies stretched out on a long peninsula formed of a chain of mostly low-lying islands connected by causeways. Colaba Point, with its conspicuous lighthouse, and Malabar Hill, the favourite residential quarter of the city, form the horns of this peninsula, thrown out like a breakwater athwart the Indian Ocean. Behind the shelter which nature has thus kindly provided lies the busy harbour, furnished with docks and wharves and piers and all the appliances needed by modern shipping, which, at any rate since the opening of the Suez Canal, has become the chief centre of direct communication between Europe and the Indian sub-continent.

Above all, it is at Bombay that East meets West in a veritable clash of striking contrasts. The city itself is outwardly modern and European.

The old fort of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries is now little more than a name. The great piles of public buildings erected in every kind of Western style, most of them strangely ill-adapted to the East, which occupy the water frontage on both sides of the peninsula are essentially British, both as to their good points and their bad points. Yet just beyond these rather commonplace monuments of our practical civilization, and facing the stately drive which sweeps along Back Bay to Malabar Hill, there rises night and day a column of light blue smoke from the hindu burning-place, where successive generations of Hindus commit their dead to the flames with funeral rites as ancient perhaps as any in the world. On Malabar Hill itself the residence of his Excellency the Governor of Bombay is a less conspicuous feature than the grim Towers of Silence, where the Parsis—a community in many ways more progressive, more accessible to Western ideas of education and even of social life, more heartily loyal to the British Raj than perhaps any other Indian community—still expose the bodies of their dead in all reverence to a form of destruction peculiarly repugnant to our feelings. There are plenty of old-world cities in India which the breath of the West has never reached, where the European traveller feels himself altogether a stranger lost in a strange land. On the ghats of the Sacred Ganges at Banaras, or under the shadow of the Temple of Jagannath at Puri, or amidst the fantastic Dravidian shrines of Southern India, the West is so remote that the East seems alone to be real. But in Bombay the dual presence of both East and West assert itself at every turn, and behind the familiar facade of this great Indo-European city, where there are not 20 Europeans, including the garrison, to every thousand of its three-quarters of a million native population, one feels, as perhaps nowhere else, the ceaseless energy of those Western forces which are relentlessly working to mould an Eastern world into European shades.

In one direction, at any rate, the West has visibly asserted its supremacy in Bombay. Western industry has laid hold of it. The heavy pall of smoke which constantly hangs over the populous quarters of the city, and sometimes obscures even a tropical sun, announces from afar that Bombay is not only the Liverpool but also the Manchester of India. For Bombay has become the centre of the great cotton industry which grew up during the American Civil War. Of the 337 factories connected with the cotton industry of the Bombay Presidency more than a third, and these by far the most important, are in Bombay itself, where over 113,000 operatives out of 182,000 in the whole Presidency, according to the last Administrative report for 1903-1904, or one in seven of the whole population of the city, were employed as factory hands. Nor have the social problems connected with modern industrial developments lost anything of their gravity by being transplanted from the West into the East. Recent investigations have shown the conditions of daily toil and the competition for labour to be perhaps even more severe in Bombay than in our great manufacturing centres at home, whilst neither public opinion nor legislation, nor combination amongst the workers themselves has yet availed to check to the same extent as in England the evils of excessive hours of labour and of overcrowded tenements. In Bombay the contrasts between wealth and poverty, between luxury and squalor, are as vivid and as alarming as in any of our own cities. The plague is a mysterious disease of which the secret still baffles modern science, but it is difficult to believe that it ravages have not been aggravated in Bombay, where, ever since the first broke out in 1896, it has found a peculiarly favourable soil, by the deplorable conditions of life which prevails amongst the close-packed labouring classes of the city. But for the plague there is little doubt that Bombay would have ere this outstripped Calcutta in respect of population. Under this scourge its population, which had risen from 773,000 in 1881 to 821,000 in 1891—an increase of 6 per cent. during that decade—actually decreased in slightly more than the same proportion during the next decade, and in 1901 had fallen back to 770,000. In spite of every effort to combat the fell disease by prophylactic measures of sanitation as well as by unremitting vigilance of medical treatment, the death-roll of the last twelve-month has been as heavy as that of any of its predecessors.

Fortunately, though one cannot ignore altogether the darker side of the picture presented by the contact of the West with the East in Bombay, there is altogether a brighter side which affords ample encouragement for the future. It is reflected in many of the great buildings with which this great city abounds, in its schools and colleges, in its libraries and public institutes, in its hospitals and model dwelling-houses—in a word in all those varied manifestations of private munificence as well as of intelligent government by both State and municipality which are the hall-mark of Western civilization.

In spite, therefore, of many dark shadows, Bombay is pre-eminently an Imperial city, worthy to be the first to welcome the Heir to the Empire of India, and to-day, at any rate, she has forgotten all her trials in order to give him a truly Imperial greeting.

The whole city, native and European, has burst into a galaxy of hunting, nowhere, perhaps, more effective than where the broad avenues of stately trees, thickly garlanded with flags, resembled some enchanted forest blossoming into every colour of the rainbow. Triumphant arches with loyal inscriptions in many tongues; miles almost of stands, presently to be lined with thousands of spectators, each bringing some fresh colour into the scene; troops, Indian and European, of every arm, moving to their allotted stations, either to line the streets or to join themselves in the Royal procession; brilliant cortèges of Indian chiefs, escorted by their own picturesque retainers; vast crowds of humbler folk, making betimes for some coign of vantage, some in bullock carts or other quaint conveyances, but the majority afoot—these are only some of the most salient features of the spectacle illuminated by the blazing Indian sun which this great spacious city in the throes of expectation has presented for the last few hours.

Times of India.—The citizens of Bombay yesterday gave Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales a magnificent and right royal welcome. The reception was worthy of the First City in India, and of the greatness of the occasion. It was a people's day and as such it will be ever remembered. Bombay has never before witnessed such a scene of intense enthusiasm, and the fervent loyalty of the greeting surpassed all expectations. From one end of the Royal route to the other, the streets were lined with expectant crowds from early morning. If the Indian people are not as noisily demonstrative as a London crowd would be upon a like occasion, they nevertheless have their own expressive and significant methods of indicating their loyalty and reverence; and the salaming hosts that greeted the Prince and Princess as they drove smiling and responsive through the streets, formed a touching and impressive spectacle. The most remarkable feature of the demonstration was its absolute spontaneity. That, indeed, has been the keynote of all the elaborate preparations made in Bombay to welcome Their Royal Highnesses to this ancient and historic land. The reception has been organised and carried out very largely by the people themselves, through their chosen representatives. For weeks bands of ardent workers have been labouring early and late, organising ceremonies, arranging decorations, formulating programmes. The earlier visits and presentations which followed the arrival of H.M.S. Renown at noon, represented the official greeting of Their Royal Highnesses to India and to this Presidency; but from the moment the Royal visitors emerged into the great amphitheatre at the Apollo Bunder where thousands of representatives of the city were assembled, the welcome was the city's own. It was an object lesson revealing in the most striking manner the genuine and sincere loyalty of the natives of India to the British Throne. It was the unthought and voluntary rendering of that homage to the King-Emperor and the members of his family, which it is at once the pleasure and the privilege of the people of this country to avow. It was the willing demonstration of a free people who gladly own allegiance to the Royal House of Great Britain.

The Prince and Princess of Wales will pass through many varied and striking scenes during their interesting tour, but nowhere will they see a city more picturesque, or a population more loyal, than they encountered yesterday at the Gateway of India. Bombay was the first place in India to come under British rule; it is essentially a creation of the British; some of its inhabitants have known no other form of sovereignty for many generations. Hence it is not surprising if the sentiment of adherence to the throne is especially strong and potent in this island. But the warmth of the enthusiasm with which the Prince and Princess were hailed yesterday was not stimulated by loyalty alone. It was also an expression of that close and intimate interest which is everywhere felt in their visit. The sense of the honour they have done to the people of India by coming among them is deep and profound. It is recognised that not only by reason of their exalted position, but also because of their attractive personalities, they are visitors whom India rejoices to acclaim. The agreeable anticipations which both the Prince and Princess have cherished regarding their sojourn in India are widely known and deeply appreciated. They have made it common knowledge that they wish to meet the people upon such terms of intimacy as is permissible, and it is felt that there is to be no mere royal progress where remoteness is a prominent feature, but that they are anxiously desirous of learning as much as possible of the people over whom they will one day be called upon to rule. The Prince of Wales has repeatedly and publicly expressed the regret he has felt at his inability to visit India at an earlier period of his life; while the studious attention which the Princess of Wales has long given to the affairs of India, its history, its cities, and the characteristics of its myriad inhabitants, can only be compared to the devoted and sympathetic ardour with which the late Queen-Empress turned to questions affecting India, right down to the close of her long reign. Sympathy, indeed, is the attribute which will strike the people of India most in the Princess of Wales when Her Royal Highness has once moved among them.

So the great and long-anticipated day has come and gone, and all is well. India has signified its joy that the Prince and Princess have landed on its shores, and is prepared to do its utmost to see that their stay is thoroughly enjoyable. Their Royal Highnesses arrive in the country at a time when it is entering upon a period of unexampled prosperity; and in this respect their advent is peculiarly auspicious. They come to India at the very close of a great Viceroyalty, one result of which has been to place every branch of the Administration in a condition of efficiency such as it has never before presented. It was an appropriate and thoughtful consideration on the part of the King-Emperor, for a brilliant and faithful servant of the Crown, that prompted His Majesty to direct that the Viceroy should remain in India to welcome Their Royal Highnesses on arrival. Had Lord Curzon been under the necessity of passing the Royal visitors in mid-ocean, unfortunate and regrettable inferences might have been drawn; and the prestige of the office of the King-Emperor's viceroy has not been so conserved of late by the Home Government, as to render advisable any further diminution of its influence. Perhaps the visit of the Prince and Princess will tend to restore that belief in the high position and visible authority of the King-Emperor's representative, which has been so rudely shaken in recent months; that despite what has occurred, the personal popularity of the Viceroy is higher than ever before, was remarkably manifested by the warmth with which he was greeted as he drove through the city to the Apollo Bunder. The events of yesterday will ever be remembered in Bombay with pride and gratification. On all hands there are enthusiastic comments upon the genial manner of the Prince of Wales; while the gracious bearing of the Princess created an ineffaceable impression. One remarkably general opinion deserves to be placed on record. Every one who was present agreed afterwards that the central feature of the proceedings at Apollo Bunder was not the greetings, or the brilliant spectacle, or the ceremonial aspects of the function; the greatest success, and the thing that impressed the gathering most, was the speech of the Prince of Wales, of which the whole city is talking. It was delivered with a calm directness and vigour and intensity that profoundly gratified those who listened; the words of His Royal Highness were clearly heard at a distance that was totally unexpected; and it conveyed a subtle suggestion of strength and high capacity that is still the subject of constant and admiring remark. If first impressions count for anything, the Prince of Wales has, alike by his speech and the manner of its delivery, captured the hearts and the imaginations of the thousands who were privileged to listen to it. It was a graceful and well-conceived oration, moreover, and Bombay will not soon forget His Royal Highness's inspiring recognition of the fact that the city 'has to live up to its position. It will be remembered side by side with his memorable counsel to England to "Wake up" and will incite the leaders of the city, to whose labours such an agreeable reference was made, to a larger appreciation of the greatness of their task. The Prince said he and the Princess wish to carry home with them, not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but an increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems. That the affection which all hope our august visitors will conceive for India, is certain to be heartily reciprocated, is already apparent. The Royal couple have won the hearts of all beholders; the simple dignity of their demeanour deeply touched the throngs who gazed upon them; we believe their visit will produce a feeling of personal endearment towards them, and will tend to strengthen still further the bonds that indissolubly bind India to the Royal Family of Great Britain. India welcomes them, not only for the great power and traditions they personify, but for their own sakes; and it is in that spirit that Their Royal Highnesses would undoubtedly elect to be received. And as for the way the people rejoice at their arrival, we commend to attention the striking testimony of a Hindu correspondent which we print this morning. He tells us that to his countrymen the very sight of Royalty is auspicious; and thousands will for years to come loyally attribute such good fortune as may befall them to the glimpses they obtained yesterday of the Prince and Princess of Wales. It is thus the high privilege of the gracious personages who are now amongst us, to bring sunlight and happiness into many a humble home, to an extent far greater than they can possibly have dreamed of. Such is the simple and reverent faith of the people of India in the beneficent and happy influence of the presence of their rulers.

'Western Daily Press.'—Slightly in advance of the appointed time H.M.S. Renown yesterday arrived in the harbour at Bombay, and the Prince and Princess of Wales set foot on Indian soil in pursuance of their prolonged tour through the Dependency. Bombay has for many weeks been in a fever of preparation for the Royal visit, and yesterday the scene at the reception was impressive in its colour and movement. Happily, after all, Lord Curzon, the retiring Viceroy, was enabled to bid the Royal travellers welcome at Bombay, and this circumstance could scarcely have failed to give the liveliest satisfaction to those who realise how Lord Curzon has bound himself up with the modern destinies of India. The passage of the Heir to the British Crown and his Consort through one of the gates of India is an event that will greatly impress the native imagination, more especially as it is the first occasion on which a Princess of Wales has visited India, a circumstance to which the Prince yesterday made special reference in his dignified speech in reply to the address of Welcome. Bombay is always a kaleidoscopic city, but yesterday it was a perfect blaze of colour. The native chiefs had come down with their glittering retinues to the coast to welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales, and their presence there added enormously to the picturesqueness of the spectacle. Besides, their participation in the ceremony was an earnest of the loyalty and devotion of the powerful native races, to whose goodwill much of the success of British administration in India is due. For the first time in their lives the Prince and Princess of Wales entered Bombay in state, and though they have beheld in the course of their travels much in the way of Oriental pageantry, they could scarcely fail to be struck by the charm and vivacity of the scene. Bombay is the second city in India, and the third in point of size in the British Empire. London and Calcutta take the lead, but there are critics who do not hesitate to declare that in due time Bombay will stand next to London in point of population and commercial importance. It has been the unfortunate experience of Bombay to suffer severely during recent years from the bubonic plague. The scourge did not quite decimate the native population; but it claimed thousands of victims, so that the normal growth of the population has been considerably retarded. It is hoped, however, that the measures enforced by the European administration—measures which were fiercely resented by the Hindus, the Parsis, and the Mohammedans—may offer some guarantee against a recurrence of the pestilence in its more violent form and that Bombay will soon assert its recuperative power. In the course of a decade or so Bombay may rise to the exalted position of the chief gate of India. As to the material and artistic aspects of the city as it is now, it would not be easy to find a more graphic and convincing word-picture than that penned by the late

Mr. G. W. Stevens, the Walter Scott of newspaper correspondents. "The decoration of Bombay," he wrote, "is henceforth in its people. Under the quaint sun-hoods that push out over the serried windows of the lodging-houses, along the rickety, painless balconies and verandahs, over the tottering roofs, only the shabbiness of the dusty and dirty plaster relieves the gorgeousness of one of the most astounding collections of human animals in the world. Every race has its own costume, so that the streets of Bombay are a tulip-garden of vermilion turbans and crimson, orange and flame colour, of blazing purple, or green that shines like a grasshopper—each hue alive and quivering passionately like the tropical sun at mid-day." Such was Bombay in its normal aspect. What it was yesterday, when a carefully-organised artistry lent its aid, can, perhaps, be better imagined than described.

It is pleasant to dwell upon the conception of this dazzling blaze of colour, whilst we in England are environed by the dull uncertainties of November. Yet the grey and fog-bound land and that which palpitates with all the hues of the rainbow are under the same sovereignty. Nothing perhaps can bring more forcibly home to the imagination the extent of the British Empire than these striking contrasts; and the Prince and Princess of Wales have not, according to the remarks of His Royal Highness yesterday, been slow to appreciate the significance of the lesson thus enforced. India is, indeed, one of the world's wonders, as well as one of its most perplexing problems. In his most recent speech Lord Curzon sounded a note of optimism regarding the future of India. Its magnificent traditions are, of course, imperishable, but the retiring Viceroy believes that the economic destiny of India will be a great one. The things that are needed to increase the commercial importance of the country are more extensive irrigation works, the multiplication of railways, and, perhaps, the better education of the people in the more elementary rules of sanitation. The proper distribution of the water-supply amongst the parched areas would tend to reduce to the vanishing point the risk of famine which so often broods like a shadow over India. The wider ramification of the railway systems would accelerate a great trade development, and ensure a more equal distribution of food-stuffs in times of scarcity; whilst the awakening of the people in the sanitary sense would afford some guarantee against the outbreak in severely epidemic form of the cholera, plague, and other deadly diseases which arrest the growth of population. But there is another Indian necessity to which Lord Curzon made special allusion. The Viceroy is not satisfied that everything has been done that might be done for India in the matter of telegraphic intercommunication. He advocated the cheapening of the cablegram to and from India and Great Britain. Thanks to the exertions of Mr. Henniker Heaton, India is now linked up to the Mother Country by penny postage; and the time may not be far distant when the rates of inland telegrams and cables may be reduced to a figure much below that which is now in force. Lord Curzon declared that if the cable rate to England were reduced to six pence a word, the almost indescribable ignorance prevailing in each country about the other would no longer exist. This declaration is probably well-founded. It represents, at least, the conviction of a statesman who is perfectly familiar with his own country and with that in which he has figured so brilliantly and ably as the representative of the Emperor of India. All these changes will have to be brought about gradually; but it is evident that the Prince and Princess of Wales will find during their tour in India much that will convey to them the enormous resources of this particular region of the British Empire, and they will not fail to appreciate the equally enormous potentialities of the Dependency which, under the influence of the "British Raj," has in recent years made such marked headway. In his speech at Bombay yesterday the Prince of Wales dwelt on the triumphs and achievements of India in the past, and His Royal Highness seemed to be moved by the conviction that greater things are in store. Indeed, the ceremony of yesterday, the loyal addresses, the Royal declarations of sympathy and satisfaction with India all formed parts of a mosaic of "sane Imperialism."

Westminster Gazette.—The Prince and Princess of Wales found a warm welcome awaiting them when they landed at Bombay yesterday, a welcome accentuated by the fact that it was the King's birthday. The city was en fête, and the reception was of a character which augurs well for the Royal tour. The Prince, in replying to the Corporation address, naturally referred to the King's previous visit thirty years ago, and, as he happily put it,—“If as we travel through the various countries which make up this great Empire the Princess and I can win the sympathy and good will of the peoples of India, we shall secure a precious result from the voyage we have been privileged to undertake. The Prince and Princess have begun well at Bombay, and they carry with them the best wishes of us all.”

Ashton Underlyne Harold.—The arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales this week at Bombay marks the commencement of a tour which cannot but be of the greatest possible interest to Their Royal Highnesses, and at the same time will add another chapter to the fascinating history of a country whose records and monuments go back to the time, more than three thousand years ago, when Aryan invaders found in the land a primitive people whose origin is almost unknown. The Royal visitors will have the opportunity of studying on the spot the remarkable story of this museum of races, and of observing the effect upon them of Western civilisation, so far as it has been able to penetrate in so vast an area, and the beneficent results of British rule. For a few days the Prince and Princess remain at Bombay, in some respects the finest city in India, presenting to the traveller who approaches it by water one of the most splendid panoramas in the world. Leaving Bombay next week, and travelling by way of the Rajput capitals, the Royal visitors will find themselves, at the end of November, in Lahore, the scene of many a deadly and devastating struggle, until it was occupied by the British in 1846. Amid all this strife, the city attained to something of its present fame and magnificence under the rule of such enlightened Sovereigns as the great Akbar and the cultured Shah Jahan. Early in December there will be a muster of troops in the neighbourhood of Rawal Pindi, no fewer than fifty thousand men of the British and native armies being engaged in the operations. At Amritsar, the first mission station of the Church of England in the Punjab, is seen the holy reservoir, which was built in 1581, and restored by the Sikhs after its destruction by Ahmad Shah. Delhi, which has been within recent years the scene of many brilliant pageants, will be visited in the middle of December. In 1877 it was the scene of the famous darbar, at which Queen Victoria was proclaimed Empress of India, and more recently of the splendid ceremonials which attended the proclamation of King Edward VII. The next stopping place will be Agra, where the buildings erected by Shah Jahan bear eloquent testimony to the taste and skill of the Indian architects of that time. Most famous of all is that wonderful monument of human affection, the Taj Mahal, which still bears for the cynic its witness to the fact that marriage is not always a failure, even in oriental lands. The finest mausoleum in the world, it was erected by Shah Jahan for the remains of his favourite wife and became subsequently his own burial place. It is recorded that the work required the labour of 20,000 workmen for a period of twenty years. The precious stones with which a large portion of the work is inlaid form the most beautiful and precious style of adornment ever adopted in architecture. A visit to Gwalior will bring the tour up to Christmas. Before their Royal Highnesses leave India, in March, they will make a prolonged stay at Calcutta, which will no doubt be the most important event of their tour. There is already every indication that the number of visitors to the city will be the largest on record, and various expedients are being adopted in order to accommodate them.

Birmingham Daily Post.—The visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India contains all the elements of the picturesque so attractive to the Oriental mind. That a glamour of sovereignty and the love of display are potent factors to be reckoned with in the governing of an Eastern nation no one possessing even a superficial acquaintance with Asiatic problems will deny. The appreciation of those facts by the Home Government has long been marked in the care that governs the selection of Viceroy. That official is expected to uphold the dignity of the British overlordship in such a manner that no injurious comparison can be instituted between the state kept up by the King's representative and that of the native rulers. Incidentally, we may note the remarkable success that has attended in this direction the efforts of Lord Curzon, the retiring Viceroy, whose term of office practically ends in the blaze of Imperial pageantry that was inaugurated by the landing of Their Royal Highnesses on Thursday in Bombay. Lord Curzon, indeed, has been signally charged with onerous duties of the kind that are now falling to him, beyond the lot of any other of the long line of distinguished men who have preceded him in his exalted position. Memories of the Delhi Durbar will inevitably arise in the course of the present tour. They may, perhaps, challenge comparison, for the dazzling splendours of the Coronation reception fêtes are not likely to yield in spectacular glitter and imposing effect—less in what is seen, possibly, than in the suggestion thereby conveyed to a reflective mind—even to the superb displays incident to a Royal progress. We at home are acquainted with such proceedings in our own land only through the medium of history. English monarchs, we know, were wont in days gone by to flatter their liege subjects, and perchance to cajole them into allegiance, by letting them see what Royalty could, when it chose, attain in the matter of stately ceremonial. But those times have long passed away in the West. Save for the Coronation itself and the revived State openings of the Legislature, we should be seldom reminded of the ancient pomp that distinguished regal potentates. In the East, however—the gorgeous, slowly-moving East—they order these things differently. If a man there essays to rule he must play up to his rank, and look his part. No pinchbeck assumption will there avail. His scale of magnificence is limited only by the depth of his coffers, and not always by that. This rigour of ceremonial is, however, but the outward trapping and decking of a principle, in the case of British sway over India all-important, the principle of prestige. That is the open secret that, until recently, too many politicians at home could not, or would not, recognise. Once this point is conceded, the methods of Imperial rule in India become easy of understanding. In accordance with them, and, therefore, in strict harmony with the principle of prestige, has the present tour of the Heir Apparent and his Consort been undertaken.

The happy chance of coincidence never had fitter illustration than in the fact that just thirty years ago King Edward himself landed in the identical city that has now received his son with an effusion of spontaneous welcome. In 1875 the then Prince of Wales set out upon what up to that time was a journey unheard of since the days of Alexander. The famous Macedonian, indeed, sallied forth conquering and to conquer. Having but tapped, as it were, the almost infinite capacity of India as a realm, his career was cut short with a sigh that there were no more worlds to conquer. Could he have foreseen the brilliant possibilities of a later age his sentiments, and possibly his expedition itself, might have experienced a change. The journey of our own King, under brighter auspices, was to unify sentiment in a land already loyal in essence, and to focus it upon the Throne of Great Britain. The two expeditions could not well have been more unlike, apart from the not unimportant historical fact that in each instance the dominant Power was European. The tradition of loyalty so well emphasised, if not instituted, by his father, is not likely to suffer diminution at the hands of the Prince of Wales, and it is no light satisfaction to reflect that the Royal tour will, in this respect, be to all intents and purposes, a formality only. Never in the history of British rule in India has the loyalty of the native Princes been so well assured as at the present time. This is in itself a tribute to the judicious attitude adopted by Lord Curzon throughout the extended period of his administration. Apart from some local difference of opinion in Bengal, the whole of the Dependency is united in regretting the impending departure of the present Viceroy. The Prince of Wales accordingly has before him the grateful task of setting before a loyal people the sentiments not only of the King-Emperor, but those which animate their fellow-subjects throughout the Empire. What these are needs no amplification. The speech of His Royal Highness in reply to the address of the Bombay Corporation couched in singularly felicitous terms, puts clearly before the world the sentiments of the Crown towards its brightest jewel. What the Prince and Princess admittedly aim at in the course of their visit is the gaining of the sympathy and goodwill of the peoples in India. Than this there could be nothing more conducive to the prosperity of India, and, as a consequence, of the Empire as a whole. With that excellent ambition is to be classed another that may be looked upon as the most important part of the Royal tour. Increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems is the keynote happily struck in the opening address, and from it may justifiably be derived augury of felicitous and abundant promise.

Another historic event, that of the "Field of the Cloth of Gold," is suggested by the reception of the native chiefs of the Presidency at Government House yesterday. This imposing ceremonial seems to have been stately and dignified in a marked degree. Nothing that Oriental taste of European diplomacy could suggest was lacking. Essentially the feature of the proceedings was the rendering of homage. Such an act has an old-world ring to the Western ear, but Asia is before all things placid and suspicious of change. It was in accord, therefore, with the best and most cherished tradition of Eastern rule that the Heir to the Imperial title should be the recipient of the formal acknowledgment of the suzerainty of the British Raj. Here we may note a significant and entirely hopeful feature. Only one of the tributary potentates delivered his felicitations in a language other than English. Surely no tribute of ancient or modern times can compare with this in important relation to political ascendancy. Not only is the dominion of Great Britain acknowledged on the distant shores of India, but the native chiefs manifest sufficient interest towards and loyalty in that ascendancy to become expert in the English tongue. The fact, we may also observe, that the presentation of the address of the Bombay Corporation took place on the anniversary of His Majesty, accentuates the felicity of the occasion. The assurances of loyalty, therefore were, as His Royal Highness remarked, especially gratifying.

One remark made by the Prince deserves noting. He referred to the visit as the last stage in the mission of himself and the Princess four years ago through the great colonial possessions of the Empire. We are thus led to reflect upon the approaching consummation of a well-conceived plan, by means of which the Heir-Apparent will have completed an acquaintance with all the main portions of the dominions of which he will some day be called upon to hold the Sovereignty. This is a record that, in view of the vast extent of the British domain, may well invite a parallel in ancient or modern times. A curious historical eminence may likewise be observed in the claim of Bombay to be considered a Royal city by virtue of its being part of the dowry of a Stuart Sovereign's Portuguese bride. We are thus carried back two centuries in the continuity of English political connection with India. There is something in this fact for even Legitimists to rejoice over. The latest event of the tour up to now—the drive through the bazaar and the opening of the new thoroughfare, auspiciously named Princess Street, served to emphasise the overflowing loyalty and enthusiasm of the native population towards the Prince and Princess, who could not have been greeted with more unbounded joy in the Empire's capital itself.

Daily Express, London.—The Prince of Wales had a striking reception by the Indian princes to-day.

He sat in state at Government House, surrounded by his staff and by the feudal nobles of Bombay. To him came all the great chiefs now gathered in Bombay. They advanced their bare swords in token of fealty, and offered rich gifts of gold in token of homage. The Prince touched the swords and remitted the gifts.

Then each chief, sitting one step beneath the throne, had the privilege of fifteen minutes' conversation with the Prince—neither more or less. They arrived in order of precedence, the majestic Maharaja of Kolhapur leading the way.

During the afternoon the Prince and Princess drove in state through the bazaars. The Prince was in grey, and wore a grey helmet. The Princess wore a cool costume of pale blue and pink. They had a bodyguard of Bombay Cavalry and Imperial Cadets. In the procession were the 10th Hussars and a battery of khaki guns.

It was a wonderful procession, full of strange sights and throbbing colours, and most wonderful of all by reason of the multitudes of people. No English crowd could press itself into so small a space. The natives were so tightly packed on the footpath that the procession could scarcely make its way through, and hundreds of excited natives were perched on the roofs or poised on the gilded carvings of the walls. Shrill cries of welcome came from every hand, and the warmest and most poetic greetings were for the Princess.

At the corner of Bombay's fine new street, which has been named Princess Street, in honour of the visit, the procession stopped, and the Princess, by touching an electric button, unveiled the name of the thoroughfare. Parsees presented flowers to Her Royal Highness; the authorities gave her a bouquet of York roses; the band played the National Anthem, and its harmonies were almost drowned in the frantic bursts of cheering.

The procession passed through the people's fair on the Maidan, and the Princess was held to have started the festival, whereupon the swings and merry-go-rounds were set going at a furious rate.

The Prince afterwards held a levée, which was attended by all the officials and leading residents of Bombay; and in the evening a banquet was given at Government House.

Daily Mail.—Education of the native chief to a sense of his responsibilities is one of the most beneficent reforms introduced in India of recent years. Time was when the native ruler was devoted solely to pleasure, and became a profligate or debauchee. This has been changed, and the chiefs have been trained to their duty towards their subjects and the Imperial Government, so that they may no longer be a source of extravagance and menace. Some have taken kindly to the new rôle and bask in the smiles of the Viceroy, while others cling to evil habits, and their presence never darkens the threshold of the Emperor's representative.

This morning the Prince of Wales received visits from ten native chiefs, who laid before him tribute of gold mohurs. It was a picturesque and solemn ceremony, for which the throne room of Government House was spread with carpet of cloth of gold. Crimson-robed attendants stood behind chairs of state, with white plumed fans and golden maces. On the left-hand of the Prince, seated in gilded chairs, were Political Officers and members of the suite. On the right were ranged similar chairs of state for feudal chieftains, who came with their trains.

A prince's salute of nineteen guns announced the arrival of the Maharaja of Kolhapur, the great Marathi chief, sole survival of the native rulers of the South Deccan, resplendent in turban of dark crimson and gold and a robe of delicate pink. He was conducted to the throne, where he took a seat on the right of the Prince, and offered his tribute of gold in a silken bag. The Prince rested his fingers on the gold in token of remission.

After brief conversation, the feudal nobles were presented in order of precedence, each offering tribute, which was duly remitted.

Attar of roses and pan or betel nut, were then brought in silver vessels to the Prince, who gave of them to the Maharaja in token of amity. The feudal nobles afterwards received them at the hands of a Political Officer, who acted as chamberlain. In fifteen minutes the ceremony ended. The Prince accompanied the chief some paces where he took leave.

To the Maharaja succeeded the Rao of Cutch, who received a salute of seventeen guns. The Rao rules a unique State that holds fast to immemorial customs and traditions, and into whose sandy isolation no railway yet has penetrated.

After him came the most romantic figure of all—a little man, dark-bearded, robed in crimson and gold. He alone among the chiefs required an interpreter, for he is the Nawab of Junagadh, a survival of the Grand Moguls, once a fakir or religious mendicant, now the Muhammadan ruler of a Hindu State. Like all who followed, he had to be content with a salute of eleven guns, and without attar of roses or the company of His Royal Highness to the door. The Jam Sahib of Nawanganar was next in order. He is the young Rajput ruler of a flourishing State, and an example of the advantage of the new training.

But the most promising of them all is the Thakor Sahib of Bhavnagar, who, having a modern education, returned to his people, whom he rules with the wisdom of the patriarch and the enlightenment of the West. Three less notable chiefs preceded the Thakor Sahib of Gondal, who graduated in medicine at Edinburgh University, and conducts his Government on scientific principles.

The chiefs deported themselves with great dignity and respect, though some of their feudal retainers seemed overwhelmed in the presence of the son of their Emperor.

The Princess watched the interesting ceremony from an inner balcony.

In the afternoon Their Royal Highnesses made another progress through the native city. Their mission was to name the new street, which takes the place of insanitary rookeries and admits freshening breezes from the bay. The ceremony was interesting, mainly from the eagerness of the people to greet their 'Raj.' A microcosm of the East assembled on the route, their enthusiasm unrestrained by the habits of centuries. Returning, Their Royal Highnesses saw something of the efforts made to redeem Bombay from the reproach of being a hotbed of plague. They drove through the people's fair, and halted at several points in the Hindu, Muhammadan, and Parsee quarters to receive bouquets.

To-night there will be a banquet at Government House, followed by a 'purdah' party in honour of the Princess—that is, a party to which only ladies are admitted. The Prince held a levée at the Secretariat, 1,500 presentations being made. His Royal Highness's speech yesterday created an excellent impression among the natives.

Englishman.—To-day His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales opened a very crowded day with a reception of ten leading chiefs of the Bombay Presidency at Government House. These visits were conducted with full state honours and at the picturesque ceremonies which accompany them. The Durbar room was converted into a reception chamber, and on a raised scarlet covered dais erected under a handsome screen of carved blackwood, stood gilded chairs for His Royal Highness and the Chief who had the honour of being received by him. On either side of the approach to the dais were ranged other chairs of gilt and white, those on the left of His Royal Highness being for the Staff and on the right for the jagirdars and principal officers of state in attendance on the Chiefs. The entrance hall and steps were also carpeted with scarlet cloth, and in the vestibule stalwart lancers of His Excellency the Governor's Bodyguard stood to attention. A Guard of Honour was posted by the drive from the upper entrance. The first to be received was His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur, the principal Maharaja chief of the Deccan. Attended by his leading feudatories and officials, His Highness arrived to the accompaniment of the usual salutes from guns and the Guard of Honour. The Maharaja was conducted into the presence of His Royal Highness at the entrance to the reception chamber. Together they walked to the dais where they sat on the state chairs. Just a suggestion of orientalism was lent to the scene by the presence behind the state chairs of chobdars in their livery waving the chowri and bearing the eastern emblems of Empire. The Prince of Wales was again wearing the cool white summer uniform of his high rank in the Royal Navy and the Maharaja a brilliant costume of shimmering silk. His Highness then presented the usual nazar which was touched and remitted. The Prince of Wales entered into a conversation with his guest for some minutes and at the conclusion of the reception scarlet robed retainers brought attar and pan supari in beautifully chased silver vessels. First His Royal Highness presented attar and pan to the Maharaja. Then an officer of the Political Department rendered the same courtesy to the feudatories. The reception was now over. His Royal Highness accompanied the Maharaja as far as the exit from the chamber where he bade him farewell and His Highness departed with full honours. The Rao of Cutch, a picturesque figure in brave garb, set off by a resolute bearing followed by His Jagirdars who too attracted more than passing notice, bold robust types still bearing the traces of the qualities which once made their ancestors the daring raiders they were. Then came the Kathiawar chiefs, first among them the senior His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh. The Princes from Kathiawar were conducted into the presence by the Political Agent, His Royal Highness receiving them at the dais and bidding them farewell there. With their Highnesses of Kolhapur and Cutch His Royal Highness was able to converse freely in English, but the Nawab of Junagadh speaks nothing but vernacular and the services of Lieutenant-Colonel Kennedy as interpreter had to be enlisted. After the Nawab of Junagadh came His Highness Jam Sahab of Navanagar, then the progressive Thakor Sahab of Bhavnagar, Raja of Rajpipla, the Nawab of Bombay, the Rana of Porbandar, the Raja Sahab of Dhrangadhra, and Thakor Sahab of Gondal. It was past one o'clock before the last presentation was made.

When the Bombay Improvement Trust was created by Lord Sandhurst in 1898 to deal with the appallingly insanitary condition, revealed by a close inquiry instituted during the plague operations, three main works were entrusted to it. The first was the improvement of the unwholesome quarters of the native town by clearing and remodelling the worst districts. The second was the construction of the main thoroughfares running east and west and providing a new artery for traffic and admitting the sea-sweetened western breeze into the centres of the dense population and the rescue of those parts of the island still undeveloped from the blight of the jerry builder. Princess Street strictly comes under the second category but in fact it serves three important purposes; it opens up a wide passage through an area thickly crowded with houses by which fresh westerly breezes from the sea can penetrate into the southern portions of the city, clears several sanitary areas, providing in their stead sites for buildings to be erected under restrictions and regulations which will ensure the maintenance of sanitary conditions, and it furnishes a new avenue for traffic. Conditions which rendered the construction of new east to west arteries imperative form a grave indictment of those responsible for the administration of the city in the last forty years of the nineteenth century. Old Bombay was crowded and unhealthy, but there was this excuse for it, people did not know much better in those days, and the need for sheltering behind ramparts imposed rigid restrictions with regard to space. When bold and far-sighted Sir Bartle Frere threw down the ramparts and laid out the broad open spaces, which adorn the centre of the city, a magnificent opportunity existed for making Bombay a model town. But Sir Bartle Frere left no imitators, enterprise and foresight stopped short at the Crawford Market. The northern portion of the city beyond the Esplanade cross road grew up without any co-ordinate design and with reckless indifference to all sanitary conditions. A few good highways ran north and south to accommodate a general flow of traffic, but these had narrow entrances and exits, greatly reducing their capacity. One or two broad streets like Grant Road and Belassis Road ran east and west, but these did not reach their natural termini on the shores of the Island. Consequently a huge impenetrable barrier of buildings ran along the western face of the Island, completely excluding those glorious sea-breezes, which are the great asset of Bombay. Behind this barrier there grew up network of narrow-angled streets, stuffy, parts ill-designed, ill-drained and overcrowded dwellings, wherein plague found an abiding home. It was amid the scenes such as these that the Improvement Trustees began to work. They have driven a new road eighty feet wide from the Queen's Road near the burning ground to Girgaum Road, and from the opposite side of the Kalbadevi Road. Here from a fine open space it bifurcates. On the south the enlarged Lohar Street leads to the Crawford Market on the north, an entirely new street, to the Jama Masjid. There it halts for the present ultimately until in conjunction with the Mandvikolivada scheme—one of the later enterprises of the Trust—it will be carried to the eastern face of the Island, thus providing uninterrupted communication between the back of the Bay and the Harbour. Moreover, benefiting by the experiences of England the policy of the Trust is to secure to itself profits accruing from the increased value of the land arising from these improvements. The property acquired on either side of the actual line of the street is extensive enough to embrace all frontages, and these new buildings are to be constructed not only in accordance with strict sanitary models, but in harmony with the architectural design worthy of the new highway. But what of the people dispossessed? The rookeries have gone and the handsome new premises will rise on ashes of the old chawls, but they will not shelter the families who can in no circumstances pay a rent of more than two and a-half or three rupees a month. Yet these families must live somewhere, and most of them in the vicinity of Crawford Market, where they earn their daily bread. In this important respect the Trust at first lagged behind its destructive activity and one of the first fruits was temporarily to increase the overcrowding and to raise plague mortality. These were subsequently counteracted by the erection of temporary quarters on the Kennedy seaface and land has been taken up at Chandanwadi for the construction of model dwellings containing seven hundred rooms, whilst others will be provided if occasion arise. The Improvement Trust Act was passed in 1892. The Princess Street scheme was notified in December of that year, and sanctioned by Government in January 1901. The acquisition of properties commenced in September 1901, and the first house was demolished in the following November. Road construction commenced in March 1904, and new building sites on the completed portion are now being offered to the public on long leases. The gross estimated cost of the scheme is £350,000 and the nett cost to the city after the building sites have been disposed of is expected to approximate to £80,000.

It will be many years yet before the scheme is completed; the sites have to be taken up, plans accepted and buildings erected. But the general public enter into possession of a large share of the advantages of the new road at once. They have a broad thoroughfare from Queen's Road to Kalbadevi Road now, instead of the tortuous approaches that have hitherto sufficed. Soon the actual roadways from the point of bifurcation to Jama Masjid and the Crawford Market will be open also. Of the immense advantages conferred by the scheme there can be no possible doubt. Rookeries have been swept away. There is a broad channel to admit breezes and to cleanse the atmosphere of the thickly-populated quarters, and an artery for free communication between east and west. These are great gains from the second of the enterprises which are slowly regenerating Bombay. In their busy and beneficent public life Their Royal Highnesses have been prominently associated with more imposing achievements, with huge schemes better calculated to arrest the public gaze, but with none more truly progressive than all that is bound up with the new highway that Her Royal Highness has graciously permitted to be called by her name.

Dense crowds assembled to witness the opening ceremony of the new street, notwithstanding this was only one item in the royal programme, verandahs and windows were crowded to suffocation point, and flags and bunting lent a picturesque air to a scene of animation. The gathering was thoroughly representative of those engaged in the public works of the city and included members of the Bombay Improvement Trust, Corporation, Chamber of Commerce, Port Trust and the well-known millowners. His Excellency the Governor, escorted by a body-guard and accompanied by Her Excellency Lady Amphilil arrived at four o'clock and alighted opposite the scene of the opening ceremony. This took the form of unveiling a memorial tablet bearing the name "Princess Street" in large white letters on black marble. The tablet will be permanently fixed in the wall when building operations are sufficiently advanced. The royal route lay along Girgaum Road into Princess Street, and then to the Crawford Market road. Distant cheering denoted clearly the advent of the Royal cortege and louder and louder it grew until drowned by the clatter of the escort. Their Royal Highnesses received a magnificent ovation, as the carriage took up a position near the memorial stone. Sir Walter Lawrence accompanied the Prince and Princess, while officers of the 10th Hussars rode on either side of the carriage.

Their Royal Highnesses did not alight from their carriage. His Excellency the Governor advanced to receive Their Highnesses and then presented Mr. Walter Hughes, C.I.E., and the Hon. Mr. G. Owen Dunn, Chairman of the Improvement Trust. The trustees were presented in turn and Mr. Owen Dunn requested on behalf of the city the gracious privilege of calling the new highway "Princess Street" after Her Royal Highness, and asked Her Royal Highness to declare it open. Permission having been accorded the Princess pressed the button of an electric attachment and the curtains rolled back displaying a tablet which showed the title of the street in boldest relief. Rousing cheers went up when the tablet was exposed. These having subsided Mr. Owen Dunn presented to Their Royal Highnesses' small vellum bound brochures containing brief particulars of the scheme. These were exquisitely printed on white satin and superbly bound. The brochure gave not only the names of the trustees and their principal officers, but in a few sentences told the story of the trust, the inauguration of the work and was signed by the Chairman. In acknowledging the gift of the brochures His Royal Highness said he was very happy indeed to be associated with such work. He understood that it was Lord Sandhurst who initiated the movement which led to the formation of the Improvement Trust; he therefore wished that a copy of the brochure should be sent to him. It was Mr. Owen Dunn's privilege to be able to inform His Royal Highness that arrangements had already been made to that end, and that a copy of the brochure would be sent to Lord Sandhurst by the outgoing mail. With the gift of a beautiful basket of flowers to Her Royal Highness by Mr. Owen Dunn the pleasant little ceremony concluded. Amidst a burst of cheering, again and again renewed, Their Royal Highnesses drove down the broad new highway to the Crawford Market on their way to the people's fair which has been arranged on the maidan for the delectation of the lower classes so that they may take part in the joys of the Royal visit. Every conceivable kind of amusement is provided. A huge switch-back, laughing gallery, palace of magic art, English and Native theatrical performances, all proved its popularity with the people. In the centre of the grounds is an ornamental fountain besides long rows of stalls furnished with sweetmeats and nickknacks from the native bazar. The fair is brilliantly illuminated. The Royal Procession were met on arrival by the officials connected with the organisation of the fair, and native school children sang the national anthem in Gujarati. Their Royal Highnesses appeared to be intensely gratified at all they saw and their presence gave incalculable delight to the poorer classes. On leaving, a song of welcome went up from another large body of school children and then the Royal Progress was continued through other parts of the native town. The greatest animation prevailed and as elsewhere, the streets were thronged and windows and balconies crowded, while decorations and mottoes of welcome were freely displayed. There was every manifestation of pleasure and goodwill on the part of the people and Their Royal Highnesses were extremely gratified with the heartiness of the welcome afforded them. The drive was one long triumphal progress, which ended at Government House at about half past six o'clock.

The main function of the afternoon was the Royal Progress through the city in the course of which Their Royal Highnesses opened the new street which has been constructed by the Improvement Trust, visited the people's fair and drove through the parts of the native town which was not visited in the first drive to Government House. The cortege set out from bar Point at four o'clock. It was a truly Royal procession, the van being led by the mounted band of the 10th Hussars and an imposing escort formed of squadrons of this fine regiment and a battery of the Royal Horse Artillery with guns, of the 33rd Queen's Own Light Cavalry from Poona, the Imperial Service Lancers from Kathiawar and smart little cadets from the Rajkumar College at Rajkot. The display of enthusiasm through the drive was extraordinary, practically the whole population seemed to be in the streets keenly anxious to witness the Royal procession, and were intensely good-humoured and contented with their unwonted holiday. The first part of the progress concluded at Princess Street where the opening and ending of the ceremony was performed.

In the evening a full State levée was held in the Secretariat. His Royal Highness, who was attended by a brilliant staff, wore the uniform of a Vice-Admiral of the British Navy, with ribbons of the Star of India. Fifteen hundred presentations were made and it was a late hour before all was over. The Princess of Wales held a purdah party at Government House.

As at present arranged the scheme for the illumination of the Royal Lakes on the occasion of the Royal visit to Rangoon will be a very great extension of the plans followed when Lord Curzon came here four years ago. Not only will the Dalhousie Park and Royal Lakes be illuminated but also the whole of the royal route to the railway-station via Victoria Park, Pagoda Road and Montgomery Street. The trustees of the Victoria Park, the Council of the Agri-Horticultural Society, the Railway Company, and the residents along the route will co-operate with the Municipality. The Burma Railways Company have decided to run free local trains between Insein and Rangoon on each day of the stay of the Prince of Wales in Rangoon. To avoid overcrowding arrangements will be made to run extra trains when necessary.

It has been left to Bombay to represent to the Prince and Princess of Wales the sense of elation and expectancy with which India welcomes her Royal guests. The brilliancy of the reception accorded to the Royal party was in keeping with the richness and variety of the Indian Empire, and the Prince must have already had brought home to him a knowledge both of the wonderful natural and physical activities of the country, and of the loyalty and devotion of the country-people. Indeed, the graceful and felicitous reply he made to the address of welcome from the Corporation of Bombay indicates a complete apprehension of the facts that India would most wish him to grasp. The pride that is felt in the beauty of Bombay is something more than local. She has become the gateway of India, and nothing more effectively indicative of the picturesque and fascinating peninsula that lies beyond can be imagined. But even more welcome than the tribute he paid to the qualities of Bombay will be the kindly words which the Prince has addressed to the people of India: "I have inherited from my father and from our late beloved sovereign, your first Queen Empress, a love for India and for the Indian. From my youth up I have associated the name of India with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy, and bravery, and I doubt not that those early ideas will be confirmed and strengthened by the experiences which await me in the next few months." No finer means could the Prince have selected of winning the love and reverence of the people than by picking out for praise those very qualities of theirs of which they are most proud. The response which his words will certainly awake will enable him to carry home with him a still warmer sympathy and affection for this country.

Indian Daily News.—All the newspapers emphasize the Imperial significance of the visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India.

The Times remarks that they represent the permanent authority of the British Empire and remind the people that great Viceroy and renowned Generals come and go, but the Government of India remains, and that mistakes, if made, are not irrevocable.

The following interchange of messages has taken place between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Royal party:—

From Lieutenant-Governor, To Sir Walter Lawrence.

Dated 9th November 1905

"I desire on behalf of the people of this province respectfully to offer to Their Royal Highnesses a loyal and cordial welcome to India."

From—Sir Walter Lawrence,
To—Lieutenant Governor, Bengal.

Dated 10th November 1905.

"I am desired by the Prince and Princess of Wales to thank you for the cordial message of welcome sent on behalf of the people of Bengal."

The drive of the Prince and Princess of Wales through the City to the Government House was marked by extraordinary demonstrations. A great popular welcome was given to Their Royal Highnesses by the enormous crowds, made up of every race, caste, and creed in the picturesque and brilliant costumes of the East. The Royal procession was itself a gorgeous and stately cavalcade, which frequently produced outbursts of murmuring admiration. At points along the densely thronged route stands had been erected on which the spectators were massed, and every building was seamed by multitudes of enthusiastic on-lookers. Most of the stands were, however, occupied by thousands of prettily dressed school children who sang "God Bless the Prince of Wales" as the procession passed. The children wore silver souvenir medals and carried small paper flags which were set waving when the Royal carriage appeared.

The arrangements had been advanced a little earlier than at first intended in order to enable the drive through the City to be completed in daylight, and the change was greatly appreciated.

In honour of the occasion the Jain community have decided to abandon for all time the singing of low songs by their women on certain ceremonial occasions. The trees along the route were laden with human beings, and at Kalbadevi Road a branch broke, and at least ten people fell into the road. A closed carriage stood under the tree and broke the fall of some of the people, and promptness and presence of mind averted any stampede of horses by the falling of the branch among the carriages.

Their Royal Highnesses were received at Government House by Lord Lamington, who had taken a shorter route home, and by Lady Amphil. .

Last night the warships in harbour and many of the buildings were brilliantly illuminated, though the great public illuminations will not take place until the night of the departure of the Prince and Princess from Bombay. The illumination of the flagship of the East Indian squadron was especially effective, the white lights being relieved by the Admiral's flag at the mast head, picked out in white and red.

This morning the Prince of Wales received ceremonial visits from the Bombay Chiefs at Government House, Malabar Point. The first salute announcing the arrival of the first of the feudatories began at 10.30 (local time), and the reception of the nine Chiefs in succession continued up to close upon one o'clock. The main entrance to Government House was carpeted with scarlet cloths and scarlet-clothed Chobdars and Lancers lined the steps. At the head of the steps, Mr.

S. W. Elderley, the Political Secretary to the Bombay Government, waited to receive the first of the Chiefs and conduct them to the Durbar Room and the Prince. The earliest to arrive was His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur, who was accompanied by the Political Agent, Lieutenant-Colonel Ferris, and was attended by a number of nobles and officials of the Southern Maratha States. After his departure, His Highness the Rao of Cutch, arrived, a striking figure, accompanied by his sons, his brother and other notables, and by Lieutenant-Colonel Abell. Thereafter followed six of the most important Kathiawar Chiefs, who were individually conducted to the Durbar Hall by Lieutenant-Colonel Kennedy, the Agent, to the Governor in Kathiawar. Each of the Chiefs was also attended on arrival by a Political Officer as well as his leading Durbar. The premier Chief of Kathiawar, His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh, preceded the others, and arrived in a carriage covered with a scarlet umbrella richly embroidered in gold. He was accompanied to Government House by Mr. P. S. P. Fitzgerald. His Highness the Jam Sahib of Navsari, who followed, was attended by Lieutenant-Colonel Hyde-Cotes. His Highness the Thakur Sahib of Bhavnagar was accompanied by Major Marmontier. His Highness the Raj Sahib of Dharwar was led by Lieutenant-Colonel Davis in attendance. His Highness the Raja of Rajpore was accompanied by Mr. P. J. Mead. His Highness the Nawab of Cambay was attended by Mr. Westcott. His Highness the Raja of Porbandar was accompanied by Captain Patterson, and His Highness the Thakur Sahib of the admirably administered State of Ghod was attended by Captain Bask. The reception of the Chiefs was a stately ceremony and the entrance of Government House was at the morning brilliant with the pouring of flags in cavalcades.

This afternoon the Prince and Princess of Wales drove in State through the native city to inspect the new temple, law which connects Queen's Road with Camp. Park Road is the first of the important street works undertaken by the City Improvement Trust, and it is good to see up and running completed and in use. Leaving Government House about 4 P.M. the Royal procession passed along Walkover Road, Prince's Road and by Prince's Park and Government Road to the scene of the great ceremony of the afternoon. Numerous arches had been erected at certain points on the route, and to permit banners to be presented to Their Royal Highnesses by the representatives of the Hindu, Mohammedan and Parsi communities. A brief ceremony took place at the Wada Fire Temple, where the High Priest invoked blessings upon the Royal pair. A vast gathering awaited the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses at the junction of the new thoroughfare and along its sides. The Royal procession was preceded by the arrival of the Governor, accompanied by Lady Angell. A few minutes later, the head of the Royal escort came into sight and turned into Princess Street, amid cheers. The escort of the Honours Guard, Lancers and Squadrone of other Cavalry Regiments made an impressively fine display. Owing to the length of the advanced guard, it was some time before the Royal carriage appeared on the scene. Its arrival was heralded by loud bursts of cheering, and the multitude gave a great shout of welcome as the carriage halted at the spot assigned for the ceremony. The Prince and Princess were now received by Sir Walter Lawrence. His Royal Highness wore morning dress, his frock coat being grey and his grey topie having a golden pipette. The Princess of Wales wore a light blue summer gown trimmed with pink tulle and her white hat had a pink plume. When the carriage halted, the Governor and the Sheriff advanced. Lord Lambington introduced the Sheriff and next introduced Mr. G. Owen Dunne, the Chairman of the Improvement Trust. The members of the Trust then advanced in a body and were individually presented by the Chairman.

Mr. Dunne, then addressing Their Royal Highnesses, said:—In the name of the City Improvement Trust, and the Municipal Corporation, I beg that Your Royal Highness will be graciously pleased to grant special permission that this street be called Princess Street, in commemoration of this visit of Your Royal Highnesses to the City of Bombay, and as a permanent memorial of the first Princess of Wales to set foot in India, and I beg that Your Royal Highnesses will honour us by unveiling the name of the street.

Small vellum bound brochures containing particulars of the Improvement Scheme were then presented to Their Royal Highnesses.

In briefly replying, the Prince of Wales said that he and the Princess were very pleased to be able to associate themselves with a work of the kind undertaken by the Improvement Trust. He referred to Lord Sandhurst as having initiated the Trust and expressed a wish that a copy of the brochure might be sent to him.

The Chairman informed His Royal Highness, in reply, that a copy of the book was being sent to Lord Sandhurst by the outgoing mail.

The Princess was then requested to unveil the name of the street. Her Royal Highness touched a string at the side of the carriage and the folds of a curtain fell away from a specially prepared stone disclosing the name "Princess Street" in bold white letters, at sight of which the crowd broke into loud cheers. Banquets were then presented and cheers were again raised as the procession prepared to move on. The ceremony was of the briefest, and though the few remarks that were made were carried on in conversational tones, the simplicity of the ceremonial in such stately surroundings made the scene the more impressive.

Moving rapidly away the cortège drove to the People's Fair, passing through without halting, the fair being in this manner opened. There was already a large gathering in the fair awaiting the Royal arrival, and a chorus of Parses and Europeans girls at the entrance and exit sang "God bless the Prince of Wales" and the National Anthem as the procession passed through. Driving onward Their Royal Highnesses took a long route through the bazaar receiving enthusiastic greetings and showers of flowers as they proceeded to Government House.

To-night a banquet followed by a levee is being held at the Secretariat, and while the Prince of Wales holds the levee, the Princess holds a Purdah party at Government House.

The Maharaja Bhadur of Darbhanga has received the following telegrams in reply to messages of welcome forwarded to Their Royal Highnesses by the Maharaja:—

I am desired by the Prince and Princess of Wales to thank you for your kind message of welcome. The Prince and Princess of Wales desire me to express their thanks for the loyal greetings sent by you as President of the Bihar Land-holders' Association. The Prince and Princess of Wales desire me to express their thanks for the loyal greetings sent by you as President of the Bharata Bharnya Mahamandal.

The following telegram passed between the British Indian Association and Sir Walter Lawrence:—From the Honorary Secretary, British Indian Association, to Sir Walter Lawrence, Chief of the Staff of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Bombay:—The British Indian Association respectfully craves leave to offer a most cordial and enthusiastic welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival at these Indian shores, and to express their warmest and most earnest hope that the loyal and united efforts of the people to make the Royal visit to their ancient and historic land one of pleasant memories may be crowned with success."

From Sir Walter Lawrence, Bombay, 10th November, 1905, to Maharaj Kumar Tagore, Honorary Secretary, British Indian Association, Calcutta:—

"I am desired by the Prince and Princess of Wales to thank the British Indian Association for their hearty message of welcome."

Indian Daily Telegraph.—By a happy coincidence the auspicious occasion of the landing in India of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales synchronises with the anniversary of His Majesty the King-Emperor's birth. The splendour of the setting in which to-day's historic events take place receives thereby an added touch of brilliance. Never has Bombay more radiantly demonstrated her title of "the beautiful." Never has she looked more truly the Queen of Indian Cities, than she now appears, decked to greet the Imperial Pair whom she welcomes to the shores of India, glorious beneath the brightness of a sun which heightens all her charms.

This "Gem of Empire set in a sapphire sea" is wreathed and dressed in a rainbow of colour that splendidly becomes her magnificent beauty. The Apollo Bunder, where the Royal visitors first touch Indian soil, and where the ceremonial reception takes place, is at once the crown and the triumph of the city's decoration.

It was a scene of great brilliance that was here disclosed in the pearl-grey dawn this morning; as the sun rose over the harbour, and as the hours passed and the sun rose higher the scene grew in splendour, in life, in colour and movement. The great shamiana at the head of the Bunder was a vivid composition in red and white, terminated on the landward side by a cool looking oriental gateway in cream and gold. The brightest of flags and banners floated above the shamiana, a mass of crimson and orange and emerald and blue commingled in a striking yet harmonious effect, and the Star of India, oft repeated, glistened upon the red and white of the ground work. From this centre of colour the gleaming gateway, whose cupolas reflected the morning light, led to an amphitheatre and to a dais splendid in cloth of scarlet; the dais and the amphitheatre again being brilliant with the gayest of streamers and flaunting banners. A touch of green in the grass of the amphitheatre,—an oasis in the midst of roads and pavements—and a fringe of trees, heightened the effect of the brilliant hunting. Stretching along both sides of the broad Bunder Road, and extending in a graceful chain around the pier-head were lines of bright Venetian masts, their javelin heads gilded, and each carrying a banner of the brightest hue. Trophies of flags and glittering shields hung midway on the poles. Lines of vivid bunting connected the masts, and the details of the striking picture were completed by the decorations of the fine buildings which adorn this, the actual gateway of India. The dominant notes of the colour scheme were the Imperial red, white and blue, and in contrast with the greenery of foliage there can be no prettier decorative effects.

The sun caught the brighter tones of saffron and emerald banners and oriflammes ranged high along the line of vision, and struck upon the warm red of streamers that flamed across the road throwing into relief words of welcome and fervent aspirations emblazoned upon the crimson cloth. The lines of colour, fluttering and flashing as stirred by the breeze ran off into a glittering perspective, and one knew that they were carried and radiating for throughout the city. Seaward the scene, if less vividly brilliant, was no less beautiful and impressive; the harbour, one of the loveliest in the world, never looked more entrancing. The morning breeze stirred the water into sparkling wavelets, and the sun made luminous paths of blue-tinged islands and the hazy hills of the mainland. In the foreground were ranged the warships; the Hyacinth, the flagship of the East Indies Station, the Perseus the Portuguese cruiser St. Gabriel which arrived yesterday from Lorenzo Marquez, the Indian Marine ships Dufferin and Dalhousie, the Topedo boats and other smaller craft. A minute or so before eight o'clock a signal appeared at the mast head of the flagship, and at eight o'clock precisely a score of vessels, large and small, simultaneously dressed in honour of the King-Emperor's birthday. Rainbows of bunting sprang suddenly into view as at the word of a magician, and it was then seen that the ships were ranged in a wide semi-circle of the Bunder Head.

At the Bunder steps a white painted barge was moored to facilitate the landing of Their Royal Highnesses. The crowds were early astir, the throng of brightly-dressed folk increasing every hour. The Renown and her escort were sighted off the Port as early as five o'clock, and a wireless message to the flagship intimated that the Renown would anchor at the harbour at eleven, an hour earlier than previously anticipated. The squadron then moved off to cruise about until the time for entering the harbour. At about twenty-five minutes to eleven the form of a warship loomed up on the southward horizon, and three guns fired from the saluting battery directly afterwards announced that the Renown had been signalled from the lighthouse, and was preparing to enter the Port. The crowds were quickened into lively interest by the first gun, and a few moments later the four ships were sighted majestically steaming up. They moved almost abreast, but as they approached the anchorage the Terrible and Proserpine took the lead. A puff of smoke from the Hyacinth heralded a salute of thirty-one guns from the flagship, and at the second gun the salute was echoed by the other warships at anchor. As the Royal squadron approached the Hyacinth the Proserpine and Terrible steamed ahead to their allotted positions, and the Renown slowly steamed to a position abreast of the flagship, where she dropped anchor at about twenty-five minutes past eleven. The spectacle, as the squadron came to anchor, was impressively fine. The squadron all flew the white ensign, and the Renown also floated the Royal standard. The flagship, the Perseus and the ships of the Royal Indian Marine had been manned, and guards paraded as the Royal squadron approached, and as the Terrible, the Proserpine and the Fox came to an anchor the ships of the escort were simultaneously dressed in bunting.

The disembarkation, landing and reception of Their Royal Highnesses at the Apollo Bunder provided a series of wonderful and stirring scenes in which dazzling episodes succeeded each other in rising tones of brilliance. The culmination was reached in the spectacle in the crowded amphitheatre. At noon when a salute was fired in honour of the King Emperor's Birthday the space in the Bunder began to be cleared of the crowd which witnessed the arrival of the Royal squadron. A little more than an hour later the music of bands announced that the troops were lining the routes of the Viceregal and Royal processions. By two o'clock the Chiefs and notables were beginning to arrive in the shamiana, and the amphitheatre was gradually filling. The sun was very hot, and the people in the open space and along the routes through the city had a warm period of waiting. The guard of honour of the Royal Scots arrived and took up a position in the shamiana, and the Chiefs and high officials succeed each other, each adding to the mass of gorgeous colour filling the cool depths of the great tent.

By three o'clock there was a rattle of approaching artillery, and the head of the Viceregal procession swung into sight in the Bunder Road. The Viceroy's escort, headed by the artillery, came up at a smart pace, passing under the decorative gateway and around the amphitheatre in a splendid cavalcade. As the Viceroy's carriage reached the gate the guard-of-honour saluted, the tattered colours of the Royal Scots fluttered out, and the band played "God save the King." After a brief delay the Viceroy and Lady Curzon passed along the path of crimson cloth to the Bunder steps, where members of the Staff had already taken up positions. His Excellency wore a Political uniform with the Insignia of the Star of India. He looked well, but was still suffering from the cough which was noticeably troubling him since his arrival in Bombay. Lady Curzon appeared charming in a handsome gown of dove-coloured embroidered silk with a hat and sunshade completely in harmony. Their Excellencies boarded the Indian Marine launch Bee, and as she prepared to move off towards the Renown the saluting battery on the middle ground began a Royal salute, which was echoed by the Hyacinth, the other ships of the East India Squadron, and the Portuguese ship St. Gabriel. As the Viceroyal launch set out on her journey to the Renown, the ships were manned, the guards paraded and saluted as the launch drew near.

Fifteen minutes after the departure of the Viceroy the Governor of Bombay arrived and, accompanied by the Bishop, the Chief Justice, and members of Government, embarked on the launch Ouida under a salute from the middle ground battery. These arrangements were carried out punctually and with the precision of clock work. Then ensued a brief period of waiting while the Viceroy was being received on the Renown and the Governor of Bombay and the officials with him were being presented to Their Royal Highnesses. The interval was relieved by the arrival and landing of members of the Royal suite, who on ascending the steps were introduced to General Sir Archibald Hunter and others waiting at the Bunder head. At 3.35 Lord Lamington and those accompanying him returned to the shore, and took up positions to receive Their Royal Highnesses at the head of the steps.

Precisely at four o'clock the first gun of a salute from the Hyacinth announced to the eagerly waiting crowds that the Prince and Princess were coming off from the Renown. The salute was taken up by the other ships, and from the fog of dense smoke enveloping the Renown and the Hyacinth two launches were seen to emerge. For a moment there was a doubt as to the Royal barge: then one, a big scarlet launch, forged ahead towards the north of the harbour. The other smaller one came straight on towards the Bunder. This, the Royal barge, was painted a bright green and floated the Royal Standard and the White Ensign. The sound of cheering came over the waters as Royal boat passed each of the vessels at anchor.

As she headed on gallantly for the landing place it was seen that she was accompanied by a couple of pinnaces as escort. Meanwhile a guard-of-honour, consisting of officers of the various regiments now in Bombay and of Members of the Viceroy's and Governor's Staffs, had taken up position on the Bunder steps. Conspicuous among these also was His Highness the Maharaja of Idar, Sir Pertab Singh, in the uniform of the Imperial Cadet Corps, of which he is Commandant. The Prince and Princess were accompanied in the Royal launch by the Viceroy and Lady Curzon, and as His Royal Highness stepped ashore the battery on the Bunder began a Royal salute, which was repeated by the warships. While the guns roared out their welcome, the Prince and the Viceroy and Her Royal Highness and Lady Curzon crossed the gangway on the landing barge to the steps, where the Maharaja of Idar instantly laid his sword at the feet of the Prince, and next to the feet of the Princess as she stepped on land. This graceful symbolic action was accompanied by a profound obeisance. The officers here gathered were presented to Their Royal Highnesses, this ceremony affording ample time for excellent views of the Royal landing to be taken by numbers of photographers installed at the Bunder head. Both Their Royal Highnesses appeared to be in excellent health. The Prince of Wales wore the white tropical uniform of an Admiral with the Insignia of the Star of India. Her Royal Highness, looking radiant, was dressed in white relieved by pale blue trimming and a blue plume in her white toque.

Ascending the steps Their Royal Highnesses were received by the Governor, the Naval Commander-in-Chief, the Bishop of Bombay, the Members of Council, and the Lieutenant-General Commanding. Introductions began immediately, Lord Lamington presenting those in the shamiana to His Royal Highness. Beginning with the Consular body, the first of the representatives of foreign nations to be presented was the Consul for Germany, who is the doyen of the Consular representatives in Bombay. Thereafter the presentations continued throughout the shamiana, the prominent personages, officials, Chiefs and Sardars being introduced in turn. Their Royal Highnesses were clearly impressed by the brilliance of the gathering which here greeted them. The introductions concluded, the Prince of Wales attended by Sir Archibald Hunter, Commanding the Western Command, and the General Officer Commanding the Bombay Brigade, inspected the guard-of-honour. The officers who had lined the landing steps, meanwhile lined the pathway leading from the shamiana to the amphitheatre, and when the Royal party came out and ascended the dais it was a magnificent sight that met their eyes. The amphitheatre was crowded with a huge throng, and the lofty buildings which closed in the scene were packed with great numbers of people. The brilliant decorations were completed by the bright uniforms of the Viceroy and Governor's Bodyguards, and of the Cadets of the Rajkumar College in brilliant blue turbans and darker hued tunics, who fringed the crowded space. The brilliant company from the shamiana filled up the dais in the rear of the Royal party. The Prince and the Viceroy stood in the centre of the dais with the Princess on the right of His Royal Highness, Lord Lamington on the right of the Princess, and Lady Curzon on the Viceroy's left. The members of the Bombay Corporation waited immediately in front of the dais.

When Their Royal Highnesses had taken their stand on the dais a great cheer of welcome went up from the multitude. The President of the Corporation, Sir Pheroz Shaw Mehta, the Municipal Commissioner, Mr. Shepherd, and the Sheriff of Bombay approached the dais in company, and the President was presented to His Royal Highness by the Viceroy. Sir P. M. Mehta then proceeded to read the Corporation's address of welcome to the Royal visitors. It was an eloquently composed address, and it was most effectively and impressively delivered by the Corporation's distinguished spokesman. Its allusions to the King-Emperor and to Their Royal Highnesses were frequently cheered, the whole address being clearly heard by the vast assemblage.

At its close His Highness presented a copy of his speech to the Municipal President, and heartily shook hands with him. Bouquets and garlands were then presented to Their Royal Highnesses by Sir Pheroz Shah, and the striking ceremony was concluded.

Escorted by the Viceroy, Lady Curzon, and Lord Lamington and the Royal suite, the Prince and Princess proceeded to their carriage and, attended by gorgeously appareled attendants bearing gold-leaf fans, began their drive through the crowded, enthusiastic, and gaily decorated city to Government House. The Viceroy, Lady Curzon, and the Governor of Bombay, after the departure of the Royal carriage, retraced their path across the amphitheatre and found their carriage at the other side.

11TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—The Royal visit to Hyderabad in February next lends peculiar interest to the article by Lieutenant-Colonel Sir David Barr, K.C.S.I., in the October number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review entitled "Hyderabad Past and Present." The principal incident in the early history of the premier Native State of India is the gallant defence of the port of Golconda during its siege by the Emperor Aurangzeb in 1687 on the part of Abul Hassan, the last of the Kings of Golconda, of the Qut'b Shadi dynasty. After a stubborn resistance lasting eight months Golconda fell into the hands of the Moghul Emperor, and Abul Hassan, who surrendered himself to Aurungzeb, was sent as a State prisoner to Daulatabad, where he was treated with honour until his death. The spoils of Golconda were estimated at nearly £80,000,000 in gold and silver, besides large quantities of jewels and plate. Golconda, Sir David Barr is careful to remind us, is not the place where the far-famed diamonds are found, the diamond fields being in the deltas of the rivers Kistna and Tungabudra, some 150 miles distant from the fort of Golconda. The State gradually lost its old name of Golconda, and long before the Moghul conquest it was known as Hyderabad. Kamrud-din, the founder of the ruling family of the Nizams of Hyderabad, was appointed Subedar of the Deccan by the Emperor of Delhi in 1713 with the title of Nizam-ul Mulk. He, however, threw off his allegiance to the Mogul Empire, and established himself an independent ruler. The opening of British relations with Hyderabad occurred in 1759, when Salabat Jung concluded a treaty with the English, as he did not feel himself strong enough to risk a battle without the aid of his French auxiliaries who had been recalled by Count Lally. With the defeat of the French in 1756, all hopes of the ascendancy of French rule in the Deccan were extinguished. Sir David Barr refers to the romantic marriage of Major James Kirkpatrick, British Resident at Hyderabad, with a daughter of one of the nobles of the Nizam's Court and says that it was to Kirkpatrick's influence with the Nizam that we must ascribe the success of the treaties concluded with Hyderabad during the years 1793-1804. One of these treaties provided that a British force should take the place of the French contingent, and that the latter should be disbanded and its officers arrested. At the crucial moment the Nizam wavered, and it was Kirkpatrick himself who ordered the advance of the British sepoys. The French officers were arrested and sent back to France. Many descendants of the French are still to be found in Hyderabad. The beautiful building which is still occupied by the Residency at Hyderabad was planned and designed by Major Kirkpatrick.

Sir David Barr gives us more than a passing glimpse into the Hyderabad of to-day. Its system of administration compares favourably with that of other Native States. The Nizam has the final authority in all matters of administration, and subordinate to His Highness is a Cabinet Council of nobles, each member holding one of the departmental portfolios. A great change for the better has come over the finances of the State since the appointment of Mr. Casson Walker, of the Punjab Commission, as the Nizam's financial adviser. Hyderabad suffered more than any other State in India by the decision of the Government of India closing their mints to the coinage of silver. Its old currency was the Halli Sica rupee, the fluctuations in the value of which have been most disastrous to trade. A new mint has now been established with complete machinery, and is turning out daily two lakhs of new and well-designed rupees and one lakh of copper money, and the State looks forward with confidence to the maintenance of a stable rate of exchange between the Halli Sica and the British Government rupee.

The city of Hyderabad is one of the handsomest in India. It contains some very fine buildings, but its principal feature is the scenery. The city is surrounded by hills which are covered with vegetation and studded with large flat topped masses of stone of fantastic shape. Hyderabad and its suburbs have a population of 450,000. It was considered dangerous some years ago for Europeans to pass through the city without an escort, and even now it is necessary for visitors to obtain permission before entering its limits. Sir David Barr is high in his praise of the police arrangements in Hyderabad, and vouches for the fact that during a five years' residence he had not heard of a single case of violence or riot. A great improvement has also taken place in the internal administration of Hyderabad since 1901, when the Nizam, tired of a succession of clever but sometimes unscrupulous ministers, decided that the minister was no longer to be independent, but was to be the Nizam's executive officer, acting in subordination to His Highness, and referring for orders all matters of importance and all cases in which ambiguity or controversy was involved during discussions in Council. Since the appointment of the Peshkar Maharaja Kishen Pershad as the Nizam's Minister a complete change has been effected. It has become evident to all concerned that the Nizam is by far the shrewdest and most capable man in the State, and that he was determined to exercise the functions of a ruler not in name alone but in very deed. The results under the new régime have been most happy. The intriguer is now almost unknown in Hyderabad, and interference with the administration has been relegated to the trivial forms of jealousy, dislike, and backbiting. The Nizam is at last master of the situation, and is recognised as such, not only by his minister and officials, but by the subjects of the State.

Jam-i-Jamshed.—"The words of your address, eloquent as they are, will not, however, convey to our fellow subjects in other parts of the Empire what we see here to-day. Nor do they render full justice to the efforts and good-will of the citizens of this great western part of India, which culminate in this splendid ceremony. . . In thus following the footsteps of my father, we are but carrying out the traditions established by him, and one which, I trust, will be repeated as generation succeeds generation. I hope, and, indeed, I am confident, that the same loving interest in this great Continent which was inspired in my father's heart by his visit to India, and which has never abated, will equally come to us. If, as we travel through the various countries which make up this great Empire, the Princess and I can win the sympathy and good-will of the people of India, we shall secure a precious result from the voyage which we have been privileged to undertake . . . I have inherited from my father and from our late beloved Sovereign, your first Queen-Empress, a love for India and for Indians. From my youth I have associated the name of India with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy, and bravery, and I doubt not that these early ideas will be confirmed and strengthened by the experiences which await me in the next few months . . . We both hope to carry home with us, not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but an increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems, and an acquaintance with the various classes, official and non-official, British and Indian, which, under God's providence, are labouring to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her people."

Words such as these can never fail to go deep to the hearts of any people; and the Indians, ever so keenly responsible to sentiments of sympathy and good-will, will not surely fail to keep them engraven on their memories for all time. This whole speech of their future King will ever be one of their most cherished possessions, and the few passages we have quoted above, as well as others, will be read and re-read as a source of hope and inspiration as much by men who toil in the humbler paths of life as by those who are called by providence to higher destinies. They will read in these words much more than an assurance of their being the objects of unabated care and interest on the part of their Sovereign and his Family. They will find in them much more than a pledge of sustained sympathy, good-will, and protection from His Imperial Majesty and each successive generation of his heirs. They will trace in them a keen and earnest desire on the part of their future King to appreciate their love and loyalty towards their Sovereign, which are deeper than all words and inexpressible by any outward manifestations of devotion and joy. They will discover in them abundant evidences of the fact of their unshaking fidelity and allegiance to the British Raj being heartily recognised and acknowledged by their beloved Sovereign, his Heir, and the Royal Family of England. All this means an additional gain to India and her people. The words of gracious condescension which fell from His Royal Highness, day before yesterday, constitute a most important and valuable token of the sympathy and regard entertained by India's Sovereign and his Family towards her people. And they are no less a token of the confidence that is reposed by them in India's attachment to the Throne of England and the person of its august occupant. India will, henceforth, have no reason to believe that she is not trusted as she should be by her sovereign lord. She will have little occasion to feel that the sentiments of unalterable love and unflinching devotion so long cherished by her for the King-Empress and his Family have failed to be sufficiently impressed upon and acknowledged by them.

The passages from the Prince's very happy speech, which we have quoted above, resolve themselves into these sentiments and assurances:—"We appreciate the value and importance of India to the Throne and Empire of Britain. We recognize that you love us better and are more closely attached to us than your words and demonstrations of affection and loyalty, eloquent as they are, convey the idea of. That loving interest which was inspired in His Majesty's heart by his visit to this country, thirty years ago, continues unabated, and we participate in those feelings of regard and sympathy for India. We have inherited from the late Queen-Empress and the present Sovereign a love for India and her peoples, and it will be inherited by our children generation after generation. We are aware of the many good qualities of the Indians and we count upon our impressions of their many private and public virtues being strengthened by what we are to see during the coming few months. When we go away from here we shall carry our sympathy and affection for our great Dependency strengthened, and not only that, but a better knowledge of your wants and wishes and a more abiding interest in your welfare will accompany us." What people, situated especially as the people of India are, can fail to be deeply touched or to feel as if they are greatly enriched by this generous message of assurance and hope? Not only to the present generation of the people of India but to those to come will the speech of His Royal Highness prove a source of constant encouragement and support. Confident that they are loved and trusted by their Sovereign, his heir, and his family as much as they love and trust them; assured that the present visit has not only added to the warmth of sympathy and affection hitherto cherished for the subject peoples, but has intensified Their Royal Highnesses' interest in India's wants and problems; they will certainly be able to look to the future with greater hope and confidence than they have hitherto done. For those who want to know what substantial, tangible good would India secure from the present visit the words "we both hope to carry home with us, not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but an increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems" should suffice. Here is a pledge and an assurance the value of which at least we will never be disposed to under-rate. The consciousness, in future years that His Royal Highness has an "abiding interest in India's wants and problems" must prove a source of immense consolation to persons, especially in those dark and perilous hours when they are seized by despair and the wretchedness and the misery of their lot, aggravated by political and natural calamities, seem too heavy for their feeble shoulders to sustain.

Lady's Pictorial.—In view of the arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales at Bombay, which by a curious and happy coincidence takes place on November 9th, the birthday of the King, Mrs. Ella Mary Gordon sends me the following loyal tribute:—

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES VISIT TO INDIA.

We followed, as you crossed the wave-tossed ocean,
Leaving sad hearts and dearest ones at home,
The tempest braved, to far-off shores all golden,
And distant scenes content for us to roam.

The thoughts of all were with you on the journey,
For Memory's chains are woven on this earth,
Though seas divide, you hear the nation's greeting,
And love still links the land that gave you birth.

Your little ones are treasured by the nation
At duty's call you hastened to obey,
But Heaven guards your dearest earthly treasures,
And guardian angels watch by night and day.

O'er sunny shores and India's white-crowned mountains
Britain is proud the nation's zeal is known,
Their King and Queen by messages bequeathing
Gems that are sparkling from a glorious throne.

Their a true crown whose jewels are not heavy,
Love lightens loads as stars the darkest land,
No strength so fast as loyalty's firm union,
No power so strong as its sweet mystic band.

Our Empire wide is with the white waves tossing
And with the vessel late upon its way,
When sceptres shine the glory is far-reaching,
And anthems swell to praise an honoured way.

Newcastle Daily Chronicle.—Almost exactly thirty years after the landing in India of his Royal father the present Prince of Wales has set his foot on Indian soil. And it was in every way appropriate that Bombay should be the point of disembarkation, for not only is the great western port India's gateway on the sea, and the gateway as well through which a large portion of Central Asia gains access to the outer world, but it is the city which came to the English throne as a portion of the dowry of the Portuguese bride of Charles II, and thus formed the nucleus of our far-reaching dominions in the Middle East. The visit of the present King Edward was an historical event, the echoes of which still reverberate in Hindustan, and it has already been placed beyond all reasonable doubt that the visit of the present heir to the throne will be as memorable and have results as far-reaching. The scenes witnessed at Bombay when the Prince and Princess of Wales landed and passed through the city were such as might well give a new and more intense meaning to the common phrase "a Royal progress." There was not and has not been in connection with the preparations for this great tour a single jarring note. But if in India there has been no symptom of waning allegiance to the British dominion as personified by its Sovereign and his heir, and evidence only of a growing attachment, there have been in recent days unfortunate incidents in which public servants holding exalted positions in the British Raj have played a part. Wherefore the Royal visit can only be regarded as opportune.

We cannot think that the Indian population fails to discriminate between local executive officers for the time being of British rule in India and the essential elements of that rule at home—the throne and the British People. Still the Royal tour must have on all-important utility as a public demonstration to all of the continued concern of the Empire for the

of Golconda, of the Qut'b Shadi dynasty. After a stubborn resistance lasting eight months Golconda fell into the hands of the Moghul Emperor, and Abul Hassan, who surrendered himself to Aurungzeb, was sent as a State prisoner to Daulatabad, where he was treated with honour until his death. The spoils of Golconda were estimated at nearly £80,000,000 in gold and silver, besides large quantities of jewels and plate. Golconda, Sir David Barr is careful to remind us, is not the place where the far-famed diamonds are found, the diamond fields being in the deltas of the rivers Kistna and Tungabudra, some 150 miles distant from the fort of Golconda. The State gradually lost its old name of Golconda, and long before the Moghul conquest it was known as Hyderabad. Kamrud-din, the founder of the ruling family of the Nizams of Hyderabad, was appointed Subedar of the Deccan by the Emperor of Delhi in 1713 with the title of Nizam-ul Mulk. He, however, threw off his allegiance to the Mogul Empire, and established himself an independent ruler. The opening of British relations with Hyderabad occurred in 1759, when Salabat Jung concluded a treaty with the English, as he did not feel himself strong enough to risk a battle without the aid of his French auxiliaries who had been recalled by Count Lally. With the defeat of the French in 1756, all hopes of the ascendancy of French rule in the Deccan were extinguished. Sir David Barr refers to the romantic marriage of Major James Kirkpatrick, British Resident at Hyderabad, with a daughter of one of the nobles of the Nizam's Court and says that it was to Kirkpatrick's influence with the Nizam that we must ascribe the success of the treaties concluded with Hyderabad during the years 1798-1804. One of these treaties provided that a British force should take the place of the French contingent, and that the latter should be disbanded and its officers arrested. At the crucial moment the Nizam wavered, and it was Kirkpatrick himself who ordered the advance of the British sepoy. The French officers were arrested and sent back to France. Many descendants of the French are still to be found in Hyderabad. The beautiful building which is still occupied as the Residency at Hyderabad was planned and designed by Major Kirkpatrick.

Sir David Barr gives us more than a passing glimpse into the Hyderabad of to-day. Its system of administration compares favourably with that of other Native States. The Nizam has the final authority in all matters of administration, and subordinate to His Highness is a Cabinet Council of nobles, each member holding one of the departmental portfolios. A great change for the better has come over the finances of the State since the appointment of Mr. Casson Walker, of the Punjab Commission, as the Nizam's financial adviser. Hyderabad suffered more than any other State in India by the decision of the Government of India closing their mints to the coinage of silver. Its old currency was the Halli Sica rupee, the fluctuations in the value of which have been most disastrous to trade. A new mint has now been established with complete machinery, and is turning out daily two lakhs of new and well-designed rupees and one lakh of copper money, and the State looks forward with confidence to the maintenance of a stable rate of exchange between the Halli Sica and the British Government rupee.

The city of Hyderabad is one of the handsomest in India. It contains some very fine buildings, but its principal feature is the scenery. The city is surrounded by hills which are covered with vegetation and studded with large flat topped masses of stone of fantastic shape. Hyderabad and its suburbs have a population of 450,000. It was considered dangerous some years ago for Europeans to pass through the city without an escort, and even now it is necessary for visitors to obtain permission before entering its limits. Sir David Barr is high in his praise of the police arrangements in Hyderabad, and vouches for the fact that during a five years' residence he had not heard of a single case of violence or riot. A great improvement has also taken place in the internal administration of Hyderabad since 1901, when the Nizam, tired of a succession of clever but sometimes unscrupulous ministers, decided that the minister was no longer to be independent, but was to be the Nizam's executive officer, acting in subordination to His Highness, and referring for orders all matters of importance and all cases in which ambiguity or controversy was involved during discussions in Council. Since the appointment of the Peshkar Maharaja Kishen Pershad as the Nizam's Minister a complete change has been effected. It has become evident to all concerned that the Nizam is by far the shrewdest and most capable man in the State, and that he was determined to exercise the functions of a ruler not in name alone but in very deed. The results under the new régime have been most happy. The intriguer is now almost unknown in Hyderabad, and interference with the administration has been relegated to the trivial forms of jealousy, dislike, and backbiting. The Nizam is at last master of the situation, and is recognised as such, not only by his minister and officials, but by the subjects of the State.

Jam-i-Jamshed.—"The words of your address, eloquent as they are, will not, however, convey to our fellow subjects in other parts of the Empire what we see here to-day. Nor do they render full justice to the efforts and good-will of the citizens of this great western port of India, which culminate in this splendid ceremony. ..In thus following the footsteps of my father, we are but carrying out the traditions established by him, and one which, I trust, will be repeated as generation succeeds generation. I hope, and, indeed, I am confident, that the same loving interest in this great Continent which was inspired in my father's heart by his visit to India, and which has never abated, will equally come to us. If, as we travel through the various countries which make up this great Empire, the Princess and I can win the sympathy and good-will of the people of India, we shall secure a precious result from the voyage which we have been privileged to undertake. ...I have inherited from my father and from our late beloved Sovereign, your first Queen-Empress, a love for India and for Indians. From my youth I have associated the name of India with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy, and bravery, and I doubt not that these early ideas will be confirmed and strengthened by the experiences which await me in the next few months. ..We both hope to carry home with us, not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but an increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems, and an acquaintance with the various classes, official and non-official, British and Indian, which, under God's providence, are labouring to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her people."

Words such as these can never fail to go deep to the hearts of any people; and the Indians, ever so keenly responsive to sentiments of sympathy and good-will, will not surely fail to keep them engraven on their memories for all time. This whole speech of their future King will ever be one of their most cherished possessions, and the few passages we have quoted above, as well as others, will be read and re-read as a source of hope and inspiration as much by men who toil in the humbler paths of life as by those who are called by providence to higher destinies. They will read in these words much more than an assurance of their being the objects of unabated care and interest on the part of their Sovereign and his Family. They will find in them much more than a pledge of sustained sympathy, good-will, and protection from His Imperial Majesty and each successive generation of his heirs. They will trace in them a keen and earnest desire on the part of their future King to appreciate their love and loyalty towards their Sovereign, which are deeper than all words and inexpressible by any outward manifestations of devotion and joy. They will discover in them abundant evidences of the fact of their unshaking fidelity and allegiance to the British Raj being heartily recognised and acknowledged by their beloved Sovereign, his Heir, and the Royal Family of England. All this means an additional gain to India and her people. The words of gracious condescension which fell from His Royal Highness, day before yesterday, constitute a most important and valuable token of the sympathy and regard entertained by India's Sovereign and his Family towards her people. And they are no less a token of the confidence that is reposed by them in India's attachment to the Throne of England and the person of its august occupant. India will, henceforth, have no reason to believe that she is not trusted as she should be by her sovereign lord. She will have little occasion to feel that the sentiments of unalterable love and unfaltering devotion so long cherished by her for the King-Emperor and his Family have failed to be sufficiently impressed upon and acknowledged by them.

The passages from the Prince's very happy speech, which we have quoted above, resolve themselves into these sentiments and assurances:—"We appreciate the value and importance of India to the Throne and Empire of Britain. We recognize that you love us better and are more closely attached to us than your words and demonstrations of affection and loyalty, eloquent as they are, convey the idea of. That loving interest which was inspired in His Majesty's heart by his visit to this country, thirty years ago, continues unabated, and we participate in those feelings of regard and sympathy for India. We have inherited from the late Queen-Emress and the present Sovereign a love for India and her peoples, and it will be inherited by our children generation after generation. We are aware of the many good qualities of the Indians and we count upon our impressions of their many private and public virtues being strengthened by what we are to see during the coming few months. When we go away from here we shall carry our sympathy and affection for our great Dependency strengthened, and not only that, but a better knowledge of your wants and wishes and a more abiding interest in your welfare will accompany us." What people, situated especially as the people of India are, can fail to be deeply touched or to feel as if they are greatly enriched by this generous message of assurance and hope? Not only to the present generation of the people of India but to those to come will the speech of His Royal Highness prove a source of constant encouragement and support. Confident that they are loved and trusted by their Sovereign, his heir, and his family as much as they love and trust them; assured that the present visit has not only added to the warmth of sympathy and affection hitherto cherished for the subject peoples, but has intensified their Royal Highnesses' interest in India's wants and problems; they will certainly be able to look to the future with greater hope and confidence than they have hitherto done. For those who want to know what substantial, tangible good would India receive from the present visit the words "we both hope to carry home with us, not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but an increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems" should suffice. Here is a pledge and an assurance the value of which at least we will never be disposed to under-rate. The consciousness, in future years that His Royal Highness has an "abiding interest in India's wants and problems" must prove a source of immense consolation to her sons, especially in those dark and perilous hours when they are seized by despair and the wretchedness and the misery of their lot, aggravated by political and natural calamities, seem too heavy for their feeble shoulders to sustain.

Lady's Pictorial.—In view of the arrival of the Prince and Princess of Wales at Bombay, which by a curious and happy coincidence takes place on November 9th, the birthday of the King, Mrs. Ella Mary Gordon sends me the following loyal tribute:—

THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES VISIT TO INDIA.

We followed, as you crossed the wave-tossed ocean,
Leaving sad hearts and dearest ones at home,
The tempest braved, to far-off shores all golden,
And distant scenes content for us to roam.

The thoughts of all were with you on the journey,
For Memory's chains are woven on this earth,
Though seas divide, you hear the nation's greeting,
And love still links the land that gave you birth.

Your little ones are treasured by the nation
At duty's call you hastened to obey,
But Heaven guards your dearest earthly treasures,
And guardian angels watch by night and day.

O'er sunny shores and India's white-crowned mountains
Britain is proud the nation's zeal is known,
Their King and Queen by messages bequeathing
Gems that are sparkling from a glorious throne.

Theirs a true crown whose jewels are not heavy,
Love lightens loads as stars the darkest land,
No strength so fast as loyalty's firm union,
No power so strong as its sweet mystic band.

Our Empire wide is with the white waves tossing
And with the vessel late upon its way,
When sceptres shine the glory is far-reaching,
And anthems swell to praise an honoured away.

Newcastle Daily Chronicle.—Almost exactly thirty years after the landing in India of his Royal father the present Prince of Wales has set his foot on Indian soil. And it was in every way appropriate that Bombay should be the point of disembarkation, for not only is the great western port India's gateway on the sea, and the gateway as well through which a large portion of Central Asia gains access to the outer world, but it is the city which came to the English throne as a portion of the dowry of the Portuguese bride of Charles II, and thus formed the nucleus of our far-reaching dominions in the Middle East. The visit of the present King Edward was an historical event, the echoes of which still reverberate in Hindustan, and it has already been placed beyond all reasonable doubt that the visit of the present heir to the throne will be as memorable and have results as far-reaching. The scenes witnessed at Bombay when the Prince and Princess of Wales landed and passed through the city were such as might well give a new and more intense meaning to the common phrase "a Royal progress." There was not and has not been in connection with the preparations for this great tour a single jarring note. But if in India there has been no symptom of waning allegiance to the British dominion as personified by its Sovereign and his heir, and evidence only of a growing attachment, there have been in recent days unfortunate incidents in which public servants holding exalted positions in the British Raj have played a part. Wherefore the Royal visit can only be regarded as opportune.

We cannot think that the Indian population fails to discriminate between local executive officers for the time being of British rule in India and the essential elements of that rule at home—the throne and the British People. Still the Royal tour must have on all-important utility as a public demonstration to all of the continued concern of the Empire for the best interests of the Indian peoples, and of the abiding faith in India's future which animates the race which holds over the Peninsula the mildest sway that conqueror ever exerted. India is the land of sectional interests and of views of life and duty which clash at many points, and the task of one who in the natural order of things will be Emperor of India is not an easy one. But the Prince of Wales had not been ashore for many moments before he gave the fullest assurance that he has risen to the occasion. By the very nature of things the British people had during the late reign few opportunities of gauging the character and qualifications for affairs of State of the then Duke of York. The succession of his Royal father has given him his chance, and the history of the past three or four years has made it clear that the Heir-Apparent has a genuine capacity for public affairs and a generous dower of the quality of tact. He has imagination, too; he is never content with a mere recital of the obvious and the commonplace and has, within the jealously guarded limits of the constitutional prince, shown that he has the power of detached thinking and of initiative.

The tour which he made four years ago throughout the vast dominions beyond the seas was an event unique in the history of the Empire. But even that historic pilgrimage was incomplete for the reason that the teeming Indian Peninsula was not included in the itinerary. This tour is, therefore, to be regarded both as a new project and as a completion of the great tour. The peoples of India are far from being indifferent to the blessings of efficient and benevolent administration, and certain sections of them have indeed aspirations, more or less precisely defined, in the direction of popular government as it is understood in the West; but after all it is the personal influence of the ruler that makes its most direct appeal to them. And the Prince of Wales in his first speech at Bombay supplied the personal touch to which we know India in its length and breadth will respond. "I hope, and indeed am confident," he said, "that the same loving interest in this great continent which was inspired in my father's heart by his visit to India and which has never abated, will equally come to us. If, as we travel through the various countries which make up this great Empire, the Princess and I can win the sympathy and goodwill of the peoples of India, we shall secure a precious result from the voyage which we have been privileged to undertake." This could not have been better said, and India would know how to respond. In days gone by English monarchs have known hardly anything of the distant parts of the Empire. The present King set the example by doing something to come into touch with the far-off possessions of the Crown. But it has been left to his heir to go further afield, and to take such stock as may be taken in a hasty pilgrimage of the whole. This policy is in harmony with the new spirit of this country and of the Empire of which it is the heart; and the Indian tour is an important step in the promotion of that sentiment of unity and inter-dependence which is destined to carry us further in the direction of the true federation of the Empire than all the statutes that the lawgivers can devise.

Northern Whig.—The Prince and Princess of Wales are now engaged in completing their survey of the Empire over which in the course of nature they will one day—may it be far distant—hold sway as King-Emperor and Queen. India in one sense is within the British Empire, in another it is an empire in itself—so vast that even although they have made it the object of a special journey, it will be impossible for the Prince and Princess within the time at their disposal to do more than skim the surface, as it were. But their stay in India, though far too short to enable them to see all that is worth seeing, will be long enough to convey to them a sense of its illimitable area, its hoary antiquity, the extraordinary variety of its problems, and its magnificent possibilities. It will be long enough to engender within them a profound realisation of the responsibility that rests upon Great Britain in connection with the mighty task which it has undertaken, and of the prestige which India lends to the British Crown. Out of this visit good must come alike to the Royal travellers themselves, to the people of India who are privileged to see them and meet them, and to the still larger body that will not see them, but will learn that they have deemed it worth their while to cross the seas in order to make acquaintance with the Indian Empire. For any British man or woman a visit to India is an education in itself; for him who will one day be its Emperor, and who looks out upon it with that knowledge, all that he sees and hears must have an impressiveness which those who have no such spur to the imagination can hardly realise. That which they are learning now will be of incalculable advantage to them in that future when they will stand towards India in a still closer relation than they do to-day. They have already made the grand tour of the British Colonies. They have been in Australia and in Canada. But throughout almost the whole of their former tour they were in contact with a civilisation not only European but British. Their experiences in Great Britain were not essentially different from those to which they were accustomed in the home land. But India is very different. There besides each other exist two civilisations. As compared with the older the younger is but of yesterday. There they will meet not one race but many—many languages, many different forms of religious belief. India will be to them a new world.

Salutary as it will be for the Prince and Princess to see India for themselves, and to gain that insight in which those who visit India, be it for ever so short a time, are incomparably superior to those who have not, their going to India will have its result in making stronger the ties between India and Great Britain. To the Anglo-Saxon population of India their appearance among them will serve to bring home the fact that, although they now live under other skies, their vested interest in the British Empire is still as strong as ever. It will rejoice their hearts to feel that, although they are far from home, they have still their relations with those whom they have left as citizens of the same Empire and as subjects of the same King. But there are others to whom also the visit will be profitable—the Native Princes and the natives themselves, whose loyalty cannot fail to be intensified by the sight of the representatives of the great Power over the seas to which their allegiance has hitherto been tendered. Some of these have in remembrance the Indian visit thirty years ago of the present King, then Prince of Wales. That message did much to quicken the devotion of the natives towards this country. It brought within the actual ken a member of the family to which they had done reverence from afar off. The great Queen had taken hold of their imaginations, but they had never seen her; but now they saw her son, and for a people congenitally disposed to clothe the idea in outward form that was a great deal. A like efficacy will the present visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales have. The account which we publish to-day of the reception by the Prince yesterday in Bombay of the Native Princes of the Presidency illustrates in the delight which it afforded the Chiefs the virtue which the presence in India of the Prince is bound to have in promoting a better understanding of British goodwill towards India. Nothing could exceed the heartiness of the reception that was accorded to the Prince and Princess on their arrival. That was a fine speech in which on Monday the Prince acknowledged the address that had been presented to him by the Corporation on his arrival. Exceedingly felicitous were the references to the warm interest which he who is now the King-Emperor takes in the welfare of his Indian subjects. The Prince declared that in going to India he was but following in the traditions established by his father, and we may be sure that his hearers felt that no worthier example could be have had.

Pall Mall Gazette.—The Prince and Princess of Wales must be having agreeable impressions of the higher picturesque and more vivid colouring of life as it is lived "east of Suez." The Prince has lost no time in offering a gracious reception to the native Royalties, who attach such high value and importance to the meeting with His Royal Highness, while the Princess of Wales has reserved for her a still more interesting and significant experience. She is to receive in the Bombay Town Hall a welcome from the women of India, decorated with the curious symbolism which belongs to the great distinctive religions of the country. The Parsees will break over Her Royal Highness an egg and a coconut, followed by a shower of rice; the Hindoo ladies will offer a lamp and red powder; and the Mahomedans will perform the pretty ceremony of garlanding their illustrious guest with flowers. The interest of the native women of India in an event of this nature, and the co-operation of different creeds in paying it honour, are not the least worthy symptoms of the genuineness of Indian loyalty.

Rangpur Gazette.—The programme of the Royal visit to Calcutta as settled up to date is a very full one. The first people the Royal visitors are to meet are the civil authorities of the city, who will read their address of welcome and make a presentation of the jewels that it has been decided to give to the Princess in the Throne-room at Government House; this will be on the 29th December. On that evening there will be a levée at Government House. On the 30th there will be a State visit to the races. On the 31st (Sunday) the Royal visitors will attend service at St. Paul's Cathedral, and then go up to Barrackpore. On New Year's Day there will be the Proclamation Parade, the State Banquet, and the University Convocation, and probably a purdah party at Belvedere. On the 2nd January there will be a reception by the Princess of Wales and the Native fête on the Maidan. On the 3rd the town will be illuminated, and a garden party is also fixed for that evening. On the 4th the State Ball and Dinner. On the 5th the laying of the foundation-stone of the Victoria Memorial Hall and dinner with Lord Kitchener. On the 6th the Royal tourists will leave for Darjeeling.

Saturday Review.—By a happy or well-timed coincidence the Prince and Princess of Wales arrived in India on the King's birthday. Hence the welcome to India was made in circumstances of double celebration. The Prince struck the right note in his first speech when he said he hoped and was confident that the same happy results would be attended the present visit that attended his father's thirty years since. The Prince and Princess of Wales are rounding off the mission of four years ago when they went to Australia, South Africa, and Canada. They are, as the Prince said, carrying out the tradition established by the King—a tradition which he trusts will be repeated from generation to generation.

It is well that the first city in India to receive the Prince and Princess should be Bombay, which writes on its arms, with whatever questionable accuracy, Urbs prima in Indis and came first to the English as a Royal dowry. It has certainly given the Prince a royal welcome. The splendour of the ceremonial has been enhanced by the presence of the Princes and Chiefs of Western India who have assembled in all their magnificence to greet the Prince and whose picturesque retinues make a show brilliant enough to revive the memories of the Coronation Durbar. From Bombay the Prince will move north to Rajputana, where he will find whatever still remains unspoiled of ancient or mediæval India a striking contrast with the highly modernised city which has given him his first glimpse of the country.

Spectator.—The Prince and Princess of Wales landed in Bombay on the King's birthday, and met with a very cordial reception. Replying to a Municipal Address, the Prince observed that he inherited both from his father and Queen Victoria a love for India and Indians. From his youth he had associated the name of India with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy, and bravery, and the only drawback attaching to his present journey was that "time was too short to see everything, and to tell everyone who has joined in greeting us how heartily grateful we are." The reception gained lustre from the presence of a remarkable gathering of the great Feudatory Princes of the Indian Empire, including the Maharaja of Kohlapur and many Chiefs of the noblest Rajput lineage.

Standard.—The Royal progress yesterday from the Apollo Bunder to the Governor's house at Malabar Point gave the Prince and Princess a splendid view of the magnificent public buildings which lend distinction to Bombay. They saw, indeed, something of the native city; and you cannot drive along Parel Road without getting very close to a real India with which the Gothic outlines of the Senate Hall, the Secretariat, the High Court, and Elphinstone College are strangely out of harmony.

But this afternoon Their Royal Highnesses were taken into the very heart of the native city. They have been through the Mahratta quarter, along Girgaum Road; through the cloth market in Shaikh Memon-street, where also is the Cathedral Mosque (Jama Musjid); through the copper bazaar in front of Mombadevi tank, the busiest, noisiest, and one of the most delightful streets, as Sir George Birdwood has said, in all Bombay; and they have had a close view of the Marwari and Banian bazaars, where it is thought the greater part of the wealth of Bombay is accumulated.

The Prince also opened a new street, to be known henceforward as Princess Street, which runs from Queen's Road to the Jama Musjid. Special arrangements have been made by the municipal authorities to give the school children of Bombay a view of the procession, and four immense stands—one in the University Gardens, another in Hornby Road, a third in the Northbrook Gardens, in the heart of the city, and a fourth at Chowpatty—were erected for their accommodation.

There must have been nearly twenty thousand of these youthful spectators, whose interest in the Royal visit was thought fully stimulated by a gift to each of sweetmeats and a medal bearing the effigies of the Prince and Princess.

The scene presented by the bazaars was wonderful in its variety and kaleidoscopic wealth of colour. The Prince, all experienced traveller as he is, could hardly have seen a crowd so variegated and picturesque, or seldom one that gave a greater impression of a thronging multitude.

The open space outside Crawford Market was packed from end to end, and when Their Royal Highnesses entered the narrow bazaar the flood of humanity seemed like a living stream overflowing all its bounds. Not only roadways, but the posts, balconies, and other projections, were swarming with men, who were perched like cats on the sloping roofs and every point of vantage. Nothing more striking could be imagined than some of the older native buildings, with their painted fronts and carved and gilded timber-work.

Each window and verandah displayed lines of spectators, whilst the house-fronts blazed with glowing silks and draperies of every conceivable hue, and in some cases gleaming jewels. Bombay poured forth all her wealth and decorative splendour, and of poverty little was seen, except, perhaps, the packed, dusky, but cheerful crowd on the pavements.

The streets were so full that there was only just room for the procession, which, with the Hussars, the Bodyguard, the Bombay Cavalry, the Imperial Cadets, and a train of khaki-painted guns, was an imposing spectacle.

Nor was the multitude silent, as Orientals often are. There was frequent applause all along the route, and real salvos of cheers as the Royal carriage emerged on the roadway from the People's Fair, through which the Prince and Princess were driven, and at many other points. The behaviour of the crowd was admirable, and there could be no doubt of the genuine delight of the natives at seeing the Royal visitors.

In the morning the Prince received visits from the principal Chiefs, including the Maharaja of Kolhapur, the Rao of Cutch, the Nawab of Junagadh, the Jam Sahib of Navanagar, and others, accompanied by the Political Residents.

After the banquet at Government House the Prince of Wales drove to the Secretariat, where he held a levée, at which all the distinguished residents and officials of Bombay were presented.

Times.—The drive of the Prince and Princess of Wales through the native city to-day evoked marked popular enthusiasm. The route was lined by the dense crowds, who cheered and applauded as heartily as they did yesterday, while the windows of the high-storeyed living houses were filled with women and children, who were specially attracted by the prospect of seeing the Princess. A full military escort accompanied the party, and the passage of the procession through miles of streets was watched with excited interest. Their Royal Highnesses visited the Wadia fire temple, where the Parsee High Priest invoked a blessing upon them.

The ceremony of opening the new thoroughfare named Princess Street was simple but effective. Her Royal Highness was loudly cheered as the tablet bearing the name was unveiled. The party afterwards visited the People's Fair, being everywhere accorded a most loyal reception.

The Prince's charm of manner created a deep impression upon the ten Native Chiefs who were privileged to be received by him this morning. Receptions of this kind are most highly valued, as are the return visits which he paid. All the arrangements are proceeding admirably.

A good deal of interest exists in the presentation of an address to-morrow by native ladies of all communities with special Oriental ceremonies. The Princess will be seated on the Takhta Taus, or Peacock Throne, made after the pattern used at the time of Mumtaz Mahal, the consort of Shah Jehan. Purdah ladies will be present.

At the reception of the Native Chiefs by the Prince of Wales at Government House to-day each Chief was accompanied and introduced by the Political Officer of his State.

The reception-room was a relatively small but sumptuously furnished apartment, opening from either side on spacious, airy verandahs. At the upper end of the room were two gold and crimson chairs, one a few inches lower than the other. The Prince took his place on the higher of the two throne-like seats, each Chief taking the lower chair beside him, successively, in the order of introduction. The Maharaja of Kolhapur came first in order of rank. Each interview lasted exactly a quarter of an hour. The Chiefs in turn advanced with profound salaams, shook hands, and conversed with the Prince. All except the Jam Sahib of Navanagar spoke fluent English.

Two important features of the ceremony were the submission by each Chief, Jagirdar or Minister of his golden nazar, a symbolic gift held in the extended palm as a token of homage, which the Prince lightly touched in acknowledgment, and the distribution of attar of roses carried by the attendants in silver vessels. In this ceremony the Prince first sprinkled the Chief presented to him with the perfume, the members of the Royal suite then sprinkling the Chief's followers.

The Princess of Wales viewed the ceremony from the verandahs.

Times of India.—Yesterday His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales opened a very crowded day with the reception of the ten leading Chiefs of the Bombay Presidency at Government House. These visits were conducted with full State honours and all the picturesque ceremonies which accompany them. The Darbar Room was converted into a reception chamber, and on a raised scarlet covered dais erected under the handsome screen of carved blackwood stood the gilded chairs for His Royal Highness and the Chiefs who had the honour of being received by him. On either side of the approach to the dais were ranged other chairs of gilt and white, those on the left of His Royal Highness being for the Staff, and on the right for the Jagirdars and principal officers of State in attendance on the Chief. The entrance hall and steps were also carpeted with scarlet cloth, and in the vestibule the stalwart Lancers of His Excellency the Governor's Bodyguard stood to attention. The guard-of-honour was posted by the drive from the upper entrance.

The first to be received was His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur, the principal Mahratha Chief of the Deccan, attended by his leading feudatories and officials. His Highness arrived to the accompaniment of the usual salutes from guns and guard-of-honour. The Maharaja was conducted into the presence of His Royal Highness at the entrance to the reception chamber. Together they walked to the dais, where they sat on the State chairs. Just a suggestion of orientalism was lent to the scene by the presence behind the State chairs of chobdars in their scarlet livery, waving their chowris and bearing the eastern emblems of Empire. The Prince of Wales was again wearing the cool white summer uniform of his high rank in the Royal Navy, and the Maharaja a brilliant costume of shimmering silk. His Highness then presented the usual nazar, which was touched and remitted. The feudatories and State officials were afterwards presented to His Royal Highness, and proffered the usual nazar which, as before, was touched and remitted. The Prince of Wales entered into conversation with his guest for some minutes and at the conclusion of the reception scarlet robed retainers brought attar and pan-supari in beautifully chased silver vessels. First His Royal Highness presented attar and pan to the Maharaja, then an officer of the Political Department rendered the same courtesy to the feudatories. The reception was now over. His Royal Highness accompanied the Maharaja as far as the exit from the chamber where he bade him farewell, and His Highness departed with full honours.

The Rao of Cutch, a picturesque figure in brave garb set off by resolute bearing, followed. His Jagirdars too attracted more than passing notice—bold, robust types, still bearing traces of the qualities which once made their ancestors the daring raiders they were. Then came the Kathiawar Chiefs, first among the seniors His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh.

The Princes from Kathiawar were conducted into the Presence by the Political Agent. His Royal Highness receiving them at the dais and bidding them farewell there. With Their Highnesses of Kolhapur and Cutch His Royal Highness was able to converse freely in English, but the Nawab of Junagadh speaks nothing but the vernacular and the services of Lieutenant-Colonel Kennedy as interpreter had to be enlisted. After Junagadh came His Highness the Jam Sahib of Navanagar, a blaze of rich gold embroidery, then the progressive Thakore Sahib of Bhavnagar, the Raja of Rajpipla, the Nawab of Cambay, the Rana of Porbander, the Raj Sahib of Dhruv-gadra, and the Thakur Sahib of Gondal. From early on Thursday morning the residents of Walkeshwar Road seem to have done little but stand at their doors and along the roadsides in order not to miss the chance of seeing Their Royal Highnesses whenever they leave Government House by the Lower Gate or return by that route and each time our Royal visitors pass by a welcome of the warmest description is accorded them. Having spent the morning in receiving visits from several of the Chiefs at present in Bombay it was arranged that His Royal Highness should start from Government House shortly after four o'clock, drive through the native town, open the new street—Princess Street—and pass through the Peoples Fair. About four o'clock a detachment of His Excellency the Governor's Bodyguard in their blood-red coats, with their lances at the carry, were seen coming down the Hill from the road which leads to the Upper Gate of the Gubernatorial residence. A minute or two elapsed and then His Excellency's carriage came in view, and this was the signal for hearty cheering from the assembled spectators. Ten minutes later the guard and police stationed at the Lower Gate began to get ready for something that was about to happen, and almost immediately mounted police and a couple of military officers trotted out through the Gates, and then came a regular cavalcade. The 10th Hussars band were the next in order, being followed by more Hussars, Artillery with their guns, 33rd Cavalry, Imperial Service Troops; then some Staff officers, more Hussars and Native Cavalry.

Following closely behind was the Royal carriage with its four horses and red-coated postillions. The Prince wore morning dress and grey helmet, and both he and the Princess smiled on the crowd and pleasantly bowed their acknowledgments of the round of cheers that went up as they emerged from the Lower Gates. Three other carriages conveying the Suite were behind, and in the rear of these came more Hussars and young Kumars looking as fresh as the proverbial paint after their exertions of the day before. Next followed a small party of mounted officers.

Still more Hussars and another detachment of Native Cavalry. And then about half a dozen wild-looking men in flowing white robes, with enormous white puggrees, came dashing along through the spectators to form the rear guard. They were mounted on singularly spirited mules and huge musacks, sprinkling water as they went, hung from either side of the saddles. The rush with which they came on quite took everybody aback, but when the point of situation became understood the onlookers laughed their heartiest and cheered the bhistles to the echo. Shortly after the start one of the native troopers left his saddle and embraced mother earth, but he was speedily up again and back in his place in the ranks, apparently none the worse for the unrehearsed experience which had befallen him. About this point a sharp military command rang out from somewhere above the road level and on glancing up looking warriors were seen on a terrace. This was a delicate compliment paid by His Highness the Chief of Jamkhandi and was duly acknowledged by the Prince. Proceeding at a smart trot the bottom of the hill was quickly reached, and from here throughout the rest of the route taken to the Peoples' Fair the spectators kept on increasing in numbers till when Girgaum was reached the sides of the roads were lined many deep while the windows of the houses and the house-tops were occupied to their utmost limits.

At the corner of French Road near Babuinath's Mundir a brief halt was made. There a neatly decorated little shamianna had been erected, and assembled beneath its scarlet canopy were the temple's trustees including Swami Vivikanand Charya, Sir Bhulachandra Krishna, and Mr. Dwarakadas Dharamsy. Bouquets of flowers were presented to the Prince and Princess and a short Sanskrit poem specially composed for the occasion was recited for the delectation of Their Royal Highnesses. This over the journey was continued, the route taken being along French Road and over French Bridge into Girgaum. The road was flanked by venetian masts bearing shields with streamers between them and crossed by rows of bunting. Not long after entering the Girgaum Road a very pathetic incident was witnessed. Standing among the crowd was a Parsee funeral procession. On seeing the Royal carriage approach the mourners gravely salaamed its august occupants, and the Prince solemnly uncovered and remained so till the mournful cortege was passed.

A great deal of pains were expended in making Girgaum Back Road—not a remarkably enticing locality—look its brightest for the occasion. Flags, streamers, venetian masts, and all kinds of decorations had been arranged, and the result was very bright and pleasing. But perhaps nothing bespoke the warmth of welcome better than the profusion of loyal sentiments conveyed on screens, boards, doors, posts, and by a dozen other means. "God Save the Pair" was the prayer of the tenant of a little shop near the Tramway terminus. Then on a strip of cloth spanning the road "Artist Fernandes greets Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales." Further on came "Dr. Dandeker's Greeting to the Prince and Princess." Another worthy citizen was anxious that the Royal Guests should "Tell Papa we are Happy." The Portuguese Community, assembled in a somewhat narrow gateway, welcomed Their Highnesses with flags and scrolls bearing messages of loyalty, and added some very brassy music to make the compliment complete. The "Royal Sweet Mart" expressed the hope that "May India be made sweet by thy sojourn," pictures of Their Royal Highnesses and a couple of native ladies appearing in the middle of the scroll. A "Sweet seller" burst forth as follows:—"Sweet reader of this, you know well how much delighted we are to see the Prince and Princess. India wants sweet sympathy." There was no end to the cheering as the Royal procession passed along and at points rose leaves contained in gold covered baskets suspended in mid-air were showered upon Their Royal Highnesses as they drove underneath. A little before Princess Street was reached the procession paused for a few moments outside Parsi Fire Temple, where the priest in charge recited special prayers in Zend, the sacred language of the Parsees, floral gifts also being proffered when the recital was ended. Close at hand a large strip of white cloth running from side to side of the roadway gave expression to the subjoined prayer:—"The Parsees pray that the Sacred Fire of the Heart of the British Empire may burn brightly and flourish for ever."

Then the procession turned into the new street which His Royal Highness was to open.

When the Bombay Improvement Trust was created by Lord Sandhurst in 1898, to deal with the appallingly insanitary condition of the city revealed by the close inquiry instituted during the plague operations, three main works were entrusted to it—the improvement of the unwholesome quarters of the native town by clearing and remodelling the worst districts; the construction of main thoroughfares running east and west, providing new arteries for traffic and admitting the sea-sweetened western breezes into the centres of dense population; and the rescue of those parts of the Island still undeveloped from the blight of the jerry builder. Princess Street strictly comes under the second category, but in fact it serves three important purposes—it opens up a wide passage through an area thickly crowded with houses, by which the fresh westerly breezes from the sea can penetrate into the southern portions of the city; it clears several insanitary areas, providing in their stead sites for buildings to be erected under restrictions and regulations which will ensure the maintenance of sanitary conditions, and it furnishes a new avenue for traffic.

Although it presented a fair exterior to Girgaum and Kalbadevie Roads, one of the most insanitary and densely crowded quarters of the whole city was embraced in the area lying between Queen's Road (from Marine Lines Station to the Burning Ground) and Crawford Market. Many of these old rookeries have been swept out of existence, and in admiration of the splendid improvements accomplished we are prone to forget the pestilential conditions that have passed away. But writing of the state of this neighbourhood some two years ago a close observer, describing a midnight visit, said:—

"The projecting verandahs of these low chawls block out what light the stars are giving. One sickly lamp only serves to make the darkness more visible. The rude unpaved road, cumbered with festering heaps of refuse and saturated with filth, is nevertheless the bedchamber of the overflow from the petty rooms of scores of men and children in every stage of undress here on a rude charpoy in nineteen cases out of twenty on nothing but a strip of matting. A few plastered bamboos screen off the hollow under a crazy staircase. In this miserable shelter a man and his family dwell paying for a covered space say three feet by fifteen, three rupees a month, probably a third of their income. Step gingerly over the recumbent forms on the verandah and peer in at the low door opened at the bidding of the guide. The reek of a couple of cowering fires makes you cough and gasp, and it is a minute before your eyes grow accustomed to the gloom. The blackened rafters are a mere cobweb of dirty rags, a line of boxes divides the floor space between the two families who occupy it, the one window—Oh fateful blunder!—is securely closed. Thirteen people, sweating at every pore, are here gathered for their evening meal. In a moment you are drenched with perspiration; your head swims with the poison of these foetid exhalations, and it is a merciful relief to turn to the noisome atmosphere of the street. Yet this room is only typical of scores in this particular chawl of thousands in this quarter."

It was amid scenes such as these that the Improvement Trustees began to work. They have driven a broad new Road, eighty feet wide, from Queen's Road near the Burning Ground, to Girgaum Road, and from the opposite side of this to Kalbadevie Road. Here, from a fine open space, it bifurcates. On the south, enlarged Lohar Street leads to Crawford Market, on the north an entirely new street to the Jumma Masjid. There it halts for the present; ultimately, in conjunction with the Mandvi-Koliwada scheme—one of the latter enterprises of the Trust—it will be carried to the Eastern face of the island, thus providing uninterrupted communication between Back Bay and the Harbour. Moreover, benefiting by the experiences of England, the policy of the Trust is to secure to itself the profits accruing from the increased value of the land arising from these improvements. The property acquired on either side of the actual line of the street is extensive enough to embrace all the frontages, and these new buildings are to be constructed, not only in accordance with a strict sanitary model, but in harmony with an architectural design worthy of the new highway.

The scene of the opening ceremony, though disfigured in some measure by the nakedness of the buildings whose neighbours had been razed and lacking the new frontages which will one day adorn the highway, lent itself to a certain measure of spectacular display. There was plenty of space, which is a useful asset, and then the surrounding buildings were typical of the new Bombay which has been growing up in the last ten or fifteen years. They have not the picturesque of the old carved and painted houses in Kalbadevie. Nor the character of the many-storied blocks in Abdul Rehman Street. But no one can call these four or five-storied glorified chawls, with their tiers of verandahs, frosted fronts, and gaily painted exteriors unpicturesque, especially when they have been newly garnished. They were all freshly-painted and coloured-washed for yesterday's ceremony, and formed a splendid setting for the myriad faces that brightened them.

The whole population of Bombay seems to be in the streets in these days, for it is difficult to believe that there can be more people in the city than the hundreds of thousands who congregate wherever a glimpse of Their Royal Highnesses may be gleaned. The opening of Princess Street was only an item in the Royal progress; the bits of street which could be seen there form only fragments of the long route embraced in the evening drive. Yet the densely massed spectators appeared to number their tens and tens of thousands. Down Girgaum Road as far as the eye could reach was a serried mass of humanity behind the officers who kept the route. Verandah and window were crowded to suffocation point. And one pleasant feature in the rejoicings is that the women and the children are having an uncommonly good time. Western peoples are apt to look upon all Eastern women as debarred from all the joys of life which cannot be found in the diligent discharge of domestic duties. Like all sweeping generalisations it is far from accurate and certainly at yesterday's celebrations the women and the children were the favoured ones, for to them were allotted the best positions in the verandahs and balconies. There was not much space at the disposal of the Trustees to provide accommodation for their guests, but they made the most of the limited area at their disposal and with thoughtful kindness arranged that all their own employes should see the tamasha. Consequently only those who had special claims to be present were invited, and the gathering was more than usually representative of those who are engaged in the public work of the city. The Trustees mustered strongly, of course, and so also did the members of the Corporation. Commerce had her spokesmen in the presence of members of the Chamber and of the Port Trust, and industry in several of the most important mill-owners, the Government in the Members of Council, the Church in the Lord Bishop of Bombay. Not a few ladies braved the heat and brightened an already gay scene with their pretty summer frocks, and indeed it required some courage to do it. For the weather was unusually sultry for November, and as it was difficult to provide any shade in the contracted space, there was an hour's grilling before the Royal procession was seen.

Soon after four o'clock His Excellency the Governor arrived, escorted by his Bodyguard, as faultlessly equipped as usual. His Excellency was accompanied by Her Excellency Lady Amphil and the members of his staff, and alighted opposite the scene of the opening ceremony. This, by the way, took the form of unveiling a memorial tablet, whereon the name "Princess Street" was indelibly printed in large white marble letters upon a black marble ground. The tablet rested temporarily against a big house now undergoing reconstruction—a house whose gaping scars were cleverly concealed beneath a wealth of bunting—and it will be permanently fixed in the wall as soon as the building is sufficiently advanced to enable this to be done. The route of the Royal progress lay along Girgaum Road into Princess Street and then on to Crawford Market. Soon the roar of distant cheering indicated unmistakably the advent of the Royal carriages. Louder and louder it grew until it was temporarily drowned by the clatter of the escort, the smart 10th Hussars, the soldierly Horse Artillery, and the lean lithe centaurs of the 33rd Cavalry and the Kathiawar Imperial Service Lancers. There was an unexpected pause between the arrival of the last file of the escort and the appearance of the carriage. Then ushered by a tempest of cheering it rounded the corner and took up its position near the memorial stone, His Royal Highness and the Princess again and again acknowledging the warmth of the greeting. Their Royal Highnesses and Sir Walter Lawrence were the only occupants of the carriage, on either side of which rode officers of the Hussars whilst Mr. H. G. Gell, Commissioner of Police, rode by the side. During the visit the Commissioner of Police will invariably ride by the side of the carriage nearest the Prince.

Their Royal Highnesses did not alight from their carriage. His Excellency the Governor advanced to receive Their Highnesses and then presented the Hon'ble Mr. Walter Hughes, C.I.E., and the Hon'ble Mr. G. Owen Dunn, Chairman of the Improvement Trust. The Trustees were presented in turn, and Mr. Owen Dunn requested, on behalf of the city, the gracious privilege of calling the new highway Princess Street, after Her Royal Highness, and Her Royal Highness to declare it open. He said:—

"May it please Your Royal Highnesses,—

"In the name of the City Improvement Trust and of the Municipal Corporation, I beg that Your Royal Highnesses will be graciously pleased to grant special permission for this Street to be called 'Princess Street' in commemoration of this visit of Your Royal Highnesses to the City of Bombay and as permanent memorial of the first Princess of Wales to set foot in India; and I request that Her Royal Highness will honour us by unveiling the name of the Street."

Permission having been accorded, the Princess pressed the button of an electric attachment and the curtains rolled back, displaying the tablet, which showed the title of the street in the boldest relief. Rousing cheers went up when the tablet was exposed. These having subsided, Mr. Owen Dunn presented to Their Royal Highnesses small vellum-bound brochures containing brief particulars of the scheme. These were exquisitely printed on white satin and superbly bound; the brochure gave not only the name of the Trustees and their principal officers, but in a few sentences told the story of the Trust, the inauguration of the work, and the cost, signed by the Chairman. In acknowledging the gift of the brochures His Royal Highness said he was very happy indeed to be associated with such work.

He understood that it was Lord Sandhurst who initiated the movement which led to the formation of the Improvement Trust; he therefore wished that a copy of the brochure should be sent to him. It was Mr. Owen Dunn's privilege to be able to inform His Royal Highness that arrangements had already been made to that end and that a copy of the brochure would be sent to Lord Sandhurst by the outgoing mail.

With the gift of a beautiful basket of flowers to Her Royal Highness by Mr. Owen Dunn, the pleasant little ceremony concluded. Amidst a burst of cheering, again and again renewed, Their Royal Highnesses drove down the broad new highway to Crawford Market on their way to the Peoples' Fair. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Amphil speedily followed and the gathering dispersed. Admirable order was maintained throughout by the police under Mr. W. L. B. Souter.

After the opening ceremony the procession wended its way by Cross Road into Picket Road and so on into the Esplanado Cross, passing the St. Xavier's College, which with one or two other buildings at this end of the thoroughfare was effectively decorated. Proceeding past the Money School, the party turned into Esplanado Road, and entered the People's Fair by the West Entrance.

Approach our usually prosaic Maidan from where the visitor may, he cannot but be struck by the brilliant scene which presents itself within all three sides of the triangle formed by Cruikshank, Esplanado, and Waudby Roads. The first objects which catch the eye are the four graceful minarets, slender but conspicuous both by their height and still more so by the effective manner in which they are illuminated by electricity, in two distinct shades of red and white. From these the eye travels over a wide area, laid out as if by some magic wand—brilliant in conception, orderly in execution, vivid in colouring, and in every way calculated to appeal to the people as part of the welcome accorded to the Royal visitors within our gates. While in the loyal celebrations Europeans and Natives of the higher class may be accorded greater privileges, the people are not left in the cold; for these the People's Fair contains a thousand delights the recollection of which will linger for many a long day.

One of the pleasant duties which devolved on Their Royal Highnesses yesterday was to drive through the Fair and in doing so to declare it open. Punctually at a quarter to five the advance police guard signalled the approach of the Royal procession, and those responsible for the undertaking assembled at the huge archway which forms a massive looking entrance from the Esplanade Road into the Fair. Proudly stepped the chargers under the archway to the accompaniment of clattering swords and jingling spurs, followed by the dull roll of the guns over the turf.

Long before the Royal carriage turned into the archway the girls of the following schools—Gokuldas Tejpal, Sorabji Shapurji Bengali, Panday and five Joint Schools Committee institutions—rose and prepared to sing the Guzerati version of the National Anthem under the conductorship of Peroze Rustomji Botliwalla, who is known as the Parsi poet. Whatever may have been done in this respect during the 1875 Royal visit, this incident could not even have been conceived in those days of strict Indian orthodoxy. Here were gathered the flower of high-caste Hindu girlhood, whose grand mothers would not have been seen out of doors thirty years ago, dressed in gay sarrees, sparkling with jewels, assembled to welcome the Prince and Princess of Wales. The emancipation of Parsi women, too, has progressed considerably since our King-Emperor visited this land. The comingling of pretty sarrees, in shades of fawn and grey brightened by flashes of pink and blue, was very effective indeed, and must have pleased the Princess not a little.

As the carriage approached the strains of "God save the King" sung in the native dialect greeted the Royal visitors for the first time in their lives. These sweet girls-scholars sang in beautiful unison, the rendering of the music of our National Anthem being excellent. Then they stopped and cheered, and doubtless felt well rewarded by the smile from parted lips which the Princess gave them and the well pleased acknowledgment from Prince George. The grounds of the fair were kept clear, only a limited number of persons being given admittance, and these cheered lustily as the Royal couple drew abreast. A closer sight of the Prince and Princess could not have been desired, and everyone was pleased at the evident signs of interest the visitors took in the buildings forming the fair, whether it was the minarets, the electric fountain with the figure of Ind standing on a globe and holding up in fiery letters the proud statement "The sun never sets on the British Empire," or the bright booths.

Gracefully the procession wound its way towards the archway of exit, over which in bold relief stood out the words "Duo in Uno"—"Britannia and India." Ere reaching this, on the left, on a stand with tiers of seats, arose girls' voices singing

* * * * *

Hail England's cherished daughter
The Noble Princess May

* * * * *

God bless our Noble Princess
God bless the Prince of Wales.

The grouping here was pretty, and if one sought it contained a sentiment of unity, for at each end were ranged Parsi girls and in the centre Europeans looking virgin-like in spotless muslins. The schools represented were the Alexandra, Frere Fletcher, Empress, Young Ladies, John Connor, Cathedral, and Indo-British. Mr. McNec, the principal of the Bombay Education Society's Schools, held the baton. Just beyond, on the left, a large number of school children were assembled and these cheered lustily as the carriage approached and eventually drove out of the noble archway specially prepared for the occasion. The scene in front of Bori Bunder was remarkable, the crowds being large and enthusiastic.

There was now time to take in the detail of the Fair itself. The area covered is 1,500 feet square, or rather oblong, and Khan Bahadur Muncherjee Murzban, C.I.E., who has so frequently built mushroom cities for the pleasure of the public, has excelled himself on this occasion. He has thought and toiled, and aided by the valuable assistance of Mr. Hormasji C. Pastakia and others has produced a veritable Olympia, entrancing both in the matter of its structures and the amusements provided for the merry throngs which flowed in an irresistible stream immediately after the Royal Party had left. From every entrance way—from under the barriers, from over them—they flocked in, singly, in pairs, in batches and by battalions linked by hands or following in Indian file. In less time than it takes to tell the Fair was peopled, the opening ceremony had been performed and a good many of the fifty thousand for whom it has been devised found their way into the mazes, gazing open-mouthed at the wares in the booths, calling to each other about the illuminations. Ah! Wha! Tobba! Harree! were the exclamations of the delighted and surprised multitude which swelled in proportion as the night advanced. The Prince had come,—he had provided these joys: such was the idea of some of these thousands; why rob them of the pleasure the thought gave!

Walking down from the Terminus entrance, a long avenue of booths presents itself, broken by the revolving electric fountain, then on again, it reaches in a straight line to the opposite archway on Esplanade Road. But it is bisected, and branching off little streets of shops lead to places of amusement on both sides of the grounds. On a plot of land just off the Cruikshank Road, of horse-shoe shape, stands in bleached whiteness the switch-back railway, which possesses fourteen cars. These are carried to the summit by a revolving drum driven by steam power, whence they bear screaming crowds in batches of four or five over four switches and through a tunnel sixty feet long. Some bold scenery hangs from the structure and attracts crowds, to be allured by degrees into this glide over a plane of 1 in 40.

Not far from hero sports and pastimes of a purely native description are provided, namely, wrestlers, merry-go-rounds, monstrosity shows, Indian panoramas, astrologers, snake charmers, etc., ply their vocations. Then higher up is the half mile oblong track prepared for the Motor Carnival which takes place next week. And now for a peep into the brightly illuminated and tastefully decorated booths. Starting again from the eastern entrance, the shops on the left include a Rahmscope, marble statuary and toy shops. To the right dazzling silver-ware is shown, and here is situated one of the most popular booths, which holds machines for testing muscular grip, the strength of the biceps, an automatic horoscope, and weighing machine. Before hitting a policeman one might spend half an anna in the slot to test his striking power, and before sitting on the little knife-board extra seat of a ticea ghari might see what he runs to in avoidupois. The wealthy might be interested in the safes shown a little further on—the poor pass without a pause. On the opposite side is a Bioscope. Pass on! Fishponds, laughing gallery, games of skill, shooting galleries, skittel tables, go by in quick succession. They are crowded, and up the avenue here the Native Theatre stands out in gorgeous colours. Up the opposite avenue is the Cafe Chantant where song and dance are provided by European professionals. Recrossing to the right the English and American visitor can gain an idea of these allegorical stories of the Hindu mythology; for a variety of blood curdling scenes in statuary are displayed in a spacious booth. The refreshment saloons, of which there were many, were well patronised, and when the strollers tired there were seats near the bandstand where the Royal Scots band performed, the pipers skirting at intervals to delight of those who love the bagpipes. To describe all the booths, to mention all the side shows and entertainments would take quires of paper; suffice it to say that every taste was pandered to, and the large numbers turned homeward reluctantly, weary of foot, to dream of lights and music and carry a bright ray of life by reason of the Prince's visit to darksome chawl or cramped hovel.

At night the illuminations were, despite a moon which struggled in mute competition against the coruscations of light, most effective. Festoons of fire, now crystalline, or now-opalescent, or translucent, scintillated and mapped out in beams of radiation the plan of the grounds, while the avenue was rendered bright as noon-day by strong rays of incandescent lamps of tremendous candle-power. The pear-shaped electric lamps on the minarets at close quarters looked like limpid drops of colour. The two great archways were effectively picked out in butties, and the transparencies inserted in the upper panels typical of the peoples of India showed out clear and bright. The white glares in the sky could be seen for miles, being distinguishable even from Bandora Point.

The following is the composition of the Peoples' Fair Committee:—Chairman: His Excellency Lord Lamington; Vice-Chairman: the Hon'ble Sir Lawrence Jenkins, K.C.I.E.; Honorary Secretaries: Mr. W. D. Shepherd, I.C.S., Mr. Sassoon J. David, Sir Harkisondas Narotumdas, Kt., the Hon'ble Mr. Ibrahim Rohimtulla, Khan Bahadur M. C. Murzban, C.I.E., Mr. James Macdonald, Mr. Narotum Moorarjee Goculdas, Mr. Razi Kabiruddin, Mr. J. A. D. MacBain, Mr. Karimbhoy Adamjee Peerbhoy, and Mr. D. E. Wacha.

Having visited the People's Fair, the Prince and Princess again turned in the direction of the Native Town; and if their welcome on Thursday was enthusiastic, the reception that was extended to them yesterday was equally warm. The first drive had been more or less an official progress from the place of landing to Government House. Yesterday the people felt that the day was their day; that all the pomp and grandeur was on their account. And they were not slow to show that they appreciated the honour that was done them, and strained every nerve to give the son of the Emperor a right loyal greeting. Outside the People's Fair a densely-packed crowd cheered lustily as the Royal carriage came into sight, the Prince with his right hand constantly at the salute, and the Princess bowing and dispensing charming smiles on all.

Then a brief lull along the Hornby Road, for the route through the Native City was nearly eight miles in length, and yesterday the people meant to welcome the Royal pair from their own doors. The junctions of roads by the Crawford Market was a seething mass of shouting people. Overhead, streamers of flags and coloured papers gave the scene the appearance of fairyland, and to right and left, even where there was never any chance of the Prince passing by, the same signs of loyal enthusiasm were in evidence. The Crawford Market, for instance, as could be seen through the open windows, was as gaily decorated within as on the outside, and all along this winding drive there was not one glimpse of a street or alley unadorned. What more could be asked to prove how honest was the cheering, that the welcome was sincere, that the rejoicings were really from the heart?

It would be impossible to describe in this small space one half of the stirring scenes that made the Royal procession a triumphant progress. People, people, people; crushed in to the narrow strips of road that hemmed in the procession, gathered into knots upon house-tops sixty feet towards the sky, and a motley picture between, dotted with groups of faces in every window, and eager onlookers wherever a foothold could be got. Their eager appearance can be imagined better than described, and the cheering was a sound not soon to be forgotten, not the louder roar of an English crowd, but a shrill yell in keeping with the quaint surroundings. Much too eager were these thronging multitudes to cause trouble by disorder. No soldiers lined the streets, and they were not wanted, for the police sepoy were sufficient, with a dozen or twenty spaces between each one and his neighbour.

Perhaps nothing touched the hearts of the Native population more than the gracious kindness with which the Prince and Princess had consented to stop at certain points to receive floral tokens of good will. These were permitted to be given by representatives of all sections of the people. In Shaik Memon Street a halt was made by the Jumma Musjid, for the Sunni Muhammadans to present an offering; at the Mumtazi Temple in Musjid Bunder Road, the Jains and Hindus in that side of the island united to present an offering; and again, in the Chinch Bunder Road, the Shiahs Muhammadans foregathered at Graham's Naka with a gift. Some had bands, which played the National Anthem as Their Royal Highnesses drove up, but at every stopping place the loud music of applause filled the air, and the gracious bearing of the Royal visitors left an indelible impression.

At the bottom of Shaik Memon Street the procession turned sharp to the right and rolled along at a slow trot through the narrow streets and rows of lofty houses to the Musjid Bunder bridge. Then there was a brief drive along Frere Road, and once more the procession took a turn, re-entering the city by way of Elphinstone Bridge Road, and then passing through some of the open thoroughfares of the Native town to Parel Road. Another turn to the right was then made and so to Nagpada, where Their Royal Highnesses had an opportunity of witnessing some more of the results of the Improvement Trust's operations. Then Grant Road was taken up again, but instead of turning to the left as on the previous day, the procession made its way over Frere Bridge into Gowalia Tank Road, and thus up Gibbs Road and along the Ridge, returning to Government House by the Upper Gate. The loyal demonstrations continued to the end. Thus, Their Royal Highnesses have passed through every section of the Native town and will carry away with them a mental picture of loyal rejoicings that can never be forgotten.

The levée at the Secretariat last night was one of the most largely attended ceremonies of this character that has ever been held in Bombay. The Secretariat has been recently lighted by electric light and fitted in part with electric fans. This enabled those who were responsible for the arrangements to illuminate the building much more brilliantly than usual and to cool the Presence Chamber—a facility which was of infinite advantage owing to the sultry character of the evening. And very wisely an extremely simple scheme of decoration was carried out. The entrance, the broad staircase leading to the Presence Chamber and the vestibules were carpeted with scarlet cloth. In the Presence Chamber a broad strip of scarlet cloth ran from the entrance to the exit. On the centre of the east side, that is facing the harbour, was a plain dais, covered with richly-worked cloth of gold. A broad scarlet cord held by the brilliantly-robed retainers from Government House, on the west side of the scarlet carpet, was sufficient to indicate the direction of the passage. A heavily gilded chair was set upon the dais for His Royal Highness; that was all, and no other decoration was required.

Though the hour of departure from Government House was necessarily a late one, there were not wanting indications on the part of the residents on the route to the Secretariat of their desire to accord a fitting reception to the Prince of Wales as he passed. At various points fairly large crowds assembled, but it was at the corner of the Queen's and Churni Roads that the most prominent decorative effects had been made. At this point the Adaljee Peerbhoy Dharamsala was brilliantly illuminated with Washington lights and the roadway in front of the buildings gaily decorated with flags and bannerets. A pleasing effect was created by the line of the Churni Road gardens being festooned with Chinese lanterns, while over the roadway were suspended greetings, prominent among which figured the following "May Allah grant George and May His choicest blessings;" "May the fine British Princess in India enjoy the Visit" and "Son of a Sea King's daughter over the sea we welcome thee." Soon after 9 o'clock at this point equipages of all descriptions commenced to pass along towards the south conveying those proceeding to the Secretariat. The carriages followed each other in rapid succession and among their occupants easy of recognition were the numerous Native Chiefs now visiting the city. There was no lack of political and military uniforms to be found amidst the numbers of those who drove past, while in strong contrast to the latter appeared the sombre evening dress of the European non-official and the various costumes worn by all sections of the native communities. The latter went past in rapid succession, and at about 10 o'clock a large party of Government House guests gave intimation of the near approach of His Royal Highness.

The Prince of Wales, under a travelling escort of the 10th Hussars, under the command of Captain the Hon'ble A. Annesley, left Government House about a quarter to 10 o'clock, and after passing through the gaily-decorated portion of Walkeshwar Road was accorded a very cordial reception as his carriage drove past Churni Road. At the corner of the Thakoredwar Road, at the corner of the New Princess' Street—which thoroughfare was brilliantly illuminated with Chinese lanterns—at Church Gate Street and at the Secretariat the reception accorded to His Royal Highness from the assembled crowds was most cordial.

Times of India.—The feature of the Royal visit that most strikes those of us who have spent long years in Bombay, and have seen the city alike in seasons of brightness and of gloom, is the unabated enthusiasm and joy of the people. The intensity of their gratification at the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales is visible everywhere; and it suggests that the Western mind has still only imperfectly peered into the spirit of the East, for even the oldest residents in the city hardly thought its population capable of so much outward demonstration. It is a pleasure to watch their demeanour, for their interests in the Royal visitors and everything pertaining to them is simple and sincere and unaffected. They have invested themselves with a real holiday spirit, and have given themselves up to the enjoyment of the moment with a zest that shows how much they appreciate the significance of the occasion. What gratifies most is that the happiness derived from the advent of the Prince and Princess is not confined to the more prominent and prosperous classes; the very poorest have shared in it to the full. In yesterday's progress of the Royal and Imperial couple through the Native city, it was especially noticeable how the women and children of the humblest position poured forth in tens of thousands to greet the Prince and Princess as they passed, and it was touching, to those who know them well, to note the eager and delighted interest that these poor and lonely denizens of courts and alleys displayed. It has been a great occasion for them, as well as for those of higher status; the mere sight of the Prince and Princess is a keen joy to them, a thing to talk about and to remember all their days. So innocent and so unexactingly are their desires, that just to have looked upon the future King-Emperor and his gracious consort, has brought gleams of sunshine into lives that are always somewhat grey even in this land of fierce brightness. The People's Fair, which Their Royal Highnesses opened by driving through it yesterday afternoon, is only one feature, and that a very appropriate one, of the arrangements made for the pleasure of the people; but if the delight they are showing is to be fully understood, they must be watched as they throng through the swarming streets of the native city.

The ceremony of the opening of Princess Street, though brief, was nevertheless impressive by reason of the great and important change that it signified. Those who remember the noisome rookeries that have been now swept away for ever to make room for this imposing thoroughfare, were able to realise that at last the efforts of Mr. Owen Dunn and his colleagues are bearing fruit, and that the first broad shaft has been driven through the city by the Improvement Trust, letting in sunlight and pure air where once darkness and squalor prevailed. The reference made by the Prince of Wales to the fact that the effort to create a new Bombay was really inaugurated by Lord Sandhurst, was greatly appreciated by those who recall the criticism and the condemnation which that former Governor of Bombay met when he propounded his scheme of reconstruction, and the courage and persistence with which he confronted it. Lord Sandhurst's sincerity and earnestness in pressing upon the public the great project he had conceived, deserve to be ever remembered in Bombay; and it will be a source of infinite gratification to him to learn that on an occasion when the results of his presence and foresight were being inaugurated, he was not forgotten in the city to which, though far away, he still looks back with so much interest and so much longing. The Prince's graceful allusion to Lord Sandhurst was conceived in a happy spirit of remembrance. His Royal Highness's public utterances are, indeed, making a great impression upon the city. We may be pardoned for again alluding to his remarkable speech on landing, but it is a fact that it remains the central topic of enthusiastic comment everywhere. Those who heard it continue full of praise alike for its manner and the sentiments it expressed; those who have only read it, are equally struck by the warmth and grace of its words, and by its indications of profound interest in the people of India, and in this city. Finally, Bombay is heartily congratulating itself that the whole of the events attendant upon the landing, and on the progress of Their Royal Highnesses through the streets on Thursday and yesterday, passed off without a single accident or untoward incident. A million people had gathered to see their future rulers; yet not only was the myriad strong, orderly and enthusiastic, but not a solitary casualty of any kind seems to have occurred, a fact which was largely attributable to the singular excellence of the police arrangements. The Royal visit has begun well; and we sincerely trust that it may attend the journey of Their Royal Highnesses to the length and breadth of India.

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE PAPERS PUBLISHED IN BENGAL FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 11TH NOVEMBER 1905.

The Hilavadi.—[Calcutta] of the 3rd November writes as follows:—

"If the sight of the mourning Bengali people and that of the people of the Punjab who have been ruined by the recent earthquake do not give pain to the Prince of Wales, would the sight of the famished inhabitants of Rajputana have done so to any very great extent? What harm if His Royal Highness sees with his own eyes to what condition India has been reduced in order that England may be enriched? When the Prince is coming to India he ought to see both the joys and the sorrows of the Indians. Why has Lord Curzon arranged to hide the picture of famine from His Royal Highness, a picture of which English people have no adequate idea?"

The Hitavarta—This repeats the wish that His Royal Highness had done better to postpone his visit to this country, parts of which are suffering from famine. India has made the English people rich; but at what cost to the people of the soil? In Bengal His Royal Highness will have to hear the weepings and wailings of its people, while in the Punjab he will have to see the misery caused by the earthquake, and if these will not move him, what pain could he feel to see the condition of the famine-stricken in Rajputana? If His Royal Highness is really coming to see the actual condition of the people, he had better see both happiness and misery of his subjects.

The Indian Mirror, 4TH NOVEMBER 1905,—writes that the announcement that the Prince of Wales would not break journey at Benares en route to Calcutta has been received with great disappointment, as it was hoped that His Royal Highness would at least have visited the Exhibition if he could not have actually opened it.

Indu Prakash, 9TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"As we go to press Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, the future Emperor and Empress of India, are within the territorial waters of India, and by evening they will land on our historic shores and receive, on behalf of our City and the teeming millions of this country, a hearty and enthusiastic welcome.

For the moment we forget our parties and divisions, our little quarrels or grave differences on issues of vital importance, and for once the official and the non-official worlds have their hearts animated and their life-blood quickened with the one predominating sentiment of love and loyalty to the son and heir of the august Sovereign, who embodies the might and majesty of the British Empire.

His Royal Highness will have ample opportunities of drawing closer still towards himself and his country the grateful and susceptible hearts of the Indians.

We trust His Royal Highness will make it a point, now and then, to break up the official ring that will hedge him and know at first hand the feelings and sentiments of the people from their trusted representatives and natural leaders.

If His Royal Highness is able to read the hearts of his future Indian subjects, we have no doubt that he will have opportunities enough to so influence the leading statesmen that guide the fortunes of the political parties of England as to bring about a reversal of that fatal policy of retrogression and reaction, which, culminating in the Viceroyalty that is coming to an end, has done so much to strain those strong but at the same time tender and delicate ties which bind a subject nation to an alien conqueror."

Jām-e-Jamshād.—"To-day, before the heir to the Throne to which they have vowed, for all time, their united worship and unquestioning allegiance, bow in affectionate and reverential homage India's hundreds of millions, laden with memories of countless blessings received under the auspices of British rule in the past, and expectant of far greater and more numerous benefits in the days to come. Not even in that dim and distant past her so-called Golden Age, when the country was ruled by her own indigenous princes and was inhabited by a people more closely allied in race and religion, there could have gone forth, to the heir of her sovereign lord, greetings, blended with blessings and prayers, so spontaneous, so hearty, so sincere and so loyal, as those which are to crown the advent of the Prince of Wales and his illustrious consort to these shores this evening.

The secret of this rare and unique spectacle lies in the history of India of the last fifty years. The spontaneity and the sincerity of India's worship of her alien King and her almost unexampled loyalty and fidelity to the race and country under whose sway she lives are the result of the conviction in their righteous intentions towards her, of the memory of the innumerable blessings she has already received at their hands, of the belief that under no other human agency could she have become what she is to-day or be what she hopes to be in the future. Freedom of conscience, protection of life and property, equal justice and unequal opportunities for all—these are blessings whose value is bound to be increasingly appreciated every day. India has never faltered in her affection and reverent admiration for the occupant of the Throne and the Royal Family of England, and this has been in the main due to the feeling that the influence of the Sovereign and the Royal Family has been all along consistently exerted for the maintenance of peace, the dispensing of equal justice, and the giving of fair and generous treatment to the subject nationalities. The people have come to realize that the Sovereign and the members of the Royal Family are their greatest and most influential protectors, that they are unfailing in their sympathy and good-will towards them, and that in the whole British constitution there is nothing which makes so much for their security against the unlawful encroachments of power on the part of the dominant race as well as for the fulfilment of the many pledges that Britain has given them of generous and equal treatment than the vigilant care and watchfulness of the King over the doings of his Ministers and Vicegerents."

Sind Gazette, 7TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"The day after to-morrow will, if all goes well, see the arrival in Bombay of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the occasion will doubtless be memorable both to the Royal visitors and to all their future subjects, both European and Indian, in this country. The affectionate loyalty felt throughout India towards the reigning family is as deeply rooted as at the time of the visit of the present King-Emperor, and the spirit of criticism brought about by the advance of education, while it beats fiercely on the administration, is never directed against the Throne.... The time to be spent by the Prince and Princess of Wales in India is far too short to enable them to get an idea of more than a very small portion of the country..... But at the same time we believe that the Royal visit will be very beneficial in reminding the people of this country how great an interest in their lives and destinies has been and is being taken by their Sovereign. Her late Majesty gave special proof of this in the industry with which she studied Hindustani, the lingua franca of the country, keeping up her knowledge of it till her death and writing her private diary in that language, and the warm sympathy she felt with the peoples of this portion of the Empire was recognised throughout the length and breadth of India. But what is needed at the present time is that the Indian people should once again be brought into personal contact with some member of the Ruling house, surrounded with all the pomp and circumstance of royalty, in order that the ties which unite the poorest peasant on Indian soil with the Sovereign may be strengthened, and the warm currents of love and loyalty, of good-will and sympathy may flow freely through 'the electric chain wherewith we are darkly bound.'"

Indian Spectator, 11TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"Bombay offered a loyal, enthusiastic and joyous welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on Thursday last. From morning till midnight the Royal visit was everywhere the topic of conversation, and there was no part of the streets, no nook, no corner, along the whole route from Apollo Bandar to Government House, from which a glimpse of the procession and the principal figures therein could be caught, which was not utilised by eager spectators who knew that only once in a generation could such a sight be seen. Those who were prevented by limitations of space from securing a look at the Royal faces on the day of their arrival will no doubt manage to avail themselves of other opportunities for the purpose during the next few days, when Their Royal Highnesses will be moving about in different parts of the city.....By a happy coincidence we had to greet the Prince and hear his gracious reply on the birthday of his august father: it was a coincidence which served as a fine setting to His Highness's proud and graceful avowal that he had inherited from his father, and from our late beloved Sovereign, our first Queen-Empress, a love for India and for Indians. When we are still under the spell of that speech, so brimming over with sympathy and yet so restrained and dignified, so comprehensive in its survey of the larger interests of the Empire, and yet mindful of the problems of streets and healthy quarters for the poor, it would be almost like a sacrilege to suppress the rising sentiment, and to comment in detail, even in the most flattering terms, on the first admirable utterance of His Royal Highness in India. Suffice it to say how deeply we realise that the Prince comes on a mission of love and good-will, and in the hope of acquainting himself with the various classes who are labouring in this land to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her peoples."

Indian Social Reformer, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales are now in our midst and they have been welcomed in a manner quite worthy of Bombay. Is there anything in their visit and the welcome which will be extended to them all over the country beyond the pageantry of an Imperial ritual? We believe that there is, and that the popular mind has been quick to appreciate it. The presence of Their Royal Highnesses is regarded as a renewed pledge of the liberal principles of Indian administration which the late Queen-Empress had embodied in the Proclamation of 1858. The Royal Family is the only connecting link that exists between the earlier and later periods of British rule. English political parties have greatly modified their principles and policies, but the traditions of the Royal Family remain the same as before; and, strange to say, at this moment, the strongest bulwark against Imperialistic excesses in Great Britain is His Majesty the King-Emperor, who by his personal influence has been bringing about a closer understanding among the nations of the world. Within the limits of a, perhaps, somewhat antiquated constitution, both the King-Emperor and the late Queen-Empress have taken every opportunity of evincing their sympathy and good-will for the Indian people. Whatever tends to bring the Sovereign and his House nearer to the Indian people is, therefore, to be welcomed as bringing them nearer to the goal of recognition as partners on an equal footing with the British people in the opportunities and possibilities of the greatest Empire that the world has known. Such is the aspiration of the Indian people. The hearty manner in which the masses as well as the educated classes have entered into the pleasant duty of welcoming Their Royal Highnesses must dispel for ever the notion which the enemies of India and of England have tried to foster, namely, that there is a desire anywhere here to put an end to British rule. All the great leaders of Indian thought and aspiration since the days of Raja Ram Mohan Roy have agreed in recognising the British position in India as a dispensation of Divine Providence for the good of the country. On that point there has never been and there is not the least difference of opinion. India recognises the immense good which British rule has already conferred on her. And not the least valuable of the results of that rule is the very strong desire that is felt by an increasing number of our countrymen that India should be recognised as an integral and autonomous unit of the Empire just in the same manner as the Colonies, and freed from the humiliation of being regarded as unworthy of the confidence which is extended to the latter..... We trust that Their Royal Highnesses will acquaint themselves, as much as the rigid etiquette which surrounds Royalty allows, with the actual feelings and condition of the people, so that on returning to their native land they may be able to follow the course of affairs in India in the right perspective."

Kaiser-i-Hind, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"The brilliant and indescribable scene presented at the Apollo Bandar on Thursday afternoon vividly recalls to our mind the reminiscences of the magnificent spectacle, which in the prime of our youth we witnessed on the occasion of the landing on India's soil of the present King-Emperor..... More than all the pomp and pageantry of State, more than all the Royal salutes fired from Fort and fleet were the thundering cheers from a million people, who greeted Their Royal Highnesses as they drove through the principal streets of the city. Those were no empty and conventional cheers. They emanated from loyal and loving hearts. They were the outward and spontaneous manifestations of great joy on the part of the people at seeing in their midst another Heir-Apparent to the throne of England after full thirty years almost to a day. That joy was not a little heightened by the gracious presence of the lovely Princess of Wales, a Princess indeed in very gait and look, and the personification of all that is womanly and queenly, who set her auspicious foot for the first time on the sunny soil of Ind..... It was a source of the highest gratification to the citizens of Bombay to hear from the Royal lips at the stately function at the Bandar the words of love and sympathy, which were uttered with such princely grace, dignity and sweetness on the historical landing-day. The entire reply of His Royal Highness was conceived in excellent taste and pitched in the happiest key, which left nothing but a most gratifying impression on the minds of his audience. It was expressed in language, which was at once chaste and simple, bearing on the face of it a ring of candour and sincerity which went straight to the heart.... The exquisite tribute of praise so generously paid to the men of Bombay, the earnest and disinterested workers for the welfare of the city, is greatly appreciated.... But the further message which the Prince delivered, as it were to all India, is even of greater supernal grace. It is full of bright promise and hope and the harbinger indeed of the return of good times which India, so long afflicted has been wistfully praying for. 'I hope and indeed I am confident that the same loving interest in this great continent which was inspired in my father's heart by his visit to India, and which has never abated, will equally come to us.' So did Prince George make his first declaration of royal policy.... India fully appreciates it. And we have not the slightest doubt that the sincere wish of Their Royal Highnesses will be amply realised during their tour through the various parts of the empire, and that they will magnificently win the sympathy and good-will of the people. May we say that the sympathy and good-will are already there. So far as the illustrious scions of the good Queen Victoria are concerned, those remain unabated in their cordiality and genuine sincerity. Only the people wish that similar genuine sympathy and good-will may be inspired in the men whom the Crown sends from time to time to govern its greatest and most priceless Dependency. Well and nobly did the Prince say, and India expresses her warmest gratitude for those noble words, that 'from my youth I have associated the name of India with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy and bravery, and I doubt not that these early ideas will be confirmed and strengthened by the experience which awaits me in the next few months..... We both hope to carry home with us not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but an increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems and an acquaintance with the various classes, official and non-official, British and Indian, which under God's Providence are labouring to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her peoples.' So may it be! Amen! May the beneficent British rule, despite its many serious deficiencies and defects, the result of bureaucracy and autocracy combined, be long and lasting, and may, in the words of the late Poet Laureate, England give us rulers of the blood of Victoria as noble as herself till the latest day, and may the children of our children say that they wrought their people lasting good!"

Gujarati, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"The reply of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to the address presented by the Corporation was noticeable for its warmth of feeling, grace of language and practical sagacity and insight..... As was but natural, thoughts about the past, the present and the future seem to have crowded upon the mind of His Royal Highness, and he gave expression to them with a becoming sense of responsibility. He seems to have been fully conscious of the part his House has already played and has yet to play in the destinies of the Indian Empire, and of the position he occupies in relation to it..... Their Royal Highnesses are anxious not only to carry with them a warm sympathy and affection for the people, but also an increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems and an acquaintance with the various classes 'which, under God's Providence, are labouring to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her people.' These words remind us of the noble and loving message despatched by His Majesty the Emperor of India on the eve of the Delhi Durbar. It is the happiest passage in the Prince's reply and is well calculated to have a re-assuring effect upon the minds of the Indian people."

Indian Social Reformer, 12TH NOVEMBER, and Indu Prakash, 10TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"In its warmth of feeling, its quiet thoughtfulness, and in its studied purity of word and phrase, His Royal Highness's speech recalls the admirable speeches of the King-Emperor on the all too few occasions when His Majesty addresses the public..... Not a word more is said than what was strictly appropriate, and not a word left out that would have been felt as an omission by the millions whom he was addressing in this the very first speech His Royal Highness made on Indian soil. The cordiality and the magnificence of the reception which the whole city accorded to the Royal visitors will be remembered for a long time as without a parallel in the annals of Bombay. It is clear from His Royal Highness's words that the Princess and he desire and intend that their visit should be of no mere formal character. They want to acquaint themselves with the feelings and aspirations of the people, and considering that the personal influence of the Sovereign is again becoming a dominant factor in the British constitution, no more pleasing message could have been conveyed to the Indian people." The Indu Prakash writes:—"His Royal Highness's reply to the Municipal address of welcome captivated the hearts of those who heard him. There was in that speech the ring of a Royal heart, the frankness of an Englishman, the true and genuine appreciativeness of a gentleman, and above all, the wisdom of a statesman. It was a speech worthy of a grandson of Queen-Empress Victoria..... His Royal Highness has promised to carry home 'an increased and abiding interest in India's wants and problems and an acquaintance with the various classes, official and non-official, British and Indian, which under God's Providence are labouring to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her peoples.' The heir to a constitutional monarchy could do no more than make such promises and express such wishes. May they be realised in the course of time!"

Jám-e-Jamshéd, 11TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"The words uttered by His Royal Highness in replying to the Bombay Municipal address could not have failed to go deep into the hearts of the people. The whole speech will ever be one of the most cherished possessions of the Indians..... They will find in it much more than a pledge of sustained sympathy, good-will and protection from His Imperial Majesty.... They will trace in it a keen and earnest desire on the part of their future King to appreciate their love and loyalty towards their Sovereign..... They will discover in it abundant evidence that their unshaken fidelity and allegiance to the British raj are heartily recognised and acknowledged by their beloved Sovereign and the Royal Family of England. All this means an additional gain to India and her peoples. The words of gracious condescension which fell from His Royal Highness, constitute a most important and valuable token of the sympathy and regard entertained by India's Sovereign and his Family towards her people..... What people, situated especially as the Indians are, can fail to be deeply touched by this generous message of assurance and hope? Not only to the present generation of the people of India, but to future generations as well, will the speech of His Royal Highness prove a source of constant encouragement and hope..... The consciousness that His Royal Highness has an 'abiding interest in India's wants and problems' must prove a source of immense consolation to her sons, especially in those dark and perilous hours when they are seized with despair, and the wretchedness and misery of their lot, aggravated by political and natural calamities, seem too heavy for them to bear."

Jám-e-Jamshéd, 7TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"What does His Excellency the Governor in Council mean?"—This is what everybody, who is proud to be a citizen of Bombay and is regardless of the civic importance, position and prestige of this great island city, will ask himself and ask others, when he comes to realize the full significance of the treatment accorded to the claims of the President of the Municipal Corporation in connection with their Royal Highnesses's reception at the Bandar on the 9th instant. The persistence with which the representations of the President of the Corporation have been ignored and brushed aside in this matter may well justify one in asking what His Excellency the Governor in Council means by so deliberately excluding the Lord Mayor of Bombay from the ranks of 'the high officials' who are to receive Their Royal Highnesses at the Bandar? There is a noteworthy precedent in favour of the claim put forward by the President of the Corporation to be included among such 'high officials.' In the programme of 1875, drawn up by the Government of the day, due place was given to the Chairman of the Corporation. This fact was brought to the notice of the Government by the President of the Corporation under the evident impression that his name was left out of the programme through oversight and that the mistake would be promptly mended..... The reply to this representation of the President was a mere curt official acknowledgment of the representation ten days later. The matter was more directly brought to the notice of His Excellency the Governor on 30th October by a letter from the Acting Municipal Secretary to His Excellency's Private Secretary. The response to this has come in the shape of the announcement of 1st November, in which, besides the President of the Corporation, the Municipal Commissioner and the Sheriff of Bombay are found to have been excluded from the ranks of the 'high officials' appointed for the reception of the Royal visitors at the Bandar? It is hardly likely that any self-respecting inhabitant of Bombay, who is conscious of the civic importance, position and prestige of his city among the cities of India and of the world at large, will fail to resent this almost studied slight. The inhabitants of Bombay will naturally be loath to say anything that may savour of disrespect towards the Government and their officials, but they would feel themselves justified to assert: 'Their Royal Highnesses come out here to receive the homage of the people and not of the Government, and indeed who are the Government and their highest officials compared with the President of the Corporation on an occasion and in a function like this? Who are they to claim to solely represent the people of Bombay in a matter like this? We should under no condition consent to either the Corporation or the citizens of Bombay doing aught that might mar the festivities on such a joyous occasion, or help to give their action a sinister and unpleasant aspect. But we cannot help observing that if the rights of the President of a Corporation, that is to say of the Mayor of a City, and all that is being embodied in the person of such a functionary, had been so unceremoniously treated in any other part of the Empire, only one reply would have been deemed appropriate to such high-handedness—withdrawal of the Mayor, the Corporation, and the accredited citizens of the place from participation in all the public functions of the occasion. The present Royal visit is, however, too unique and important an event to permit the assumption of such an attitude. The people love the Royal visitors so well, they revere their Sovereign so deeply, and consider the visit such a precious privilege that they would much rather see their spokesman and their representatives bear such an indignity than do aught that might savour of disrespect towards the Imperial couple, want of due reverence of the person of their august Sovereign, and even disloyalty towards the British Throne.'

Oriental Review, 8TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"It is a thousand pities that the harmony and spirit of unanimity and co-operation that existed among the Bombay citizens should have been disturbed, and that the recent action of the Bombay Government should have ruffled the spirit of the most influential men in the city and thus tended to mar the magnificent welcome that was prepared for Their Royal Highnesses. We feel we must protest strongly against the deliberate insult and slight Government has hurled at the citizens. We contend that the way in which the President of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, the Municipal Commissioner, and the Sheriff of Bombay have been huddled out of the first reception to the Prince by the official hierarchy of Bombay is nothing but an insult—a deliberate and gross insult—to the people of the city. It is all very well to explain that no insult is meant, as the official Europeans only go to welcome the Prince on board the Renown, and that the President of the Corporation will be given a prominent place in the reception ceremonies on landing. We ask how are Their Royal Highnesses to know at all that the city is anxiously and most earnestly waiting to accord them a hearty and enthusiastic reception? Who is to ask the Prince and Princess in the name of the people of India to land and honour this city with their august presence? The official heads only represent the English domination over India, and a welcome by them is meaningless as every one of them is in the pay of the British Indian Government. This omission is much to be deplored. It is freely mentioned all over the city that the insult so impolitically hurled at the Municipal Corporation emanates from the heights of Simla for the sin of omission to present a farewell address to Lord Curzon. We hardly like to give credence to this rumour. All sorts of constructions have been and will be put upon the omission, and the result will be unfortunate. We appeal to His Excellency the Governor not to do anything or allow anything to be done to mar the unanimity of the reception of the Royal visitors. It is certain that the Corporation will not receive the insult lying down. It must be remembered that Sir P. M. Metha is not fighting for himself, but for the dignity of the office he holds. . . . We cannot for a moment believe that His Excellency Lord Lamington was personally responsible for the sad blunder. He is far too noble and generous to think of insulting the city and its citizens, of whom he is so proud and in whose progress and improvement he is taking such a keen and personal interest. Outside influences, higher or lower, must have over-powered His Excellency."

Jām-e-Jamshed, 10TH NOVEMBER, and Kaiser-i-Hind, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"Having animadverted rather strongly on the attitude of the Bombay Government towards the claims of the President of the Corporation, the Sheriff and the Municipal Commissioner to being invited to receive Their Royal Highnesses at the Bandar, we feel ourselves called upon to record our appreciation of the way in which the Government of His Excellency Lord Lamington have settled the difficulty. It would be impossible to praise too highly the extremely conciliatory manner in which they conducted the negotiations at a moment when the situation appeared to have become almost critical in the eyes of the public. . . . Nothing could exceed the generosity of their conduct in explaining the true position, satisfying the Corporation in regard to their attitude, and yielding to the wishes of that body on a point which it felt to be of extreme importance to its prestige and position. The incident, we trust, will not be without its effect in enhancing the mutual good-will and respect, which have always subsisted between the Government and the Corporation. It would not be inappropriate to conclude this note by a word of praise and admiration for the dignity, self-restraint and firmness with which Sir Pherozeshah Metha fought for the right of his office and for the dignity of the entire city." [The Kaiser-i-Hind in a lengthy and vituperative article blames the Chief Secretary to Government for deviating from the precedents of 1875 by not including the President of the Municipal Corporation and the Municipal Commissioner among those who were admitted to the shamiana for receiving Their Royal Highnesses. It also strongly condemns the arrangements made for the accommodation of the general public and asserts that those who were admitted to the enclosure were exposed to the fierce rays of the sun in consequence of an order issued by the Commissioner of Police that they should take their seats by 2-30 p.m.]

Indian Spectator, 11TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"The omission of the names of the President of the Bombay Corporation, of the Municipal Commissioner and the Sheriff from the original list of citizens receiving the Royal guests at the Bandar had been noticed in Native circles before the correspondence between the Municipal Secretary and the Chief Secretary to Government was published in the papers—not because the public had any recollection of the procedure of 1875, but somehow there was a general expectation that the persons concerned would figure prominently on the occasion. People priding themselves on their intuition shrewdly guessed why the President was 'cut out.' The Heir-Apparent to the Crown of England, as explained by Mr. Disraeli in 1875, comes to India as a guest of the Indian Government, and not as a representative of the Sovereign. The present President of the Corporation, though not in such official capacity, had recently opposed the presentation of an address of welcome to the head of the Indian Government, and the Government was supposed to have assumed that he would not care to assist at a ceremony held under the auspices of a Governor-General whom he did not want in India. This theory, however, was obviously inadequate to explain the omission of the Sheriff, except on the supposition that he was bracketed with the President of the Corporation for reasons similar to those which induced the President to plead on his behalf. The unsoundness of all these hypotheses was proved when the correspondence was published, wherein the Municipal Secretary states that the omission complained of was not novel, but has consistently occurred in recent years at the arrival and departure of high personages. We have not yet been told what the practice was before the Prince of Wales' visit in 1875, and whether the practice of recent years has repealed any precedent. The whole affair ended satisfactorily: in response to a representation from the Corporation, the President, the Commissioner and the Sheriff were invited to be present at the reception. It was explained that the precedent of 1875 had been carefully considered and departed from so as to limit the number of 'official receivers' and proportionately magnify the importance of the Corporation's reception. The recent general practice will perhaps also be modified: the habit of attributing small feelings to Government will, we suppose, be eternal."

Indian Social Reformer, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"Government deserve to be congratulated on the excellent spirit in which they met the somewhat petulant protest of the Municipal Corporation against a procedure which, as Sir Pheroz-shah Mehta afterwards handsomely acknowledged, was dictated by motives of the greatest good-will and generosity to the body. That the Municipal body is entitled to a leading part in the reception of Their Royal Highnesses is a proposition which nobody will dispute, and the programme settled by Government, as is now admitted, was framed specially with a view to meet this end. There was no sudden change in the practice at similar receptions, as had been sought to be made out. Former Presidents of the Municipality had not thought that the interests of the city and the dignity of the Corporation were jeopardised by the procedure followed. It is a good thing for the Municipality to be jealous of its own dignity and of the interests of the city. But there are other ways in which the feeling can be usefully exercised than imagining slights which were never intended and imputing motives which were never entertained by Government. That the Government were more mindful of the dignity of the Corporation than the Corporation itself was plain to every one who witnessed or read in the papers the proceedings at the Apollo Bunder. It is a good rule for Corporations, no less than for individuals, not to be too ready to assume insults, especially from tried and proved friends like His Excellency the Governor, of popular movements and their leaders."

Guparati, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"All is well that ends well. The dignified yet forcible representation of the Corporation against the omission of the name of the President from the list of gentlemen who were to receive Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their landing at the Apollo Bunder has, we are glad, been favourably considered by Lord Lamington's Government. The omission was misinterpreted throughout the city by many people. The attempt to defend the arrangement settled by the Government on the ground that the city reception was different from the Presidency reception was quite unfortunate. Those who settled the arrangement seem to have been under the idea that the reception by the Corporation would be the crowning function and that the President of the Corporation was to be given the most prominent position in the performance of that function. For our part we do not think that this was a very convincing ground for ignoring the President of the Corporation. But we are glad to find that the Honourable Sir Pheroz-shah was able to inform his colleagues and the public that, after going through the papers in connection with the subject, he was satisfied that the Government did not mean to cast any slur upon the Corporation. That is, indeed, a highly gratifying assurance. As a result of the representation of the Corporation, the Municipal Commissioner as well as the Sheriff of Bombay were invited to the Bunder along with the President of the Corporation to receive Their Royal Highnesses. That is, indeed, a welcome concession to the public opinion. We sincerely congratulate Lord Lamington's Government and the Corporation on the extremely satisfactory decision that was arrived at, and on their having avoided a very unpleasant controversy on the very day of the landing of Their Royal Highnesses."

Indu Prakash, 11TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"Yesterday evening there was one more Royal procession, Their Royal Highnesses driving from Government House, Malabar Point, via Girgaum Road, to open the new magnificent Improvement Trust Road, to be named after the Princess, and thence via Crawford Market to the People's Fair. The procession of the day was almost identical with that which escorted the day before Their Royal Highnesses from the Apollo Bunder. . . . On at least one of these occasions the procession ought to have been a grand and impressive one, befitting the dignity of the Heir-Apparent to the British Throne. But the public was disappointed grievously. Why did not the Viceroy and the Governor and the numerous Native Chiefs precede or follow, each with his suite, Their Royal Highnesses' carriage and form part of the procession either of the 9th or the 10th instant? Why were their carriages wheeled away and cut off from the procession and driven across by Queen's Road on the first day? A different course altogether was followed on the occasion of the visit of the present King-Emperor thirty years ago. And quite different were the processions of that grand melo-drama of Lord Curzon's régime, the Imperial Coronation Durbar at Delhi. In the fitness of things the processions in honour of the Heir to the British Throne should have been at least as magnificent as those with which a fleeting representative of His Imperial Majesty was glorified at Delhi. But of a different tenor was the official mandate, and we Indians can only gaze in wonder and amazement and contemplate with pain and disappointment this new Anglo-Indian differentiation between the Viceroy and the direct representatives of the Royal Family. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught came to the Delhi assemblage to represent His Majesty, and according to Indian notions received but a poor treatment. The son and heir of the King-Emperor has not, so far at least as Bombay is concerned, fared much better."

Indu Prakash and Sanj Vartaman, 11TH NOVEMBER 1905.—"Those who attended the Prince of Wales' levée at the Secretariat last night and had not the good fortune of being in the private entré circle—those alone can know and realize what terrible pains and penalties had to be paid for their loyal desire to do homage to His Royal Highness. They were literally suffocated, pressed and elbowed, and each must have given out at least a pound of perspiration. And then the shoving in of the Military through the thick mass almost amounted to a large scandal. Surely, Government officials should foresee and remedy this Calcutta-Black-Hole-like treatment of the people who attend levées. Let the numbers be reduced if larger accommodation cannot be provided for. Or, let there be two levées. But the crushing together of persons which has become the common feature of all levées and which was intensified at last night's levée can possibly have no defence whatsoever." [The Sanj Vartaman makes a similar complaint and suggests that in view of the great crush, which always takes place at the levée, the function should be held at the Town Hall instead of at the Secretariat.]

Sanj Vartaman, 7TH NOVEMBER, and Ján-e-Jamshed, 9TH NOVEMBER 1905.—It is much to be deplored that certain shortcomings in the arrangements made for the reception of the Royal visitors should have offended the feelings and susceptibilities of the public at large as well as of the guests invited to meet Their Royal Highnesses. We have already referred to the keen disappointment, which has been felt by the public of the city owing to the exclusion of the President of the Corporation and the Municipal Commissioner from the ceremonial reception at the steps of the Bunder. We now learn with regret that the Chiefs invited to meet Their Royal Highnesses are also dissatisfied with the arrangements. In connection with the public arrival of the Viceroy it was notified that those Chiefs who "wished" to attend at the station should apply for "cards" through their respective Political Officers. Such an arrangement was of doubtful propriety and was rightly interpreted as an insult by the big Chiefs, some of whom preferred to keep away from the function rather than humiliate themselves by applying for cards. Further, it was at first arranged that the Prince should return the visits of the big Chiefs at their own residences, and that the other Chiefs would be received collectively by His Royal Highness at the Secretariat. The lesser Chiefs have undertaken a costly journey to Bombay in the hope of participating in this honour. But it has now transpired that the exchange of visits will take place between the Prince and only the big Chiefs. This has greatly disappointed the Chiefs who have been excluded from the honour. It is said that some of these Chiefs intend to leave Bombay as soon as the above arrangement is officially announced. [The Jam-e-Jamshed, referring to the above, says:—Government appear to have done all they could to accord to the Native Chiefs all the honours befitting their high position, nor do the Chiefs seem to have made any complaint on this score. The Prince will receive and return the visits of all first class Chiefs. It is not customary to accord the honour of a return visit to Chiefs of lower rank, but it does not follow that these will not be brought face to face with His Royal Highness during his stay in Bombay. It appears from the printed programme supplied to all newspapers in the Presidency that there is to be a reception at Government House on the 11th instant at which all the lesser Chiefs will have the honour of being received by His Royal Highness. As regards the alleged dissatisfaction of the Chiefs on the occasion of the Viceroy's arrival at Victoria Terminus, we may explain that the object of Government in asking the Chiefs to send for cards was to arrange for their being accommodated in block A in a manner befitting their high position; otherwise, if the Chiefs came without intimation, it would not be possible to give them prominent seats. It is not customary on such occasions to send cards to the Chiefs unless they intimate their desire to be present; for if Government sent cards of their own accord, it would look like enforcing compulsory attendance upon the Chiefs whether they wished to be present or not.]

Jam-e-Jamshed, 9TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The duties which have devolved upon the Bombay City Police in connection with the Royal visit are of a peculiarly arduous and exacting character, but it is very satisfactory to observe that the entire force has acquitted itself admirably on the occasion, and that the police arrangements in connection with the various functions have left nothing to be desired. The credit for this is due largely to our energetic and popular Commissioner of Police, Mr. Gell. The press has special reason to be grateful to the Police Commissioner for the facilities he has given to its representatives in discharging their duties. We are glad to observe that Mr. Gell has acted upon our suggestion to issue permits to press reporters so as to enable them to easily follow the movements of the Royal visitors. These permits have entitled the holders thereof to several concessions and advantages, which have greatly smoothed their task of giving to the public a faithful and accurate record of the doings of Their Royal Highnesses and of the various functions and celebrations held in their honour.

Gujarati, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—Many people are asking if the British Government are going to confer some boon upon this country by way of commemorating the visit of Their Royal Highnesses. So far as the higher classes of the Indian population are concerned, they are in a position to understand the object of the visit and the constitutional status of the British Sovereign and his sons. But most of the people at large cannot have an opportunity of even seeing Their Royal Highnesses, and they would no doubt be pleased if they received some tangible mark of Royal favour. The oriental feeling is in favour of some such Royal concession on great occasions. In fact, such favours are traditional with oriental potentates. We are afraid the absence of any boon to the population at large will be productive of some disappointment among the masses of the population.

Gujarati Prakash, 5TH NOVEMBER, and Sind Vartaman, 3RD NOVEMBER 1905.—It is significant that the people of India are not evincing as much joy and enthusiasm over the Royal visit as they did when the present King-Emperor visited India in 1875. This apathy can be attributed to the ill-advised policy of Government, which has resulted in the steady decline of Indian loyalty during the last fifty years. It is to be fervently hoped that the Prince will on his return to England acquaint the authorities there with the true state of the public mind in India. Government, however, have so planned the programme of the Royal tour as to prevent His Royal Highness from getting an inkling of popular grievances against the British rule. Their Royal Highnesses' progress through the country will be attended by illuminations, fire-works and pompous processions, and such outward manifestations of joy will create in their minds a false impression as to the happiness and contentment of the Indians. More, the public have been interdicted from approaching the Prince with their grievances. It has been ruled that the Prince will not receive addresses from any public bodies except Municipalities, and it is well known that Municipalities in the mofussil are well-nigh officialised bodies. Further, the mandate has gone forth that Municipal addresses to Their Royal Highnesses should steer clear of controversial topics. This will effectually prevent the Prince from becoming acquainted with the needs and real sentiments of the people. [The Prakash and the Sind Vartaman make similar comments and express a hope that the Prince, instead of accepting the statements of the officials surrounding him, will look into all things for himself and endeavour to get a first-hand knowledge of the condition of the people.]

Chikitsak, 8TH NOVEMBER, and Vihari, 6TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The saying "misfortunes never come singly" is being fully exemplified in the case of our country. Plague, famine and earthquake have harried us beyond measure, and our miseries have been intensified by the selfish policy of Government, which results in a steady drain of our wealth to foreign countries. We are thus growing poorer day by day, and costly demonstrations of loyalty such as the pageants on the occasion of the Jubilee and the Delhi Durbar tend to aggravate our poverty still further. The expected arrival of the Prince of Wales will add one more item to our sources of misery. It is unfortunate that we should have to characterise the advent of our future Emperor and his gracious consort in our midst as a public calamity, but we are helpless in the matter. We are reduced to such dire destitution that such auspicious occasions, instead of producing joy in our hearts, make us miserable as the expenditure necessitated by them is absolutely beyond our means. The programme of the Royal tour is out and consists of balls, banquets and similar other items of festivities and nothing else. It is said that the Prince is coming out to this country to acquaint himself with the true condition of the people and their wants and grievances, but bitter experience tells us that such Royal visits, far from benefiting us in any way, merely entail huge expenditure on our shoulders! Whether we wish it or not, the august visitors will receive a right Royal welcome and we cannot but deplore their visit as a public misfortune. Crowds of Native Chiefs are flocking to Bombay and lavishly spending their subjects' money on the Prince's reception. Alas! these subjects are starving in the meantime for want of food. The money in the Government Exchequer will also be freely spent in according a magnificent welcome to the Prince, but none spares a thought for the poverty-stricken raiyat from whom the money is extorted. Alas, our misfortunes do not end here. Our people must raise separate funds to give a loyal reception to the Prince. In the city of Bombay alone the people's fund has reached the total of four lakhs and a quarter, and the whole of this amount will be spent in four or five days. Our past Sovereigns used to signalise their tours through their dominions by giving presents to the poor or making concessions to the people. But they were Oriental rulers. Our more civilised rulers from the West must needs follow a different policy. The Prince of Wales, instead of making any presents to the people, will graciously condescend to accept presents from them; this clearly shows that we are now in the grip of an evil fate! [The Vihari makes somewhat similar comments and adds:—

The hopes entertained by some of our countrymen regarding the beneficent results of the Royal tour are destined to be disappointed. The poor raiyat, who fondly expected the remission of the salt tax in honour of the Royal visit, will be grieved to learn that the boon he anticipated is not after all to be conferred on him. It is again a wonder to us why our people should be anxious to have a look at the Prince when they are sure to be trampled under foot or otherwise maltreated by the Police.]

Andhraprakasika.—The Andhraprakasika of the 4th November refers to the elimination of the item of feeding the poor from the programme of the Reception Committee in Madras, and remarks that it is quite wrong to fail to feed and please the poor on an occasion when "God himself pays a visit in the person of a ruler." Is the Royal couple going to see any better dancing and display of fire-works or hear any better music in Madras than elsewhere? They come here not to enjoy dances, hear songs, or witness fire-works, but to acquaint themselves with the feelings and aspirations of their Indian subjects. The Government in India has created a wrong impression in England that India is a rich country, and the Indians will only be confirming it if, in the very presence of the Prince, they waste their money on displays of fire-works and other pageants. If the committee proclaims its intention to spend moderately on such shows and liberally in feeding the poor, large sums of money will undoubtedly be forthcoming.

In the course of a long article on the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, the same paper says that many people hope that good will come out of this visit. The Editor says that it is difficult for a nation to administer justice in a foreign country. The Indian people, though they have no full confidence in the British Government, are still grateful for many benefits conferred upon them.

If the Government is sympathetic and does its best to prevent the evils arising from plague, famine and poverty, the people will have great faith in the Government. The partition of Bengal has alienated the people from the Government and has created an ill-will which is daily manifesting itself in every part of India. The paper hopes that this visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to India would be conducive to the removing of the existing strained relations, and in cementing the goodwill between the Government and the people whose loyalty to the British Throne has been made manifest in more ways than one.

The Sat Dharam Parcharak (Jullundur) of the 3rd November 1905, says that the Maharaja of Mysore has sanctioned an expenditure of no less than Rs. 3,13,000 in connection with the Prince of Wales' visit, a sum of Rs. 20,000 being spent on fire-works alone. While the famine-stricken people, it adds, of Rajputana, Bombay and Central India cannot obtain a morsel of food, lakhs of rupees will be squandered in useless show with a view to making His Royal Highness believe that the natives of India are a very prosperous people.

The Nau Javan (Hansi), for October 1905, remarks that it is rumoured that in some places His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will be entertained at nautes performed by prostitutes. The Editor strongly objects to this and appeals to all its contemporaries and the leaders of native society to oppose the proposal.

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE NEWSPAPERS PUBLISHED IN THE UNITED PROVINCES FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 11TH NOVEMBER 1905.

The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 9th November 1905 says:—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince George and Princess May step on Indian soil this afternoon. We accord our cordial welcome to the Royal guests of our country and offer our greetings on this their first visit to India. Animated by loyal feelings towards the Throne of England to which India by common consent owes allegiance, the whole country with one voice welcomes the Royal personages to Indian soil and feels pleasure at the presence of the Heir-Apparent to the throne and his consort, impelled by the affection with which Eastern people look upon the Sovereign and his own people.

The relations of the people of India with their Sovereign have been always cordial. The name of Queen Victoria is still uttered throughout India with reverence which few Sovereigns have elsewhere ever enjoyed. The affection with which the Indian subjects of Emperor Edward look upon His Imperial Majesty and his family is too genuine to be questioned, and therefore the feeling is mutual. The trouble and inconvenience which the august personages have taken in making this long journey will be repaid by the conviction which we are sure Their Royal Highnesses will carry with them home that their Indian subjects love them as ardently as other subjects of any other parts of the Empire do.

The affection and expression of confidence is not blind. It is intelligent, as the belief prevails that whatever blunders may be committed by the agents who carry on the administration of the land, whatsoever may be the motives which guide them in their action, the Sovereign and his family's sympathy is always with the people, and it has found expression whenever any occasion has arisen. The visit to India of Emperor Edward thirty years ago is remembered for the impression then created. The present visit will also leave behind it many mementos that will directly benefit all classes of the community. Our request to all parties concerned is that the visit throughout may be made pleasant to our honoured guests so that they may take back with them pleasant recollections of their visit; that their visit be made memorable not only by memorials which the people in their loyalty will raise among themselves, but by some marks of Royal pleasure which will serve as a living memorial for all time to come. We once more greet our Royal guests and wish them a pleasant tour in India and safe return home.

The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 9th November says:—We find it stated in some Calcutta papers that the Superintendent of Stationery with the Government of India has given directions that certain Indian newspapers as well as an Anglo-Indian newspaper should on no account be placed on the table of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales during his Indian tour. Should this happen to be true it is of course open to inference that the Superintendent is either acting under orders or under suggestion. The papers named have distinguished themselves by the uncompromising support they have given to the Swadeshi movement and the freedom with which they have criticised the Government in regard to its recent decision about students and some other questions. Probably they are set down among the malcontents and suspects, but there is no present intention of setting Section 124A of the Indian Penal Code in motion against them. We do not know whether the Prince of Wales will have much time to give to the reading of Indian newspapers. If he has, he will have to be given any papers that he wishes to read. The Russian Censor, with his broad inepad, does not exist in India. Besides, if the Prince does not read one class of newspapers he will read another, which denounce the Swadeshi movement, the students and generally everything connected with the present agitation. And if the Prince is curious, he will want to know what it is all about, and to see the other side of the picture. Moreover, the Prince of Wales is not a political visitor and whatever he may see or hear he will keep his own counsel. If, however, the report mentioned above is true there can be no doubt that an attempt is being made to keep the truth from His Royal Highness.

The Indian People (Lucknow) of the 9th November says:—A correspondent writes to suggest that Allahabad being the seat of the Government of the United Provinces the proposed Medical College should be established here rather than at Lucknow. The plea appears to us more sentimental than equitable. As Lucknow and Oudh are raising the funds, clearly they are entitled to the College. Neither Allahabad nor the Province of Agra has yet subscribed very substantially to the College. Besides, there is a fine hospital already in existence in Lucknow and most probably it will be attached to the College. The Local Government also is hardly disposed to favour Allahabad at the expense of Lucknow. We all remember the excitement over the proposal to remove the High Court to Lucknow, and it was lucky that the scheme was ultimately dropped. A thing of far more importance than the Medical College is the administration of Justice, and the High Court, nominally of the United Provinces, has no jurisdiction over Oudh, and the Talukdars are quite content with the Judicial Commissioner's Court, and would probably resent any proposed extension of the jurisdiction of the High Court to Oudh.

While provinces without a High Court are agitating for one, our sister Province of Oudh will have nothing to do with a High Court, unless it can be taken to Lucknow. And if feeling runs high Lucknow may ask to be partitioned altogether from Allahabad, and partition appears to be so easy nowadays that the United Provinces may at any moment be disunited with a snap. The fact that Lucknow is included in the Royal tour while Allahabad is omitted shows that this city must be content to yield the precedence to other cities in the United Provinces.

12TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Sir,—Some nine or ten editors of the native, English and vernacular newspapers of Lahore were invited by Mr. Barker, C.S., to attend his office on the 7th instant to express their views regarding the election of a representative of the Punjab Native Press for the Royal Tour in India. After some discussion it was decided to hold a larger conference on the subject after fuller opinion had been taken and eventually to nominate either one joint representative or two representatives in the following alternative cases:—(a) if the Government decides to take only one joint representative for both sections of the Native Press. (b) If the Government will accept two representatives, one for the English and the other for the vernacular papers.

Accordingly a meeting was held on the evening of the 8th instant, in which Mr. K. P. Chatterji enacted the phenomenal combination of chairman, candidate, proposer, overruler and nominee, etc., all in one.

Regarding the high-handed and illegal proceedings and decision of this meeting, which purported to have elected the Babu as its nominee by the majority of one vote, whereas he was in reality in a minority of two votes, I have submitted the following protest to the Under-Secretary, a perusal of which will show to the Europeans and Moslems of the country what sort of justice they may expect at the hands of their Hindu and Bengali brethren.

MD. INSHAULLAH, Editor, the Wattan.

LAHORE: The 10th November 1905.

To P. L. Barker, Esq., C.S., Under Secretary to Government, Punjab, Lahore:—

Sir,—With reference to last evening's meeting of local Indian Press representatives, I respectfully beg to submit the following protest against the unconstitutional proceedings of the meeting and its unjust decision.

Fifteen gentlemen were present in person, and three had sent in their written opinions. Of these fifteen, two were neither Editors nor the Assistants; Lala Tola Ram and Ganga Parshad, who claimed to represent the Arya Patrika and the Arya Gazette, not being on the editorial staffs of those papers.

When the meeting proceeded to the election of a joint representative of the English and the Vernacular Press, in case Government could accord facilities to only one correspondent from the Punjab, the proceedings were characterised by serious irregularities and palpable high-handedness.

Mr. K. P. Chatterji, Joint Editor of the Tribune, who was in the chair, in disregard of etiquette, proposed his own name for the joint representative. A counter-proposal (duly seconded) was made, suggesting Sheikh Abdul Aziz, B.A., Editor of The Observer and Fellow of the Punjab University, instead. Out of those present, six voted for Mr. K. P. Chatterji and five for Sheikh Abdul Aziz. Three Editors of Urdu papers of Lahore (Sadai-Hind, Mashir-i-Hind and Wafadar) had sent in their written opinions in favour of Sheikh Abdul Aziz, so that against the six of Mr. Chatterji, Sheikh Abdul Aziz, had eight votes, though Sheikh Abdul Aziz out of feelings of propriety and decency did not vote for himself at all. Similarly Maulvi Mahboob Alam who was in favour of the Sheikh's election did not vote. But Mr. Chatterji (himself a candidate) as chairman of the meeting disallowed the counting of the three written votes and thus announced that he had secured a narrow majority of one vote for himself in spite of the fact that the names of the absentees had been already noted amongst those present.

It is noteworthy that these six votes for the Babu included two of Lala Tola Ram and Durga Parshad who had no locus standi there. It is further remarkable that out of these six again there was only one Editor of a vernacular paper, whereas all the eight for the Sheikh were the Editors of Urdu papers.

Besides the high-handedness referred to above I have to state further that Mr. Chatterji cannot write Urdu, being a Bengalee, and it is not clear how with this shortcoming he can represent and serve Urdu papers which so largely preponderate. The Sheikh, on the other hand, is conversant with both the languages. If therefore the resolution alleged to have been carried by the meeting is accepted as such by Government it will give rise to a serious grievance on the part of the entire vernacular Press. It may be mentioned that the Editor of the Akhbar-i-Am did not vote for the Babu because of the same shortcoming.

In conclusion I solicit the favour of your accepting Sheikh Abdul Aziz's selection, and if you feel any difficulty kindly lay the matter before the Chief Secretary.

I am, Sir,
Your most obedient Servant,
MD. INSHAULLAH,
Editor, the Wattan.

LAHORE:
The 9th November 1905.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—The scheme for commemorating the Royal visit to the United Provinces was carried another step forward at the public meeting held on the 7th instant at the Kaiser Bagh, Lucknow, at which His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor presided. It will be remembered that at the meeting at Government House on 20th October a sum of Rs. 3,96,000 was subscribed towards the project for the erection of a Medical College in Lucknow to commemorate the Royal visit, and it was arranged that the Committee should hold a public meeting on the 7th instant for the purpose of announcing the further subscriptions which it was hoped to obtain. A sum of Rs. 1,08,539 was promised at the second meeting, including a donation of Rs. 50,000 from the Raja of Mahmudabad. The total amount subscribed towards the cost of erection of the proposed Medical College is now Rs. 5,04,539. The Committee have also received promises of donations from the Maharaja of Benares and the Nawab of Rampur. The amount required, however, is still insufficient, as the cost of the proposed College is estimated at ten lakhs of rupees. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor announced at the close of the meeting that if the Committee could obtain this sum by the end of the month, or at least a sum of eight lakhs, it would be possible for him to approach the Government of India with a view to asking His Royal Highness to lay the foundation-stone of the proposed College in December. It would be a pity if the scheme, having gone so far, should fail for want of support and there is no doubt that the Committee will do their best to collect the additional amount required. There is, of course, as pointed out by His Honour, a way open for the College to still bear the name of His Royal Highness if the amount is not collected in time to admit of the foundation-stone being laid by the Prince in person, but we are inclined to think that the scheme will lose much of its effectiveness should this course become necessary, and it must be remembered that it was only mentioned by His Honour as a last resource. To allow this scheme, then, to remain in abeyance until the Prince has actually left Lucknow, will hardly redound to the credit of its promoters, to say nothing of the unfavourable impression which His Royal Highness must inevitably form of such a proceeding. The Committee, however, have still until 1st December within which to collect the further amount required, and the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses in India should act as a spur to their efforts.

12TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Madras Mail.—The album to be presented by the Parsi, Hindu and Mahomedan Ladies of Bombay to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales to-day contains forty water-coloured types of Indian beauty, as well as illuminated. Addresses in several of the native languages, and the signatures of the donors, running in all to about sixty pages, eighteen by twelve inches. The cover is of solid silver, the front depicting the Princess of Wales with her Ladies-in-Waiting receiving a deputation of Indian Ladies. In the left hand top corner there is a miniature view of Bombay harbour, depicting the Renown steaming in, and the corresponding corner shows the Town Hall of Bombay, where the reception is to be held. The two bottom corners contain two embossed coats-of-arms in fine gold and the centre space is devoted to the following inscription:—

"Presented to Her Royal Highness Victoria May, Princess of Wales, by the ladies of Bombay, 11th November 1905." The reverse cover is ornamented by a border displaying the shamrock, the thistle, the rose and the lotus and the Prince of Wales' plumes in silver and gold. The centre is frosted, and contains in floral type the words "Reminiscences of Bombay in 1905."

The backing is of silver also ingeniously contrived to represent Russia leather. Messrs. Barton, Son & Co. of Bangalore, were the designers and manufacturers of the covers.

The following is the text of His Royal Highness's reply to the Address presented to him at the laying of the foundation stone of the Prince of Wales' Museum of Western India:—

Sir Lawrence Jenkins,—I wish to thank all of you on behalf of the Princess of Wales and myself for the compliment which you have paid us by commemorating our visit in a manner so useful and so lasting. If we had been asked to suggest an object for your warm-hearted and generous efforts we should have chosen an institution such as you contemplate, for we have heard of the pleasure which museums in other parts of India afford to the people. You have with justice alluded to the sympathy shown by my dear father the King-Emperor in the educational and artistic progress of our people. It interests me to find that in this land, so strange at present to me, you are following ideas which are very familiar to us in Great Britain and throughout the Empire. Day by day we are grasping the importance of education by object-lessons and I anticipate the happiest result from the Museum, Library and Art Gallery which will one day stand upon this spot. If, as you assure us, the buildings, of which I am proud to lay the foundation-stone to-day, are to be fully in keeping with the other architectural adornments of this beautiful city, then we shall feel that our visit has not only brought pleasure to ourselves but permanent advantage and happiness to the citizens of Bombay and to the thousands of strangers who visit this busy centre of commerce and Government.

To-day's ceremony is a practical proof of that public spirit of the people of Bombay about which I have so often heard. At the same time you were fortunate to have in Lord Lamington a Governor quick to see a local want. I must also congratulate you on your Corporation wish to recognise that a great capital like this has its intellectual as well as its material requirements, and last but by no means least on having in your midst such citizens as your Sheriff Mr. Sassoon J. David and Mr. Currimbhoy Ebrahim. I hope that they and all of you who have helped to bring this public-spirited idea to fulfilment will live long to see and enjoy what under wise and experienced direction may prove to be one of the most important and beneficial institutions of Bombay.

Statesman.—The now imminent arrival of the Heir Apparent to the Empire of the Britains adds a special interest to an immense and most striking picture which was hung on Friday in the Art Gallery of the Calcutta Museum. It represents the state entry into Jaipur, 30 years ago, of the then Prince of Wales, the present King-Emperor.

The tragic death of the painter, Vassili Verestchagin, the most renowned Russian artist of his time, is still fresh in the public mind, and the story of Admiral Makaroff's flag-ship and its destruction at Port Arthur need not be retold here. Verestchagin began this picture in India, but completed it in Europe and there exhibited it for the first time. From Europe it crossed to the United States and was shown with other of his productions by the American Art Association in New York. There it attracted a good deal of notice and was finally bought by Mr. Edward Malley, a wealthy gentleman of New Haven. Its subject, however, proved its doom, for Lord Curzon, who had seen a photograph, naturally, enough showed it to the present Maharaja of Jaipur, who at once expressed the wish that the picture should, if possible, be brought to India and presented to the Victoria Memorial. Mr. Secretary Hay intervening, the purchase was negotiated, and the picture passed from the hands of the American connoisseur into those of the Rajput Chief. To Indian munificence therefore the Calcutta public is once more indebted for a notable treasure.

There need be no dispute upon the value of this masterpiece. The artist eye has been quick to see, and his brush to trace, the eminent characteristics of the East—the serene blue of her skies, the purity of her marble palaces, the splendour and glitter of her pageants. The Royal procession, mounted on elephants, is caught as it passes the palace wall: one's eyes linger on the lightly-poised arches, filled in with the pierced marble screens that characterise Moghul architecture in the East. The Royal beasts are a marvel of decorative art, and this Verestchagin has been skilful enough to reproduce in extraordinary detail—the bold carvings of the State howdahs, the grotesquely painted trunks and ears, the frontlets and housings heavily embroidered with gold and silver thread or studded with gems, and the glittering tassels that fall from the flapping fan-like ears—all are there. Besides the elephants, of which five or six are to be seen, step the beautiful Arab horses, gaily caparisoned, whose riders, in queer mediæval chain armour, bear the banners, chauris and emblems that form an important part of most Oriental processions. The dust thrown up by their feet is so realistic that it seems to have deceived more than one visitor, who took it to be the mark of travel! But the picture is more than realistic, it is alive: one almost feels the tramp of the "earthshaking beasts" and hears the merry jingle of the trappings that the proud horses toss as they enter the Rajput capital. And all the time, we are steeped in the eternal sunlight and the magic of the East.

To many people not the least remarkable feature of this new acquisition will be its dimensions: the canvas measures 22 feet by 18 feet, while, framed, its weight approximates to two tons. Messrs. Bourne and Shepherd deserve hearty congratulations on the way in which they have accomplished their difficult task of restoration. The work of stretching the canvas alone occupied three days; then followed its cleansing and re-varnishing, while nearly six weeks were spent on the repairing and gilding of the handsome simple frame that was sent with the picture. Pure gold leaf, to the value of £100, was used, and the effect has amply justified the expenditure. The actual hanging, like the framing, was another labour. The picture occupies the whole of the northern wall, and is kept in position by powerful hooks that pass through the wall to the adjoining galleries, while the main weight is supported upon two strong wooden blocks below. It is to be hoped that to the official description of the picture there will be added, not only the name of the Princely donor, but some appreciation, though necessarily slight, of the artist whose marvellous brush made the realities of modern warfare live in the imaginations of men and whose tragic death crowned a career filled alike with adventure and high purpose.

Observer.—The most interesting ceremony of the Royal visit to-day was the "purdah"—exclusively female—reception of native ladies by the Princess of Wales. Her Royal Highness entered the Town Hall, where the ceremonies took place, through an avenue of cloth of gold. For here were dark groups of Parsi, Hindu and Mahomedan women and children, clothed in the colour and magnificence of many garments, glittering with rich embroidery and precious heirlooms. Their dark hair was entwined with jasmine, and their pearls and jewels were worth a king's ransom.

The purpose of the quaint tripartite ceremony—the Parsi Vadhavilevani, the Hindu Arti, and the Mahomedan Ameen—is to ensure happiness of the Princess. This is accomplished by the breaking of a cocoanut and an egg over the Princess's head, and by the throwing of rice as symbols of fertility and plenty, by the offering of a sacred lamp, and by the scattering of leaves and blossoms to betoken a prosperous life's journey, and the gift of a cocoanut, which supplies the elements of food, drink and shelter.

The Princess took her seat upon a peacock throne, surrounded by priceless carpets and golden fans. The scene was one of dazzling colour and splendour, unsurpassed even in Oriental dreams. The Hindu women sang a folksied to the graceful movement of golden vessels, while the Mahomedans, seated on wonderful cushions, sang a chorus to the accompaniment of Eastern instruments. Then the Parsee ladies brought forth the sacred lamp, around which they moved in a slow rhythmic dance.

To the addresses delivered by the three groups Her Royal Highness made a gracious reply, winning the favour of her hearers by a delicate allusion to the sisterhood of East and West. Cake was offered to the guests, who expressed admiration of the Princess of Wales, indeed a charming figure in the splendid ceremonial.

In the morning the Prince of Wales was busy returning the visits of the native chiefs. In the afternoon enthusiastic crowds gathered to see him lay the foundation stone of the new museum to be built to commemorate the visit. In his speech His Royal Highness congratulated the Corporation of Bombay upon their efforts to promote the intellectual and material progress of the citizens—subjects in which the King and himself took so much interest. Later on the Prince proceeded to an inspection of the dock.

In the evening a crowded reception was held at Government House. Brilliant as was the scene, that in the city itself is even more strange and striking. Triumphant arches are everywhere, the streets are gay with bunting, the pavements are blocked by innumerable "grand stands". Never has such a motley collection of strangers thronged the streets of this most cosmopolitan of Asiatic cities. By day the thoroughfares are a blaze of colour, at night they break out fitfully into illuminations. I drove last night through the principal native quarters. They were swarming with humanity and humming with excitement. At times like these the native mind turns ardently towards fire-works, and progress along the narrow streets was spasmodically punctuated by the explosions of crackers. Bombay has so painted and whitewashed itself by day, and so covered itself with lamps and lanterns at night that even to those familiar with its many aspects it is almost unrecognisable.

Pioneer.—The Central India Chiefs, who will have assembled at Indore next month to witness the laying of the foundation-stone of the Daly College by the Viceroy, will remain there to greet the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival on the 15th November. This will save them from the long journey to Agra, and the arrangement seems an excellent one. In addition to the Maharaja Holkar there will be present the Begum of Bhopal, and the ruling Chiefs of Rewah, Orcha, Datia, Dhar, Dewas (junior branch), Samthar, Charkhari and Sailana. The last-named will be invested with the Insignia of the K.C.I.E. There will be a banquet and a general reception on the evening of the 16th, and on the 17th the Prince of Wales will open the King Edward Hall built in memory of the Coronation of His Majesty. With regard to the Royal visit to Gwalior in December, there will be a durbar at the Palace on the morning of the 20th, followed by the opening of the Victoria Memorial Market in the afternoon. On the 21st a parade of Imperial Service and State troops will take place with the presentation of medals and military sports, while a State banquet will be given in the evening. The 22nd and 23rd will be devoted to tiger shooting, while Sunday, the 24th, and Christmas Day will be days of rest.

Statesman.—The official programme for to-day concluded with a banquet at eight o'clock to be followed by a levée at the Secretariat at ten. As a matter of fact the banquet, which was a purely state affair, was prolonged rather unduly, and those who had the painful honour to be invited to the levée had to perspire in the ante-rooms and the corridors of the Secretariat until half-past ten. It was interesting, after having worked your way through a mass of military, naval, and civil officials, as well as guests of many degrees and colours, to find yourself in a passage thronged only by Maharajas and Judges and Generals and other unhappy mortals in dire need of fresh air. There you could see a British Judge tucking his gown unceremoniously over his knees, taking his wig off and mopping his learned brow just like a mortal; on another seat you might see a corpulent Raja resplendent in sky-blue silks and pearls, employed likewise, or a venerable Parsi high-priest in his white robes and long white beard dozing expectantly. But at 10-30 the agony was brought to an end by a loud cheering outside the building which announced the arrival of the Prince. A few minutes before had begun to come slowly in some of the less important diners, namely, the Chief Justice, the Bishop of Bombay, the Admiral, and a few others. The Prince in the uniform of a Vice-Admiral, preceded by a long retinue of Aides-de-Camp in two columns, mounted the stairs slowly, and took his place on the dais in one of the large Secretariat rooms a few steps in front of a throne prepared for the purpose. Then the presentation began. Military men and naval men, civil officials and religious dignitaries, municipal worthies and Indian Chiefs followed one another in decorous succession, each giving and receiving a bow, and then passing into another room and thence out into the cool night air and the clear moonlight. At the same time the Princess was holding a purdah party at Government House; but no mere male reporter can presume to speak of those mysterious proceedings behind the purdah of the East.

This morning was devoted by the Prince to returning the visits of some of the Indian Chiefs who had presented their respects to him on the preceding day, namely, the Maharaja of Kolhapur, the Rana of Porbandar, the Nawab of Cambay, the Raj Sahab of Desrangadra, the Thakor Sahab of Bhavnagar, and the Thakor Sahab of Gondal, all of whom were attended by Political Officers in full dress.

The afternoon was enlivened by a ceremony, the fruits of which are destined to be neither merely formal nor ephemeral. This was the laying of the foundation-stone of the Museum of Western India. Their Royal Highnesses arrived on the spot at 4-30 and drove under the archway, saluted by the guard of honour marshalled on either side and greeted with loud cheers, clapping of hands, and waving of handkerchiefs by the crowd of spectators and guests. The carriage halted at the foot of the dais, where the Royal visitors alighted and were received by the Hon'ble Sir Lawrence Jenkins, Chairman, the members of the Museum Committee, and the honorary secretaries of the Royal Visit Fund. All these gentlemen were duly presented by the Chairman, and the Prince and Princess, attended by their suite, took their places on the dais. The Chairman then approached and at His Royal Highness's command read and presented the following address:—

To His Royal Highness George Frederick Ernest Albert,

Prince of Wales, K.G., K.T., F.R.S., G.C.V.O., &c., etc., etc.—May it please Your Royal Highness: When it was definitely announced that Your Royal Highnesses proposed to pay the City of Bombay the great honour of visiting it, the loyal inhabitants in public assembly decided to raise a worthy and permanent memorial of so memorable an occasion. They are anxious to mark, in fitting manner, their sense of joy it has given them to welcome Your Royal Highnesses to this city, and their recognition of the auspicious character of an event which will always be happily remembered here, and cannot fail to weld more closely the links that bind India to the rest of the British Empire. They wish to rear a noble and enduring monument which shall, alike by its proportions and its design and the objects to which it is devoted, be for ever a symbol of their abounding loyalty to His Majesty the King-Emperor, and a token to posterity of your welcome and valued stay in their midst. They seek, therefore, to create upon this spot a group of buildings that shall be fully in keeping with the other architectural adornments of the city, and which, as a memorial of Your Royal Highnesses' visit, will be fitly flanked by the equestrian statue of your illustrious father and a statue of Your Royal Highness about to be presented to the city by our well-known citizen and Sheriff, Mr. Sassoon J. David. These buildings will recall to future generations the privilege now enjoyed by us of being the first in India to tender humble and loyal greetings to Your Royal Highnesses upon your arrival in this country, and will further serve to spread among the citizens a greater regard for those ideals of educational and artistic progress which your august house has done so much to foster. Led by His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, who has taken a warm and sympathetic interest in the project, the city has resolved to promote the erection upon this unique and valuable site, generously presented by the Government for the purpose, a museum, a library, an art gallery and such other adjuncts of popular recreation and instruction as the funds available will permit. These will stand in the midst of ornamental gardens and will, it is hoped, be at once a handsome and imposing addition to the attractions of Bombay and a pleasurable reminiscence of an occasion, the memory of which will be ever treasured by all who have been fortunate enough to witness it. Funds towards the erection of this memorial have been subscribed with cheerful alacrity by the inhabitants, aided by handsome contributions from the Bombay Government and also from the Corporation, and we are glad to inform Your Royal Highnesses that the subscription have included a munificent donation of three lakhs of rupees from one of our number, Mr. Carimbhoy Ibrahim. In the belief that this memorial will be both an appropriate embodiment of our spirit of devoted loyalty to His Majesty the King-Emperor and an acceptable testimony of our deep and heart-felt joy in the visit of Your Royal Highnesses to Bombay, we ask Your Royal Highnesses now to lay the foundation stone of the first of the buildings we propose to construct.

The following is the text of His Royal Highness's reply to the address:—

Sir Lawrence Jenkins,—I wish to thank all of you on behalf of the Princess of Wales and myself for the compliment which you have paid us by commemorating our visit in a manner so useful and so lasting. If we had been asked to suggest an object for your warm-hearted and generous efforts, we should have chosen an institution such as you contemplate, for we have heard of the pleasure which museums in other parts of India afford to the people. It interests me to find that in this land, so strange at present to me, you are following ideas which are very familiar to us in Great Britain and throughout the Empire. Day by day we are grasping the importance of education by object-lessons, and I anticipate the happiest results from the Museum, Library and Art Gallery which will one day stand upon this spot. If, as you assure us, the buildings, of which I am proud to lay the foundation-stone to-day, are to be fully in keeping with the other architectural adornments of this beautiful city, then we shall feel that our visit has not only brought pleasure to ourselves, but permanent advantage and happiness to the citizens of Bombay and to the thousands of strangers who visit this busy centre of commerce and Government. I hope that they and all of you who have helped to bring this public spirited idea to fulfilment will live long to see and enjoy what, under wise and experienced direction, may prove to be one of the most important and beneficial institutions of Bombay.

At the end of this discourse Their Royal Highnesses descended from the dais and proceeded to the foundation-stone, where Sir Lawrence Jenkins handed to the Prince the trowel, maul, square and plumb-rule. The usual act of make-believe masonry was performed and, amid applause, the stone was declared to be well and truly laid. This labour over, Their Royal Highnesses returned to the dais and resumed their seats, whereupon the Prince made a brief answer to the Chairman's address. This brought the proceedings to an end. The Prince and Princess accompanied by the Governor and attended by the Chairman and members of the Committee left the dais and returned to their carriages. Hence the Royal party with the Governor proceeded on a tour of inspection in the dockyard and a visit to the flagship.

Interesting as the foundation-stone function undoubtedly was, it was entirely obscured by the one in which the Princess acted the principal, if a somewhat passive, part. In the afternoon Her Royal Highness, after the Museum ceremony, drove to the Town Hall to receive an address given by the Indian ladies of Bombay. When the Princess's carriage drew up, the place was already full of the feminine representatives of the three great communities of this city—Parsi, Hindu, and Mahomedan—all of whom had combined to express the common feelings of the whole population, thus proving in a manner at once impressive and picturesque that those who are divided by creed and customs and colour may yet unite cordially in allegiance to one political ideal. As she alighted from her carriage the Princess was received by the president, vice-presidents, and honorary secretaries of the Address Committee, who were presented to Her Royal Highness and were shaken by the hand with the smile which has already captivated the hearts of the citizens of Bombay. Whilst Her Royal Highness ascended the steps, girls from the various schools, in festal dress, sang the National Anthem and songs of welcome in the various vernaculars. The din was great, but somehow there was no discord in this conflict of tongues. The pretty little choristers, each one in her national costume, presented as harmonious a variety of colour as of voice and the flowers with which they strewed Her Royal Highness's path added the finishing touch to a living picture of manifold beauty, and the air was sweet with the subtle perfumes of the East strangely mingled with the fresher aroma of the roses. Then came those features of the function which lent to its peculiar interest.

On the first landing the Parsi ladies in their delicate veils of light-blue, sea-green, primrose, and pink silk performed the quaint rite known as Vadhavilerani. The Princess stood in the middle of the group while an egg and a cocoanut were passed round her head seven times, symbolizing the seven circles of the world, and were then broken, in sign that whatever calamity the Fates have had in store for the person thus treated will be broken even as were the egg and the cocoanut, and the recipient of these attentions may henceforth live in safe contempt of the Fates and their cruel machinations. To this significance of the rite, a significance which I think may be traced to what anthropologists call mimetic magic, is added another equally symbolized though less profound. The egg and the cocoanut are interpreted as emblems of good nourishment, and as they were broken on behalf of the Princess even so will every evil concocted by destiny turn to her advantage and, so to speak, nourishment. With a similar purpose a dish of water was passed seven times round Her Royal Highness's head and then poured away. This libation is interpreted as a prayer that no draught but rainy abundance may be the Princess's lot in life. It also belongs to the category of symbolic magic, and though the good Parsi ladies were probably unaware of the fact, in pouring that water out they were performing an act common to the wedding ceremonies of many races whose very names are unknown to them. After the egg, cocoanut and water, followed a handful of rice thrown over the Princess's head, likewise indicative of prosperity and plenty, the original meaning of our own custom of throwing rice after the departing bride. The one really original part of the ceremony was the last. The lady learned in mystic lore who had already accomplished the things described above ended by pressing her knuckles fast against her own temples and making them crack thus expressing in a curiously practical manner the wish that all evil may be cracked off the Princess's head for ever and ever.

On the top of the stairs the Hindu ladies were awaiting their own turn of benevolent witchery. Their ceremony was even more abstrusely interesting if simpler in form than the Vadhavilerani. A bunch of burning wicks and a handful of mysterious red powder were prepared in a tray, and eating that as red is the brightest of the seven colours even so may the brightest of lots be granted to the Princess. It was the intention of the Hindu ladies to conclude their arti by marking Her Royal Highness's brow with the red powder but the Princess evaded this attention with her habitual tact.

Having thus successfully passed through these two ordeals of fire and water Her Royal Highness proceeded to the entrance of the Hall to undergo a third trial, namely, the Mahomedan rite of Ameen, the prettiest of the three and the least embarrassing. The Mahomedan ladies indulged neither in water nor in fire. Their magic consisted in garlanding the Princess and scattering round her head almonds and other nuts, their leaves plated with gold and silver, emblems of peace. They say that as the nuts are full of oil, even so may the oil of peace smooth the course of the Princess's life. These nuts reminded me of the nuts with which the ancient Romans used to salute the bride, and the Greeks to shower upon newly-bought slaves. The meaning in both cases, as in this modern instance, was peace and prosperity. The ladies then handed to the Princess a cocoanut, emblematic of the wishes that as its kernel gives food and contains water, as its leaves provide roofings, as its coir makes some useful articles of furniture, and finally, as its shells make cups, even so may the Princess never lack food, water shelter, and furniture. When I arrived in Bombay I little dreamed that I was destined to enjoy so interesting and instructive an experimental lecture on Indian folk-lore. The pleasure was therefore all the greater and but for the solemnity of the occasion I would say that all those fair priestesses of good luck—Parsi, Hindu and Mahomedan alike—have earned my abiding affection. Folk-lore over, the Princess stepped into the reception room and was conducted to a dais upon which stood a throne. On that seat Her Royal Highness found a rest which she undoubtedly needed. Then came the address of welcome read in Mahrathi, Urdu, and Gujarathi to the following effect :—

May it please your Royal Highness,—On this great occasion of Your Royal Highness's ardently expected and most welcome visit to India, an occasion that will ever remain memorable in the annals of this great country, we, the ladies belonging to all the Indian communities that people the city, consider it our great good fortune and our proud privilege to be permitted to greet and welcome Your Royal Highness to our shores, and we beg to assure you that we do so, on our own behalf and on behalf of our sister residents in Bombay, with feelings of the deepest respect, loyalty and affection. As Bombay is the chief gateway and the very threshold of the vast and most important Indian possessions of the British Crown, we are persuaded that we shall not be gainsaid if we bid Your Royal Highness a thousand most cordial and loving welcomes on behalf also of our country-women all over India, whose heart cannot but beat in complete harmony with our own on this most auspicious occasion. Bombay's happy connection with England, as Your Royal Highness is aware, dates back to the early days of King Charles II. Once the despised habitation of fisher-folks and the chance refuge of storm-driven pirates, it now stands pre-eminent as the second city of the British Empire. Among the many epoch-making events which go to make the history of Bombay and mark its steady rise and growth towards greatness and prosperity under the aegis of British rule, there are few that have made so deep an impression on the minds of the people and the remembrance of which is so gratefully cherished as a visit to this country just thirty years ago of our beloved Sovereign Edward the Peace-maker, then His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The happy effect of that great event of a Prince of Wales first visiting this orient dominion shall now be a hundredfold enhanced by the present Royal visit in consequence of the special and additional lustre that Your Royal Highness so graciously accompanying the Prince of Wales attaches to it. Bombay in her palmiest days cannot but be highly honoured by the advent of a second Prince of Wales who has already won his golden spurs as a worthy descendant of the great Queen; but coming as he does accompanied by Your Royal Highness lends the present Royal progress in this country its most exceptional clat and renders it historically unique and invests it with the happiest augury for the whole of this ancient land of India. The fact that Your Royal Highness so happily accompanies His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, betokening as it does not only on your part, but also on the part of their Majesties the King-Emperor and Queen Alexandra the most kindly interest in, and sympathetic consideration for, the people and especially for the women of this country, evokes in us the liveliest feelings of joy, gratitude and gratification, and it is to give expression to these feelings that we beg to approach Your Royal Highness and to ask your gracious acceptance of this our national and grateful address of welcome. Your Royal Highness will be pleased, we think, to observe the marked progress that female education has made in our midst of recent years, from this novel and unique spectacle befitting the uniqueness of this historic event which brings Your Royal Highness among your Indian sisters, of Parsi, Mussalman and Hindu ladies, many of them members of the most ancient and most wealthy families in this city, unanimously and of their own initiative associating themselves most cordially and in true Indian fashion to bid Your Royal Highness welcome to these shores. We earnestly trust Your Royal Highness's sojourn in India will be as enjoyable to yourselves as it is bound to be propitious to our people, and that you will be able to carry home with you such agreeable memories and such favourable impressions of this country and its inhabitants as must tend to bring Great Britain and India into a closer bond of mutual esteem, regard, and goodwill, both now and in days to come. In conclusion, we fervently pray that the Almighty Giver of all good will ever grant you and yours length of days with perfect health and constant happiness to enjoy the same, and that He will in His own good time bring to a happy and fortunate accomplishment all that your heart may desire for the good of the royal house and for the greater glory of England.

A copy of the English version of the address was subsequently placed in Her Royal Highness's hands, followed by an album containing forty water-colour types of Indian beauty as well as illuminated copies of the polyglot address and the signatures of the donors, forming altogether a volume of some sixty pages resplendent with gilt borders and mysterious with characters in unknown tongues, the whole being bound in covers of solid silver upon which was chased the effigies of the Princess with her ladies in waiting in the act of receiving a deputation of Indian ladies. In the left-hand top corner there was a miniature view of Bombay Harbour depicting the Rennet as she steamed in. The corresponding corner bore a picture of the Town Hall, while the two corners at the bottom contained two embossed coats of arms in fine gold. In the centre of this front cover gleamed the following inscription: "Presented to Her Royal Highness Victoria Mary, Princess of Wales, by the ladies of Bombay, 11th November, 1905." The back cover was ornamented with a border of shamrock, thistle, rose, and lotus, all entwined in loyal accord round the princely plumes of silver and gold. Her Royal Highness in a few words expressed her gratitude for this cordial reception. Some Indian songs, accompanied by the simple actions which in India pass for dramatic, followed, and, having accepted the customary bouquets and garlands, the Princess was escorted to her carriage by the president and members of the Address Committee. Unless I am very much mistaken, few ceremonies in which Her Royal Highness will participate in the course of this extensive tour will produce so profound an impression upon her mind as these mystic old-world rites by which her pilgrimage has just been blessed.

The Maharaja Bahadur of Darbhanga has received the following telegrams in reply to messages of welcome sent to the Prince and Princess of Wales: (1) I am desired by the Prince and Princess of Wales to thank you for your kind message of welcome. (2) The Prince and Princess of Wales desire me to express their thanks for the loyal greetings sent by you as President of the Behar Landholders' Association. (3) The Prince and Princess of Wales desire me to express their thanks for the loyal greetings sent by you as President of the Bharata Dharma Mahamandal.

The Calcutta Trades Association sent the following message of welcome to Their Royal Highnesses on the 10th November:—From the Master of the Calcutta Trades Association to Sir Walter Lawrence, Government House, Bombay—Calcutta Trades Association tender respectful, loyal and hearty welcome to Their Royal Highnesses. To which the following reply was received from Sir Walter Lawrence:—To the Master of the Calcutta Trades Association,—I am desired by the Prince and Princess of Wales to express their thanks to the Calcutta Trades Association for their loyal and hearty welcome.

Salesman.—A well-attended meeting of the Senate was held at the Senate House, College Square, at 11 A.M. yesterday; Mr. A. Pedler, Vice-Chancellor of the University, presiding.

The Vice-Chancellor said:—An exceedingly pleasant duty now devolves on me as Vice-Chancellor of this University to propose the first Resolution on our agenda paper. I am sure every member of the Senate will have read this motion with extreme pleasure for it is one which will appeal strongly to every one interested in Indian education and indeed to every inhabitant of India. It is also one which needs no eloquent speech from me to recommend it, for loyalty is one of the most powerful sentiments possible in the hearts of every subject of the British Empire. The response in public feeling, in the public prints, and in speeches when it became known that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales proposed to visit India this cold weather was very striking and even that has been entirely dwarfed by the actual reality of the feeling which has been exhibited in the magnificent public demonstrations which Their Royal Highnesses were afforded on Thursday last on their arrival in Bombay. Immediately this tour was determined on, as Vice-Chancellor I wrote a letter to the members of the Syndicate inviting them to discuss the proposal to ask His Royal Highness to allow the honorary degree of Doctor of Law of the Calcutta University to be conferred upon him during his visit to Calcutta. It is needless to say that the proposal was most warmly received and carried unanimously. I was induced to take this action as in my opinion the Calcutta University must be taken to represent the central, most influential, and indeed imperial section of educated India. It has always been in close touch with the Imperial Government, and I think I am right in saying it has had the widest influence on the largest number of educated Indians. Hence it was most appropriate that the proposal to ask His Royal Highness to associate himself with Indian education by becoming a member of the Calcutta University should come from us and not from the other Indian Universities. His Royal Highness was asked in due form and his gracious consent has been given to the request of the Syndicate, and His Royal Highness has signified his willingness to be made an honorary Doctor of Law of the Calcutta University. I may perhaps explain for the benefit of those who are not well acquainted with the history of this University that these honorary degrees have been most sparingly given by us. Indeed, only six persons have been made honorary Doctors of Law of our University in the course of the last 40 years. These are: His Imperial Majesty the King when he was Prince of Wales and visited Calcutta, on January 3rd, 1876, Professor Monier Williams, the Rev. K. M. Banerjee, and Babu Rajendra Lal Mitra in March 1876, Sir Alfred Croft, a former Vice-Chancellor and Director of Public Instruction in 1897, and the late Dr. Mahendra Lal Sarkar in 1898. I may perhaps allude to the feeling that obtained in 1875 and 1876 when the proposal was made to give the honorary degree of Doctor of Law to our present King, when it was found that under the then existing Act of Incorporation no honorary degree could be given. The feeling was so strongly in favour of conferring the degree that a special Act was at once passed through the Legislative Council to enable the degree to be given. Fortunately now in the existing Act there is a provision (Section 17) which enables an honorary degree to be given. The section requires, first, the recommendation of the Vice-Chancellor and of not less than two-thirds the other members of the Syndicate; second, that this recommendation is supported by not less than two-thirds of the Fellows present at a meeting of the Senate, and third, the confirmation of the Chancellor. The first part has been already carried by the unanimous vote of the Syndicate, and the second forms the proposal which is now before you. I should like also to point out a rather interesting coincidence in this question. His Majesty the King as Prince of Wales was the first recipient of an honorary degree in the Calcutta University, and also, I believe, at any Indian University under the old Act of Incorporation. The proposal now is to make His Royal Highness the present Prince of Wales the first honorary Doctor of Law under the new Indian Universities Act on January 1, 1906, just thirty years after the date on which his illustrious father received the same degree. I think this University will honour itself by admitting His Royal Highness to be one of its members, and I am sure this resolution needs no further words of commendation from me. Before reading the resolution I should, however, like to add one personal point which will show that to me the proposing of this resolution is a source of peculiar pleasure. When His Majesty the King received the degree of Doctor of Law I had only been in this country a very short time. Mr. Sutcliffe, the then Registrar, finding his work rather heavy, asked me as the youngest member of the Education Department to act as his informal deputy on the Convocation day, which I did. Hence I took a small but active part in conferring the degree on the King. I hope to round off my official career in India, which is now rapidly drawing to a close, by taking a larger and more important part in conferring the honorary degree on His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Gentlemen, I will now read the resolution which I have the honour to propose and which I commend for your acceptance.

"Resolved unanimously—That the Syndicate do recommend to the Senate that the honorary degree of Doctor in the Faculty of Law be conferred on His Royal Highness George Frederick Ernest Albert, Prince of Wales, on the ground that, by reason of eminent position and attainments he is, in their opinion, a fit and proper person to receive such degree."

Sir Guru Das Banerjee had much pleasure in seconding the Resolution. To the graduates of the Calcutta University it must, he said, be a source of intense gratification to find the graduates list of their University graced by the illustrious name of the Prince of Wales. It would be another link in the bond that attached them to their beloved Sovereign. The noble sentiments which the Prince of Wales had given expression to regarding India upon his landing on Indian soil had endeared him to all Indians more than ever and were quite worthy of the great royal house to which he belonged and which he would in due time one day represent.

The Rev. Father Lafont as the senior non-official Fellow of the Senate, supported the motion. He was also present—although he had no function at all—at the meeting of the Senate when the present King was made an honorary Doctor in Law thirty years ago, and it was a very great pleasure to him to have been spared to see the King's son receive the same honour. It was an honour for the University to have on the rolls of its graduates such persons as the King-Emperor and the Heir Apparent. Such an event would fitly inaugurate the new life of the Calcutta University to which they all wished the greatest possible success.

Moulvi Seraj-ul-Alam deemed it a high privilege to be permitted to support the motion, which was peculiarly fitting because they opened their book of honorary degrees with the name of the Prince's illustrious father. This motion had the concurrence of the Mahomedan community, the members of which yielded to no other community in their loyalty and devotion to the throne and in their appreciation of the benefits conferred on this country by English rule and English education.

The motion was then put and carried unanimously.

13TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Daily Express, London.—The Princess of Wales attended a ceremony of oriental splendour yesterday. It was gorgeous and magnificent even for India.

The ceremony was "purdah"—that is, it was exclusively confined to women. The leading ladies of the three great Indian religious communities—Parsi, Hindu, and Mahomedan—assembled in the town hall to welcome and honour the Princess according to their ancient rites.

The hall was bewildering in its splendour. Rich carpets of cloth of gold stretched from the entrance to the throne. Hundreds of candles flickered in sockets of beaten gold. The walls and the pillars were hung with priceless fabrics lent by Rajahs and Nawabs. Native ladies and young girls wore their richest costumes, and their jewels might have come from Aladdin's cave. It is very rarely that so dazzling an array is seen at one time, even in the opulent East.

Young girls sang songs of welcome and scattered the carpet with flowers as the Princess entered. She wore a flowered muslin gown. Her toque was trimmed with wreaths of roses, and diamonds and amethysts sparkled at her neck.

There were three distinct ceremonies—the Parsi "vadhavile-rani," the Hindu "arti" and the Mahomedan "ameen." The Parsis came first. An egg and a cocoanut were passed seven times round the head of the Princess, and were then broken on the floor, signifying that if evil should befall the Princess in any of the seven circles of the world it may be destroyed and turned to good. The egg and the cocoanut symbolise the three elementary necessities of life—food, drink, and shelter.

Water was passed seven times round the Princess' head, and poured on the floor, to signify abundance of rain, and rice was scattered over her shoulders to typify abundance of food.

The Hindu ceremony was more poetic. Red powder carried on a tray was conveyed to the Princess, and a pretence was made of marking her with it on the brow. Innumerable candles were burnt, signifying the wish that light and brightness may abound in the Princess' life.

Then the Mahomedan ladies, headed by the Begum Mahal, scattered leaves and flowers round the Princess, laid gold plate and silver coins at her feet, garlanded her with gold and silver leaves, and showered almonds and other nuts about her shoulders as emblem of the oil of peace and happiness. One Mahomedan lady scattered a shower of real pearls about the Princess' feet.

The Princess was then conducted to a dais, which was a replica of the gorgeous peacock throne of Mumtaz-i-Mahal, the consort of the splendid and passionate Shah Jehan—the famous throne which blazed with rubies, sapphires, and emeralds, was valued at six and a half million sterling, and was carried out of India after the Persian invasion.

Lady Jehanghir presented an address from the three communities, expressing the warmest hopes for the future happiness of the Princess. Her Royal Highness carefully followed the address which was in the three vernaculars, from an English translation. She made a brief and pleasant reply, saying that she was highly gratified by the reception, and that her chief object in making the tour was to make the acquaintance of "my Indian sisters."

Presentations were made. The ladies made deep salaams, and one insisted on kissing the hand of the Princess over and over again. Hindu girls sang a plaintive song with actions representing the drawing of water from a well. The Parsis sang a national song around their sacred lamps, and followed it with a rhythmic dance winding round and round in circles, with the children in the middle.

The Princess was wreathed in smiles of delight. She took tea with the ladies, and then departed amid a rain of sweet-scented flowers.

During the afternoon the Prince of Wales dressed in the white tropical uniform of an Admiral, laid the foundation stone of the new Museum building, and in a graceful speech expressed his approval of all movements which have the education and culture of the people for their object.

A great reception was held in the evening at Government House. The pretty grounds were brilliantly illuminated. So many people attended that dawn was breaking before the last carriage passed Malabar Point.

The greater part of to-day was devoted to a much-needed rest. In the evening the Prince and Princess attended service at the Cathedral.

The natives of India, usually silent and impassive, burst into delighted cheers whenever the Prince and Princess appear, and clap their hands with great vigour. Part of this enthusiasm is due to the widespread superstition that the Princess of Wales is a beneficent angel, whose visit will banish plague and famine from Bombay.

Daily Mail.—By far the most splendid ceremony of the week has been the reception of the Princess of Wales by the women of the Hindu, Mahomedan, and Parsi communities. Through streets thronged with enthusiastic multitudes, Her Royal Highness arrived at the Town Hall, which some magician had transformed into a picture that might have been painted by Burne-Jones.

Up the centre of the broad stairs ran a carpet of cloth of gold, like a golden ladder, ascending among beautiful women clad in flowing robes of white and delicate tints of mauve and blue. Under the Grecian portico, where the golden ladder faded in light, stood a group of children like a posy of pale roses and tulips.

Chaplets of pearls bound their dark tresses, among which were entwined sweet-scented jasmine. In their hands were baskets of jasmine flowers to scatter in the path of the Princess. In the clear light that precedes the sunset the picture was surpassingly beautiful.

Ascending the golden ladder, the Princess paused midway to submit to the ceremonial with which Parsi women ward off evil and secure good fortune. An egg and a cocoanut were passed seven times round the Princess's head and then broken. So evil was turned to good. Rice was scattered that Her Royal Highness might have enough and to spare. A few more golden rungs, and the Hindu ladies went through a ceremony which brings light and brightness to life.

Then the Princess passed to the Mahomedans, from whose hands showered gold and silver leaved almonds, emblems of peace. A cocoanut was presented in order that the Royal guest might never lack food, water, shelter, or furniture, all of which the net yields the thrifty Hindu.

Conducted to the Peacock Throne, the Princess found herself in another fairyland palace of Aladdin. On the walls hung priceless carpets from the looms of India and Persia. Between the massive pillars stretched gardens of flowers. And the company was of women and children clad in white, mauve, and blue. Pearls and diamonds shone and sparkled in their dark hair, and upon some of them ancient embroidered garments showed more precious jewels. Seated on the throne, queen among her ladies, the Princess received addresses of welcome in three languages, and made brief and fitting reply to "her sisters." Music succeeded the speech. To the jingling of anklets and silver-note bells, Hindu maidens approached bearing vessels of gold on their heads. They sang a weird folk-song.

The Mahomedans came next with more music and songs, succeeded by the Parsis holding the sacred flame, about which they circled gracefully. Food and flowers were then given and Her Royal Highness departed greatly delighted with the novel and picturesque ceremony.

The Prince had a busy day. In the morning he returned the visits of the native chiefs, when the ceremony of the previous day was repeated. His Royal Highness's retinue seated on his right. In the afternoon His Royal Highness laid the foundation-stone of a museum to be erected, at a cost of £200,000, to commemorate his visit. The Prince congratulated the Corporation on its efforts for the material and intellectual progress of its citizens.

A visit to the docks brought him to Government House late in the afternoon. At night an "At home" was held at which several thousand people were present.

Daily Telegraph.—On Saturday the chief interest of the day's proceedings centred in the welcome offered to the Princess of Wales by native ladies.

The Prince was occupied during the morning in returning the visits of the Chiefs, and in the afternoon laid the foundation stone the accommodation of school children, who will sing "God Bless the Prince of Wales" as the procession passes. It is also believed that permission will be granted to firms for the erection of stands along the route for the benefit of the public. On the 2nd January there will be another large function, namely, the native entertainment to take place on the maidan. The site of this entertainment will be the plot of maidan south of the Golf Club, and north of the Victoria Memorial. Here a large amphitheatre in the shape of a horse-shoe will be erected, and at one end there will be a dais for the Royal visitors, which will be very elaborately decorated. The route to the amphitheatre, i.e., the streets from the Dufferin statue to the dais, will be tastefully decorated by tapestries, etc., all under the supervision of Signor Gilhardi. The entertainment will comprise only Indian forms of amusement, such as a Tibetan Ghost Dance, Santhali Dance, etc. The Serpentine Tank will on this occasion be extremely well decorated by a special set of men from Murshedabad. The electric installation will all be carried out by Messrs. F. and C. Osler. The roads to the amphitheatre will be lined by 1,000 Subadhars, who on the way back will carry lighted torches. There will be four bands in attendance, of which three will be Military Bands. The entertainment will last from 4 to 7 P.M., after which there will be a display of fireworks by Messrs. James Pain and Sons, which will cost £1,000.

The next public function will take place on the 3rd January, and will be the illumination and Royal Procession night. The line of route to be followed by the procession will be practically the same as that taken during the procession during the Coronation Festivities of 1903.

It will be remembered that at the last meeting of the Corporation a sum of Rs. 10,000 was sanctioned for the purpose of illuminating and decorating some of the principal public buildings for Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, and a Special Committee at the same time was appointed to consider the details. The Special Committee accordingly met on the 8th current, and it was decided that the sum of Rs. 10,000 should be distributed as follows:—Town Hall, Rs. 4,000, Sir Stewart Hogg market, Rs. 1,500, Central Municipal Office building, Rs. 2,500, College Square, Rs. 600, Bendon Square, Rs. 400, and District Office building No. 1, Rs. 500. It will thus be seen that the largest sum has been allotted to the Town Hall, which will no doubt be most effectively decorated and illuminated. The Municipal Market and the Municipal Office building, for which handsome sums have also been set apart, will likewise be well displayed with lights and richly decorated. The arrangements for the illumination and decoration of each of the above-mentioned buildings have been entrusted to some of the well-known Commissioners, and their success is ensured.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, on arrival from Darjeeling, will only pass through Calcutta on their way to Diamond Harbour, where they will board the Renown.

We are requested to publish the following telegrams: "From the Master of the Calcutta Trades Association, to Sir Walter Lawrence, Government House, Bombay.—Calcutta Trades Association tender respectful, loyal and hearty welcome to Their Royal Highnesses." "From Sir Walter Lawrence, to the Master of the Calcutta Trades Association.—I am desired by the Prince and Princess of Wales to express their thanks to the Calcutta Trades Association for their loyal and hearty welcome."

Indian Daily News.—Certainly the most graceful and striking of the day's ceremonials was the reception of the Princess of Wales by the ladies of Bombay at the Town Hall.

The hall had been gorgeously prepared for this ceremony. The richest Indian and Persian carpets were laid upon the floor, the walls and pillars were decorated with the richest gold embroidered silks, and numerous crystal chandeliers glittered about the hall, which was brilliantly illuminated. The pillars were wreathed and joined by graceful festoons of jasmine, mari-golds and other flowers symbolic of the Parsi welcome; and, the most gorgeous feature of all, upon the scarlet dais was placed a replica of the famous peacock throne, resplendent in cloths of gold. In this splendid setting there was gathered a wonderful assembly of native ladies in all the brilliance of the richest and most beautiful Indian costumes. The lovely hues of the graceful Parsi sarrees were there contrasting with the brilliance of the Hindu and Mahomedan ladies' costumes and with the softer tones of European dresses. The broad steps leading to the hall were lined by girls from the various schools, also brilliant in their native robes.

Arriving at the Town Hall as dark was closing in, the Princess saw a wonderful scene. The exterior of the building was most effectively illuminated with fairy lights, and besides the brilliantly-garbed throng of ladies on the steps great crowds of natives lined the road in front of the hall. Her Royal Highness was enthusiastically cheered, and the ovation she received from the Indian ladies on the steps clearly created the most pleasing impressions. The Princess was received at the foot of the steps by the President, Vice-Presidents and Honorary Secretaries of the Committee responsible for the preparation of the Native ladies' address and reception. These ladies, who were Lady Jamesetji, Lady Petit, Lady P. Mehta, and many others, were presented to the Princess. Then while the girls were leaving the steps, they sang the National Anthem and songs of welcome in the vernaculars, and others strewed flowers along her path, Her Royal Highness ascended to the first landing. Here the Parsi ladies performed the Badhavlavan ceremony. This consisted of an egg and cocoanut being successively passed seven times around the head of the Princess and afterwards broken. The meaning hidden in this ceremonial was that if in the seven circles of the world any evil assailed Her Royal Highness, it might be destroyed like the egg and the cocoanut and in its destruction be turned to good as the broken egg and nut provide nourishment. Water in a dish was then passed seven times around the head of the Princess, indicating that rain, the sign of plenty and not drought, might be her lot, and the throwing of a handful of rice over her head symbolised that she might have such an abundance of food as to be able to scatter it about presumably as a Lady Bountiful. Finally the lady performing the ceremony pressed her knuckles against her own temples until they cracked, signifying that the Princess might be invulnerable to all evil. At the conclusion of this impressive ceremony, Her Royal Highness advanced to the head of the steps, where Hindu ladies performed the Arts ceremony, which consists of marking the brow with red powder carried on a tray on which small lights are burning, red being regarded as the first and brightest of the seven colours. The ceremony symbolises the hope that light and brightness may abound around the life path of the Princess. The marking of brow was however dispensed with.

At the threshold of the hall Mahomedan ladies performed the Ameen ceremony and an additional feature was the laying of a plate of gold and silver coins at the feet of the Princess as an individual tribute in the Ameen ceremony. Her Royal Highness was garlanded and gold and silver leaves, almonds and other nuts were scattered around her head. Nuts are the emblems of peace and yielding oil indicate the aspiration that the oil of peace may smooth the course of her life. The scattering of the almonds was followed by the presentation of a cocoanut, emblematic of the wish that as its kernel gives food and water, as its leaves provide roofing, as furniture is made from the coir, and as the shell makes cups, so may the Princess never lack food, water, shelter or household goods.

In the hall the Princess was conducted to the throne where she took her seat. The ladies of the committee were presented gracefully saluting the while. The address of welcome was then read in Marathi, Urdu, and Gujarati, and copies, bound in a handsome album, were presented to her. In the address the Indian ladies of Bombay bade Her Royal Highness a thousand most cordial welcomes, referring to the happy effect of King Edward's visit to India as Prince of Wales. The address stated that the effect would be enhanced tenfold by the present Royal visit in consequence of the special and additional lustre attaching to it by the Princess accompanying the Prince of Wales. The address touched upon the progress of female education in India as indicated by the gathering, and finally trusted that the visit would be as enjoyable to Their Royal Highnesses as it was bound to be propitious to the people of India.

The Princess of Wales, in replying to the address from the native ladies in the Town Hall, said:—

Lady Jehangir and ladies.—I thank you all very warmly for your kind and graceful greetings. I know the feelings which have prompted you to present this address to me, and you certainly have succeeded in making my first impressions of the women of India bright, happy and hopeful. One of my chief objects in this tour is to see as much as possible of my Indian sisters, for I believe that the more I see of the reality of your lives, the more I shall admire and esteem the high qualities for which the Indian women is renowned. If my first impression, so charming and so powerful, becomes fixed as I travel through India, then, to use the words of your address, I shall "carry home agreeable memories and a sympathy which will bring us into a closer bond of mutual esteem, regard and good-will."

Indian action songs were sung, and the ceremony closed with a presentation of flowers and garlands, and refreshments were offered by three ladies.

As Her Royal Highness was about to leave the Hall, Mrs. Kapurchand, a Hindu lady, the wife of the wealthiest pearl merchant in Bombay, showered over the Princess a mass of pearls which she had brought on a piece of plate, a striking climax to ceremonies in which the dominant notes were magnificence and opulence as well as grace and beauty. From the moment she began the ascent of the Town Hall steps to the moment of departure, Her Royal Highness was wreathed in smiles of delight. The remarkable demonstrations of the ladies having made a deep impression.

The reception at Government House last night was very brilliant and crowded. The Native Chiefs and the Sardars of the Deccan were first received, a general reception following. There were nearly four thousand people present. The grounds of Government House were prettily illuminated by Japanese lantern and fairy lamps.

While at Bombay His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales presented to His Excellency the Viceroy a magnificent silver cup or centre piece with a special inscription in recognition of the arrangements made by the Viceroy in connection with his forthcoming tour. Their Royal Highnesses also presented to Lady Curzon a beautiful brooch composed of the Prince of Wales's feathers in diamonds.

A somewhat sensational incident occurred after the ceremony of opening the new thoroughfare on Friday. As the Royal carriage was leaving Prince's Street a Punjabi, now employed as a sweeper in the 113th Infantry, threw a tin box at the carriage. The box missed the carriage, and the man thereupon threw himself in front of the horses, but was seized by Police. The box contained papers in reference to a dispute about ancestral property, the man memorialising against a decision of the Punjab Court. He will be charged at Police Court to-morrow.

This evening the Prince went for a drive and the Princess visited the Cama Hospital. Their Royal Highnesses afterwards attended Divine Service at the Cathedral, accompanied by Lord Lamington. There was a large congregation, and the Bishop of Bombay preached.

Manchester Guardian.—The native quarter, which has been visited by the Prince and Princess of Wales, is of course one of the regular sights of Bombay. The streets are narrow and tortuous, but contain many fine houses, the architecture of which often shows signs of Portuguese influence. Each trade has its own street or quarter. There are rows of bakers' shops in one part, in another the grain shops, the brayers' and the jewellers' quarters, and so on. Of the life in the streets, which are always busy and animated Sir Edwin Arnold writes:—"A tide of Asiatic humanity ebbs and flows up and down the Rhendji Bazaar and through the chief mercantile thoroughfares. Nowhere could be seen a play of livelier hues, a busier and brighter city life. Besides the endless crowds of Hindu, Gujarati, and Maratha people coming and going,—some in gay dresses, but most in next to none at all,—there are to be studied here specimens of every race and nation of the East. Arabs from Muscat, Persians from the Gulf, Afghans from the Northern Frontier, black, shaggy Beluchis, negroes of Zanzibar, islanders from the Maldives and Laccadives, Malagashes, Malays, and Chinese throng and jostle with Parsis in their sloping hats, with Jews, lascars, fishermen, Rajputs, fakirs, Europeans, sepoys and sahibs."

Pall Mall Gazette.—The public reception of the Princess of Wales by Parsi, Hindu, and Mahomedan ladies in Bombay has provided newspaper-readers with unusually picturesque matter this morning. No lady from across the seas has ever been welcomed thus before, though many, we may feel sure, will be in future years, since the first future Queen of England to visit India will certainly not be the last. "The chief object of my tour is to know my Indian sisters well" the Princess said, and the words will go all over India increasing the affectionate enthusiasm for the consort of the Emperor to be which, as may already be seen, will rank as the distinctive feature of this Royal tour, and give it a new charm, even for those English readers who are familiar with the quaint and gorgeous details of such progresses.

Pioneer.—In spite of the dense crowds on the streets yesterday and the press of carriages and motor traffic, no casualties occurred. This speaks well for the police arrangements and the amenable character of the people, who were easily controlled. The fact that the Royal drive through the native town extended over many miles partly contributed to this happy absence of accidents, for the populace were thus scattered over a large area instead of being concentrated in a few points. Every section knew that its turn would come in due time, and thus the people waited patiently until the carriage appeared, when their excitement and enthusiasm reached its highest pitch. Military precision was, of course, observed by the escort during the two hours' passage through the town, and the troops concerned seemed unaffected by the great heat and absence of breeze in the crowded quarters. One incident is recorded which had its affecting side. A Parsi funeral procession had been halted while the Royal carriage passed, and the mourners, forgetting their sorrow for the moment, made obeisance to the Prince and Princess. His Royal Highness uncovered, and thus showed his silent sympathy with the funeral party. Much satisfaction is expressed that the Prince, in receiving the address from the Improvement Trust in opening Princess Street, specially referred to the important part that Lord Sandhurst had played in initiating the plan for sweeping away the insanitary claws and dwelling houses by the operations of the Trust. The Prince requested that a copy of the brochure containing an account of the day's proceedings might be sent to Sandhurst, and intimated with marked pleasure that a copy was being forwarded Home by this week's mail.

One cannot but be struck by the variety of the mottoes that are to be seen in almost every native street—"God Save the Pair," "Tell Papa we are Happy," "India wants sweet sympathy," and many others have both sincerity and originality about them. Petty shopkeepers as well as private individuals have shown their loyal joy by inscriptions, and they are happily conscious of having done the right thing in uneffected form.

This morning, the Prince paid return visits of ceremony to the Maharaja of Kolhapur, the Rana of Porbandar, the Nawab of Cambay, Raj Sahib of Dhrangadra, the Thakur Sahib of Bhavnagar, and the Thakur Sahib of Gondal. The following Political Officers were present at the residences of the respective Chiefs in the order given above: Lieutenant-Colonels Ferris and Kennedy, Mr. Westropp, Lieutenant-Colonels Davies and Kennedy, Captain Beale. An hour and a half was taken over these visits, the necessary guard-of-honour, 101 strong, being furnished by the 104th Rifles, 113th Infantry and 121st Pioneers. Salutes were paid from the battery on Malabar Hill on the departure of the Prince with his escort from Government House and on his return shortly after noon. The usual exchange of compliments took place during His Royal Highness' short stay with each Chief, all of whom did their best to receive the Prince with fitting honours. They were delighted with these return visits and kindly courtesy which the Prince showed. His Royal Highness has been most deeply interested in these ceremonies, as they have brought him for the first time in direct touch with the Chiefs, whose pleasure in briefly conversing with him is fully reciprocated. Hereafter, the Prince will see many Ruling Chiefs of higher rank and greater importance than those who have gathered here to do honour to him, but none will be of more steadfast loyalty or more sensible of his gracious and sympathetic attitude towards them. Great Durbars there will not be, but on every occasion where Chiefs are assembled to meet the Royal visitors, opportunity will be taken that all shall receive due share of consideration. Progress will be made from week to week from one province to another, and the Prince will receive many impressions of different races and different rulers. His interest to each Chief that he meets will leave pleasant memories for them to cherish.

The important function this afternoon was the laying of the foundation-stone of the Museum which is to be built as a permanent memorial of the Royal visit. The site chosen is that known as "The Crescent," the open grass-covered space which lies between the Sailors' Home and Elphinstone College. This ground was acquired some time ago by the Improvement Trust, and has been kept sacred so far as the ordinary builder was concerned. It acts as a lung of the European part of the city, and there are some who think that a mistake has been made in fixing upon this particular site. The balance of opinion, however, inclines to the view that the handsome piles of buildings with grounds laid out in flower gardens will be a great public improvement; in any case, sanction has been given to the project, and to-day the final step was taken in the shape of the foundation ceremony.

By 3 o'clock spectators had begun to assemble in the semi-circular tiers of seats which faced the temporary pavilion and dais on the Crescent, Native Chiefs and European and Native ladies and gentlemen were accommodated to the number of several hundred, while the Governor of Bombay and the high officials were grouped about the dais. A large crowd assembled in the adjacent streets and cheered heartily as the Prince and Princess drove up under an escort of half a squadron of the 33rd Light Cavalry. A guard-of-honour of the Royal Scots was in attendance, and the usual salute was given, the band playing the National Anthem. The Prince, who wore the white uniform which has already become so familiar here, and the Princess, looking charming in a light summer dress, were received by Sir Lawrence Jenkins (Chairman) and the members of Improvement Trust, together with the Secretaries of the Royal Visit Fund. After the customary introductions had been made, Their Royal Highnesses moved to the front of the dais, their appearance being the signal for a fresh burst of applause, which they smilingly acknowledged. Sir Lawrence Jenkins then read the address:

His Royal Highness in replying spoke, as at the Apollo Bunder on Thursday, very clearly and effectively, and his allusion to the King-Emperor drew forth much applause. Their Royal Highnesses then walked a few yards from the dais to the foundation-stone, which stood ready to be lowered. The Prince placed the metal vessel containing the coins, etc., into the receptacle in the lower stone, over which mortar was rapidly spread by two native workmen. His Royal Highness was then handed a silver trowel and lightly spread some of the mortar, the Princess watching the ceremony with smiling interest. The foundation-stone was then lowered, three pauses being made, while the band played a few bars of music. When the process of lowering had been completed, a maul, square and plumb rule were given to the Prince who applied the usual tests and then said:—"I declare this stone to have been well and truly laid." There was more cheering, and the Royal party returned to the dais. Lord Lamington then made a short speech, in which on behalf of the citizens of Bombay he thanked Their Royal Highnesses for their kindness in performing the ceremony. He referred to the way in which they had already seen the loyal affection of Bombay, and ended by saying that permission had been graciously given to name the building the "Prince of Wales' Museum." This announcement was loudly applauded. The Prince then left on a visit to the docks and the flagship Hyacinth, the band playing "God bless the Prince of Wales" as his carriage started. The Princess took another route, as she was anxious to see the Cama Hospital for Women—one of the most notable institutions in Bombay. Cheers followed each carriage as it took its separate way.

After the Princess had seen the hospital and expressed sympathetic interest in its work, Her Royal Highness, with a small travelling escort of thirty troopers of the 33rd Light Cavalry, proceeded to the Town Hall. She was everywhere recognised along the route and received quite an ovation. In front of the Town Hall in Elphinstone Circle a dense crowd had gathered. It was the presentation of the address from the Indian ladies of Bombay to Her Royal Highness, characteristic Oriental ceremonies being observed. On the steps leading up from the roadway numbers of Parsi and Hindu girls stood eagerly awaiting the Princess' arrival. They formed artistic studies in their dresses of white, pale pink or rose, and softer shades of colour. As the sunset slowly faded out one watched regretfully the blending and blurring of their delicate tints, but the illuminated facade of the Town Hall shone all night brilliantly. As the moonlight fell upon the scene, the Doric columns became pillars of fire; hundreds of small glass lamps glowed in the festoons and pyramids of light, and the whole picture was brilliantly effective. As the Princess arrived there was a reception given her more enthusiastic than any yet received, and the crowd urged about her carriage in spite of the escort and police who have already witnessed general displays of popular welcome here as the Royal party have made their progresses through the City, but none so unbounded as this. It is clear that the Princess has in three short days established herself in the hearts of the people, and they are impatient to express their feelings of homage and devotion.

Her Royal Highness was received by Lady Jehangir and the ladies who are associated with her on the Address Committee. Presentations having been made, the ceremonies of Vadhavilevani, Arti and Ameen were proceeded with. As the party moved up the steps towards the large hall of reception, school-girls sang the National Anthem and songs of welcome in vernacular languages and scattered flowers in the path of the Princess, who was evidently delighted with the manner of her welcome.

The Parsi "Vadhavilevani" ceremony consisted of an egg and a cocoanut being successively passed seven times round the head of Her Royal Highness and then broken. The significance was that in the seven circles of the world believed in by the Indian, if any evil be fated to assail the person so treated it may meet with destruction like the egg and cocoanut; and also that as the breaking of the egg and cocoanut is productive of good nourishment, so may every evil turn to good for the Princess. In like manner, some water in a dish was taken seven times round the head and thrown away. The significance of this is a prayer to the effect that not drought but rain, the sign of plenty, be the Princess's lot. A small handful of rice was also thrown over the Princess's head, indicating a wish that Her Royal Highness has not only enough of food but in such abundance as to be able even to scatter it around her. Lastly, the person performing the ceremony pressed her knuckles against her own temples, making them crack, signifying that evil may thus be cracked off the Princess. The Hindu "Arti" ceremony consisted of holding a little tray, in which were some burning wicks and red powder used for making the lucky mark on the forehead. The presentation of this was considered tantamount to the full ceremony of marking being performed. It indicated that as red is the prime colour of the seven colours, and also the brightest of them, so it wished that the light and brightest of brightness might abound round the Princess. The Mahomedan "Ameen" ceremony consisted of garlanding the Princess and scattering around Her Royal Highness's head gold and silver-leaved almonds and other nuts, signifying that as nuts are the emblems of peace because they yield oil, so may the oil of peace smooth the course of her life. There was then handed to Her Royal Highness a cocoanut, emblematic of wishes that as its kernel gives food and contains water, as its leaves provide roofing, as its coir makes some articles of furniture, and as its shells make cups, so may the Princess never lack food, water, shelter, and furniture.

The reception-room was beautifully decorated, rich kinkob work in real gold and silver embroidery being used. The pillars were draped with this material; the walls and mirrors also. Festoons of flowers filled the open spaces, and the whole room was aglow with colour. It was lighted from numerous chandeliers and tiny coloured lamps. At the end of the room under the organ was the dais with the Peacock Throne, over which was the motto "Ich Dien." The Throne had scarlet cushions of gold embroidered, and two gold-leaf fans were waved on either hand. All the leading Indian ladies were present, and a small number of European ladies, who had been specially invited. The Princess was conducted to the Throne, and then the address of welcome was read in the three vernaculars commonly in use in the Presidency. The English translation was as follows:—

"May it please Your Royal Highness,—On this great occasion of Your Royal Highness's ardently expected and most welcome visit to India—an occasion that will ever remain memorable in the annals of this great country—we, the ladies belonging to all the Indian communities that people the city, consider it our great good fortune and our proud privilege to be permitted to greet and welcome Your Royal Highness to our shores, and we beg to assure you that we do so, on our own behalf and on behalf of our sister residents in Bombay, with feelings of the deepest respect, loyalty and affection. As Bombay is the chief gateway and the very threshold of the vast and most important Indian possessions of the British Crown, we are persuaded that we shall not be gainsaid if we bid Your Royal Highness a thousand most cordial and loving welcomes on behalf also of our country-women all over India whose heart cannot but beat in complete harmony with our own on this most auspicious occasion.

"Bombay's happy connection with England, as Your Royal Highness is aware, dates back to the early days of King Charles II. Once the despised habitation of fisher folks and the chance refuge of storm-driven pirates, it now stands pre-eminent as the second City of the British Empire. Among the many epoch-making events which go to make the history of Bombay and mark its steady rise and growth towards greatness and prosperity under the regis of British rule, there are few that have made so deep an impression on the minds of the people and the remembrance of which is so gratefully cherished as the visit to this country, just thirty years ago, of our beloved Sovereign Edward the Peacemaker, then His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The happy effect of that great event of a Prince of Wales first visiting this Orient Dominion shall now be a hundredfold enhanced by the present Royal visit in consequence of the special and additional lustre that Your Royal Highness, so graciously accompanying the Prince of Wales, attaches to it.

"Bombay in her palmiest days cannot but be highly honoured by the advent of a second Prince of Wales, who has already won his golden spurs as the worthy descendant of the great Queen; but coming as he does accompanied by Your Royal Highness lends the present Royal progress in this country its most exceptional clat, and renders it historically unique and invests it with the happiest augury for the whole of this ancient land o' ffind.

"The fact that Your Royal Highness so happily accompanies His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, bokening as it does not only on your part, but also on the part of Their Majesties the King-Emperor and Queen Alexandra, the most kindly interest in, and sympathetic consideration for, the people and especially for the women of this country, evokes in us the liveliest feelings of joy, gratitude and gratification, and it is to give expression to these feelings that we beg to approach Your Royal Highness and to ask your gracious acceptance of this our national and grateful address of welcome. Your Royal Highness will be pleased, we think, to observe the marked progress that female education has made in our midst of recent years, from this novel and unique spectacle besifting the uniqueness of this historic event which brings Your Royal Highness among your Indian sisters of Parsi, Mussalman and Hindu ladies, many of them members of the most ancient and most wealthy families in this City, unanimously and of their own initiative associating themselves most cordially and in true Indian fashion to bid Your Royal Highness to these shores.

"We earnestly trust that Your Royal Highnesses' sojourn in India will be as enjoyable to yourselves as it is bound to be propitious to our people, and that you will be able to carry home with you such agreeable memories and such favourable impressions of this country and its inhabitants as must tend to bring Great Britain and India into a closer bond of mutual esteem, regard and good-will, both now and in days to come.

"In conclusion, we fervently pray that the Almighty Giver of all good will ever grant you and yours length of days, with perfect health and constant happiness to enjoy the same, and that He will in his own good time bring to a happy and fortunate accomplishment all that your heart may desire for the good of your Royal House and for the greater glory of England."

Then came the presentation of the album, as a souvenir of the occasion. It contained forty types of Indian beauty, painted in water-colours; and illuminated addresses in English, Gujerati, Marathi, Urdu, Persian, and Canarese, with the signatures of the donors attached, making a handsome volume of some sixty pages. The cover was solid silver, showing the Princess with the ladies of her suite receiving the deputation of the Indian ladies. A miniature view of Bombay, with the Renown entering the harbour, was given in the left-hand corner, while on the right hand was a view of the Town Hall. In each of the bottom corners was an embossed coat-of-arms in fine gold, while in the centre space the following inscription appeared: "Presented to Her Royal Highness Victoria May, Princess of Wales, by the Ladies of Bombay, 11th November 1905." The reverse cover had a beautiful ornamental border, showing the rose, shamrock and thistle together with the lotus and the Prince of Wales's, features in silver and gold. The centre bore in floral type the words: "Reminiscences of Bombay in 1905."

Some typical Indian songs were sung, flowers were presented, and the ceremony came to a close. The Princess was escorted to her carriage and drove away amidst loud cheers from the crowd which still thronged Elphinstone Circle. The Prince had meanwhile paid his visit to the flagship, a salute of 31 guns notifying to the public that this official ceremony was taking place.

Pioneer.—Remarking on the measures taken for the protection of the person of His Excellency the Viceroy and Royal personages, the Rangoon Gazette recalls that when in 1901 Lord Curzon visited Moulmein, a day before His Excellency's arrival nearly a hundred known and suspected criminals were by the orders of the District Magistrate arrested and committed to jail during the brief sojourn of His Excellency at that port. Those who were able to produce tangible personal security for their good behaviour—and these amounted to about twenty—were released.

The Standard.—The Prince and Princess of Wales have now been here four days, and it is possible to estimate the result of the visit and to gauge the character of the reception accorded to Their Royal Highnesses. On all hands it is felt that the tour has begun brilliantly.

Some doubt had been previously entertained as to the possible character of the reception in Bombay, containing, as the city does, a considerable disaffection element, owing to the Puna Brahmins and Mahratta intriguers. It is now agreed, however, that the welcome could not have been warmer. A distinguished official said to me:—"I have seen many ceremonies, Viceregal and others, in India, for years past, but I have witnessed none like this."

The most notable incident in the drive through the native city on Friday was the phenomenal enthusiasm of the native crowds. These are usually undemonstrative, but this one was unrestrained in its applause, and there were decided cheers and handclapping as the Royal carriage passed; whilst the natives' eyes were gleaming with excitement, and sometimes even tears. The Princess sympathetically remarked on the evidences of popular emotion, for which, probably, superstition is partly accountable. The people believe that the visit will banish the plague, and end the bad times through which Bombay till lately has been passing.

In conversation with leading natives, I learn that the Prince and Princess produce an excellent impression on them. They like the Prince's unaffected manners, and his evident pleasure in receiving the rajas. His Royal Highness enters into conversation genially, inquiring into the condition of the harvests and similar matters, and showing a surprising acquaintance with topics interesting to Indian landowners and sports-men.

The Princess is also already popular. I was told that at a select pardah party at Government House on Friday, limited to a small number of native ladies of high rank, she chatted freely with the guests, inquired after their children, and completely won their hearts.

Yesterday a much larger assemblage of ladies, Parsi, Hindu and Mahomedan, arranged by Lady Jehangir, attended at Government House, and presented addresses to the Princess from the three communities. This was also a pardah, no male being allowed to witness it; but a lady privileged to be present has given me an account of the picturesque proceedings. The hall was draped with cloth of gold and flags, and beautifully lighted by the soft glow of hundreds of candles, setting off the varied native dresses with brilliant effect. The visitors were sumptuously attired, and made a beautiful display of jewels such as is rarely seen even in India, since many native families possess magnificent collections which are never exhibited outside the women's apartments.

A threefold dais had been erected, and at the foot of the first the Parsi ladies performed a pretty symbolical ceremony of welcome, an egg and a coconut being passed seven times over the head of the Princess and then broken. On the second step of the dais the Hindu ceremony took place, in which a tray with lighted wicks was borne, and the brow of the Princess was touched with red powder.

The Mahomedans, headed by the Begum of Mahal, scattered gold and silver almond leaves and flowers round the Princess, and one enthusiastic lady insisted on pouring about her feet a shower of red pearls. These ceremonials typified the desire that the life of Her Royal Highness might be bright and happy, and that all ill luck and misfortune must be averted from her path.

The Princess, who wore a flowered muslin robe and a rose-wreathed toque, whilst her ornaments were diamonds and amethysts, then proceeded to the platform, and, seated on a gorgeous throne, listened to an address, the sentiments of which she followed by means of an English translation. At its conclusion the Princess replied with infinite charm of manner saying she was highly gratified by this charming reception.

"The chief object of my tour," said Her Royal Highness, "is to know my Indian sisters well."

Then followed the presentations of the leading ladies, who gracefully salaamed, whilst one kissed the Princess's hands repeatedly.

An album of Indian types was presented; some Hindu girls sang a pantomime song, going through the action of drawing water from a well; and the Parsis sang their national song and gave their national dance, winding in concentric circles with a group of beautiful children in the centre.

The Princess was delighted with all she had witnessed, and smilingly indicated her approval. Having taken tea, she departed amidst a rain of flowers and cheers from the crowd outside.

The Prince was the central figure in possibly a more important but certainly a more conventional ceremony—that of laying the foundation-stone of the museum, a building which will be a great addition to the attractions of the city.

The idea of commemorating the visit of Their Royal Highnesses to Bombay by erecting a museum was finally adopted at a meeting of the citizens held at the Town Hall on August 14.

Lord Lamington, who presided, was then able to announce that the committee appointed by his Government to consider the scheme had reported very favourably on it, and he had already received gratifying proofs that it was likely to meet with the favour of the public.

Mr. Kurrimbhoy Ibrahim, a prominent mill-owner, a short time before told the Governor that he himself was certain a museum would bring increased prosperity, material and intellectual, to Bombay, and that such an institution was greatly needed; and, what was more to the point, Mr. Kurrimbhoy Ibrahim produced a cheque for three lakhs of rupees (£20,000), and handed it to the Governor, as his contribution towards the cost and maintenance of the museum. The Nawab of Junagadh sent 12,000 rupees (£800) before the subscription list was opened, being of opinion, he said, that the matter concerned not the city of Bombay alone, but the whole Presidency.

Started in this handsome way, the subscription list rapidly filled, and before very long Bombay, in honour of the Royal visit, will have added to its magnificent public edifices one which, alike from its utility and architectural beauties, would rejoice the shade of Sir Bartle Frere, should he revisit this Venice of the East which he did so much to adorn.

The evening closed with a reception at Government House, the pretty grounds of which were brilliantly lighted. The resources of the establishment, which is a comparatively small building, were taxed by the number of guests. Their carriages were ascending and descending Malabar Hill for hours, and it must have been nearly dawn before the last one got away.

To-day brought an interval of comparative rest, which was welcome. In the evening Their Royal Highnesses attended service in the Cathedral of St. Thomas, this being their first opportunity of seeing the interior of an edifice which has an interesting history.

The Cathedral contains some curious relics of Old Bombay, including a silver chalice presented to the citizens by Gerald Aungier, who in 1662 was deputed from Surat to claim Bombay for the English. The silver chalice alongside of it was the gift, an inscription says, "of the Greenland merchants of the cities of York," though how it got to Bombay no one seems to know.

General Carnac, a noted officer of the Company's service who fought with Clive at Plassey, has his tomb in the Cathedral, and there is also a tablet in memory of his beautiful wife, nee Rivett, whose portrait, painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, is in the Wallace collection. Another monument represents Governor Jonathan Duncan receiving the blessings of young Hindus—in allusion to his efforts to put down infanticide among the Jareja Rajputs of Kathiawar.

Bombay is indeed redolent with associations connected with the rise and establishment of British rule in India and the palmy days of John Company. To these, as well as to its present commercial and political importance, the attention of the Royal visitors has been frequently directed by the competent local staff, which includes one civilian of recognised authority on the history and antiquities of the island city.

Probably the most interesting, and certainly the most novel, experience of the Princess was the purdah held in the Town Hall immediately after the stone-laying, while the Prince was visiting the dockyard and flagship. The walls and pillars of the hall were hung with the richest fabrics of the East. Native ladies, in soft flowing garments of every delicate tint of blue, pink, yellow, and purple, mingled with opalesque effect under the mellow radiance of innumerable lamps. Amid this scene of splendour the Princess, in her simple European dress, sat on a scintillating throne, an exact reproduction of the world-famous Peacock Throne erected by the founder of Delhi, Emperor Shah Jehan, in the seventeenth century.

Three distinct ceremonies were performed by Parsi, Hindu and Mahomedan ladies, respectively.

The ladies had also prepared an address of welcome, in three vernaculars, which was read by Lady Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy. The Princess replied as follows:—

"I thank you all most warmly for your kind and graceful greeting. I know the feelings which have prompted you in presenting this address to me, and you have certainly succeeded in making my first impressions of the women of India bright, happy, and hopeful.

"One of my chief objects on this tour is to see as much as possible of my Indian sisters, for I believe that the more I see of the reality of your lives, the more I shall esteem those high qualities for which the Indian woman is renowned.

"If my first impressions so charming and so powerful become firm and fixed as I travel through India, then, to use the words of your address, I shall carry home an agreeable memory and a sympathy which will bring us into a closer bond of mutual esteem, regard, and goodwill."

Standard.—Government House at Malabar Point, where the Prince and Princess of Wales reside during their visit to Bombay, really consists of a collection of bungalows. Mountstuart Elphinstone had a "pretty cottage" there, which Bishop Heber saw in 1825. The bishop described its beautiful situation on a rocky and wooden promontory. A large ball-room was afterwards built, and further additions were made, till the place became infinitely more commodious than the old Government House at Parel. Lady Falkland, wife of a former Governor—she was one of Mrs. Jordan's daughters—took a great fancy to Malabar Point. The site, or a portion of it, was once occupied by the old temple of Walkeshwar, a word meaning "Lord of Sand." The legend is that Rama, halting here on his way from Oudh to Ceylon, to recover his bride, Sita, who had been carried off by Ravana, became thirsty, and, no drinking water being available, shot an arrow into the earth, whereupon the "arrow tank" (Vanatirtha) suddenly came into existence. Here also was a small cleft in the rock known as the Stone of Regeneration, through which, if any person passed, he was born again. The Mahratta Sivaji is said to have journeyed to Malabar Hill, at peril of his life, to perform this salutary feat. Some people think that the cleft Stone of Regeneration still exists; but, according to the late Mr. James Douglas, the leading authority on local history, Mountstuart Elphinstone destroyed this interesting relic. The modern Temple of Walkeshwar, which is not far from Government House, was built in the early part of the eighteenth century, and also has its tank.

Daily Mail.—By laying the foundation-stone of the Alexandra Dock this afternoon the Prince of Wales inaugurated one of the most important public works that the wealth and enterprise of Bombay have conceived. The ceremony took place in a vast artificial amphitheatre, crowded with people, whose costumes of many colours and shapes were striking evidence of the greatness and variety of the community to the prosperity of which this work will contribute.

Entering beneath a massive Greek portico wreathed with laurels, Their Royal Highnesses descended a broad stairway covered with crimson, where were assembled naval, military, and civil officials in white uniforms.

The Princess examined with interest the model of an old East Indiaman, to which the magnificent docks of the city owe their origin. To Her Royal Highness was presented a bouquet in a holder of gold filigree set with rubies and sapphires. The Prince was offered a casket containing an address, read by the chairman of the Port Trust, Mr. Hughes, in reference to the stone laid by the King thirty years ago, when the first wet dock was inaugurated. Since then the seaborne trade of Bombay has increased from £45,000,000 to £98,000,000, and the tonnage from 1,500,000 to 3,750,000 tons. Then the Port Trust was in its infancy. Now its revenues amount to nearly £250,000 a year.

Descending from the platform, the Prince released the stone. As it was declared well and truly laid, the spectators rose. The vast amphitheatre, filled with brilliance, over which rose the white minarets of a mosque, formed a splendid and glowing picture of Oriental magnificence.

Addressing the Trustees, His Royal Highness spoke of the growth and enterprise of the city, and welcomed a work enabling it to receive the greatest battleship.

The dock is part of a scheme of improvements to cost £3,000,000, a Crown undertaking which for nearly half a century has passed through varying phases of good and evil fortune. Under Government control the docks have proved a source of increasing wealth and have ensured the pre-eminence of Bombay as a commercial capital. The dock area is nearly fifty acres, the quays being three miles long, and will admit a vessel a thousand feet long and one hundred feet in the beam, with a draught of thirty feet. The wet dock and railway complete the work.

In the morning the Prince returned the visit of the Chiefs. After the dock ceremony Their Royal Highnesses went to the Yacht Club, where they were welcomed by the British community. At night they attended a ball at the famous Byculla Club, which the progress of the city has left stranded near the point where the British occupation began.

Times.—The Princess of Wales, when proceeding to the Town-hall yesterday to receive an address from Indian ladies, had a popular reception which far surpassed any which she had previously experienced. Her Royal Highness was attended only by a lady-in-waiting, her carriage being escorted by a small detachment of native cavalry. The people thus saw the Princess alone for the first time, and seized the opportunity to demonstrate their feelings of personal affection. The crowd surged about the carriage on its arrival at the Town-hall, cheering frantically and pressing to the very steps in their eagerness to give a loyal greeting.

The occasion was unique, for, apart from the fact that Her Royal Highness is the first English Princess who has ever been in India, the ceremonial of a welcome by Indian ladies has never before been undertaken in the case of the landing in India of any English lady of distinction. The ladies of Bombay took a prominent part in the proceedings, in which there were Parsi, Hindu, and Mahomedan rites intended to ensure that all blessings should fall upon the Princess and to guard her against the approach of any evil influences. School-girls singing the National Anthem and scattering flowers in the path of Her Royal Highness added character to the scene on the steps where the Parsi and Hindu ceremonies were performed. At the entrance to the reception hall the Mahomedan ceremony was performed, and the Begum Mamtazan Nasrulla Khan tendered the nazar of gold and silver coins, which was touched and remitted, the money being assigned for the benefit of the poor.

The interior of the hall, brilliant with many coloured lights blazing upon the rich kinkob decorations in pure gold and silver embroidery, furnished a spectacle unrivalled in its absolutely Oriental character. Ladies in sumptuous dresses distinctive of their nationality filled the open spaces between the rows of pillars draped in glowing colours, while the Peacock Throne at the end of the room shone resplendent in crimson and gold, with the motto "Ich Dien" surmounting the canopy. The Princess, who was delighted with the excited enthusiasm shown, took her seat on the throne, while two ladies fanned her with large gold-covered Indian fans. An address was read in Urdu by the Begum Sahib of Janjira, in Gujarati by the daughter of Lady Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, and in Marathi by Lady Balchandra Krishna. The Princess's reply was received with joyous manifestations, for the simple sincerity of feeling shown in every word was spontaneously appreciated.

Songs of good wishes and others describing the home life of the Hindus were given, the scene being a vividly animate one. As the Princess afterwards moved on her way through the hall a shower of real pearls fell upon her head, these being thrown by a lady in token of devotion and affection. An album containing types of Indian beauty, with copies of the address in the vernaculars, its cover of solid silver, with beautiful ornamentation and engraving, was presented. The whole reception, with its true Oriental setting, was one which the Princess will never forget, for the fervent reality of the affection shown must have been more to her than the loyalty which had originally prompted this particular form of welcome.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—This evening the Prince went for a drive and the Princess visited the Cama Hospital. Their Royal Highnesses afterwards attended divine service at the Cathedral, accompanied by Lord Lamington. There was a large congregation, and the Bishop of Bombay preached.

The Bishop of Bombay, in his sermon at the Cathedral, preached from the text, "Walk about Zion and go round about her and tell her the powers thereof. Mark well her bulwarks, set up her houses, that ye may tell them that come after. For this God is our God for ever and ever. He shall be our guide until death." Psalm 48, verses 11-13. The preacher said:—"In all literature you will find no more splendid appeal to the very soul of patriotism than this. The writer is a Jew, his country is quite small and insignificant, and yet its capital, Zion, is to him the centre and joy of the whole earth. The inspiration of his patriotism is God. The love of country is no less beautiful than the love of home, especially if it is rooted in the love of God, and it is this I want you to think about to-day. What then is the first duty of the true patriot. Is it not to obey loyally the laws of the land, those laws by which the order and harmony of the State are maintained, and which safeguard the rights and liberties of the subject. And what is this but obeying His law who is the source of all authority. Whoever makes light of or tramples these obligations under foot, denies the first principles of the Son of Man. Consider Christ's example as a patriot, a Jew under Roman dominion. Clearly the teaching of our faith is closely bound up with the first principle of patriotism."

Proceeding, the preacher said:—"Whatever our defects of Government may be, we may claim, I think, without offence, that the higher standard of patriotism has been up to now, and still is, the acknowledged merit of British rule both in the Colonies and in India. The representative character of its institutions, the breadth and depth of its educational aims, the righteousness of its law, the fearlessness and justice of its administration. Add to these a wise and generous mercifulness in times of peculiar distress, such as plague and famine, and you have here the best traditions of English life. The intelligence of the country frankly acknowledges the soundness of the principles on which our imperial administration rests. And the most spiritual exponents of the great representative Indian religions are openly rejecting the accretions of later superstitions, and are feeling their way back to purer and more primitive forms of their own belief, often reading into these, no doubt unconsciously, what they have learnt from us of Christian thought and Christian ethics. Such is new Hinduism. So pronounced and widespread is this movement of unrest that a fear exists lest India, having lost faith in its own religion, should be left in the hideous dilemma of having none at all. Much rests with us under God. There is a wealth of old-world civilization and philosophic thought in India which forms a splendid soil for the growth of the Christian idea, that idea being itself of Eastern origin. If in our political and social and, above all, our individual and personal life, we are true to that idea—if, in one word, we are Christian patriots in all our relations with India, then the blessing of India is assured. That we are passing through a very critical time cannot be denied, that the future of India thought and character is largely in our hands is equally clear. And here I should like to say—and to say with all emphasis—that the teaching is not all on our side. We have at least this to learn from the religious life of Eastern peoples, viz., a far greater consistency with what is professed in the matter of actual performance. Take for example one marked feature of our own national life,—I mean Sunday observance. Is this, or is this not being ably and greatly perplex the Eastern mind?

"I should like, if I may do so without presumption, in the name of the Church in India, to thank you, Sir, whom we have so recently rejoiced to welcome to these shores, for the wish you have expressed with regard to this matter during your stay in India. It is a patriotic wish, for as a country England owes more to its observance of the Lord's Day than we are aware of. And in foreign countries under our rule it is, or ought to be, a standing witness to those religious principles which inform our national life and underlie our rule greatness. Depend upon it that Imperialism divorced from those principles is as tawdry as it is insecure. As surely as the faith of a nation dwindles, patriotism languishes and dies. The fierce light of Eastern thought and criticism beats first on us who live and work out here before it beats upon the throne. We, as a nation, throne and people alike, have much to answer for. We have been given a great dominion, but we have also been given a momentous trust, a trust of which Greece and Rome had no conception. It means that all race that we must be wise and politic as rulers, but that we must have the love of God in our hearts as men. It means that the word 'Englishman' must always and everywhere spell Christian virtue and Christian chivalry. It means that all race prejudice must die down, at least on our side. It means that wherever the British flag floats that which we profess to have learnt at the foot of the Cross shall become a manifest reality in our regard for the universal brotherhood of man."

This morning the Prince returned the visits of those Chiefs with whom State courtesies were not exchanged on Saturday. These were His Highness the Raja of Pipla, His Highness the Nawab of Junagadh, His Highness the Rao of Cutch, and His Highness the Jam Sahib of Navanagar. The Political Officers present at the residences of the respective Chiefs were Mr. P. J. Mead, Lieutenant-Colonel Abud and Lieutenant-Colonel Kennedy, who attended at the residence of the Nawab of Junagadh, and of the Jam Sahib of Navanagar. The arrangements, as at all the functions since the Royal arrival, were admirable.

14TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Englishman.—The site chosen for the camp of the Punjab Imperial Service Troops, who will be in Lahore during the visit of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, is near the village of Guru Mangal, west of the jail road to Mian Mir. The officers' camp will be west of the Aitchison Colloge road about the same distance from Lahore as the visitors' camp. The troops will arrive in camp between the 18th and 20th of November. Major Twining, Royal Engineers, Inspecting Officer, Imperial Service Sappers, will be in command until the arrival of Colonel Drummond, C.I.E., Inspector-General, Imperial Service Troops, about November 24th.

The quaint and interesting ceremonies which marked the occasion of the address to the Princess of Wales from the Indian ladies of Bombay serve to draw attention to the extraordinary part that symbolism plays in almost every activity of Indian life. It is true that the better educated classes in many parts of this country have lost much of their interest in the formalism that is enjoined by Oriental religions, and live lives hardly to be distinguished from that of the European, but the description of the scene in the Bombay Town Hall supplied by our special correspondent proves that on great occasions the tendency in this country is to revert to traditional forms and to set aside the acquirements of Western education. The same tendency was observable at the Delhi Durbar, when the Chiefs took more pride in their retainers, clothed and armed according to antique custom, than in their desire not to forget tradition and to observe every time-honoured custom is hardly understood in the West. But the impulse is, in fact, aristocratic in its instinct and should be received all the more kindly at the present juncture when a Prince and Princess, representing everything that is traditional and historic amongst the British, are visiting the country. We behold in Calcutta an attempt will be made to revive ancient and picturesque Bengali usages in a manner that will bring home to the Royal party that it has, indeed, come into a land with a special civilisation of its own dating back to the remotest times. In view of the powers and responsibilities that will in course of time devolve upon the Prince it is only natural that both the Government of India and the people of the country should seize every opportunity for drawing attention to the fact that the Indian outlook on life is based upon a philosophy very different from that prevailing in the West, and that the temper and attitude of the people are governed by causes Europeans are too often accustomed to neglect.

Though it is difficult to express in any European vocabulary the exact significance of symbolism in Indian life, one may illustrate the extent to which it is indulged in by a reference to Indian art. Designs and colours are not in India primarily meant to please the eye or delight the senses. Every colour is symbolic, every little involving curve in a bit of tapestry or needlework is meant to indicate something concrete and real. The fluting of a column in a temple is to those who know a text. It is currently believed that the complete secret of the meaning of Indian design is to be found in books jealously guarded by the Jaina priests. At one time Indian craftsmen were initiated into the secrets also, but now they only know vaguely and indefinitely what they have imperfectly learnt by tradition. An indication of the meanings that were originally meant to be read into the simplest architectural details as shown by a little fact disclosed by a Mahratia wood-carver working on a door meant to grace the Exhibition Building at the Delhi Durbar. Pressed to explain why certain lines and scrolls had been somewhat inartistically added to what was otherwise a perfect bit of carving, he said that the carvings were for the dwelling of a person of noble birth. Scrolls of a different kind would indicate the word Rama—a king in heaven—and would, therefore, be only used in temples. A third design would spell Yama—the king of hell—and would be used on carvings designed for persons not of noble birth, who were certainly doomed to perdition after death. It is a well-known fact that Indian craftsmen do not invent new designs. They will either copy European ones, or keep on imitating standard Indian ones generation after generation, and this is not so much because they lack originality as because a new arrangement of colours and lines would have no meaning as a symbol.

Of course the secrets of the masons and others were never common property in India, but the whole population is permeated with the idea that everything in nature is expressive of some human emotion or activity and vice versa. For instance, trays with lights burning in them were handed round amongst the company assembled to do honour to the Princess in order to signify the hopes that wherever the Princess was light and brightness might be there also. "Some rice was scattered over the Princess's head signifying a wish that she might not only have enough of food but also an abundance of it so as to be able to scatter it about." Significances of this kind, of course, are not altogether unknown in Europe, but they do not imply that kind of belief in the operation of the natural forces that is held in India. It is not easy to summarize in a few words the essential elements of the Buddhistic and Hindu faiths, but every Buddhist or Hindu in some subtle or sub-conscious way imbibes the idea that the senses are deceptive—that what they do, or see, or feel is Maya or illusions. Nirvana is not so much annihilation as absorption, for every object or activity in Nature is sooner or later absorbed into the Divine essence. Death is, therefore, a liberation in the complete sense of the word. If, then, things are not what they seem, it is an act as much of intelligence as of faith to read into concrete objects and into human emotions all kinds of novel significances. Almost every waking moment of an orthodox Hindu's life is devoted to observances and ceremonies, and the more devotional a Hindu is the more inclined is he to resent the activity which the physical demands of his body necessitate. It is this feeling of the illusions of Nature which creates the fatalism which Europeans wonder at. The Indian acquiesces in harsh conditions, which could be removed by effort, because he really believes that the conditions in this life do not matter. In short, the formalities that probably both puzzled and interested the Princess, and through which the Prince himself will probably have to go, will serve the useful purpose of reminding the Royal visitors that the people of India are in many very important respects dissimilar from the people at home.

Englishman.—This morning was spent by the Prince of Wales in paying return visits to the remainder of the Chiefs to whom such an honour was due. His Royal Highness was accompanied by Sir Walter Lawrence and the Hon'ble S. W. Edgerley, Chief Secretary to the Political Department of the Government of Bombay, and in the case of each visit was conducted to the Chief's bungalow by a deputation sent by the Chief concerned. The Royal carriage was escorted by the Kathiawar Imperial Service Cavalry, and guards of honour of Native Infantry were mounted at each bungalow visited. The Chiefs visited were the Rajah of Rajpipla, the Nawab of Junagadh, the Thakor Saheb of Gondal, the Rao of Cutch and the Jam Saheb of Nawanagar.

Their Royal Highnesses had a magnificent reception in the course of their progress from the Government House to the new dock. Since their landing at the Apollo Bander last Thursday, the Prince and Princess of Wales have been the central figures in several state drives through all portions of the city, and yet whilst the earliest curiosity has worn off there is not the least diminution in the really extraordinary warmth of the welcome which greets Their Royal Highnesses on all sides, and from none more so than from the native community.

The Royal party proceeded via Queen's Road, Princess Street, which is the broad thoroughfare which was opened by the Prince only last Friday, and Carnao Road into Frere Road. His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, accompanied by Lady Amphill and escorted by a portion of his body-guard, preceded the Royal equipage by ten minutes. The time passed however quickly enough and very soon these crowds which lined the streets had once more the pleasure of demonstrating their loyalty to Their Royal Highnesses. The Royal carriage was escorted by a contingent of His Excellency's body-guard, the members of which presented a most soldierly appearance.

The adjuncts to the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone was the most carefully considered and smartly executed of any of the great State events of the visit. The officials of the Port Trust had very unpromising material to work upon. Mody Bunder, like all that side of the island lying between Frere Road and the harbour, has not the remotest claim to good looks.

Now that it is scarred by deep excavations and littered with unkempt contractors' impedimenta, its ugliness is even more marked than usual. Yet by foresight and pains quite a pleasant scene was evolved from these unpromising materials and the inauguration of the greatest enterprise in the history of Bombay, will rank as one of the most agreeable ceremonies in Their Royal Highnesses' memorable visit. Figure Uran Street, one of the multitude of small roads that run direct from Frere Road to the harbour, widened to the proportions of a broad highway, and terminating in an open plateau. Here a dignified flagstaff with the Prince of Wales's standard in a ball on the head ready to be broken out the moment Their Royal Highnesses should arrive. Beyond a graceful arch of the simplest design and painted white, hung with laurel leaves and crowned with the Prince of Wales's arms in gold. Through the arch a broad stairway covered with vivid scarlet cloth, leading first to a platform with two State chairs and the handsome casket on a stand, then on a lower level to the pillar surmounted by a steering wheel which was to release the rope holding the stone in suspension. Beyond, again, the deep trench over which hung the foundation stone from a stout tripod. On the right and left of this stairway the seats reserved for the principal guests; beyond these two great crescent stands on the lower level an amphitheatre embracing two-thirds of a circle, with seats, tier on tier, on the high ground at the back an enormous stand for the Port Trust employees. These stands are filled with some six thousand spectators clad in the bright costumes always found in the cosmopolitan society of Bombay. Clothe the naked banks with turf, order the whole enclosure with spotless neatness, and you have some idea of the character of the spectacle. You forgot the unlovely surroundings and the barrenness of the neighbourhood in the skill with which the amphitheatre was planned and the animation of the throng it held. The nature of the trench into which the foundation-stone was to be lowered attracted the attention of the curious in the short interval which elapsed between the assembling of the spectators and the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses. By a curious fatality the weather which has been abnormally hot for the season of the year was sulky, sullen clouds obscuring the sun, such as we usually associate with the existence of an atmosphere disturbance in the Bay. Ten minutes before the hour fixed for the ceremony His Excellency the Governor, accompanied by Lady Amphill and escorted by his body-guard, arrived. Then the sound of distant cheering indicated the approach of the Prince and Princess.

As the Royal carriage drew up opposite the archway, the Prince of Wales's own standard was broken out from the flagstaff head by Mr. Southwell Piper, the oldest servant of the Port Trust, who was present when His Majesty the King Emperor laid the foundation-stone of the Prince's dock, just thirty years ago. The smart guard-of-honour of the Bombay Volunteer Rifles under Captain B. H. Hewett presented arms, and the band of the same regiment played the National Anthem. Their Royal Highnesses were received on their alighting by

His Excellency the Governor, who presented the Chairman of the Port Trust, the Hon'ble Mr. W. C. Hughes, C.I.E. The Chairman presented the Trustees in order of seniority. Mr. F. Ritchie, Mr. H. E. E. Procter, the Hon'ble Mr. C. H. Armstrong, Mr. F. W. Bickel, Mr. R. G. Monteath, Mr. Vajbhucandas Atmaram, Mr. Naoji Jehangir Gamadia, Captain G. H. Hewett, R.N., Mr. J. S. Brown, Mr. W. D. Sheppard, and Mr. P. R. Cadell, Mr. P. Glyn Messett, Chief Engineer and Mr. C. A. Stuart, the Agent for the contractors (Messrs. Price Wills and Reeves). Their Royal Highnesses passed through the archway, Mr. Walter Hughes presenting the Princess of Wales with a beautiful bouquet, in a handsome holder. Their Royal Highnesses then descended the steps to the upper platform on the dais, where the Chairman asked for permission to proceed with the ceremony. In according this permission His Royal Highness with thoughtful consideration asked the Chairman and his colleagues to remain covered on account of the sun, an example that was generally followed. The Chairman then stepped forward and read the following address:—

"May it please Your Royal Highness,—We, the Trustees of the Port of Bombay, respectfully desire to tender to Your Royal Highness and to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales our grateful thanks for the honour conferred upon us by your presence here this evening. We recall that it is now thirty years since His Majesty the King-Emperor, then Prince of Wales, laid the foundation-stone of the first wet dock undertaken by the Trustees. At that time the total value of the seaborne trade of Bombay was 45 million pounds sterling, it is now 98 millions. The tonnage of the shipping entering the port was then $1\frac{1}{2}$ million tons, it is now $3\frac{1}{4}$ million tons. Then the Port Trust was in its infancy, it owned only part of the foreshore and possessed a revenue of but £134,000. Now it owns practically the whole harbour frontage, including a large landed estate, and its revenues aggregate £450,000 per annum.

"These figures mark an immense advance, and trade has so grown as to require largely increased accommodation. This gift can be afforded by the great undertaking now to be so auspiciously inaugurated. The new docks are designed for the largest ships so as to provide adequately for future requirements, both naval and commercial, the standards adopted being a length of 100 feet, beam 100 feet and draft 36 feet. They are part of a scheme of general improvements involving a total expenditure of about three millions sterling. We have for some years past carefully husbanded our resources without impairing the reputation of the port as one of the cheapest in the world, and we take a pride in anticipating that we shall be able to carry out this great project without its being necessary to make any increase in the charges on trade. We would now respectfully ask Your Royal Highness to proceed with the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the new wet dock which is to be called the Alexandra Docks to commemorate the name of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen. In doing so we beg Your Royal Highness will be graciously pleased to accept the casket made in the Bombay School of Art containing this address and a copy of the plans as a memento of this auspicious occasion."

The address was enclosed in a casket of a singularly striking and graceful design. In general style the whole work is English, a reminiscence of the latter Jacobite period, the body of the casket having boldly projecting mouldings and concave sides, typical of that style as well as the modelled figures of mermaids, which support its four corners. The upper mouldings are plain, but the lower are enriched with a relief pattern of shells, connected by loops of pearls, beneath which are narrow panels of a bluish-green enamel. The shape of the casket is oblong and the longer concave between the upper and lower mouldings contain four ivory panels, painted by the designer, giving views of Bombay in 1611, 1711, and 1811, respectively, the materials for which have been obtained from old prints and descriptions and for the fourth panel a view of the city as it will appear in 1911, when the two docks are completed. These panels are placed in pairs, two upon each side of the casket, and each pair is separated by a shield.

The address was presented in the form of a small beautifully bound album engraved upon ten sheets of vellum, each of which has been decorated, while a little page contains the arms of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, supported at four corners by the stars of the Order of the Garter, the Thistle, the Star of India, and the Empire. The edges of the binding are protected by hammered silver binders, and the lining is of white kid. The whole work was designed and has been carried out under the supervision of Mr. Cecil Burns, Principal of the School of Art, Bombay, the illustrations being the work of Sister Mary Chionia, of the St. Peter's High School for Girls at Khandala.

The casket stands upon a curved projecting base, at each of the four corners of which is a winged seahorse amidst breaking waves. These form the feet upon which the whole work stands and connect the lower outlines of the base which consist of a series of long curves rising from the corners to the centre of each side, where they are broken by shield-shaped features decorated with sea urchins and a single shell. The casket and base, while serving the practical purpose of a receptacle for the illuminated address, also forms a pedestal for what is the principal feature of the whole design. This consists of a model of a ship of the reign of King Charles II, and the time when Bombay was first acquired by the British Crown from the Portuguese. Although no drawing or model of the actual ship which conveyed Sir Abraham Shipman from England to take over the new possession is known to exist at the present time, yet many pictures and models of other vessels are available, and these were consulted with a view to making the model upon the casket as typical a representative of a vessel of that period both in general outlines and details, as the exigencies and limitations of the material in which it is constructed, namely, silver and enamel, will allow. Silver models of this character were much in vogue during the reigns of the latter Stuarts as table ornaments upon State occasions, and some fine specimens have come down to the present time. The possibility of its subsequent use for a similar purpose in addition to the immediate one it serves influenced the artist in designing, and induced the Trustees to approve of, a casket of this type, when a suitable and appropriate design for marking so memorable an occasion in the history of Bombay was under consideration. No praise is too high for the creative ability and taste of Mr. Cecil Burns, Principal of the School of Art, evidenced in the designing and modelling of this beautiful trophy.

His Royal Highness was now asked to sign the plan, which he did, at the same time being shown the plans of the Prince's Dock which His Majesty the King-Emperor signed thirty years ago. The next step was to release the brake holding the stone, but before doing this Their Royal Highnesses walked to the guard rail at the edge of the trench and asked the Chairman to explain the meaning of everything and the general idea of the works. They then returned to the lower platform. The Prince turned the wheel and the stone slid rapidly to its place. The Chief Engineer reported to His Royal Highness that the stone was duly bedded and the Prince declared it well and truly laid.

After the plan of the new dock had been signed by the Prince of Wales and the foundation-stone had been declared to be duly laid, His Royal Highness made the following reply to the address of the Port Trustees:—

"Gentlemen,—The Princess of Wales and I are much pleased to be present here to lay the foundation-stone of this new dock which I understand is to be one of the largest in the world, and we heartily wish all success to the great enterprise with which we are now associated. It is a further development of the scheme so wisely initiated by Sir Seymour Fitzgerald and Lord Mayo in the constitution of a Port Trust more than 36 years ago. There is to us an additional satisfaction in performing this ceremony when we remember that the King-Emperor, on the occasion of his visit to Bombay in 1875, laid the foundation-stone of your first great dock which has since been known as "Prince's Dock." I congratulate the city of Bombay upon the almost unprecedented increase in her seaborne trade since that time. As a sailor, I am especially interested to hear that this new dock is designed to meet not only the requirements of the mercantile marine but also of the Royal Navy and will be able to accommodate the largest of our modern battleships."

The Royal party now returned to the dais, where the Prince facing the spectators, said:—

"You, Mr. Chairman, and your co-trustees are to be complimented on your far-seeing policy for profiting by past experiences. You have determined that the work which we now inaugurate shall not be calculated for present demands alone but be sufficient to meet all possible needs and development of commerce for many years to come. The fact that the suggestion of the Board of Admiralty to increase the width of the entrance of the new wet and dry docks from 90 to 100 feet was readily complied with is indeed a proof that a spirit of patriotism inspires the administration of the Trust. I am glad to know that your resources are such that there is no anticipation of this enlargement of the port facilities increasing the charges levied upon trade. The Decision that the name of this extension to the Prince's and Victoria Docks shall be the "Alexandra Dock" will, I am sure, be most gratifying to my dear mother. I thank you sincerely for the cordial reception which you have given to the Princess and myself, and for the beautiful and artistic casket containing the address, which we shall greatly value as a specimen of the work of the School of Art of your city."

Mr. Southwell Piper called in stentorian tones for three cheers for Their Royal Highnesses and the response was right willing. The ceremony according to the programme should now have been at an end, but a pleasing addition was made to it. His Royal Highness had closely examined the casket and with evident interest he now asked for Mr. Cecil Burns, who was presented and the Prince of Wales complimented him on his beautiful work. After a brief pause Their Royal Highnesses retraced their steps, the Prince inspected the smart Guard-of-Honour of the Bombay Volunteer Rifles under Captain B. H. Hewett, and drove off, followed by His Excellency the Governor and Lady Amptill. In such wise was the foundation-stone of the Alexandra Dock laid. It was a ceremony characteristic of the Bombay Port Trust, carefully designed, splendidly ordered, faultlessly executed.

The mighty new dock is the crowning achievement of the Trust which has wisely administered the affairs of the port of Bombay for nearly a quarter of a century. Step by step the splendid estate fronting the magnificent harbour has been gradually developed, first by reclaiming the foreshore and constructing tidal wharves; then by the construction of the fine Prince's and Victoria Docks. But the Alexandra Dock has this distinguishing feature—it will raise Bombay from being merely a well equipped, well managed and prosperous port into one whose dock equipment has no superiors in the world. We can confidently anticipate an era of increasing prosperity for the Gateway of India; but the Alexandra Dock will provide for all its wants for at least a generation.

In the tersely-written and elegantly bound souvenir which the Port Trustees presented to their guests yesterday, the Chairman, the Hon'ble Mr. Walter Hughes, outlined the history of the Trust, from the time of its inauguration until the present day. From this it appears that the starting point was the year 1862, when the Elphinstone Land and Press Company, which had already done useful development work, entered into a contract with Government to provide a hundred acres for the terminus of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, receiving in turn the right to reclaim from the sea for its own advantage two hundred and fifty acres fronting the properties it had already acquired. The Company brought its estate into being with rare enterprise. The flood of prosperity which set in owing to the stimulus given to the cotton trade by the American Civil War made money plentiful, and that energetic engineer, Mr. Ormiston, prosecuted the work with extraordinary vigour. But as the Company at first profited by the unparalleled boom induced by the inflated values of cotton—its shares reached a fabulous premium—so it suffered in the terrible slump that followed: the shares fell to a discount of fifty per cent., and Government had to come to its relief with a loan of a hundred thousand pounds.

Doubts now began to be felt of the wisdom of conferring upon a private corporation such an enormous monopoly as the control of the harbour front. These were resolved in 1869 by the decision to buy out the Company and vest its properties in a public trust. The estate passed into the possession of the Government in 1869, the purchase price being approximately two millions sterling, and after being managed by a Department of Government in the interregnum, the property passed to the newly-constituted Port Trust in June 1873. But uneasy were the early days of this body; the revenues were not sufficient to meet the interest on the debt, and the Trust suffered severely from the competition of the private wharfingers who had not been extinguished. To close this unprofitable rivalry Government purchased in 1879, on behalf of the Trust, the private foreshore owners' rights, at a total cost of seventy-five lakhs, and at the same time reconstituted the Trust on the basis which has worked so well till the present day. Since then there has been no real turning back. With the acquisition of a monopoly of the foreshore rights and the opening of the Prince's Dock in 1880, the financial difficulties disappeared. A slight reaction occurred when the opening of the Victoria Dock brought a heavy addition to the interest charges, and in 1896-97 and 1897-98 plague and famine caused heavy deficits. The effect of these calamities was temporary, and the past seven years have provided an unbroken succession of surplus receipts. Out of these profits charges on trade were reduced wherever they pressed, whilst the financial position of the Trust was greatly strengthened by the building up of a large revenue reserve, the institution of sinking funds for the repayment of the whole of the existing debt, and by liberal appropriations to depreciation accounts. The total reductions under these various heads in the twenty-three years since 1882-83 represent a sum exceeding two and a quarter crores, or about one and a half millions sterling.

The wisdom of this policy of cautious finance soon became apparent. The trade of the port rapidly outgrew the wet basin accommodation provided at Victoria and Prince's Docks. The traffic approaches to the wharves were excessively crowded, and it was impossible, without large development, adequately to provide for the growing coal trade, for special branches of commerce centering in the port, and to handle the general trade with the greatest expedition and economy. The Trustees laid their plans to grapple with the situation on bold, statesman-like, liberal plans. They recognised that it was no use attempting to provide for an expanding trade like that of Bombay by looking a few years ahead, and accordingly moulded their designs on a scale sufficient to provide for the requirements of the port for another twenty or thirty years. These schemes may be divided into three heads: the creation of the great new dock at Mody Bay of which Their Royal Highnesses laid the foundation-stone; the building of new railway from Sion, on the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, to the docks, in order to provide for the more expeditious handling of the heavy traffic; and the construction of a complete bulk oil installation at Sewri. The land is now being acquired for the new railway which will so greatly serve the growing interests of the port, and although evidences of progress are much less apparent owing to much of the work being under water, a substantial beginning has been made with the heavy work of the new dock.

A few details as to the dimensions of this dock will be of interest. It will be of the familiar oblong shape, with two bays at the north end. The total area of the wet basin is 49·52 acres; the length of quay, including the harbour walls, nearly three miles. The entrance is through a lock on the south-east, parallel to which runs the new dry dock, a thousand feet long, a hundred feet wide and with a sill thirty-three and a quarter feet below high water ordinary neap tides. Beyond the entrance lock runs the new mole, a continuation of the south-west wall, alongside which the ocean steamers may embark and disembark their passengers direct from the shore, thus dispensing with the tiresome interposition of the tender. The present Ballard Pier runs out to join the new mole, and the space intervening between it and the southern wall of the dock is to be reclaimed by spoil from the excavations made in forming the wet basin. In the immediate vicinity of the landing place a customs house, refreshment, and waiting rooms, post and telegraph offices and every facility the most capacious and pampered traveller can require are to be provided. In all these works the standard laid down is to accommodate ships a thousand feet long, with a hundred feet of beam and a draft of thirty-six feet—that is for the largest vessels likely to be constructed in the next thirty or forty years. The masonry and excavation are to be completed by June of 1911.

The total capital debt of the Trust is now about 612 lakhs, or say four millions sterling. The new dock is estimated to cost 347 lakhs; the Great Indian Peninsular Harbour Branch and its extension, the Port Trust Railway, with the necessary reclamations, more than 64 lakhs; and the bulk oil installation at Sewri, with the deep water pier, twenty-two and a quarter lakhs. One other great project is now under consideration, the reclamation of 583 acres, with a wharf frontage two and a quarter miles in length, at Mazagon and Sewri—an addition of some four and a half per cent. to the area of the city—a project which incidentally lends itself to the long-discussed scheme for connecting Bombay with the island of Trombay and closing the Coorla creek. Tenders are now being invited from contractors experienced in the work of pumping mud by means of suction dredgers, and the realisation of the project depends upon the result of these inquiries, among other conditions.

These works, combined, embody the most ambitious scheme of dock development ever inaugurated in the East. They will be carried out with money raised in the open market, unsupported by any Government guarantee. Yet so firm is the reasoned confidence of the community in the splendid future of the port, so solid the respect for the sagacity of the Trustees that they have been welcomed not only without protest against the heavy capital outlay involved but with an enthusiasm born of a belief in the necessity for the broadest and most liberal views. The port now enjoys, and has for many years, the reputation of being the cheapest and best-managed in India; when the new works are finished it will be the largest, most complete, most scientifically organised in Asia. Nature gave Bombay the natural advantages of an unrivalled geographical situation and a magnificent harbour; its citizens may boldly claim that in this respect they have risen to the height of their opportunities.

One of the entertainments arranged for the Royal season in Bombay was a contest between the 1st Royal Dragoons and the Seaforth Highlanders for the Association Football Championship of India. These teams are respectively holders of the Durand (Simla) and Bombay Rovers' Tournament Cups. The conditions were the best of three games. The first game on Saturday was a well-contested match. The Dragoons scored in the first-half and appeared to be winners, but close on time the Seaforths equalised, the match ending in a draw; one goal each.

To-day the teams again met before an extremely large attendance, both sides fought hard for victory but the defence of each proved too good and the result was a pointless draw.

The third game remains to be played.

Englishman.—We learn that in addition to the items of the programme of the Prince of Wales in Calcutta, which we published the other day, His Royal Highness will present colours to the King's Own Royal Lancaster Regiment on Saturday, 30th December. He will receive a visit from the Maharaja of Sikkim on the morning of the 1st January, and will lunch with the Maharaja of Kuch Behar on 2nd January, and on the 5th will return the visit of the Maharaja of Sikkim.

Indian Daily News.—The last of the important functions of the Royal visit to Bombay, and most important of all in view of the commercial greatness of the city, took place this afternoon, when Their Highnesses laid the foundation-stone of the new dock.

Constituted by an Act passed in Wm., 573, the history of the Port Trust has been the history of enormous development in trade, and has always provided the fullest facilities for trade and shipping and in the thirty years since the present King-Emperor laid the foundation-stone of the Prince's Dock until to-day, when the third great dock is being inaugurated, the policy of the Trust has been one of continuous progress. The Port Trust originated in the apprehension of Government that the interests of trade were seriously endangered by the monopoly of landing and shipping facilities held by private Companies. The operations of the Elphinstone Company formed in 1858 the stimulus to trade caused by the American War, and the great speculative mania in land Company shares, with the subsequent collapse, were factors which induced the Government of Sir Seymour Fitzgerald in 1867 to urge upon the Government of India the desirability of buying out the Elphinstone Company, regaining possession of harbour and foreshore, and placing its administration in the hands of the public trust. The rights of the remaining private wharf owners were purchased by the Government for Trust in 1876-1880.

The Prince's Dock was opened on January 1st, 1880, and the Victoria Dock ten years later. The Merewether Dry Dock was also constructed, and the other works undertaken included miles of wharves, many acres of reclamation of swampy foreshore, acres of warehouse accommodation, many miles of roads, and many other improvements.

The guiding principles of the Trustees were the provision of the fullest facilities for its trade and shipping of the port and the development of the Board's properties to the greatest advantage as a means of increasing their resources, and so reducing the port charges. The operations of the last two years have been mainly preliminary to the commencement of the important scheme for the provision of further dock accommodation; of a new dock in Mody Bay, and to provide for the large traffic there displaced by its construction, two broad jetties are being formed at Mazagon by reclamation, providing storage space of 26 acres and aggregate wharf frontage of 5,800 feet. The Ballard Pier is being extended to a length of 825 feet seaward to form the southern boundary of the area of reclamation for the new docks; a new bulk oil depôt is to be provided by reclamation between Mazagon and Sewri; the new Wet Dock and Dry Dock are to be capable of taking ships of the largest size likely to trade to port within the next thirty or forty years. The Wet Dock is to be 49·52 acres in area; the entrance is to be 100 feet wide, and the sill 35½ feet below the mean high water level; the bottom of the dock is to be completely equipped with hydraulic cranes, railway sidings and sheds, and provision is made for mail steamers before entering the dock to land passengers at the mole on which passenger railway station is to be built with branch railway connecting it with the main lines serving Bombay. The works are estimated to cost nearly 347½ lakhs. The other schemes now in hand by the Trust include the Port Trust Railway, in two sections of a total length of 8·13 miles; a goods depôt at Mazagon, involving the reclamation of a considerable area of foreshore, and the remodelling of the Great Indian Peninsular goods depôt at Wadi Bunder. In connection with the reclamation between Mazagon and Sewri to provide for the new goods depôt, etc., it is proposed to reclaim a total area of 583 acres, with wharf frontage of a little over 2½ miles long. This is a very large scheme and contemplates the addition of about 4½ per cent. to the area of the city. This project lends itself excellently to the long-discussed scheme of connecting Bombay with the Island of Trombay and closing the Coorla Creek, but the Port Trustees are not directly concerned in this until it becomes necessary to reclaim further and extend wharves for trade purposes. Finally, the site for the bulk oil installation at the extreme north end of the Trustees' properties measures 61 acres, and it is necessary to connect it with a deep water berth for large oil steamers. For this purpose an extensive low pier is required, and this project is estimated to cost nearly 22½ lakhs.

The ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the dock was exceedingly picturesque. The stand erected on the site of the ceremonial was topped by a Grecian portico, festooned with foliage. The portico was reached by a wide staircase covered with crimson cloth, and after passing through this, the Royal party descended a similar staircase to the dais in front of the deep excavation, over which hung the stone to be placed in position. Around the dais a great and brilliant assembly was gathered in a specially constructed amphitheatre.

On the table in front of the dais reposed the massive silver casket to contain the illuminated address. The casket was designed and modelled by Mr. Cecil Burns, and was carried out in the Bombay School of Art; it also served the purpose of a pedestal for the model of a ship of the reign of Charles II, the period when Bombay was first acquired by the British Crown from Portugal. The casket itself is oblong in shape, with four panels, giving views of Bombay in 1611, 1711, 1811, and as it will appear in 1911, when the new docks are completed. Each pair of panels is separated by a shield with an inscription and the arms of the Prince of Wales and the Bombay Port Trust hammered in high relief to decorate each of the shorter ends of the casket. The arrival of the Prince and Princess was preceded by that of Lord Lamington and Lady Ampthill. Their Royal Highnesses were received by Mr. W. C. Hughes, the Chairman, and the members of the Port Trust, the Chairman being presented by the Governor, and the Trustees and the Chief Engineer being presented by Mr. Hughes.

Mrs. Hughes, the wife of the Chairman, presented a bouquet to the Princess. The holder for the bouquet was of gold filigree work, jewelled in rubies and sapphires.

The Chairman next read the following address:—

May it please Your Royal Highness,—We, the Trustees of the Port of Bombay, respectfully desire to tender to Your Royal Highness and to Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales our grateful thanks for the honour conferred upon us by your presence here this evening. We recall that it is now thirty years since His Majesty the King-Emperor, then Prince of Wales, laid the foundation-stone of the first wet dock undertaken by the Trustees. At that time the total value of the seaborne trade of Bombay was £4,500,000, it is now £98,000,000. The tonnage of the shipping entering the port was then 1½ millions; it is now 3½ million tons. Then, the Port Trust was in its infancy, it owned only part of the foreshore and possessed a revenue of but £134,000; now it owns practically the whole harbour frontage, including a large landed estate, and its revenues aggregate £450,000 per annum. These figures mark an immense advance, and trade has so grown as to require largely increased accommodation. This will be afforded by the great undertaking now to be so auspiciously inaugurated. The new docks are designed for the largest ships, so as to provide adequately for future requirements, both naval and commercial, the standards adopted being—length 1,000 feet, beam 100 feet, and draft 36 feet. They are part of a scheme of general improvements involving a total expenditure of about £3,000,000. We have for some years past carefully husbanded our resources without impairing the reputation of the port as one of the cheapest in the world, and we take a pride in anticipating that we shall be able to carry out this great project without its being necessary to make any increase in the charges on trade. We would now respectfully ask Your Royal Highnesses to proceed with the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the new Wet Dock, which is to be called the Alexandra Dock, to commemorate the name of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen. In doing so we beg Your Royal Highnesses will be graciously pleased to accept the casket made in the Bombay School of Arts, containing this address and a copy of the plans as a memento of this auspicious occasion.

The address presented to His Royal Highness was engrossed upon sheets of vellum and illuminated after the style of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. The sheets were bound in covers of ruby cloth edges, being protected by hammered silver borders. It was designed by Mr. Burns, the Principal of the School of Art, and the illumination was the work of Sister March Chevnia, of St. Peter's Girls' High School, Khandalla.

The address having been read, the Prince signed the plans of the dock, and then advanced to the silver tiller, which he touched, setting in motion the hydraulic machinery which lowered the stone into the excavation. Having been placed, the Prince declared it well and truly laid, and returning to the centre of the dais, His Royal Highness replied to the address as follows:—

Gentlemen,—The Princess of Wales and I are much pleased to be present here to lay the foundation-stone of this new dock which I understand is to be one of the largest in the world, and we heartily wish all success to the great enterprise with which we are now associated. It is a further development of the scheme so wisely initiated by Sir Seymour Fitzgerald and Lord Mayo in the constitution of a Port Trust more than 36 years ago. There is to us an additional satisfaction in performing this ceremony when we remember that the King-Emperor, on the occasion of his visit to Bombay in 1875, laid the foundation-stone of your first great dock which has since been known as "Prince's Dock." I congratulate the city of Bombay upon the almost unprecedented increase in her seaborne trade since that time. As a sailor I am especially interested to hear that this new dock is designed to meet not only the requirements of the mercantile marine, but also of the Royal Navy, and will be able to accommodate the largest of our modern battleships. You, Mr. Chairman, and your co-trustees are to be complimented on your far-seeing policy, for profiting by past experiences you have determined that the work which we now inaugurate shall not be calculated for present demands alone, but be sufficient to meet all possible needs and the development of commerce for many years to come. The fact that the suggestion of the Board of Admiralty to increase the width of the entrance of the new Wet and Dry docks from 90 to 100 feet was readily complied with, is indeed a proof that a spirit of patriotism inspires the administration of the Trust. I am glad to know that your resources are such that there is no anticipation of this enlargement of the port facilities increasing the charges levied upon trade. The decision that the name of this extension to the Prince's and Victoria docks shall be the "Alexandra Dock," will, I am sure, be most gratifying to my dear mother. I thank you sincerely for the cordial reception which you have given to the Princess and myself, and for the beautiful and artistic casket containing the address which we shall greatly value as a specimen of the work of the School of Art of your city.

Mr. Burns, of the School of Art, was next presented, and after other presentations, Mr. Southwell Piper, Dock-master, in stentorian tones called through a megaphone for cheers for His Royal Highness, which were enthusiastically given, the band playing at the conclusion.

Before leaving the scene the Prince and Princess cordially shook hands with many whom they recognised as they proceeded to their carriage.

After the ceremony Their Royal Highnesses drove to the Yacht Club, and later in the evening attended the Byculla Club Ball.

This evening the second game between the Royal Dragons and the Seaforth Highlanders for the Football Championship of India ended in a pointless draw.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—The following message of welcome was sent by Raja Tassadduq Rasul Khan, C.S.I., of Jahangirabad, on behalf of the Talukdars of Oudh, to Sir Walter Lawrence, Chief of Staff with Their Royal Highnesses:—"The Talukdars of Oudh beg to offer most cordially their loyal and enthusiastic welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales on their arrival in India." Sir Walter Lawrence sent the following reply:—"I am desired to express the thanks of the Prince and Princess of Wales for the kind message of welcome received through you from the Talukdars of Oudh."

14TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Irish Times.—It was a wise decision upon the part of King Edward that the Prince and Princess of Wales should follow up their Colonial tour by a visit to India. Royalty, in these days of rapid locomotion, is given to travel, but the Heir-Apparent and his Consort can claim that in this respect they have beaten all records. Their progress through our Colonial possessions was a pronounced success and already indications abound that their tour through India will prove a veritable triumph. The distinguished visitors have created a most excellent impression in native circles in Bombay, where the frank and manly utterances of the one and the unaffected simplicity of demeanour of the other have occasioned the greatest delight. We do not think that any Royal house could furnish members better fitted than the Prince and Princess of Wales for the duties which will fall to their lot during their sojourn in the East. His Royal Highness has shown that he knows how to master any subject with which he may be called upon to deal, while the interest which Her Royal Highness exhibits in all those details dear to the heart of her sex of necessity must establish a bond of sympathy between herself and those with whom she is brought into contact. The Oriental is trained to hold Royalty in superstitious reverence, and assuredly the Prince and Princess of Wales will do nothing to destroy this traditional regard. There are some who believe, or who affect to believe, that Kings and Princes lead idle lives. To such we would commend the functions in which the Prince and Princess of Wales have taken part since they landed at Bombay on Thursday. It would only be natural if, in his public utterances, His Royal Highness here and there betrayed some ignorance of the conditions under which the natives of India live, and of the aspirations by which they are governed. But in his very first speech the Prince of Wales gave evidence that he had studied the social conditions of the East, and he showed that though this was his first visit to India that country had occupied his thoughts for some time and to some purpose. East or West the conditions of life for the humbler class of the community of a city bear a striking resemblance. Bombay, like any one of our own great seaports, depends for her existence upon her commerce, and when industrial or commercial depression reigns her citizens feel the pinch. But adversity has proved powerless to check the growth of Bombay or her progress, and she stands to-day a witness to the wisdom and the beneficence of our rule. Whilst he is in India the Prince of Wales will be afforded several opportunities of seeing what great things have been achieved with limited resources, and he will be struck with the extraordinary spectacle, speaking in a relative sense, of a handful of His Majesty's subjects controlling the destinies of nearly three hundred millions of natives. The British domination of India reads like a fairy tale. From the smallest of beginnings and through every species of adversity we have progressed until to-day the world is constrained to admit that of itself British rule in India entitles us to the respect and to the gratitude of humanity. Within recent years the lot of the native women has been improved greatly, but it still is capable of further improvement. This is a feature which will enlist the sympathy of the Princess of Wales, who, following the excellent example of the ladies of our Royal house, may be trusted to bring her influence to bear upon all possible occasions. In every way the Royal visit to India marks an important development in the relations of Great Britain with her Eastern dependency, and it is just possible that it may lead us at home to take a more intelligent interest than we have been in the habit of doing in all that concerns the welfare of our native fellow-subjects. His Majesty, by consenting to the prolonged absence from home of his only son, has given proof of his sympathy with India, and His Royal Highness when he returns, doubtless, will be in a position to tell us that his sojourn in the East has quickened the ties which bind India's teeming millions to the Throne.

Madras Mail.—It is a matter for regret that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales should arrive in Bombay during the Ramzan, so that His Highness the Nizam has been forced to abandon the idea of going to meet him. When King Edward visited India in 1875 the Nizam was only ten years of age, and accordingly his Regent, Sir Salar Jung, went to Bombay. The Royal arrival on that occasion was just after the Ramzan was over.

Madras Mail.—Judging from the accounts of our Special Correspondent with Their Royal Highnesses, the Prince and Princess of Wales have begun to win the hearts of the people of India already. Nothing could well exceed the graciousness and insight exhibited in the Prince of Wales's speeches; while the first speech of the Princess of Wales, at that most picturesque and significant gathering of Indian ladies on Saturday, will move the hearts of Indian womanhood throughout the country. It was evidently no mere complimentary feeling that prompted Lord Lamington to say after the Prince of Wales's Museum ceremony on Saturday:—“The anticipation of their visit had already stirred our feelings of loyalty to the British Crown; but since their advent, the kindly demeanour and ready goodwill of Their Royal Highnesses have created the strongest sentiment of enthusiasm and personal esteem.” That both Their Royal Highnesses are imbued with the most earnest desire of becoming acquainted with and learning all that they can of the people of India was asseverated by His Royal Highness in his reply to the Bombay Corporation and it is evident that Their Royal Highnesses are construing their desire into action in every possible way. As regards Her Royal Highness particularly, the Purdah party and the more public Indian Ladies' gathering on Saturday were unique functions in their way, and we trust that they will be repeated in all the big cities of India including Madras. We can quote no more powerful plea for this than the sentiment so eloquently expressed by Her Royal Highness herself:—“One of my chief objects in this tour is to see as much as possible of my Indian sisters, for I believe that the more I see of the reality of your lives, the more I shall admire and esteem the high qualities for which the Indian woman is renowned.” Let Indian women endeavour everywhere to add to those “agreeable memories” which in the Princess's own words, “will bring us into a closer bond of mutual esteem, regard and good-will.”

Madras Mail.—Although the erection of a Central Museum for Bombay has been discussed on several occasions, the entire credit for the practical form it has now taken is due to His Excellency the Governor. Soon after his arrival in this Presidency Lord Lamington commented upon the strange lack in this city of a Central Museum and Library, which should be thoroughly representative of the arts and crafts of the Presidency, and which should give direction and stimulus to the scientific and quasi-scientific Societies that are at work in our midst. Indeed it was a strange lacuna. Calcutta, Madras, and Colombo, to take only three Eastern cities, have long been well provided in this respect, whilst on the Continent, and especially in Germany, there is no town, however small, without its local Museum. But whilst other Governors have noticed this deficiency, none has followed it up by any practical measures. Not so Lord Lamington. The lucky circumstances that Government held at their disposal the sum of Rs. 2½ lakhs served to provide at any rate the nucleus towards a fund for the heavy first cost. This advantage was followed by the formation of a strong Committee to consider the whole subject, the main recommendations of which were cordially accepted in all parts of the Presidency. Then at the enthusiastic Town's Meeting it was unanimously decided that the Museum should be Bombay's permanent memorial of the Royal Visit. Generous donations were at once forthcoming, the Bombay Corporation coming forward with the greatest public spirit and giving a handsome sum. A tentative arrangement as to the cost of maintenance of the staff and buildings has already been made. In short, the path leading to the realisation of the project has been paved with amazing rapidity. In this way the suggestion made by His Excellency the Governor not many months ago is bearing fruit with an expedition all too rare in our public movements.

The foundation-stone which His Royal Highness laid is therefore the first of three imposing buildings which will be the Museum of Art and Archaeology in the centre, flanked by the Public Library and the Science Museum. Although no plans are prepared, it is intended that these buildings shall be handsomely designed and worthy additions to the architectural adornments of the City. They will be erected on the chord of the arc formed by the Crescent site, the unoccupied space being laid out as a pleasant garden, with a statue of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales in a prominent position. The initial cost of the building, fittings and furniture is estimated at Rs. 10 lakhs and the recurring charges at Rs. 30,000 a year, irrespective of the salaries of the gazetted staff. The difficulties of finance were overcome with unexpected facility. Resuming the land from the Improvement Trust, Government gave the whole site free of charge, at the same time increasing their monetary grant of Rs. 2½ to Rs. 3 lakhs. Then that public-spirited Mahomedan gentleman, Mr. Currimbhoy Ebrahim, came forward with a munificent donation of Rs. 3 lakhs. The Corporation made a generous contribution of Rs. 2½ lakhs; so that there are actually in hand no less than eight and a half lakhs. Moreover, the contributions to the general fund have been on such a generous scale that there will not be the slightest difficulty in realising the whole capital sum required. As for the recurring charges, Government guarantee Rs. 30,000 a year, suggesting that all costs over that sum should be shared between them and the Corporation, and when the question finally comes up for decision, which will not be for some years yet, no difficulty is likely to occur in arriving at an equitable adjustment.

Yorkshire Herald.—If we may accept as true the homely saying that “well begun is half done,” then we may predict that the visit to India of the Prince and Princess of Wales will be a magnificent success. The proceedings at Bombay have been not only strikingly picturesque but genuinely enthusiastic, and the Royal visitors have each struck a personal and sympathetic note which will unquestionably pervade their whole progress through the dependency and be cherished as a bright memory when they have returned to their home. This peculiarly happy note was most marked in the Prince's initial speech, delivered to the brilliant company of officials and notables which assembled to greet Their Royal Highnesses on their arrival at the great western part of India. Thirty years before, all but a day, the present King-Emperor had not far from the same spot realised his dream of visiting our wonderful Eastern empire, and thus began an acquaintance at first hand which ripened rapidly and surely into loving interest. That affection, said the Prince, had descended to himself. For him the name of India had ever been associated with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy and bravery, and he looked for these early ideas to be strengthened by the experience upon which he was now entering. If, as they travelled through the various countries which made up the great Indian empire, the Princess and he could win the sympathy and goodwill of the various peoples, they would secure a precious result from their voyage, and they trusted that the tradition established by the present King-Emperor and followed by them would be repeated from generation to generation.

We doubt whether the Prince of Wales ever exercised to greater advantage than this his gift of felicitous speech. Nothing could be more charming than the expression of his inherited love for India and the Indians, his ardent pleasure at visiting scenes already dear to him in anticipation, and his and the Princess's earnest desire to learn more fully of the people over whom they will in all probability be called upon to reign, and to win the regard of those people. And this most auspicious beginning has suffered nothing of loss or of depreciation since. In opening a splendid new street and laying the foundation-stone of a museum the Prince has associated himself with projects connected with the industrial, the municipal and the intellectual life of the town, while to native chiefs he has accorded the privilege and honour of a private reception, marked by the stateliness and dignity properly inseparable from such functions. The Princess has been similarly happy in the reception of native ladies, where the picturesque and the gorgeous found the alliance dear to the Indian mind. But beyond all such attributes of a ceremonial of surpassing beauty must stand the gracious and graceful sentences in which the Princess replying to an address of welcome, expressed her great interest in her Indian sisters. Her first impressions of them had been bright, happy, and hopeful, and as the result of her tour, one of the chief objects of which was to see as much as possible of them, she expected to carry home a sympathy which would bring them into a closer bond of mutual esteem, regard, and good-will. The Royal progress has indeed begun with the happiest auguries for that complete success which is the desire of all concerned.

Daily Telegraph.—Bombay, Tuesday, November 14 (6-40 P.M.).

The first stage of the Prince and Princess of Wales' tour is over, and from first to last it has been marked by continuous success. To-night the Prince and Princess, after dining on board the Renown, and watching the illuminations, both on sea and land, drove off through the crowded and flaring streets to the station. It is difficult to say which scheme of decoration was the more effective in this attempt to give a really brilliant and universal send-off to the Royal travellers. Viewed from the beach, the long, dark expanse of the harbour and roadstead of Bombay was transformed at a signal into a nest of fire, which outlined the shipping, every warship within sight riding to her anchor being ablaze with the steady pinhole illumination of electricity. Nearer in, the smaller craft were ridged with Chinese lanterns or rainbow sequences of coloured fairy lamps, spattering the lightly-moving surface of the sea with pools and zigzags of rich colour. Overhead, the moon, almost perfectly full-half, added to or half detracted from the brilliancy of the night, and allowed the vague outline of Elephantia to be seen halfway across to misty headlands of the mainland of India.

On shore the blaze of light was a thousand-fold greater, and the use of wicks floating in oil-filled vessels added just that fluctuating and uncertain charm to the scheme of illumination which is sorely lacking in electricity. Upon all the structural lines of Bombay buildings millions of such lamps were used, with splendid effect. The main streets were lit up as by day, as house after house completed its lighting scheme and stood out against the evening sky, corniced and windowed with innumerable beads of fire. No small part of the magnificent effect produced was due to this universal use of single lamps rather than coloured transparencies and devices. In itself this treatment of the decorations of the street bestowed upon them an apparent unity which is quite absent in the daytime, and the practical unanimity of householders in this respect was carried through the interminable profile of the streets in lines of fire, from Colaba to Malabar. Never before, perhaps, has Bombay even attempted to adorn herself like this; certainly it is the only city of India which has so splendid a framework on which to hang her glittering farewell. All the 800,000 of her population seem to be out to-night, and the rising dust from under their continuous tramping adds a charm like fiery smoke to the whole scene. Overhead the course of the main streets can be seen from afar by this rising aureole of illuminated dust, and through the curtain of reflected fire even the vastest buildings of Bombay throw but a dulled challenge until one comes closer.

Through this scene of half riotous loyalty the Prince drove to-night among the continuous and raucous welcome of an Indian crowd. Cheers are but rarely heard, the natives' true applause being rather a sustained and high note, which increases in volume as the climax is reached, and dies down again as the Prince drives on, only to be caught up as fully by the next furlong of restless pavement.

All was too soon over. There was no delay at the station. A few minutes after the splendid cortege had arrived the last word of farewell was said to Lord Lamington, whose brilliant reception of the Prince at the gate of India has made it difficult for others to emulate him; and the train moved away out of the station upon the long and many-featured tour which awaits Their Royal Highnesses. The next stage of the journey will be Indore.

Englishman.—This morning His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, at a private audience, invested Mr. Currimbhoy Ebrahim, Mr. Sassoon J. David and Mr. S. W. Edgerley with the honour of Knighthood. Mr. H. G. Gell, Commissioner of Police, was at the same time decorated with the M. V. O. of the fifth class.

Mr. Currimbhoy Ebrahim is the most prominent member of the Khoja community in Bombay. He is one of the largest and most enterprising millowners in the city, and at the same time carries on large commercial transactions with the Far East. He has for many years been prominent by reason of his large charity among his own community, and he crowned his munificence by a donation of three lakhs of rupees towards funds of the Prince of Wales' museum of which His Royal Highness laid the foundation stone on Saturday.

Mr. Sassoon J. David, present Sheriff of Bombay, is at once the most active and the most prominent member of the Jewish community, which has been so conspicuously identified with the commercial element, and for some time has taken an active part in the affairs of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, and of the Bombay Improvement Trust.

Mr. S. W. Edgerley, who receives the K. C. V. O., is Secretary to the Bombay Government in the Political Department. On him has fallen the enormous burden of carrying out the complicated arrangements in connection with His Royal Highness's visit and on all hands it is admitted that he has performed this delicate duty with conspicuous ability.

Mr. H. G. Gell, the present Commissioner of Police, is an able and zealous officer and during his tenure of the office he has enormously increased the status and efficiency of the policing of the city. By common consent the arrangements in connection with the Prince of Wales' arrival, which brought into Bombay an enormous influx of people from the surrounding districts, were perfect.

His Royal Highness also received in private audience five conspicuous citizens:—Sir Jamsetjee Jijibhoy, Mr. Justice Budroodin Tyebjee, Dr. Bhandarkar, Mr. B. M. Malabari, and Sir P. M. Mehta.

Of Sir Jamsetjee Jijibhoy there is no occasion to speak. He worthily upholds the dignity of a historic family and he discharges the great responsibilities attaching to the leadership of the enterprising Parsi community with conspicuous tact, discretion and ability.

Mr. Justice Budroodin Tyebjee is the most enlightened and progressive member of the Mohamedan community. He has long sat on the bench of the High Court, and after Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins is the ablest Judge on the Bench. In educational and social matters he takes a very progressive line, and is very highly respected by his community.

Dr. Bhandarkar, the venerable scholar, is the greatest authority in Sanskrit in Western India. For many years he has been the foremost figure in the modern school of Hindu thought and his services to scholarship were recently recognised by the honorary degree of LL.D. in the Bombay University.

Mr. B. M. Malabari is the veteran publicist of the Bombay Presidency. His services in the case of social reform 20 years ago, are now to a certain extent forgotten, because the battle he fought so well and so ably has now been won. He continues, however, to take an active interest in affairs and his two leading publications, the Spectator and East and West, are the most literary and broad-minded native publications in India.

Of Sir P. M. Mehta it is quite unnecessary to speak, except to add that in the celebrations he, as member of the Corporation, has been a most active and most dignified figure.

Afterwards His Royal Highness received 22 Kumars of the Rajkumar College, Rajkote, and with them K. S. Ranjitsinghji who was present by special request.

Englishman.—The Calcutta authorities have taken time by the forelock, by ordering a large quantity of watering carts from Messrs. Burn & Co., to be used in keeping down the dust during the festivities occasioned by the approaching visit of the Royal party. It would be an excellent thing if other Municipalities throughout the country followed the good example set by Calcutta.

The Royal Arrangements Committee announce that Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and the Princess of Wales will land at Prinsep's Ghat at 4 p.m. (local time) on Friday, the 29th December, and will drive thence in procession to Government House, via the Ellenborough Course, south of Havildar's tank, the Red Road and Old Court House Street, entering Government House by the north-east gateway. In order to enable as many of the general public as possible to obtain a good view of the State procession, the Government is prepared to allow firms of recognized position to build a certain number of stands along the route, and to charge for admission to the same. The design for such stands would have to be approved, and the building certified safe, by the Executive Engineer, 1st Calcutta Division.

Indian Daily News.—To-night Their Royal Highnesses dine quietly on the Renown and afterwards proceed to the railway station, driving through the city to witness the illuminations. Yesterday during the Prince's exchange of visits with the Chiefs, a deputation from each waited upon His Royal Highness and conducted him to the place of residence of each, where the ceremonies included the presentation of nuzzars, which the Prince touched and remitted. On Sunday evening, during the visit of the Prince to the Cama and Albless Hospital, Her Royal Highness saw two or three babies at the latter institution carried by the nurses. Inquiring as to the age of one, she was told it was a Japanese, and five days' old—surely very young to have had the honour of being presented to Royalty!

Bombay eclipsed itself in the illuminations to-night. They were on a most lavish and brilliant scale, and the special features were very beautiful; the whole of the fine public buildings were lined with thousands of coloured lights, the Secretariat, the University, the Rajibhai Tower, the High Court, the Municipal buildings, the Victoria terminus, and the Bombay-Baroda Railway offices being most effectively illuminated. The walls of the Government Dockyard had the Star of India in colours as the central design. The King's statue was also outlined in coloured lights; the banks and business premises were prettily illuminated, and a most enchanting effect was produced in the University Gardens and along Malabar Hill by thousands of coloured lamps outlining the trunks and branches of trees. The usual illumination of Back Bay has been long described as the diamond necklace of Bombay, and the special efforts made for the Royal visit introduced a lovely pendant of rubies and sapphires. The scene in and around the harbour was of the most beautiful kind. The Yacht Club and other buildings and the great pavilion on Apollo Bunder were a mass of brilliant colour, and the warships and other shipping were outlined in white light, the Hyacinth being distinguished by the Admiral's flag in white and red. The illumination of the fleet was also effective.

At a quarter to nine a most gorgeous display of fire-works by the fleet began. There were eight displays, the first consisting of coloured rockets, three flights each from the forecable of each ship, followed by flights from each quarter deck. A display of Roman candles followed. A combined display of bouquets, the Prince of Wales' plumes and wheatsheaves came next, and the display concluded with set pieces of portraits of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the Star of India on the Hyacinth with a great and beautiful display of rockets from the flagship. The whole display was one of wondrous beauty, and immense crowds who watched it were hugely delighted. During the drive of Their Royal Highnesses from the Bunder to Grant Road Station, the streets were thronged, and the Prince and Princess received a great ovation.

The Royal train has two new engines specially built by Messrs. Beyer, Peacock & Co., Manchester. The second or train engine is under the charge of Mr. W. P. Johnson, Chief Locomotive Carriage and Wagon Superintendent, B. B. and C. I. Railway, and the fine engine is in charge of G. C. Cotesworth, who will be relieved at Broach by Mr. C. G. Housin. The decorations of the engines are in keeping with the sumptuous Royal train. The front of the smokebox is decorated with the Royal Arms in solid brass and white metal surmounted by the Prince of Wales' feathers in white metal, and flanked by draped white ensigns. On each side of the cab are the Royal Arms, while on either side of the tender the Prince of Wales' plumes are displayed. Between Bombay and Baroda the Royal train travels at a maximum speed of 45 miles an hour.

As when the King travels, extensive arrangements have been made for the watching and the locking of all points over which the train will pass for some time before it is due; the line has also been thoroughly inspected throughout its length.

Indian Daily News.—The Bangalee writes:—The cry is still they come—the stories of undue pressure which is being put upon the heads of the highest Hindu families in the Province to make them agree to send their ladies to the purdah party at Belvedere. There has been shedding of bitter tears at least in one case, and we know the extraordinary behest of the Lord of Belvedere has fallen like a veritable bombshell in the most loyal camps. But out of evil cometh good. It is to be hoped that our leading men will henceforth give a wide berth to official magnates, seeing that intercourse with high officials entails an obligation which extends even to the interior of the Zenana. It seems that some of our over-zealous officials and self-appointed busy-bodies are leaving no stones unturned to bring about a fiasco in connection with the Royal visit. But even they dare not ask the Muhammadan leaders to send their ladies to Belvedere. They know that no Muhammadan would be forgiven by his co-religionists, who could consent to such a proposal. But as for the Hindus—why they would submit to anything. If such an impression should prevail in official quarters the conduct of some of our self-seeking 'public men' has no doubt helped much in the propagation of this most mischievous impression.

Indian Daily News.—Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales will land at Prinsep's Ghat at 4 p.m. (local time) on Friday, the 29th December, and will drive thence in procession to Government House, via the Ellenborough Course south of Havildar's Tank, the Red Road, and Old Court House Street, entering Government House by the North-East Gateway. In order to enable as many of the general public as possible to obtain a good view of the State procession, the Government, we understand, is prepared to allow firms of recognised position to build a certain number of stands along the route, and to charge for admission to the same. The design for such stands would have to be approved, and the building certified safe, by the Executive Engineer, 1st Calcutta Division. Any firm desirous of erecting such a stand is requested to communicate with Mr. C. B. Bayley, Secretary, Royal Arrangements Committee, at an early date.

Madras Mail.—This afternoon an excursion had been arranged for Their Royal Highnesses to the famous cave temples on the Island of Elephanta across the Bombay harbour. It would have been necessary, however, to have set out during the heat of early afternoon and Their Royal Highnesses decided not to make the trip. Instead, Their Royal Highnesses made a brief cruise around the harbour in a steam launch from the Renown. Before embarking from the cruise Mr. F. Southwell-Piper, Senior Dockmaster of Bombay, was presented to Their Royal Highnesses by their express desire as they wished to compliment him upon his gallant conduct in dealing with the recent fire on the petrol barge among the harbour shipping.

Their Royal Highnesses afterwards dined on the battleship and after dinner landed at Apollo Bunder and drove through the native town to Grant Road Station on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway where they took train from the first stage of their tour inland. Enormous crowds gave them an enthusiastic send-off.

Bombay last night was grandly illuminated in honour of the occasion. The native town, no less than the principal parts of the city illuminated the houses and buildings so that Bombay for once celebrated a festival of light. Immense time and trouble had been taken over both decorations and illuminations and the result was a brilliant sight reflecting great honour on Bombay. Never before has such gorgeous fairy-like spectacle been seen in Bombay which eclipsed all previous records in this direction. The centre of the city was one blaze of light, the Secretariat and public buildings presented a handsome appearance while the Government House shone with thousands of many coloured buttees. The hanging gardens were charming with foliage and lights of different tints all interwoven with great effect. The native town was a sight never to be forgotten. Quaint and picturesque as it is in ordinary garb, now it was weird and fanciful in the extreme. Just like a glimpse of fairyland of a delightful scene out of Arabian nights, lanterns, buttees, coloured fires, primitive decorations and illuminations combined to make such a sight as the native town never saw before, not even excepting its own festivals. The narrower streets had festoons of lanterns suspended from window to window so that crowds walked under a veritable roof of light. All the warships in the harbour as well as other shipping were outlined with electric globes while on the Renown was a fire-work display. The spectacle from the shore was very fine. The whole city was in holiday mood and thousands from the neighbouring country came to swell the crowd so that from an early hour the streets were thronged with masses of struggling humanity. Admirable police arrangements were made, the people were kept moving on proper sides so that illuminations could be viewed by all in comparative comfort. Many people chartered conveyances and of these there seemed to be an endless number. The procession started moving about six o'clock and at midnight the carriages, filled with eager and interested occupants, were still slowly winding their way to new sights in different parts of the city. Where the crowds of people and carriages came from it is difficult to conjecture, but evidently nobody was indoors. Bombay presented an animated and unique appearance such as the oldest residents cannot remember. The crowd was thoroughly good humoured.

Standard.—The last day of the Prince and Princess in Bombay was comparatively quiet, and the doings of the Royal visitors were confined to brief interviews in the morning with a number of minor chiefs, and the reception of the cadets from the Rajkumar College at Rajkot. The latter was a pretty ceremony. The young nobles looked very gallant in handsome uniforms and sky-blue turbans.

The visit to the Elephanta Caves was abandoned, but the Prince honoured the officers of the Renown with his company. On the way back from the ship in the steam launch His Royal Highness had a fine view of the illuminations, which constituted a magnificent spectacle. The huge pile of buildings with which modern Bombay abounds were outlined with white and coloured lanterns, and looked like veritable castles, palaces, and cathedrals in the variegated light. The tall Gothic Clock Tower was entwined with rows of spirals of sparkling lustres to the topmost pinnacle, and was a wonderful sight from the harbour, which itself was glowing with the reflection of the illuminated ships. Nothing more effective or on a more grandiose scale could be conceived than this great city, burning as it were in a sea of radiance. Enormous crowds, made up of the entire population of Bombay and dwellers in the surrounding country, thronged the streets. The native quarter, too, blazed with light, a lamp being shown in nearly every window.

Late to-night the Prince and Princess left privately for Indore. I am able to state that Their Royal Highnesses are much gratified with the perfect success of the Bombay festivities, especially the spontaneity of the reception from Anglo-Indians and natives alike. The Princess was much struck with the number of native women and children who flocked into the streets to view the processions. This is a novel feature of Indian celebrations. Old residents here never remember a similar association of the feminine element with public rejoicings. This feature is undoubtedly due to the presence of the Princess, which excites the liveliest interest among all sections of Indian women.

Times of India.—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales received, in Government House yesterday morning, a number of Native Chiefs who were not entitled to return visits.

First His Highness the Nawab of Janjira, accompanied by his Political Officers and three of his principal Sardars, and escorted by a party of Native cavalry, arrived in Government House Grounds and was met, at a distance of 500 yards from Government House, by two Aides-de-Camp. On alighting from the carriage at Government House His Highness was met by another Aide-de-Camp, and at the head of the stairs was met by Captain N. S. Coghlin, Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department, who conducted His Highness to his seat. A salute of eleven guns was fired and a guard of 50 Native Infantry was drawn up in honour of His Highness.

The Sar Desai of Sawantwadi, accompanied by Colonel G. Hyde Cates, Political Officer; the Raja Sahab of Dharampore, accompanied by Mr. A. Westropp, Political Officer; the Raja of Bansa, with his Political Officer, Mr. Westropp; the Raja of Baria and his Political Officer, Mr. Meade; the Raja of Sunth, with his Political Officer, also Mr. Meade; the Thakor Sahab of Wankaner, with his Political Officer, Captain Beale, and the Thakor Sahab of Wadhwan, with his Political Officer, also Captain Beale arrived, in order as mentioned at five minutes intervals and were met by an Aide-de-Camp as they alighted from their carriages, and met at the entrance to the reception room by Lieutenant R. C. Burke, Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department, who brought them to their seats. A salute of nine guns was fired in honour of each of these Chiefs, each of whom was attended by two Sardars and an escort of Native cavalry.

The following lesser Chiefs, viz., the Pant Sachiv of Bhor, the Naik Nimbalker of Phaltan, the Chief of Mudhol, the Chief of Miraj (Senior), the Chief of Jamkhandi, the Chief of Kurundwad (Senior), the Chief of Ramdurg, the two Chiefs of Kurundwad (Junior), the Raja of Jawhar and the Rawalji of Mansa. These were accompanied by their Political Officers, Colonel Hyde Cates, Captain Pottinger and Mr. Fitzgerald and one Sardar. They were met by an Aide-de-Camp who showed them to their places. A salute of nine guns was fired on the arrival of the Pant Sachiv of Bhor.

After all these Chiefs were assembled His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales entered the room, a procession being formed in the following order:—Chobdars; Captain Coghill, Under-Secretary to Government, Political Department; the Hon'ble Mr. S. W. Edgerley, Chief Secretary to Government, Political Department; His Royal Highness's suite; His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales; Chobdars.

As His Royal Highness entered the room, the Guard-of-Honour drawn up at the entrance saluted and the band played the National Anthem. A salute of 31 guns was also fired. All the Chiefs rose in their places and remained standing until His Royal Highness had taken his seat. The Chiefs were then seated in order of agencies on the right side of the room, the Political Officers, representing each agency, being seated on the right of their respective Chiefs and the Sardars behind their own Chiefs. On the left of His Royal Highness sat the Hon'ble Mr. Edgerley, Chief Secretary to Government, Captain Coghill, Lieutenant Burke and the members of His Royal Highness's suite. After His Royal Highness had taken his seat the Hon'ble Mr. Edgerley asked His Royal Highness's permission to make presentations, and this being granted presented the Chiefs in turn. His Highness the Nawab of Janjira presented a nazar of 75 gold mohurs, the second batch of Chiefs presented 51 gold mohurs each and the rest 31 gold mohurs each. After each Chief had presented his nazar, attar and pan were given to him, to His Highness the Nawab and the second class Chiefs by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and to the remainder by the Hon'ble Mr. Edgerley. After the presentation of the Chiefs attar and pan were given to their attendants by Captain Coghill and Lieutenant Burke. His Royal Highness then left the reception room with the same ceremonies as on entering it. The ceremonies at the departure of the Chiefs were similar to those observed at their arrival, and their order of departure corresponded with that of their arrival.

During yesterday morning His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales graciously received the Rajkumars of the Chiefs' College at Rajkot who came to Bombay to take part in the welcome to His Royal Highness and the Princess. Twenty-one Kumars have been in camp at Chowpati and these all drove up to Government House where they assembled in one of the verandahs in charge of Mr. Mayne, Principal of the College. The Kumars were in their white college dress, and wore handsome lungis of gold and silk of various colours. They formed into line to receive His Royal Highness, and the Prince of Wales was accompanied by the Hon'ble Mr. S. W. Edgerley, Chief Secretary to the Political Department of the Bombay Government. Mr. Mayne was presented to the Prince who asked several questions concerning the College and the welfare of the students and His Royal Highness then addressed the Kumars expressing his pleasure to see them and that they had been able to form part of his escort on his arrival. His Royal Highness also remarked upon their smart appearance on horseback on that occasion. The Prince then walked down the line of Kumars each of whom was presented by name by Mr. Mayne. With the Kumars as an "old boy" of their College, was K. S. Ranjitsinhji, who attended at the special desire of His Royal Highness, and he also was presented by Mr. Mayne, the Prince spending some minutes in conversation with him.

Times of India.—From an early hour in the afternoon all the streets in the fort were filled with dense crowds, and every hour their numbers were increased by people who came in great companies from the suburbs of the city, from outlying villages, and even from places so distant as Poona and Satara. Down the great arteries of the Fort flowed the multicoloured living stream, and where, as at the corner of Church Gate Street, and round the Floral Fountain, these great arteries crossed or merged into one, the densely packed crowd, agitated by a thousand currents, became a maelstrom. The day had been dull, and a slight haze hung over the city and the harbour, obscuring the distant hills and islands, and blurring the outlines of the anchored ships. The haze was thickened by the dust raised by a million tramping feet. As the sun sank red beneath the western sea, a myriad lamps sprang into life, and the haze was turned to delicate gold through which glowed rich red light of rubies, the green of emerald, the dazzling white of diamonds and the limpid purple of rich amethysts. The town became a town of fairy land, and the sea was peopled by elfin ships. Each house, each ship, seemed a rare product of the most perfect jeweller's art, and between the houses, down the road that led to the water's edge, flowed in ever-increasing numbers. The crowd seen from an elevation showed like a moving bed of flowers, and one might have walked upon the heads of the people without putting foot to earth.

The scene at the Floral Fountain, down Hornby, Esplanade, and Apollo Roads, and along the sea from the Yacht Club gates to the old battery beyond the Taj Mahal Hotel was particularly brilliant and picturesque. The Floral Fountain flooded with light, and outlined in twinkling coloured globes of fire, stood out in the midst of the seething crowd. Above it towered in masses of white and coloured flame the great pile of the Oriental Life Assurance Buildings, whilst to the west showed the Post and Telegraph Offices, each architectural detail, each arch and cupola and twisted finial, picked out with coloured light. The crowded and towering houses on the left hand side of Hornby Row were equally effectively decorated and outlined with light, whilst away down to the Harbour banks of twinkling flame marked the edges of the human river flowing seaward to watch the glowing ships.

So universal and complete was the illumination, and so well conceived, executed and effective, that it is a task of no great ease to particularise. The Oriental Life Office bore on its graceful front in bold and beautiful characters, white and blue and deep red ruby, the legend "God Bless the Prince of Wales," and this legend was repeated over and over again down the street. The premises of the West End Watch Company had it, in giant characters, set between what must have been the largest, even as they were the most brilliant, groups of the Prince of Wales's Feathers in Bombay. The motto on these Feathers was written in gloves of ruby. Beyond the comparatively sombre pile of the mimic Church Gate, Messrs. Seymour Dove repeated the invocation "God Bless the Prince of Wales," and behind the phrase a transparency showed the first bar of the royal hymn. Above this the premises occupied by the Messageries Maritimes Company shone conspicuous, and across its front glowed the prayer, echoed to-day by all Englishmen and Frenchmen "Vivent les trois couleurs!" The display of glowing light in the windows of Tait's American Diamond store failed to clipse the light that painted the windows outside and the roof of the house. The stores of Messrs. Parry Smith; of Beynon; Thompson and Taylor; Cambridge and others carried in the decorative scheme of light and colour on the one side of the street, whilst on the other shone in bands and whiffs graceful arches and soaring spires of light, the great blocks of houses occupied by Treacher & Co., by the Bombay Gymkhana, Messrs. Whiteaway and Laidlaw, the Bombay Club, the British India Officer's Club and the National Bank. At the Esplanade corner the fronts of Messrs. Currinbhoy Ibrahim, Sassoon David and Cornaglias shone with dazzling and varied splendour, and over against them shot into the dusky sky behind the trees, the beautiful Rajabai Tower, a soaring column of twinkling light, one of the most chaste and graceful sights to be seen on a night when every detail of the city's architecture was pregnant with beauty. On the front of Watson's Hotel its name shown out in letters of flame, a loyal motto above it, the Army and Navy Stores, and the Mechanics Institute were brightly and effectively picked out in light, and the graceful Gothic front of the buildings occupied by Messrs. Lund and Blockley were aglow with coloured flame. Away across the Crescent, crowded now with groups of promenaders and picknickers, amongst whom moved, with long-drawn cries and insistent appeals to purchase, vendors of tea, of sweetmeats, smokes and pan supari, glowed the Star of India, the Imperial Crown and fouled anchor, displayed by the Government Dockyard, whose walls and clock tower flamed with electric light. The band of light was carried round the head of the Crescent by the premises of Messrs. Rose & Co., the Western India Motor Car Company and the P. and O. Co.'s offices; at the end where the Esplanade Road sweeps into the Apollo Road shone in hoops of blue fire the fountain, matching the brightness that made of the King's statue at the other end an altar. Almost bewildering in the beauty that they assumed when marked out with ten thousand lamps were the majestic piles of the Elphinstone College, and the Sailor's Home, two handsome and massive piles that lent themselves well to the hand of the illuminator. It is impossible to say which of these looked the finer; together they formed one of the most beautiful pictures that it is possible to conceive. If the Prince found Bombay very beautiful when he landed, his impression of its rare charm must have been intensified by the sights it showed him on the night of his departure.

Leaving the Crescent, and the glowing streets of the old Fort behind the eye was still filled with a feast of light and colour down Apollo Street to the Bunder. On the right the softened light from strings of gay Japanese lanterns shone under the trees round the Y. W. C. A. building, whilst behind and above it flamed the fronts of the Apollo Hotel and the many flats that had put on a gala dress of lamps. To the right front the centre dome of the Taj Mahal Hotel was outlined against the dim sky. On the left of the road the balconies of Watson's Annexé, and the walls and towers of the Yacht Club, were aflame. The entrances to the Club were arches of coloured fire, in the centres of which shined the Club crest. The Bunder itself was very beautiful. The triumphal arch showed like a beautiful diamond ornament with its lines and clusters of lamps, its domes swelling globes of fire. The graceful roof of the kiosk at the Bunder head was outlined with coloured lamps. Above the Yacht Club a mast of white fire pierced the sky, and from the masthead the meteor flag of England shone. The front of the Club aflame with light that reflected itself slowly in the water at the foot of the wall. The Sea Face on the other side of the Bunder was equally as beautiful, and the many domes, the arches and galleries of the Taj Mahal Hotel, and the lighted fronts of the ranges of flats, were mirrored in the water.

Out upon the Harbour H.M.S. Hyacinth, which showed a flag of light, the Terrible, which sported between its masts an emerald "T", the Renown, the For, the Proserpine, the Hardinge, the San Gabriel, the Clan Graham (now of the Bombay Persian Line) and the S.S. Egypt were outlined with light. These great ships gave from the shore the impression of delicate diamond brooches. The crowd, packed upon the Bunder, and the roads leading to it, watched entranced. Then there was a roar of voices, and the crowd swept forward in wave after wave, which the police were just able to control, as great snakes of coloured fire soared up, hissing, from the lighted ships. Into the heavens fled these fiery snakes, by ones and twos, by companies of twelve and ten, making the pale moon more pale by contrast with their crimson glories. High in the sky they hung an instant, and then with a succession of dull reports, burst and fell to the sea again in showers of stars, green and blue and gold, white and red. Then report followed report uninterruptedly and the sky was filled with writhing coils and bands of fire with stream and showers of varied lights, whilst the troubled sea, upon which rocked the little black sailed fishing boats shone with magic splendour in the reflected glow. For an hour these salvos of wonderful light continued, and each report from the ships was answered by a roar from the heaving crowds. Then the lights ceased and sank, after one frantic outburst.

Darkness fell upon the sea, and silence, or comparative silence, upon the crowd. The people began to stream homeward from the edge of the sea, talking over again of the splendid sights that they had seen. Thousands, however, remained to watch the coming of the Prince from the Renown, and to cheer his progress through the streets. In the streets of the city the lights commenced to die down here and there. Dark spaces began to show upon the house fronts. The illuminations were at an end. The Prince was departing from the city that had welcomed him so heartily and learned to love him so well.

In the midst of five roads in solitary grandeur stands the Frere Fountain and from this coign of vantage, turn which way one may, the vision was dazzled with cascades of light, floods of iridescence picking out from spire to basements those tall and stately edifices in the Fort which lend themselves so charmingly to illumination. The reflected rays from the buildings on both sides brought into bold relief the figure of Flora which crowns the fountain, and around her feet were arranged gas globes resembling a garland of precious stones, the surrounding railings being a circle of white sapphires. To the left the P. W. D. building scintillated with much-coloured twinkling lights, outlying it in effectiveness which was added to by decorations rendered very pronounced by reason of the brilliant radiance which shone forth from ten thousand flames of fire. Opposite the huge pile which does duty for the Post Offices vied in bright rivalry with long rows of box lights with alternating colours mapping out the somewhat prosaic lines of this block in a very pretty manner.

Boasting unique architectural beauties, the B., B. and C. I. Railway offices at Church Gate Station, made a picture not easily described. The big dome and the cupolas were studded with opalescent lamps arranged in harlequin pattern, the shades being exquisitely mellow. The portico was crowned with a huge Prince of Wales Feathers, the general effect being such as to command admiration. From here was seen the back of the Secretariat, High Court, University Library and the Clock Tower, (the latter standing out against the sky line like a pillar of fire) which were very charming.

To the right the sombre and somewhat ineffective imitation of a portion of the old Fort St. George was studded in ruby lights which made a nice change from the glare of the white lamps which flanked it on either side. Glancing down Church Gate Street the offices of Sir Cowasji Jehangir Readymoney arrested particular attention. The Hongkong and Shanghai Bank and the Royal Insurance Offices made a brave show of lights, while opposite St. Thomas' Cathedral stood in dignified but cimmerian darkness. The buildings forming the Circle were illuminated and the garden here was circled with gas jets, while the footpaths were marked by festoons of coloured lights. Our somewhat out-of-date Town Hall stood unadorned, but the Bank of Bombay glistened with buttees.

Casting a glance down Hornby Road, to the left the Telegraph Office, Chartered Bank, City Improvement Trust Offices and Queen's Statue, were well picked out and the V. shaped Oriental Building received increased prominence by effective lighting, the Prince of Wales' Feathers and a greeting adorning its apex, while down the side in small lamps the words Oriental Life Assurance were prettily displayed. To the right Messrs. Macropolo & Co. were gaily illuminated and the West End Watch Co. had a fine big Prince's Feathers on view and their own title in bold letters of light above. Passing down the road one realised that the whole city and thousands of visitors were out. The sight of a bullock-drawn ranshake following a stately carriage and pair, or a spirited high stepping cob being impeded by a freak conveyance was denied the sight-seers by a wise order of the police. Yet where did all the carriages, the strings of which reached many miles each way come from? And while these thousands of conveyances bore full freights and in some cases to overflowing, the roads were crowded almost to impassableness at the chief points. It was a curious throng, silent at times as if struck dumb with astonishment, whose tongues seemed to break loose only when the dark roads were reached at last. Europeans in large numbers traversed the English quarter on foot, feeling that this was the quickest way to see the sights. As for the rest of the pedestrians they included representatives of every nation under the sun and of every section, tribe and religious persuasion of the peoples of this land.

Traversing Hornby Road on the left the Yokohama Specie Bank in testimony of the alliance exposed crossed flags of Japan and England in coloured glass lighted from behind, and next to this the Standard Office was bathed in white, the Alice Building across the way reflecting back waves of light. Most effective were the gas globes of white and blue-green opals which formed an arch over the entrance and continued the scheme above. The red drapings of Messrs. John Roberts & Co. formed a striking contrast. Glancing up a big transparency of the Prince of Wales' Feathers attracted attention to Messrs. Whiteaway Laidlaw's huge building, the pillars of which were ornamented with stars of light. Here the illuminations would have been on a grander scale had a consignment of coloured lights not been delayed owing to the block in the Canal. Renter's building, the premises occupied by the Bombay Cycle Agency, the Navsari buildings on the left, the Police Station and Bessho, the Japan art dealers, who indulged in a "Feast of Lanterns" for the occasion, carried on most effectively and without an intermission, the illuminations.

On the Canada building the advantage of electric lighting was well demonstrated; the jewels of the crowns of light were of proper colour, emerald and ruby shining like real gems. Semi-opaque balls of red, white and blue were made into festoons which ran across the building and the frontage was picked out in incandescent lamps. This was one of the brightest buildings in its section and Mr. McBain, who was Honorary Secretary of the Decoration and Illuminations Committee, might well be proud of the Sun Life Offices contribution to the radiance of the occasion. Messrs. Osler & Co.'s mosaic sign and bright shop windows were the subject of many favourable comments. Messrs. King, King & Co.'s illuminations were answered across the way by an archery, while next door the Singer Co. blazed with light and transparencies in glass and other materials.

The J. J. School across the road hung out glaring lamps which did nothing more than show the building off, and the milder effect of the tall building near Singer's showed up in contrast most charmingly and gave the dazzled vision a rest. For chaste effect we commend the illuminations of Mr. Dharamsey Dwarkadas. Here fine muslins threaded with gold and silver were made to gleam and glitter with the iridescence of a thousand electric lights with pretty shade of topaz and pearl, the tout ensemble being very grand. The little garden beyond was hardly noticed on account of the magnificent glare which was presented at Bori Bunder.

Straight in front the Municipal Offices danced in a frame work of jewels. Sapphire and ruby, lapis-lazuli and beryl sparkled, while at the very top of the belted dome four big pink electric lights gave a crowning effect to a magnificent scheme of colour and design. The lamps of the Fair to the left were eclipsed by the flood of light which shot from the quadrangle of the G. I. P. Railway Administrative offices where in bold design was worked out "Greets India's Prince," with a presentment of an engine and carriage studded in white electric light. At this junction rays of light, shot back rays and cross rays, a seething mass of humanity and a chaotic string of carriages had to disentangle themselves, yet coolly the police helped to unravel what seemed an inextricable tangle. The Statue of Progress on the great dome was bathed in a flood of white electric lights. The side of the Municipal Office, as one progressed, was noticeably pretty, and the illuminations of the Times of India's long and graceful building were in keeping with those of their neighbour and the Terminus building opposite. The Anjuman-i-Islam on one side, the Indo-British Institution, and the Schools of Arts carried on the long line of illuminations on the left and the Sitaram Buildings that on the right.

At the Markets the Police head-quarters presented a dazzling spectacle. Every form of decoration was indulged in—coloured buttees, Chinese lanterns, transparencies and it ranked as an illuminative effect with the best decorated buildings in the Fort. The Crawford Markets, too, were effectively outlined. Passing down Abdul Rehman Street the roadway was bright as noonday while Shaik Memon Street outed the most glorious Devali it ever celebrated. Chandeliers of gold and coloured designs rung across the street in scores, the crystal drops sending forth beams of rainbow rays of light. A triumphal arch also ornamented the street, the buttees being polychromatic. At Pydhonie the temples were brilliant, and down the Runghari Moholla Chinese lanterns and oil buttees were spread in profusion. Null Bazar was unrecognizable in its blaze of many coloured lights, and right on to Grant Road Bridge were carried out designs of illumination worthy of the occasion.

The glare of the display was seen many miles out of Bombay; and amid these coruscations of light, these flashes of radiance from millions of buttees, the shame-faced moon appeared in the sky and was quickly "sicklied o'er" with a glare that made it look like a ball of green cheese in a fleecy sky. The stars apparently hid their heads declining to twinkle in the midst of the brilliant radiance reflected from Bombay's Festival of Light.

The illuminations at Grant Road Station reflected the greatest credit on the authorities responsible, for they had been carried out with taste and ability and the station presented a most effective appearance. It was extremely fitting that it should be so, for the Royal party were to entrain at this station for the second stage of what it is now abundantly clear will be a memorable and epoch-making tour through the great Dependency. The platform from which Their Royal Highnesses departed, had had special attention devoted to it, and the result was entirely creditable to the artistic tastes of the decorator. The interior of the station was embellished very beautifully, red, white and blue being the predominant colours, while suspended from wall to wall were streamers of flags carrying baskets of flowers, and floral emblems representing a crown. The lighting showed up the decorations particularly well. The platform, which was covered in red cloth, is not a long one, and so the Royal train occupied its whole length. The route up to Cumbala Hill was illuminated here and there, some of the residents having spared neither money nor pains to make their houses as bright and as pretty as possible in honour of the historic occasion; but on the other hand there were gaps of darkness, which threw those illuminated into all the greater prominence. One moment the sightseer, whether riding or on foot, would be in the full glare of blazing light, for all the world like midday, and then the next moment he would be plunged into almost inky blackness. The best of the illuminations at this part of the route commenced at the corner of Messrs. Kemp & Co.'s premises. The popular buttee was here in evidence in its thousands, the colours were manifold and diverse, and the designs artistic and skilful, with the result that a charming picture was unfolded to the eye. Many thousands of buttees of all shades and colours merrily twinkled amid the foliage, and outlined the buildings just like a vast myriad of stars. The sight was one never to be forgotten. Passing on to the Hanging Gardens, the foliage and light were here delicately interwoven in such a manner as to arouse the admiration of the huge crowds which slowly wended their way by. From here to Il Pillazo the art of the illuminations reached its climax. It would be difficult to imagine anything prettier or more effective than the way in which the little buttee with the aid of tree and branch transformed this portion of the City into a veritable Arcadia. A dreamer suddenly awakening would have thought himself to be in Fairyland, or perchance living for the moment in one of the delightfully impossible, though picturesque, scenes from the Arabian Nights. In any event the whole road looked as if it had been touched with the magician's wand, and weird and fairylike was the outcome. At Il Pillazo, two triumphal arches stood out in strong contrast to the glare of light. Passing the residence of the Chief of Bansda, which was brilliantly illuminated, there was not very much afterwards to be seen till the illuminations of Government House came in sight, and here there was a scene of great splendour. The residences of the Takhore Sahab of Wadhwan and other Chiefs all helped to add to the brightness of the picture. Chowpati Road was gay with lights of varied hues and tints, and especially pretty was the house of the Nawab Nasrullah Khan where buttees had been skilfully employed to produce many novel and striking designs. Proceeding over the level crossing at Chowpati the free Orphanage established by Adamji Peerbhoy rendered the road as bright as day. Down Girgaum Road into Kalbadevi Road one saw many effective illuminations.

Times of India.—The Royal party will travel on the broad-gauge railways in a train de luxe built specially for the occasion. This consists of nine bogey carriages, seven of which measure 72 feet each over the buffers and are by far the longest vehicles ever run over any Indian railroad. The other two are brake-vans 64 feet long. All are painted white, bearing the Royal Coat of Arms and have the same appearance outwardly, but they must be inspected within to realize the comfort in which the Prince and Princess of Wales and the whole entourage will travel. The length of this train over all is six hundred and eighty-nine feet.

Commencing from the engine end we find, in their order the following vehicles. The first is a brake allotted to the use of railway officials and others responsible for the working of the train. Next follows the carriage for the staff, which will be occupied by the following officers:—the Maharajah Sir Pertab Singh, Lt.-Col. Charles, Majors Watson, Grimston, and Campbell, the Hon'ble Derek Keppel, and Capts. Wigram and Lord Crichton. This is upholstered in green and luxuriously furnished specially to suit the climate, the colour selected being green.

Passing through the next apartment which is similarly arranged and fitted for other members of the staff, we come to the carriage reserved for the use of the Earl and Countess of Shaftesbury, Mr. Dugdale and Lady Eva Dugdale and their European attendants. This vehicle is replete with conveniences calculated to ensure a comfortable journey for Lords and Ladies-in-Waiting, the floor and furniture coverings being a beautiful match.

Immediately adjoining this vehicle is the saloon of Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales. This is indeed a charming carriage consisting of a boudoir as well as sleeping apartment. It is finished in Spanish mahogany with birdseye maple panels and furnished in exquisite pea-green water-waved and brocade covered furniture. Pretty almirahs and a charming writing table are also provided. In the sleeping apartment the wooden bedsteads are of mahogany and maple with the Royal arms emblazoned at head and foot in lighter coloured wood. A splendid bath-room twelve feet long and eight feet wide with a dado and flooring of incaustic tiles and marble tables are provided. Revolving fans keep the carriage cool and electric lights are also added. Altogether what human thought could invent to give 'the Princess the acme of comfort on her Indian railway journeys has been carried out.

Connected with this vehicle by a gangway is that occupied by the Prince of Wales. This is furnished and upholstered very similarly to that of the Princess, the same scheme of green cushions and green Indian carpets being observed, but added to the furniture in this apartment is a fine roll top desk and other conveniences for the conduct of business in the train. Adjoining is the carriage to carry Sir Walter Lawrence, Chief of Staff, Lt.-Col. Sir Arthur Bigge, Major-General Stewart Beatson, Commander Sir Geo. Cust and Commander B. Godfrey Faussett. The gangway from here leads to a spacious dining saloon to seat twenty-four persons. It is fifty feet in length unsupported by any pillars. The wood work here, as indeed it is throughout the principal carriages, is of Spanish mahogany and birdseye maple, the chairs being covered in green leather and embossed with the Royal Coat of Arms. Round the saloon are medallions representing in fine art work of gilded silver and enamel the coats of arms of successive Viceroy's since the days of Lord Canning in 1858 to the time of Lord Curzon whose coat of arms adorn the door. The Prince of Wales' coat of arms and feathers also ornament the carriage and the latter sign is emblazoned on the doors of cast iron which are attached to the Royal carriage and led up to by folding steps. Beyond the dining saloon are the pantry, apartments for Mr. Wutzler, the caterer, and his chief, and a fine kitchen with a big range and grill. Yet further down is the dining room for attendants and others and then the last brake-van.

A remarkable feature in connection with the construction of this rolling palace is the fact that the whole train was manufactured by native workmen from Indian materials.

That is to say, that the entire bodies, underframes, bogey trucks on the latest English principles, wheels which are encased and lubricated under the Armstrong system, axles, bearings, springs; in fact everything except the electric fans were manufactured in the E. I. Railway workshops at Lillooah, three miles north of Calcutta, to designs by Mr. H. Kelway-Bamber, Carriage and Wagon Superintendent, E. I. Railway, under his direct supervision and he will travel on the train throughout the tour. In designing it, full advantage has been taken of the length, height and width of the overbridges of each railway it will run over. The arrangement of the springs has been so carefully considered that it will be possible to dine with the train running at a speed of seventy miles an hour without spilling a drop of liquid. The overhead tanks hold two thousand gallons of water and some idea of the length of the train may be gained by the statement that there are 750 windows. Each carriage has an electric fan and electric light, power being produced by dynamos in front of the carriage, which are caused to revolve by the movement of the train; what is in excess of the demand goes to storage batteries for use when the train is at a standstill or moving very slowly. Mr. H. Kelway-Bamber, who has been assisted by his Deputy Mr. C. G. H. Danby, is to be congratulated on having turned out a train worthy of the proud occasion for which it has been built, the cost being about £25,000.

The locomotives which will draw this important line of vehicles and their distinguished burdens are No. 245 and 242 of the B. B. and C. I. Railway. Those two puffing monsters are the latest type of engines by Beyer and Peacock of four coupled bogey type with inside cylinders of 18½ inches and a 26 stroke and were landed in India only three months ago. The drivers who will have the honour of shifting the levers of these coupled engines will be Messrs. Conyers and O'Brien who will be relieved on the Northern Section by Messrs. Little and Fratel. Mr. Johnson, Locomotive Superintendent, B. B. and C. I. Railway, has had the engines thoroughly overhauled for the occasion.

We are requested by his Excellency the Naval Commander-in-Chief to state that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has commanded that the public shall be permitted to visit H.M.S. Renown and H.M.S. Terrible, now lying in Bombay Harbour. It is therefore notified that the public may visit these ships on the following days:—H.M.S. Renown, on Thursday the 16th and 23rd and Sunday, the 19th and 26th instant; H.M.S. Terrible, on Wednesday, the 15th (to-day) and 22nd, and Friday, the 17th and 24th instant. Visitors to the ships may go on board on the dates named between 3-30 P.M. and 6 P.M.

Photographers who wish to exhibit pictures connected with the Royal Visit for the inspection of Their Royal Highnesses should send proofs to Major-General Stewart Beatson, Military Secretary, addressed to the Prince of Wales' Camp, India. Copies should be unmounted and numbered according to a serial descriptive list, the name of the firm also being stamped on the back.

Special prayers on behalf of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales were offered up by the Jews yesterday evening at the "Shaar Harahamim" Synagogue in Samuel Street.

The hall of the Kitta Bhandari Community, in the vicinity of the Northbrook Gardens, was tastefully decorated and illuminated. In the front part of the street a valedictory scroll was hung, fringed with silver coated cocoanuts both emblematic of good omen and the present profession of the community.

The Khoja merchant Mr. Salemahomed Dharamsy has built a new building opposite to Sir J. J. Hospital in the European style for the scholars and nurses of the hospital and has named it in memorial of the Royal Visit "Prince's Building." This building and the other chawls of the same owner on Parel Road were richly decorated with flags and illuminated with gas light. The arch of "Welcome" on the junction of the Parel and Babulla Tank Roads attracted much attention of the people.

16TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Bengalee.—We desire to warn the Governments of Bengal and Assam against the consequences of their repressive policy. The visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the capital city is bound to be a failure if this policy is persevered in. In the new Province the police is sought to be armed with powers beyond the law to check and suppress the Suadeshi movement. Young men are to be persecuted and harassed for singing Bande Mataram; their teachers are to be punished and their schools are to be penalized for their patriotic conduct. The gulf between the people and the Government is becoming wider and wider every day. The partition has drawn the two provinces closer together in the bonds of a firm and indissoluble unity. The agonies of the new Province under the iron rule of Mr. Fuller have evoked a deep and sympathetic response in the old Province. We here are watching the reign of terror in East Bengal with anxiety, but with the firm resolution to help our brothers in the new Province. We will not permit them to suffer alone. Their sorrows are ours. We are resolved to stand by them in their misfortunes, helping them if we can, suffering with them if we cannot. If this state of things continues, is it possible for the people of Bengal to accord a cordial reception to their Royal visitors? On the contrary, they will feel it their duty as patriotic and loyal citizens to make known to Their Royal Highnesses the sense of their extreme dissatisfaction with the present Administration both in the old and in the new Province. No people can rejoice when they are being persecuted, or indulge in manifestations of joy when they are in mourning. Loyalty is a sacred feeling; and it should not be debased with the alloy of hypocrisy. If the people of Bengal are not able to accord to the Royal visitors the reception which is their due, the responsibility of it all will devolve upon the heads of the bungling officials who, substituting repression for conciliation, have alienated the sympathies of a proverbially peaceful and loyal population. It is bad rulers who create widespread discontent, and then they seek to repress it by a policy of force. But history proclaims the truth that whenever such a policy has been tried, it has ended in the re-invigoration of the popular movements which it sought to suppress. The sufferings of martyrs are the cement of the church. The sufferings of patriots are the life-blood of all public causes. Will Mr. Fuller note the fact? East Bengal is not exactly the Central Provinces and the despotic traditions which he has imbibed as an administrator in a non-regulation Province will lead him to serious blunders in dealing with the keen-witted and highly patriotic community of East Bengal.

Daily Chronicle.—The Prince and Princess of Wales left Bombay last night, and arrived at Indore to-day. They travelled in the Royal train, which has been specially prepared for their four months' tour in this country. The Royal saloon is 58 feet long over buffers, and is divided into two spacious verandahs, one at each end, one reception-room, one sleeping and dressing-room, also an attendant's compartment, which is provided with its own bath-room. It is fitted with electric fans, electric foot-warmers, and electric stoves.

The necessity for these warming appliances was experienced last night in crossing the Ghats, the great mountain wall which fences India on the west and cuts the Island of Bombay off from the plateau of Central India. At the summit of the Ghats it is bitterly cold at night, and the Royal party had their first experience of the chilliness which can be found in this tropical country at certain times and places. All day to-day our journey lay across the great rolling yellow-brown plains of the plateau.

Time was when the names of Sindhia and Holkar was synonymous with all that was most inimical to the British power in India; and one Holkar alone made a stout stand against us, until he was overcome by Lord Lake on the banks of the Beas. But now these great Mahratta feudatories are amongst our staunchest allies. The present Holkar is only a boy of sixteen. His father, Siwaji Rao Holkar was one of the most splendid figures at the Delhi Durbar, but shortly afterwards was obliged to abdicate in favour of his son owing to a mental affliction.

Indore's reception of the Royal party was typically Indian. The great gathering of Central Indian Chiefs at the station yielded a vivid impression of colour with a blaze of emerald, scarlet, orange and gold. The mass of the people are Rajputs, while the ruling race are Mahrattas; and fiercely curled Rajputs were seen side by side with the flat Mahratta turban. The Rajas of Jaora and Rutlam, in the splendid white and sky-blue uniform of the Imperial Cadet Corps, struck the modern note in the assembly. A fascinating figure was the Begum of Bhopal, the only female Muhammadan ruler in India, and the successor of two other rulers of the same sex. The Begum was clothed in strictest purdah costume, and wore a burka, a shapeless sack-like garment covering her from head to foot, with a mask for the face and holes for the eyes.

The Prince of Wales wore his Admiral's uniform, while the Princess appeared in a figured gown. The Begum was presented first, and shook hands with the Prince and Princess. The procession from the station was truly barbaric. The Royal party had an escort of the soldierly troopers of the Central India Horse, and were followed by a crowd of Chiefs and their heterogeneous followers. Their carriages blazed with silver, while their liveries of orange, mustard and scarlet made the eyes ache.

The attitude of the people was one of reverential respect tinged with curiosity. The streets were crowded with thousands coming from the outlying districts. At present Indore is one vast camp. All the Central Indian Chiefs and their followers have foregathered here for the Darbar; while the British cantonment at Mhow has also furnished a large military contingent. The principal ceremonies to be enacted here are the Darbar of Chiefs to-morrow, and the opening of King Edward Hall on Friday.

Daily Express.—The Prince and Princess of Wales are now making acquaintance with the feudatory nobles of Central India, and are finding the contrast between them and the Chiefs of Bombay as great as that between the dry heat of the plains and the moist swelter of the western coast. The Royal visitors arrived here at five this afternoon by the luxurious special train which is to be their travelling home for the next three months. On the platform, waiting to receive them, was a dazzling array of Nobles and Chiefs.

Leading the line was the young Maharajah Holkar, whose ancestors were among the fiercest foes of Great Britain in years gone by. A tall, slight lad, wearing a rich robe of flowered brocade, a red turban, magnificent collars of diamonds and rubies, and a sword with a richly jewelled hilt, he had an air of hereditary dignity in spite of his obvious excitement.

Sitting by his side was the Begum of Bhopal, the foremost Muhammadan lady of Central India, a ruler in her own right and an able and enlightened princess. She is strictly "purdah." Her face was heavily veiled, and she sat very still and quiet.

The train puffed in, distant guns roared a salute, and the Prince and Princess alighted. The Prince wore the full dress uniform of an Admiral. He advanced with a pleasant smile to greet the Chiefs, beginning with the young Maharajah. The Begum offered a gloved hand from under the voluminous wrappings of her garments, but she did not raise her veil. The Princess remained chatting with her while the Prince finished his ceremonial greetings.

It was true India at last, and some strange incongruities, met the Prince's eye. The dazzling sunshine lit up the diamonds in sigrettes and sword hilts, and also showed that some of the escorts were armed with matchlocks of pre-historic design. One Chief attired in velvet so green that it almost shrieked, had earrings and necklaces made of enormous pearls. Another combined a solid tinsel crown with a robe of mustard yellow, purple pantaloons, and patent leather pumps.

The Prince and Princess drove to the Residency through streets alive with curious natives. They were escorted by the Begum's Lancers and the Maharaja's Dragoons, and Grenadier pipers led the way.

Daily Mail.—Bombay with its myriad lights and throbbing life had already faded in the background when the Prince and Princess of Wales opened their eyes this morning. They looked upon a poor and desolate region with thin grass and sparse timber, over which were scattered mean villages. In the darkness they had passed, unseen, the garden of India.

In the afternoon they entered the rich province of Indore with fields of millet, cotton and wheat.

The city of Indore is little more than a century old, of neither historic nor architectural interest. Yet their Royal Highnesses must have felt that here at last was India.

Grouped on the railway platform were the Princes and Chiefs of Central India. Nothing but a paint box could do justice to their magnificence. Their raiment ran through the colours of the rainbow. Priceless jewels hung like garlands about them.

At their head sat the young ruler of Holkar, descendant of the shepherd who raised himself to the throne—a refined and gentle youth of fine promise, redeeming the faults of his deposed father.

At his side was a closely veiled figure over whose face fell a burka and about whose brow was set a circlet of gold. This was the Begum of Bhopal, the third woman to succeed to the rank. She rules her people wisely and takes great interest in the progress of the women.

Followed a line of Princes, among whom conspicuous in the smart uniform of the Imperial cadets, were the Raja of Rutlam, and the Nawab of Jaora. The Raja of Rajgarh wore a coat of gold, over which was a string of enormous pearls, while one of his neighbours bore a massive crown.

Princes and Chiefs sat in order of precedence awaiting the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses' train. As it steamed in there drew to the front a guard-of-honour of the Bombay Grenadiers, and the bagpipers skirled the National Anthem.

The Prince and Princess alighted, and were received by the Maharajah of Holkar. Then each Chief was presented, and in turn shook hands. The ceremony ended with the inspection of the guard. The Princess talked with the Begum and the procession was formed.

The departure of the Chiefs displayed their magnificence. Each chariot was a picture, and a law to itself. The escorts varied as did the robes of their masters. The Maharaja of Holkar drove in a gilded coach with a bodyguard of lancers. The Begum was escorted with ceremony to a closed carriage and disappeared behind the screened window.

The streets of the prosperous little city were crowded, and its welcome was reflected in the conspicuous motto: "Tell Father We are Happy."

Daily Telegraph.—The last two nights spent by the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay were oppressively hot, beyond any previous experience at this time of year, and it was with some relief that this morning the Royal visitors found themselves travelling through the uplands of Western and Central India. The early hours were delightfully cool, and even at midday the extreme dryness of the atmosphere made the heat pleasant after the sultry and damp airs on the sea coast. The journey to Indore was made comfortably in a train which probably has no rival in the world for extreme luxury and completeness of furniture. The last touch of artistic treatment is, perhaps, some few valuable pieces of china on the walls of the exquisitely fitted-up saloon of the Prince's car.

Indore was reached in good time, and the Royal procession drove through a mile-long avenue of brilliantly-clothed natives and loyal greetings kept on either side by soldiers from the York and Lancaster Regiment, native cavalry, and Imperial Service troops. The only incident which marked the course was the pretty native custom of throwing garlands and single flowers into Their Royal Highnesses' carriage as it passed by.

The chief interest to many people of the present visit is the opportunity given to the Prince and Princess to make the acquaintance of the unique Begum Princess in India. The Begum of Bhopal represents not only the best traditions of administration of the Native States under English rule, but a long established dynasty who have always manifested the most kindly feelings to ourselves of any Central Indian Chiefs, even in such hazardous days as those of the Mutiny. Of course, the Begum is strictly "purdah," or secluded, from the eyes of men, and therefore although, with Holkar, the Ruling Chief of Indore, she was at the station to greet Their Royal Highnesses, her face was entirely concealed behind a burka, or silk veil. The conferment upon Her Highness of the insignia of the Order of the Indian Empire will be one of the chief events of the present visit of the Prince of Wales.

The following are extracts from a letter of the Prince of Wales to Lord Lamington, Governor of Bombay:—

The Princess and I are desirous of making known through you to the inhabitants of Bombay how deeply impressed we have been by the expressions of enthusiastic good will extended to us by all classes, races, and creeds of the population, and to assure them that we shall carry with us the happiest reminiscences. We wish again to thank the municipal authorities and all concerned for the trouble and care they bestowed upon the arrangements for our reception, upon the beautiful decoration and illumination of the streets, and, indeed, upon everything which could conduce to our pleasure and convenience. I know what an amount of thought and labour such arrangements entail.

We have been especially struck by the affectionate demeanour of the vast crowds which greeted us as we passed through the streets and bazaars. This sympathetic attitude in Bombay has made us feel that we are at home amongst our own people.

I also wish to express my grateful recognition for the heavy work which I know has fallen on the various Government departments in connection with our visit. I heartily congratulate the police authorities on the admirable manner in which their duties were performed. The fact that no serious accidents occurred is in itself testimony to the excellence of their arrangements.

Englishman.—It was with a sense of relief that Bombay was left behind last night, and the second stage commenced on the long journey of Their Royal Highnesses through India, for whilst the crowds in Bombay made the state progresses a constant feast of colour, the enthusiasm evidenced on every hand proved the real joy of the people in the presence of the Heir-Apparent and his gracious Consort in their midst, and the sympathy and consideration of the Prince and Princess deepened the loyalty of the citizens into a feeling of passionate devotion to the Throne and the Royal House. The weather made these last days somewhat of a trial. Why is it that the Bombay climate always appears at its worst when it should be at its best? The Anglo-Indian fleeing homewards in May and returning in a chastened mood in October will never believe the island is anything but abominably steamy and oppressive; not even the traditional oldest inhabitant can remember a worse five days in the middle of November than those of Their Royal Highnesses' memorable visit. The moment the Island was passed we entered the region of cool nights and fresh mornings, whilst the noontide was hot, it was dry; existence had become tolerable once more. Unfortunately, as Gujarat was traversed in the dark and the route lay by the Baioda-Ghodia chord, no glimpse was afforded of the lush field of Gujarat; the first vision Their Royal Highnesses had of actual India was of the Panch Mahals, that poorest of the Bombay districts, where nothing is to be seen but the poorest of villages and the meanest of habitations. Thence onward the line runs through scenery most characteristic of the Central Indian plain, long undulating grass lands with a scanty scrub, sparsely timbered with pipal, babul and some of the finer forest trees. All the wayside stations were spotlessly swept and garnished, and even at this early hour groups of picturesque villagers were gathered in the precincts of the stopping places. At Rutlam, the junction with the metro gauge railway, time was afforded for an inspection of the Royal metro gauge train, the acme of comfort, and illustrating what can be accomplished with Indian labour under English supervision in solidity of workmanship and fine carving and inlaid work. Nearing the Chambal the character of the scene changed. Great fields of millet ready for the sickle, of cotton showing bolls, and green with the promise of the rabi, replacing the barrenness of the morning, a fat land showing every sign of agricultural wealth.

The little commonplace station of Indore does not lend itself readily to decoration, nor was anything pretentious attempted, but the spectacle was received from the commonplace by the extraordinary vividness of the costumes of the Chiefs. All Central India was represented here. First in order of priority, that most interesting ruler, the Begum of Bhopal, the only Mohammedan woman in the world, who rules in the strictest purdah and clad in a flowing lilac burka; then the Maharajah of Rewah clad in a costume of bright green; the Maharajah of Orchha wearing the star of the G.C.I.E., was in heavily gold-embroidered white silk; by comparison the fine old Maharajah of Datia was robed with ostentatious simplicity in the plainest white. The soldierly young Prince of the houses of Rutlam and Jaora in the splendid uniform of the Imperial Cadet Corps typified the most important development in the education of the Indian aristocracy. The Maharajah of Charkhari blazed in a surtout of emerald green lavishly braided with gold, and the Nawab of Basni was resplendent in a costume of orange and gold surmounted by a species of crown. No less remarkable than the dresses were the types represented at this little wayside station, the Rajput with his fiercely curled whiskers, the Maharatta with his more studious physiognomy, the Mahomedan rulers of Bhopal and Basni, a microcosm of the chaos from which the spread of British power preserved the Central Indian States. The full dress uniforms of the officers from Mhow and Goona and the scarlet tunics of the guard-of-honour of the 102nd Bombay Grenadiers, lent the finishing touch of colour to a variegated scene.

The ceremonies attendant upon the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses were of the simplest. As the Royal train steamed into the station the Prince was standing on the platform of his saloon, wearing the uniform of a Vice-Admiral and the ribbon of the Star of India. Under the usual salutes he stepped on to the platform with Her Royal Highness and Sir Walter Lawrence. Sir Walter presented Major Hugh Daly, C.S.I., C.I.E., son of the famous Sir Henry Daly, whose name is indelibly associated with the history of the Central India Horse. Major Daly in turn presented the young Chief, who has the honour of being the first native ruler to entertain the Royal visitors, the Maharajah Holkar of Indore just sixteen years of age. The rulers entitled to salutes were presented in turn commencing with the Begum of Bhopal, and followed by the Maharajah of Rewa, G.C.S.I., His Highness the Maharajah of Orchha, G.C.S.I., His Highness the Maharajah of Datia, K.C.S.I., His Highness the Maharajah of Dhar, His Highness the Raja of Dewas, His Highness the Raja of Dewas, J.B., His Highness the Maharaja of Samthar, His Highness the Nawab of Jaora, His Highness the Raja of Rutlam, His Highness the Maharajah of Charkhuri, K.C.I.E., His Highness the Maharajah of Bijawar, His Highness the Nawab of Baori, His Highness the Rajah of Sitaman, His Highness the Rajah of Sailana, K.C.I.E., His Highness the Rajah of Raggarh, His Highness the Raja of Jhalna, the Rana of Ali Rajpur, and the Rao of Khilchipur. Then followed the presentation of the leading British officers, the General Officer Commanding, 5th Division, Major-General Sir O'Moore Creagh, V.C., K.C.B.; Lieutenant-Colonel Robinson, A. A. G.; Lieutenant-Colonel H. J. Middleton, A. A. G.; Major Vincent, D. A. A. G.; Colonel Scott, A. A. G.; Colonel Baker; Major Roberts; Captain Wilton; Mr Reynolds, 1st Assistant to Agent to Governor-General; Mr. Warburton, 2nd Assistant to Agent to Governor-General; Mr. W. C. Jardine; Major Cubitt; Major Beville; Major Peacocke; Mr. Bosanquet; Political Agents; and the Officer Commanding the Regiments at Mhow; Colonel Mayne, C.B., York and Lancaster Regiment; Colonel Mitchell, 102nd Bombay Grenadiers; Colonel Bayley, 122nd; Colonel Stokes, R. H. A.; Colonel Dunlop, C.B., Commanding R.A.; Captain Melville, Staff Officer.

The Guard-of-Honour was inspected and the chief ceremony was over. Their Royal Highnesses then drove direct to the historic Residency, which is to be their abode during their stay at Indore.

The procession, like all else in the welcome of Indore, was a microcosm of the varied interests which constitute what is geographically and politically Central India; the escort was made up of a squadron of the Central India Horse, whose reputation so deservedly stands high amongst the Indian Cavalry regiments; then a squadron of Holkar's Imperial Service Cavalry, and another of the Bhopal Victoria Lancers, superbly mounted on Arabs. The Royal carriage, in which Sir Walter Lawrence sat opposite the Prince and Princess, was drawn by four matchless bays, driven by two men of the Royal Horse Artillery in red and gold jackets. Then came the Chiefs in order of precedence, with a display of barbaric state which provided a kaleidoscopic feast of colour. The Maharajah Holkar's carriage was a pile of lemons with footmen in gorgeous orange; the Begum of Bhopal drove in a closed landau, escorted by sowars in chocolate; the state carriage of the Raja of Rewa was a blaze of silver and blue, with an escort garbed in yellow; the Rajah of Orchha's horses jingled with bells, like a Russian sleigh, while the Raja of Dewas, senior and junior branch, were attended by retainers with gorgeous chowris of peacocks' feathers. As the lesser Chiefs joined the cortege the magnificence diminished, but not the interest, for now we came to groups of them quaintly garbed horsemen on half-broken country breeds, which still survive in the smaller estates of the dependency. In full state Their Royal Highnesses thus drove through the unpretentious streets of Indore, an unpretentiousness lost beneath the loyal decorations displayed on every hand. Scarcely a house in the sadar bazar went unadorned and the fine buildings of the Canadian Mission were resplendent. Behind the State troops, many of whom are still armed with old Enfields, who lined the streets, was a dense crowd of townsmen and thousands who had flocked in from the countryside to welcome the Heir-Apparent to the Empire and his Consort. An Indian crowd does not cheer except where it has become half occidentalised, as in a cosmopolitan city like Bombay, but the reverential salaams, the profound respect manifested revealed none the less surely the deep loyalty of those who had come to gaze upon the person of the Emperor's eldest son and to pay him homage. Through scenes such as these the Royal carriage drove until it passed within the gates of the Residency to the thunder of guns.

Their Royal Highnesses dined quietly at the Residency and there viewed the illuminations from the roof of the building. All Indore was ablaze with light from the humblest dwellings in the city to the stately public offices of the Agency. The night was one of peerless splendour. The moon shone clear and cold. The sky was of the purest blue, not a breath of wind stirred the dry cold atmosphere. Nothing therefore, marred the picturesque effect of the myriads of tiny batties and Chinese lanterns, while the whole station and city were beautiful and most charming. The best effect was secured in a beautiful lake in the Residency gardens. The surface of this magnificent sheet of water is broken by numerous islets clothed with gorgeous clusters of feathery bamboo and graceful palms. In the still moonlight their delicate foliage was reflected in the deep shadow of the placid bosom of the lake. Now among the trees and round the lake were arranged thousands of little batties and many coloured lanterns, whose soft light was not only thrown into picturesque relief by the dark foliage but reflected with extraordinary brilliancy in the inky blackness of shadows on the water's fringe. From one of these islets, soft music of a half-concealed band, answered the more militant strains of the musicians in the Residency gardens. It was a scene of indescribable grace and charm, and, owing to the generous hospitality of the Chiefs of Bundelkhand, who were "At Home" in the grounds, all were able to enjoy it under the most pleasant conditions.

It was stated in some of the home papers that the Prince of Wales had expressed his desire that at the Rawalpindi manoeuvres spectacular display should give way to rigidly practical operations. If this was the case the military authorities have decided to have their own way in the matter. Following a custom, altogether unpractical under real service conditions, a battery of Royal Horse Artillery has been attached to every cavalry brigade. There is probably no more impressive sight in the world than the spectacle of a battery of Royal Horse Artillery galloping into action, and it is probably because they will be asked to gallop that "J", "I", "J", and "F" batteries have been attached to the cavalry, instead of being placed, like the field batteries, amongst the divisional troops. The value of horse artillery, that is to say, artillery which has all the men mounted and none on the limbers from which they may be jolted off when travelling at a rapid pace, has recently been questioned. The faster artillery moves the greater the cloud of dust, and there is no special advantage in having guns to move as fast as cavalry. The field artillery can work at a trot, and in any case the place of guns is behind infantry and not in front of them. Colenso and Tabora Nelu proved in South Africa how ineffective guns are unless they are properly supported by an infantry escort. It has often enough been pointed out that the disaster to Colonel Long was the direct result of the false lessons taught by spectacular manoeuvres, and it is, therefore, the greater pity that the desire of the Prince to see as far as possible warfare as it really is should have been overruled by those who wish him to see how fast and effectively the horse batteries in India can travel over broken ground.

Indian Daily News.—The Royal train, carrying the Prince and Princess of Wales, arrived at Indore punctually at 5 o'clock this afternoon (15th). The change from the heat of Bombay to a cooler climate experienced during the night and early this morning was greatly appreciated by the Royal party. The Royal train, which left Bombay about 11 o'clock last night, ran well ahead of time, and Rutlam was reached a few minutes after 1 o'clock to-day, fifteen minutes ahead of the originally scheduled time. At Rutlam the Royal party transferred to the metre-gauge railway and lunched there. The station had been very prettily decorated with banners, and the platforms were carpeted with crimson cloth, a crimson pathway leading from the arrival platform to that on which the second Royal train was drawn up on the metre-gauge line. This train was very tastefully decorated in cream, while the iron and brasswork of the saloons was of most artistic workmanship. The interior arrangements were of a most sumptuous character, the Princess of Wales' carriage being especially admirable in design and fittings.

The arrangements at Rutlam station for the arrival and departure of the Royal visitors were of a purely private character, everybody but a few officials on duty being excluded from the station. The district and Rutlam State police, under Mr. G. Lambert, Assistant District Superintendent, guarded the station, and also the line for some distance.

There was a notable gathering of Central Indian Chiefs on the platform at Indore, awaiting the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses.

When the Royal train steamed into the brightly decorated station, the Prince of Wales was seen standing on the verandah of his carriage in an Admiral's uniform. A moment later, the Princess appeared in the front of her carriage draped in a white gown with pink plumes and wearing a pink toque. On alighting from the train, Their Royal Highnesses were introduced to General Sir O'Moore Creagh and Major Daly and introductions to the native rulers and officers followed, the Maharajah Holkar being first presented. Subsequently, while the Prince inspected the Guard-of-Honour, the Princess was engaged in conversation with the Begum of Bhopal, who was enveloped in dove-coloured robes. Thereafter the Prince and Princess entered their carriage and drove to the residence of the Agent to the Governor-General, the picturesque escort raising a great cloud of dust.

While the Chiefs were entering their carriages, a riderless horse galloped along the road of the procession, knocking down a native infantryman of a detachment who was just then crossing the road, but fortunately the man was able to rise immediately.

To-night the Prince and Princess of Wales dine quietly at the Residency. The Station and Bazar are illuminated, and a display of fireworks began after dinner. The programme arranged for the two days of stay in Indore includes formal visits to the camps of the Chiefs early to-morrow morning, a Durbar in the forenoon, a garden party at the Residency, to be followed by the State Banquet and Reception, at which the Prince will deliver the insignia of G.C.I.E. to the Begum of Bhopal, and of K.C.I.E. to the Rajah of Sailana. The chief function on Friday will be the opening of the Edward Hall by the Prince, the Royal party leaving Indore at 6-33 the same evening.

Indian Witness.—The Prince and Princess of Wales are now on Indian soil. The Prince is the Heir to the British Crown. He is the oldest son of the King of England and Emperor of India. As his father, then Prince of Wales, visited India some years ago, so he comes now. He is the personal representative of the reigning Sovereign, the highest and most important representative in the whole Empire. As the future Sovereign he comes to see the people and the land which constitute so important a part of the vast domain united under the British Flag. He comes to that part of the Empire which has least responsibility for self-government, and in which the Crown ought to take greatest interest. In a good sense he comes as the representative of the Government of the British Empire, to express good-will for, sympathy with and interest in the people and the land of India.

He is welcome. Every lover of India who appreciates the peace and order, the security of life and property now prevailing in India because of British rule will bid him welcome. Every one who appreciates how the advent of the British Flag has, the world round, in the main, made for a larger liberty, a better manhood and a nobler womanhood, will give him welcome. He is welcome for personal reasons. He is himself a princely prince and a princely man; his father has made for himself a large place in the regard and homage to a sovereign who serves the best interest of his people and mankind; and a halo of blessed and sacred memory shines upon him from the life and character of the great Queen, his grandmother. He is welcome. He is not coming for partizan reasons. Partizanship should not mar his visit. He is not coming to exact homage of unwilling subordinates, enforced by force of arms. Contention for place and questions of supremacy should not show their faces. He comes with good-will and sympathy, to express interest and regard. He should be met as he comes. Let India welcome her future Emperor as he deserves, and show that she appreciates the spirit of his visit to her shores.—Welcome to the Prince.

Pioneer.—The following Brigade Order is published by Brigadier-General Greenfield:—

"The Brigadier-General Commanding has much pleasure in announcing to the troops under his command that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was pleased to express his satisfaction at the appearance and bearing of the troops on duty on the occasion of Their Royal Highnesses landing in Bombay and progress through the city."

The following telegram has been sent by the Mysore Family Association to Sir Walter Lawrence:—

"The members of the Mysore family, descendants of Hyder Ali and Tippoo Sultan, beg to offer a most loyal and cordial welcome to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales."

The following reply has been received:—

"I am desired by the Prince and Princess of Wales to thank you for your kind telegram."

From Prince Mahomed Bukhtyar Shah:—

"Myself and the members of my family offer a cordial and warm welcome to Their Royal Highnesses."

The complete tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales in Burma as now fixed is as follows: Public arrival at Rangoon on Saturday, 14th January, at 8-30 A.M. The Prince will then receive the Municipal address and will open the Victoria Memorial Park at 4-30 in the afternoon and attend a State banquet at 8-15 in the evening. On Sunday, Their Royal Highnesses will attend Divine Service and visit Shwe Dagon Pagoda. On Monday at 11 A.M. they will visit the teak yards and attend a garden party. The arrival at Prome on the 20th will be private, and Their Royal Highnesses should reach Rangoon at 6-30 A.M. on Sunday, the 21st, their departure for Madras at about 8 A.M. being private.

Pioneer.—The Advocate of India furnishes some interesting details regarding the illumination of Bombay in honour of the Royal visit. Some idea as to the magnitude of the work undertaken by the Public Works Department may be formed, says the journal, from the following interesting details of the material and paraphernalia employed. In all some sixteen public buildings and institutions were illuminated, and in this connection as regards the buildings the chief features, such as arches, copings, string courses, ridge lines, towers, finials, etc., were picked out with small native pattern coloured lanterns, for which purpose some 1,456,000 were employed, the oil required for the same being 18½ tons. The small native pattern lamps used for these illuminations were allotted as follows:—

Triumphal Arch at Bunder	1,500
Sailors' Home	8,000
Elphinstone College	11,000
Secretariat	15,000
University Hall	8,000
University Library	4,000
Clock Tower	5,000
University Gardens	4,000
High Court	26,000
P. W. D. Secretariat	15,000
Post Office	12,000
Telegraph Office	15,000
Indo-British Institute Gardens	3,500
Reay Art School	3,000
Police Head-quarters	14,000
Paper Currency Office	1,500

These lamps were lit up by 2,000 coolies at the rate of 50,000 per hour and inside three hours the lighting had been accomplished. Fifteen thousand asbestos lights, 144 acetylene, and 20 Kition lights were also used. Two thousand coolies were engaged in erecting the necessary scaffolding and putting up the ropes and lamps, and in connection with this were used: 46½ miles of battens, 32 miles of rope, 28 miles of bamboo scaffolding, 43 tons of planking for hoisting cradles, 3,555 pulley blocks, 132 ladders and 6½ tons of nails.

As only one side of the buildings was illuminated, the foregoing figures speak for themselves. Before lighting up, the pulleys and ropes were tested, and it speaks much for the great care and precaution taken from the commencement of the work that no incident whatsoever has happened either in connection with the preparations or carrying the illuminations into effect. Each block of buildings was in charge of a supervisor and an assistant, with a batch of coolies, who wore a distinguishing badge at each block of buildings. This colossal work was carried out under the orders of Mr. R. J. Kent, A.M., I.C.E., Presidency Engineer, who was ably assisted by Messrs. Murphy and P. Brookes, and it is a matter on which they deserve the thanks and congratulations of all concerned for the manner in which they have brought their immense task to such a successful issue.

United India and Native States.—That the Indian ladies of Bombay were highly successful in carrying out their undertaking in presenting an address to Her Royal Highness is a matter of congratulation to us all. The ceremony, an account of which we publish in another column, passed off very well. In answer to the address, Her Royal Highness said that one of the objects of the tour is "to see as much as possible of my Indian sisters." A gracious desire, indeed, well becoming her present and future position. "The more I see of the reality of your lives, the more I shall admire and esteem the high qualities for which the Indian woman is renowned," said Her Royal Highness. We sincerely trust that notwithstanding the laborious ceremonies the Royal Guests have to go through, it will be found possible for the Princess of Wales to see and come in contact with many Indian women. We are thankful for the high character expressed for the women of India, and trust that her words will not be lost on those many who keep aloof from manifesting any interest in their condition.

17TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—The following has been issued at Bombay:—

"His Excellency the Governor of Bombay desires to make public the following extracts from a private letter addressed to him by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales:—

"The Princess of Wales and I are desirous of making known through you to the inhabitants of the city how deeply impressed we have been by the expressions of enthusiastic goodwill which have been extended to us from all classes, races and creeds of the population, and to assure them that we shall carry away with us the happiest reminiscences. We wish again to thank the municipal authorities and all concerned for the trouble and care which have been bestowed upon the arrangements for our reception, upon the beautiful decoration and illumination of the streets, and indeed upon everything that could conduce to our pleasure and convenience. I know the amount of thought and labour such arrangements entail. We have been especially struck by the affectionate demeanour of the vast crowds which greeted us as we passed through the streets and bazaars. This sympathetic attitude of Bombay has made us feel that we are at home amongst one's own people.

"I also wish to express my grateful recognition of the heavy work which I know has fallen upon the various Government Departments in connection with my visit. I heartily congratulate the police authorities upon the admirable manner in which their duties have been performed. The fact that no serious accidents have occurred is in itself a testimony to the excellence of their arrangements."

Lord Lamington feels confident that the citizens of Bombay and all concerned will share his gratification at this appreciation of their efforts to give a loyal and hearty welcome to Their Royal Highnesses, and trusts that the occasion may live long in the memories of all as one that has helped to bind together all sections of the community by ties of affection for Their Royal Highnesses and of universal rejoicing at the opportunity of greeting the Heir-Apparent of the British Throne and the first Princess of Wales who has visited the shores of India.

Daily Graphic.—India has the reputation of possessing on her railways what is, on the whole, the finest coaching stock in the world. Several causes contribute to the fact, the principal being the great distances traversed, and the length of time it takes to get from one place to another, and the high standard of comfort demanded by Europeans in India. Moreover, the railways in India are enabled to build very wide and commodious carriages, owing to the extra width of their gauge. The train which has been built by the Indian Government for the use of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales is unique in the history of railway carriages. In respect to size and luxury it has no equal in the world. It has been made from the designs of Mr. H. Kelway-Bamber, the carriage superintendent of the East Indian Railway, and has been built from raw materials in India by native labour. The best workmen of Bengal, Bombay, Burmah, and the Punjab shared in its construction, so that the making of this regal train was a matter of Imperial interest. The train is composed of nine enormous saloon carriages, seven of which are 72 feet long—about 12 feet longer than the main line saloons in use on the trunk railways of this country—each of these carriages being borne on twelve wheels. Each coach weighs forty-five tons. The whole train is 630 feet long, and weighs approximately 375 tons. Each carriage, whether it be Royal day saloon, boudoir, sleeping saloon, or staff, dining or cooking carriage, is a model of perfection in its own line; each connects with the next by means of a gangway, and it is possible to walk from end to end of the train. The external sunshades—so common on Indian railways—have been abandoned in this train, materials of great heat-resisting properties having been substituted for the body, side panels, and the roofs—the latter being of the domed or “clerestory” pattern. Everything that could be introduced for relieving the tedium of a long journey in a hot country is to be found in this train. For the first time full-sized baths, in specially arranged bath-rooms, with shower baths and douches, have been added to the rapidly increasing list of travelling comforts. The kitchens and refrigerating chambers are very elaborate. As a safeguard against fire the kitchens are fitted with hydrants, and tanks containing three tons of water are situated on the roof of the cars. In addition to the Royal train, of which we to-day give illustrations, there have also been built two other “specials,” which, carrying the huge native staff which will wait on the Prince and Princess wherever they will go, precede the Royal train.

Daily Mail.—The speech of the Prince of Wales at the Durbar held this morning was an apology to the Chiefs for his inability to return their visit. The Chiefs had come from all parts of Central India, bringing their durbar tents and retinue in expectation that each would receive the Prince under his own roof. Time, however, would not permit of this elaborate ceremonial. The keenness of disappointment was moderated by the explanation that the visit to Indore is informal, and will not be considered a precedent nor detract from the privileges and customs, which, the Prince said, he cherished and esteemed as dearly as any Chief in India.

The durbar was held under the conditions of fixed and immemorial usage. A canopy was spread on the maidan, to which fifty-five Chiefs came, each with retinue regulated according to his rank. The Maharaja of Holkar alone was absent, his position entitling him to a separate visit.

The Chiefs took their places according to precedence on each side of a broad crimson avenue leading to a throne under a canopy of silver and blue, upheld by poles of silver. Behind the throne were emblems of royal estate—emblems of the sun and moon scintillating with gems, and a regal umbrella furled. To a seat near the throne was conducted the Princess, the company rising to receive her like a silent, shimmering sea over which hung a rainbow.

Escorted by Central Indian Horse, the Prince alighted amid the thunder of cannon, and was ushered to the throne. The spectacle was of dazzling magnificence.

The first to be presented was the Begum of Bhopal, who with the throne has inherited loyalty to the Imperial power. Her head was crowned with gold, her face veiled behind a burka of light blue, her figure draped in blue of deeper shade.

She made obeisance, and gave place to the Maharaja of Rewa, second in rank. The Maharaja of Orchha came next, with long flowing beard—a grey, sturdy veteran of the old school, respected by all, not less by his son, who was seated behind, and who once described his father as a “tough old bird, who could remain in the sun all day.”

Upon his heels came a long line of Chiefs, each offering tribute of gold mohurs which the Prince touched and remitted in accordance with custom. Presentations ensued, and the Prince delivered a speech, which, duly translated, gave manifest satisfaction. Then came the ceremonial hospitality of offering attar and pan, the Chiefs receiving them from the hands of the Prince while retainers were served by political officers. Then Their Royal Highnesses departed, and the company separated into a hundred brilliant glittering fragments.

This is the only durbar we shall witness on the tour, so nothing will dim the memory of its regulated splendour.

In the afternoon the Princess received the Begum of Bhopal in private audience, and had a long interesting talk with her. This is a remarkable woman, who rules a principal Mussulman State from behind the purdah and is exempt from the obligation of presenting tribute—a privilege granted to her in 1891 in recognition of the loyalty and services rendered by her house in the Mutiny.

Another distinction was conferred on her in the evening, when the Prince delivered the insignia of the Grand Commander of the Indian Empire. The Begum is the first woman in India to receive this honour. At the same time the rank of K.C.I.E. was conferred on the Raja of Sailana.

In the afternoon there was a garden party at the Residency where the native chiefs outshone the flowers in magnificence. Nor were the children forgotten. Their little dark faces filled out at lunch, and they beamed over their gifts. Plates were adorned with portraits of the Royal visitors.

In her interview with the Princess the Begum showed the treasures and heirlooms of the house of Bhopal, which she is about to present to the Victoria Museum at Calcutta. They include priceless embroideries in gold, and portraits of the warrior chiefs of her family, together with their arms, and will be a valuable addition to the historic collection. The Princess talked to the son and heir of the Begum. At the garden party the Begum was in the seclusion of a tent, through the purdah or curtain of which the Prince held a conversation with her. The Begum afterwards left the tent and spoke for some time with the Prince.

Daily News.—Udaipur, the next stage after leaving Indore in the itinerary of the Indian tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales, is the capital of the State of Mevar in Rajputana. It is 30 years since the last visit of a Prince of Wales to India, during which time there have been many changes. Not the least is the great increase in railway facilities enabling one to-day to visit places which 30 years ago could only be reached by the most primitive conveyance if they were not, as was often the case, left out altogether on account of their great distance from the railway. Udaipur is a striking example of this. The joining up of this city with the main line is of comparatively recent date, the junction being effected at the famous and romantic old hill and fortress of Chitor. The city of Udaipur stands on a low ridge in a valley, or basin, surrounded on all sides by hills save the west where extends a huge lake five miles in circuit. The Royal Palace, shown in the illustration, is a noble pile of granite, built on the crest of a rocky ridge overlooking the lake (seen in the foreground), city, and valley. This beautiful old Indian city, which stands, by the way, over 2,000 feet above sea level, will be reached by the Royal Party either to-night late or early to-morrow morning.

Englishman.—Surely Indore must be esteemed the ugly duckling of the capital towns of India. It is too modern to possess any antiquarian interest, for it was not until after the death of Maharao the shepherd's son, who established the Holkar dynasty, that Ahalya Bai built the city, and in 1818 that the court was removed to the new centre. It is too prosperous to have the picturesqueness sometimes associated with poverty and not prosperous enough to possess the architectural beauties on which from time immemorial pious Indians have loved to spend their wealth. It is essentially middle class, unlovely and characterless, and the only centres of any real interest are the Residency (where Their Royal Highnesses are staying) still scarred with the bullet wounds of the Mutiny, and the Residency garden. Now, however, it is relieved by the unwanted bustle and animation of the thousands who have flocked into the town to join in the general rejoicing. There are sixty chiefs in the camp, and their followers crowd the narrow streets. More interesting still are the rustics of the country-side, hardy Maratha peasants with wisps or turbans and coarse country dhoties. The English guests are splendidly housed in a model camp in the Residency grounds, each entrance to which is guarded by British infantry in scarlet and sepoy in their bright full dress.

Quite early to-day the stillness of the fresh morning air was broken by the familiar booming of salutes. The assembled chiefs of Central India were performing the office of Mizaj Puri, that is calling at the Residency to enquire after the health of Their Royal Highnesses. It was originally intended that the Prince of Wales should visit the camps of some of the chiefs informally in the course of a morning ride, but owing to the fatigues of the journey this purpose had to be abandoned. The day, therefore, opened with the Mizaj Puri, and this was the prelude to the great State event of the visit, the public darbar, at which the ruling Princes gathered in honour of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses and were presented with the pomp and ceremony which attaches to these functions.

First came the graceful Begum of Bhopal veiled in a lilac burka and wearing a pale blue robe. Her Highness, who was far more self-possessed than many of the robustly masculine chiefs, enjoyed a unique privilege. She alone, amongst the assembled rulers offered no nazar. The Maharaja of Rewa, a dashing figure in lilac and green, followed; he like all the other chiefs presenting his nazar, which was touched and remitted. The Maharaja of Orchha was resplendent in pale blue watered silk slashed with salmon and the ribbon of the Indian Empire. The Maharaja of Datia was again conspicuous by the simplicity of his attire and his splendid jewels. The Raja of Dhar wore a royal blue surcoat brodered with gold; His Highness of Dewas senior branch can de nil and his colleague of Dewas junior branch lilac silk. Up to now the names of the chiefs were called by Mr. Reynolds, and the presentations were conducted to the approach to the dais by Major Maxwell, A.D.C., and the political officers attached to their States. Major Maxwell then retired, and his place was taken by Mr. Warburton, but there was no falling off in the brilliance of the scene. The Nawab of Jaura was splendidly arrayed in royal blue and a salmon pink turban, the Raja of Rutlam in a white surcoat and emerald green, Charkhari made a fine figure in royal blue and emerald green, and Bavin in pale yellow and green; so the gorgeous procession went on. His Royal Highness graciously acknowledged every salute, and then the scarlet clad chobdars behind the State chairs dipped their chowries of yak's tails and mare like moorhens, and bore aloft the golden chatri and the blazing Sunaj Makhia. The mere recital of these primary colours may suggest something of barbaric crudeness and display, yet so perfectly did they harmonise with the environment and spirit of the scene that there was never a suggestion of harshness or of a jarring note. The retirement from the throne was an ordeal; several chiefs found and experienced no little difficulty in facing, but although some boggled in walking backwards there were no conspicuous lapses from etiquette.

The presentations over, His Royal Highness, rising and addressing Major Daly, who was standing near the dais, said in a voice which was heard all over the shamiana.

"Major Daly, will you tell the Chiefs of Central India how glad I am to have this opportunity of seeing them. As they already know I had hoped to meet some of them at Agra, when I should have exchanged visits with them. But owing to the scarcity which has befallen Rajputana our tour has been changed at the last moment and I have been enabled to come to Indore, when fortunately nearly all the Chiefs of Central India are assembled. I wish you to explain to them that I, like all the members of my house, attach great importance to the observance of ceremonial customs, and if time had allowed I should have exchanged visits with the Chiefs as I did in Bombay, but time does not allow, and I must count myself fortunate that I am able to see them at to-day's darbar. My visit here is of a somewhat informal character, and I wish you to clearly explain to all present that any omission which arises purely from a lack of time is to form no precedent nor detract from privileges and customs, which I cherish and esteem as dearly as any Chief in India."

The terms of this gracious message, so completely in accord with the sentiments of the ruling chiefs who dearly cherish their ancient ceremonial privileges and are mortified at any unnecessary curtailment of them, were received with a murmur of applause from those who understood English. This satisfaction was generally reflected on the faces of all present when Major Daly read aloud a Hindustani translation of His Royal Highness's address. There now remained only the presentation of those traditional marks of Oriental courtesy, attar and pan. Two retainers clothed in scarlet stepped forward bearing richly chased silver vessels containing the attar and the pan. His Royal Highness presented these to each ruler in turn, commencing with the Begum of Bhopal, and shook the recipient by the hand. Mr. Reynolds performed a like office for the principal attendants of the chiefs, the first served being the stalwart eldest son of the Begum who with his little brother was in attendance on his mother. The ceremonies were then at an end. Major Daly asked permission to close the darbar. His Royal Highness consented, and once again the stately cortege wended its way down the crimson aisle, and the Prince of Wales departed escorted as upon his arrival by the Central India Horse.

The garden party at the Residency in the afternoon was one of the most pleasant and most profitable entertainments of the visit, for here in the grateful coolness of the declining day Their Royal Highnesses met, with an entire absence of formality, many of those who were presented with pomp and circumstance at the great darbar in the morning. Most of the assembled Chiefs were there as the guests of Major Daly and were again received by the Prince and Princess of Wales, who greeted them with unaffected cordiality. Major Daly and Sir Walter Lawrence undertook the office of interpreter when occasion arose, and this opportunity of meeting the Heir-Apparent to the Imperial Throne and his consort without ceremony was very deeply valued by the Chiefs, and was moreover a delightful reception from every point of view. The Residency gardens form a delightful splash of restful green in the brown plain in which the Residency stands. The band of the Central India Horse played a charming selection of music and the performing elephant of the Raja of Bhatia gave a curious exhibition of his tricks. The spectacle of this huge beast, as well favoured as one who sleeps well at night, with a purple head and trunk, and chain mail on his forehead and quarters, dragging his huge bulk on three legs or walking erect was the quaintest thing in animal training that India can show.

Is it not a remarkable illustration of the power woman wields in the world even in the East that the principal figure in this great gathering of Chiefs from all parts of Central India should be a woman, and one, too, who is close veiled to all men save those of her immediate family, the clever capable ruler of Bhopal. At the reception of the Royal visitors it was on the Begum of Bhopal shrouded in her burka that all eyes were bent. At the darbar the Begum was not only the first in order of precedence but the cynosure of all eyes as she paid homage to the Heir-Apparent, alone among that assemblage offering no nazari, for that form of tribute was remitted in the case of Bhopal by Lord Lansdowne in 1891. This afternoon Her Highness had the honour of being accorded a private audience by the Prince at the Residency, and of showing there the historic treasures of Bhopal, which are to be housed in the museum, which is an important branch of the monumental Victoria Memorial at Calcutta. These treasures include priceless embroideries, the armour and weapons of the fighting Chiefs, who carved out a kingdom for themselves in Central India, in the chaotic days preceding the arrival of the British, and portraits of Bhopal Sovereigns. This afternoon, though in double purdah, behind the veil and within her tent, the presence of the Begum could be felt at the Garden Party. His Royal Highness, for whom Major Daly acted as spokesman, conversed with the Begum at first through the curtain of the tent, and then Her Highness came forward in her durbar dress to acknowledge her appreciation of this honour. Her stalwart sons, the heir to the gadi and the commander of the State cavalry, were presented to Their Royal Highnesses as well as the youngest son. This charming boy of eleven years acted as Lord Curzon's page at Delhi. To-night, again, Her Highness is to be invested with the G.C.I.E. Who can say that woman has not still a great part to play in India?

One other pleasant episode in the day merits chronicling. In the midst of these State ceremonies the poor were not forgotten. Through the consideration of the camp demonstration committee the bataki was beaten in the streets inviting all who would to feast in honour of the Royal Visit. So at five o'clock the maimed and the halt, the leper and the whole, the mendicant and the refugee from inhospitable Marwar, met at the Dhar Kothi and were nobly regaled on puris and wheat fried in ghee, on sweetmeats and vegetables. After sunset the Mahomedans, who are still celebrating their fast, joined the throng. No one in Indore necessarily went hungry, and all were made to feel that this feast was in honour of their future King and Queen.

Lord Kitchener has received the following telegram from the Prince of Wales in reply to a message of welcome:—The Princess and I sincerely thank you and the army for your kind welcome.

Globe.—As was safe to happen, the visit of the Heir-Apparent and his fair Consort to King Edward's Asiatic dominions is being taken full advantage of by both the great feudatories and the lesser nobles to demonstrate their profound loyalty to the British Raj. Much more enlightened than in the past, Holkar, the great chief of Indore, and the other reigning potentates, are now perfectly aware that they are units in the grandest and most widespread federation of States and nationalities the world has ever brought into being. They are equally cognisant of the fact that beneficent and just administration is the only test by which their fitness to govern is now judged. Since His Majesty personally won their hearts and their homage thirty years ago, they have continuously improved in that respect; and it is not going too far to assert that some of the more important States compare advantageously in the matter of capable and progressive government with more than one European country. It is right, therefore, that in recognition of this effacement of traditional prescriptions of rule they should, from time to time, receive the personal congratulations of either the King-Emperor or the next to him in Royal position. It should never be forgotten that to the Asiatic mind, whether in Prince or ryot, loyalty is largely dependent on personal, as distinguished from political, influence. That was the weak point in the East India Company: it had become too much a mystical abstraction. The present nobles know, of course, that the Viceroy is the direct representative of the august head of the Empire. But they equally know that the illustrious official, almost omnipotent though he be during his tenure of the lofty post, possesses no permanence of authority or of governing influence.

Indian Daily Telegraph.—After the whirl of events crowded into the six days of the Royal visit to Bombay and the excessive heat of the Western Capital, the change to the leisurely and less exhausting programmes of the Native States, as well as the great climatic change experienced in Indore, has been welcome by the whole of the Royal entourage. Indore, as first of the Native States to be visited, has emphasised this distinction, and the arrangements of the Royal camp are on the most elaborate scale.

News of the fire at the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway offices in Bombay during the illuminations on Tuesday night has occasioned great regret in camp. I understand the Prince of Wales on learning of the accident sent a message of sympathy to Colonel Olivier, the Agent of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Company.

Madras Mail.—Quite early to-day the stillness of the fresh morning air was broken by the familiar booming of salutes. The assembled Chiefs of Central India were performing the office of mizaj pursi, that is calling at the Residency to enquire after the health of Their Royal Highnesses. It was originally intended that the Prince of Wales should visit the camps of some of the Chiefs informally in the course of a morning ride, but owing to the fatigues of the journey this purpose had to be abandoned. The day, therefore, opened with the mizaj pursi and this was the prelude to the great State event of the visit, the public Durbar, at which the ruling Princes, gathered in honour of the visit of Their Royal Highnesses, were presented with the pomp and ceremony of the venerable custom attached to these functions.

The presentations over, His Royal Highness, rising and addressing Major Daly, who was standing near the dais, delivered a speech in a voice which was heard all over the shamiana.

Standard.—The second day of the Prince and Princess of Wales at Indore was both busy and pleasant. The Residency, where the Royal visitors are staying, is associated with the exciting mutiny episode of the revolt of Holkar's troops and their attack on the building. The bullet-marks are still visible in the wall of the solid Georgian building, with its stone columns and deep verandah, which was so gallantly defended by the British.

Statesman.—Last night (15th) every public building and most of the shops of Indore were illuminated, and the whole city, or monster village, straggling over an immense area, presented a spectacle at once beautiful and fantastic. But the most beautiful and the most fantastic part of it was the river with its still, dark waters reflecting the coloured Chinese lanterns, which hung in natural confusion from the trees on its banks and the lamps ranged in zig-zag rows along its winding course. The centre of the animation, if animation be the proper word for a scene of dreamy charm, was the Residency boat house. Under the ample awnings spread near the river-bank sat a number of Native Chiefs, the Chiefs of Bundelkhand, on gold and silver plated thrones of quaint design, with their legs tucked under and their hands resting on lions or tigers of gilt wood. There they sat in their gorgeous state robes, while around them stood their attendants, some bearing enormous fly-flags of horse-hair or peacock feathers, others holding aloft the banners of their masters. The lawns beyond swarmed with guests, mostly European Residents, officers, and ladies, while from the distance came the strains of bagpipes and drums and clarionets floating on the night air, and upon all shone the calm silver light of the moon out of a sky serene and limpid like the waters of the river. The town itself, however, offered to the genuine student of the real East a sight of far deeper interest. The low-roofed open shops, the balconied mosques, and the ricketty houses were all decked out in tremulous oil-lamps, amid the flickering light and shade of which moved the silhouettes of women in mysterious veils, while in the streets below the creaking of tongas, the liquid music of bullock-bells and the hum of human voices formed a drowsy chorus in wonderful consonance with the romantic environment. Above all these sounds rose the chant of the fakir as, staff in one hand and rosary in the other, he wandered about invoking the blessing of Allah on the charitable men of Indore and all true believers.

Times of India.—One other pleasant episode in the day merits chronicling. In the midst of these State ceremonies the poor were not forgotten. Through the consideration of the camp demonstration committee, the bataki was beaten in the streets inviting all who would to feast in honour of the Royal visit. So at five o'clock the maimed and leper and the whole, the mendicant and the refugee from inhospitable Marwar met at the Dhar Kothi, and were nobly regaled on puris of flour and wheat fried in ghee, on sweetmeats and vegetables. After sunset the Mahomedans, who were still celebrating their fast, joined the throng. No one in Indore necessarily went hungry, and all were made to feel that this feast was in honour of their future King and Queen.

An eventful day closed with a State dinner, an investiture and a reception. At the dinner His Royal Highness had on his right Major Daly, next to whom came the Princess of Wales, Major-General O'Moore Leagh, Lady Eva Dugdale, Sir Walter Lawrence, and the Hon'ble Mrs. Salkeld. On his left were Mrs. Daly, Sir A. Bigge and Lady Leagh. Only two toasts were proposed, those of the King-Emperor submitted by the Prince of Wales, and the Prince of Wales proposed by Major Daly. Then in the drawing room of the historic Residency His Royal Highness personally invested the Begum of Bhopal with the G.C.I.E., and the Raja of Sailana with the K.C.I.E. These picturesque ceremonies deserve fuller notice than can be given them at this late hour, and an adequate description must be reserved for to-morrow.

Broad Arrow, The Naval & Military Gazette.—We are not an imaginative race, and we are self-governing. Therefore we cannot understand what the visit of the future Sovereign means to the people of India. Good as our rule is, it lacks the personal note, and this to them is essential. Moreover the regrettable difference between the Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief has unsettled their mind. For the first time they realise that the Government of India is not an impersonal expression of power, but a house divided against itself. The military and political effect of such an idea might be deplorable. But the visit of the Prince has diverted Native thought into a safer channel. In him our Indian subjects see not only the embodiment of England, but their ruler. After all Lord Kitchener and Lord Curzon are merely his servants. It is not to them India pays fealty, but to the Royal House. This fact might have been thrust into the background only that the Prince is on the spot to visualise it. For when the Native has a person to fire his imagination, his reason leaves him. That is why periodical visits from the Heir-Apparent should be a feature of our Indian policy: The Government, from which India derives so many blessings, starves her best instincts, because it is too much like a machine. The late Queen was a beautiful legend even in her life—a symbol worshipped with a passion we can never understand. Since her death the King has done much to create another feeling to take its place. But he has been able to influence only the Princes of India. The Heir-

Apparent and his sympathetic wife will be able to touch the heart of the Indian people. Unfortunately the personal note in Anglo-Indian life has been lacking of late. It is one of the most significant signs of our rule, and an honour to the Army, that the dominating figures in Indian imagination have been soldiers. Such men as Lord Roberts and the late Sir Donald Stewart were loved throughout the Peninsula; Lord Kitchener and Lord Curzon only admired, because neither of them has personal charm. It is often said of the latter that he has an Oriental strain. So he has, but it helped him merely in a political sense, never with the Indian people. To impress them a man must have not only weight of character, but chivalrous courtesy and perfect sympathy. This combination is oftener found in the British soldier than in the British civilian. But to this type Lord Kitchener does not belong, and the Indian Army knows it. The Prince is in India at the psychic moment.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Two honours were conferred—the G.C.I.E., on the Begum of Bhopal and the K.C.I.E., on the Raja of Sailana. Once again the Begum became the centre of the whole of this assemblage. In many respects Bhopal leads where States under purely masculine régime lag. The line of Begums has been maintained so long and they have been so highly capable and so loyal to the Raj that one is tempted to regret that the line must come to an end, as Her Highness has sons and they have male children.

The procession was marshalled in the ante-room, and then, preceded by their staff in full dress, Their Royal Highnesses walked slowly to the dais whereon the chairs of State stood under a portrait of His Majesty the King-Emperor. Captain Lord Crichton bore the insignia of the G.C.I.E. on a cushion. Sir Walter Lawrence now led the Begum to the dais—a graceful dignified little figure still clad in her pale blue barkha and wearing the rich flowing cloak of the Indian Empire—a royal blue—upborne by two fascinating little pages, sons of her minister. Major Daly rolled out Her Highness's titles, Lord Crichton offered the insignia, and His Royal Highness placed it round the Begum's neck and shook hands with her. The Begum bent over his hand and in tones of deep feeling murmured her thanks in somewhat broken English. She said:—

"I thank Your Royal Highness from the bottom of my heart for the distinguished honour you have done me in personally investing me with the insignia of this great Order. I pray God to bless and preserve our beloved King-Emperor, and also Your Royal Highnesses."

Bowing profoundly again Her Highness moved to the side of the dais, where she remained whilst the Raja of Sailana, a worthy Chief who had done much to promote the cause of education in his State, was presented with the K.C.I.E.

Their Royal Highnesses then left the dais and spent some time in conversation with many of those present before retiring.

Gentlewoman.—The welcome given to the Prince and Princess of Wales when first they put foot on Indian soil was great indeed, and must have filled their hearts with emotion. Thirty years ago, all but a day, the King had tasted the same experience. It had been the dream of his life to visit India. It was the grief in later life of Queen Victoria, to whom the East so irresistibly appealed, that she had not undertaken the journey when her strength might have permitted it. Well! the Princess of Wales rejoices that she is the first Princess of Wales to appear before the Indian people, and the Prince, in a terse and eloquent speech, such as one expects from him, thanked the multitude of Princes, Anglo-Indians, and natives which greeted them at Bombay for the stirring welcome accorded to him and his Princess.

Of books, the Princess of Wales, who is an omnivorous reader, took out a large number to the East, and needless to tell, photographs of all her little ones, including that of the new baby Prince John. As for the Prince, he chiefly occupied himself when shopping prior to his journey with getting together a splendid new lot of guns. The cabin of His Royal Highness, like that of the Princess, on the Renown is simply furnished. A photograph, the same he took out on the Ophir, of his mother the Queen, occupies the place of honour in the cabin. Never submitted to the public, the photograph shows the Queen in a natural attitude leaning over the back of a chair. The face wears a half-roguish smile. Across the photograph is written in the Queen's own hand "Old mother dear." Her son and daughters always tease her about the extreme juvenility of her appearance.

Graphic.—The singularly happy gift by which British Royalty always says the right thing at the right moment has characterised all the oratorical performances of the Prince and Princess of Wales since they landed at the Apollo Bunder. Whether addressing some assembly of proud nobles—there are none prouder than the Indian aristocracy—or talking to Anglo-Indian officials of high rank, the Heir-Apparent has never once strayed into magniloquence. He has spoken as a friend among friends, always on the assumption that, whatever their creed or colour, they were, like himself, full of genuine concern for the peace and prosperity of the great Asiatic peninsula. But it may be conceded that the Prince's difficulties in avoiding the tone and manner of what may be called Grand Mogulism were distinctly less than those which beset His Royal spouse when brought into the society of flocks of purdah ladies. How was she to speak to members of her own sex who, rigorously secluded from early infancy, remain children all their lives? But thanks to natural intuition, the foundation of all tact, the Princess acquitted herself so successfully, whether going through elaborate ceremonies of compliments and homage, or giving voice to her feelings and impressions, that every zenana beauty must have experienced an intensity of personal gratification. And we make no doubt whatever that when the Royal tour comes to an end, some four or five months hence, the prolonged visit, so kindly, so tender in its outward manifestations, will become a prominent mark in Indian history—a mark such as Shah Jehan or Aurungzebe or Tamerlane could never have credited, for all their Grand Mogulism.

Illustrated London News.—Udaipur, "the City of Sunrise," stands unique among the cities of India. It is the residence and capital of the Maharana of Udaipur, who is the head of the noblest clan of the Rajputs, that of the Sesodia, and whose boast it is that they never allowed any of their princesses to marry a Muhammadan. The Hindus regard the Maharana as the direct descendant of their national hero, Rama, and it is at least certain that this family has ruled in Rajputana since the year 144 A.D., or for more than 1,760 years. Until the reign of Akbar of the Mogul dynasty, Chittor was their capital, and it was only about 1570 that Udai Singh founded Udaipur, and called it after his own name. The city, with its royal palace overlooking a romantic lake in which minor palaces had been constructed on islets, is probably the most picturesque in India. Colonel Tod, in his great work on "Rajasthan," describes the scene, how "from the palace terrace the city and the valley lie before the spectator, whose vision is bounded only by the hills shutting out the plains, while from the summit of the palace nothing obstructs its range over lake and mountain." The appearance of the city as the traveller approaches it from the east is singularly striking, and the effect is not diminished by the strange rose-tinted colour that the buildings present. The city itself is grim-looking and surrounded by a battlemented wall. Over it rise the palace and other buildings amid verdant woods. It is as if some fairy power had let them drop on the ridge from the skies. At a certain distance from the town runs a line of fortresses, originally constructed to defend all the mountain-passes, but now sinking into decay, which heightens their picturesqueness. Jagmandir and Jagnewas are the names of the two palaces in Lake Pachola. They have given shelter in days of trouble to the exile and the fugitive. Jehangir, afterwards Emperor, found safety there, and during the storm of the Mutiny many English fugitives owed their lives to the loyalty of the Maharana, who put them in these places of security. The Temple of Jagannath is one of the principal buildings of Udaipur, but the city is full of palaces belonging to the ruler, members of the ruling family and the Chief nobles or "chakores" of the State, whose lineage is scarcely less illustrious. The noble Rajputs of Udaipur are "the children of the Sun," and their achievements fill the heroic tales of the Mahabharatha.

Indore is a very different city from that just described, and is quite a modern town, dating from about 1770. It has only been the capital of the Holkar family, who rule Indore in Central India, since the year 1818. It is situated on the river Katki, at an elevation of about 1,800 feet above the sea, and the Maharaja's palace, with a curious, lofty, many-storied gateway is the only building of any architectural pretensions in the town. The Lal Bagh public gardens containing a fine zoological collection, are one of the most attractive features of the town; and it may be noted that great expense has been incurred in improving the sanitary condition of Indore. It is well lighted and well drained, and the water supply is good and abundant. Another feature of Indore is the fine residence and park of the British official called the Governor-General's Agent for Central India. This Residency is situated at a little distance from the native town, and is of considerable extent, including a bazaar and barracks. Indore is one of the three great Maratha States of India—the other two being Baroda and Gwalior—and the present ruling Maharaja is a boy, now being educated at the celebrated Rajkumar College, specially instituted for the Princes and nobles of Central India. The State of Indore is one of the richest for its size in India; and it may be mentioned that the cultivation of the poppy for opium manufacture contributes largely to its prosperity.

Indian Daily News.—At the reception in the Residency after dinner the Chiefs were present, and the Prince of Wales invested the Begum of Bhopal with the insignia of a G.C.I.E. and the Raja of Sailana with the insignia of a K.C.I.E. Her Highness the Begum was attended by two small pages, and after the investiture thanked His Royal Highness for the honour conferred upon her.

Some more than ordinary interest attached to the investiture of the Raja of Sailana with the insignia of a K.C.I.E. Sailana is an offshoot of the State of Rutlam, which was conferred upon its founder by the Emperor of Delhi. The rulers of both States are Rachod Rajputs, and have a common ancestry with the Maharajas of Jodhpore. Rutlam was founded by the heroic Ratan Singh, the foundation of whose fortunes was laid in 1646 in romantic fashion. He was the grandson of Udaya Singh, who occupied the Marwad throne towards the close of the sixteenth century. Ratan Singh, whose father rendered signal service to the Emperor Shah Jehan, attended the Imperial Court at Delhi when a young man of twenty-three. It happened that a mad elephant broke loose in the city, and Ratan Singh displayed great courage in attacking and wounding it. In recognition of his courage Shah Jehan bestowed upon the young Prince a rich jagir, together with twelve villages in Malwa. There he founded the city of Ratlam. Ratan Singh was shortly afterwards killed in battle at Fatchabad, where he fought with the forces of the Emperor Shah Jehan against the Princes Aurangzeb and Morad, who were making their way to Delhi, where the Emperor lay ill. Ratan Singh died leaving a forlorn hope with a few picked comrades, and after his death his seven Ranis immolated themselves as suttees, holding in their laps the turban of the dead prince. The subsequent history of the State of Rutlam was troubled, but eventually Chhatra Sal, one of the sons of Ratan Singh, was placed upon the throne. He was a valiant soldier and greatly distinguished himself in the service of their empire, but in 1709 his son, Hathri, was killed in the battle of Pannala in the Deccan, and Chhatra Sal, grief stricken, became an ascetic recluse.

Until he died Rutlam was administered by his son, Keshri Singh, and thereafter the territories were apportioned between Keshri Singh, his brother Pratab Singh, and the old Chief's grandson Baira Sal. Rutlam fell to the elder of the sons, and Pratab Singh received Raote, which is now Sailana. Pratab Singh, dissatisfied with the appointment, and Baira Sal having retired to the Imperial Court, seized his elder brother who was put to death, and in 1717 Pratab Singh added Rutlam to his territories of Raote. He was, however, shortly afterwards killed in battle with the forces raised by Joy Singh, the younger son of Pratab Singh's murdered brother. This province had been adopted by his uncle before the death of his father, and when that tragedy occurred he fled from Rutlam, and aided by his kinsmen raised the army which overthrew Pratab Singh. Joy Singh after his success invited his elder brother Oman Singh, then at Delhi, to occupy the Rutlam gadi and himself took Raote. He subsequently removed his capital from Raote to Sailana, which to-day gives its name to the State of which Jay Singh is regarded as the founder. After his death fratricidal feuds resulted in the success of Ajab Singh, the youngest of five brothers, several of whom had already died. His Highness Raja Jeswant Singh, the Chief who has been to-night invested with the insignia of a Knight Commandership of the Order of the Indian Empire, is the best ruler of the State. He succeeded to the gadi in October 1894 on the death of the late Chief Dhuleh, who reigned forty-five years, and adopted the present Chief as his heir. His Highness springs from Simlia, a sief given by the successful Ajab Singh early in the eighteenth century to the elder brother, whom he defeated. Born in September, 1864, His Highness the Raja Jeswant Singh was educated at the Rajkumar College, Indore, and succeeding to the gadi when he was 31, has shown himself to be a ruler of enlightenment and ability. At the time of his accession the State required a capable Chief, and during the ten years that have since passed its affairs have greatly improved. His Highness especially interested himself in famine relief work and in education, and is one of the moving spirits to whom the inauguration of the scheme for the new Daly College is due. At the close of the investiture ceremonies, a number of presentations to Their Royal Highnesses were made.

This morning the Prince of Wales reviewed the Bhopal Victoria Lancers and presented a new colour to the York and Lancaster Regiment, both ceremonies being impressively fine. The Prince, accompanied by his staff, rode to the parade ground in stately procession, the Princess driving in a carriage. During the parade Her Royal Highness viewed the ceremonials from a tent pitched near the saluting base. His Royal Highness wore a dark blue undress staff uniform of a general. As he rode on to the ground he was received with a Royal salute. The Bhopal Lancers, under the Bhopal Commander-in-Chief, made a very brave show on parade, their uniforms being dark green with yellow facings, their head-dresses being light green and their cummerbunds blue and gold. The pennants on their lances were light green and white, and as they marched and galloped past the saluting base they were a very gallant and picturesque sight. After marching and trotting past the Lancers wheeled and galloped past in squadrons, and at the close the Prince of Wales congratulated the Bhopal Commander-in-Chief on the very fine display they made.

More striking and impressive was the ceremony of presenting the new colours to the York and Lancasters. The regiment marched on to the parade ground immediately after the Lancers' review was over. They were commanded by Colonel Mayne, C.B., and looked very smart indeed. The Prince of Wales accompanied by Major General O'Moore Creagh and staff, dismounted, advanced towards regiment and was received with a Royal salute. Then to the strains of "Auld Lang Syne" the old colours were paraded past the Prince, and the regiment being finally placed in rear it formed the three sides of a square, and the drums having been piled in the centre the new colours encased were placed upon them and afterwards unfurled. The religious part of the ceremony was solemnly conducted by the Chaplain. The band played the hymn "Brightly Gleams Our Banner," accompanying the voices, and after a prayer the colours were formally presented. His Royal Highness addressed the regiment, congratulating them on their gallant record.

The Prince of Wales addressed the regiment as follows:— "Colonel Mayne, officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the First York and Lancaster,—I am much pleased to have had this opportunity of presenting you with your new colours. It is just fifteen years ago that I performed a similar ceremony for your 2nd Battalion at Barbados. I am proud to think that the colours now carried by both battalions of your regiment have been presented by me. Remember that the colours are the emblems of past achievements. That spirit of loyalty and devotion which they inspire is an incentive to brave deeds. And I feel sure that the gallantry displayed by your battalion in the campaigns recorded on these colours will be maintained whenever you may be called upon to fight for King and country. I now commit these colours to your keeping. They will now remain safe and untarnished in your hands."

Colonel Mayne, in replying to the address of the Prince of Wales at the presentation of the colours this morning, said:— "Your Royal Highness,—In the name of the Battalion, I beg to thank you most sincerely for the great honour accorded to us at your hands and for your gracious words. It enhances the value of the presentation of these colours, that we know that amidst the strain of your most onerous social obligations, Your Royal Highness has stepped out of your way to give your valuable time in order to grant this honour to the Battalion. I trust that those who in the future serve under these colours, knowing at whose hands they have received them may be spurred to even greater deeds than those of the past in serving their Sovereign and their country."

After breakfast this morning the Prince received a visit from the Maharaja of Holkar, subsequently paying a return visit, the Princess meanwhile returning the visit paid by the Begum of Bhopal yesterday. This afternoon Their Royal Highnesses open the Edward Hall erected by the Indore Darbar as a memorial of the accession of the King-Emperor. After this ceremony they drive direct to the station, leaving immediately for Udaipur.

The building is very handsome and has been carried out from the designs of Mr. C. F. Stevens, the architect, of Bombay. It has been completed in twenty-one months, in spite of interruptions caused by the plague. It is in the Hindu style of architecture, the corners of the building terminating in domes. The vestibule is formed by a fine clock tower, with clock and chimes, rising to a height of ninety feet, surmounted by a very elegant dome. The entire building is faced with patent stone of soft red colour, and its finely carved columns, cornices, parapets, domes and all other dressings are of scions stone. The flooring of the hall is of white and black marble, and the ceiling of teak and plaster is decorated in cream, pale blue and gold. The building is lighted by electricity. There was a large gathering at the ceremony, and the Prince and Princess received an ovation.

Ladies' Field.—The Prince and Princess of Wales reached Bombay last week, and received such greeting as only the East knows how to give. The Royal visitors, who arrived in the best possible health, are said to have been deeply impressed by their welcome to India, so different in its nature and surroundings from any they had hitherto experienced, either at home or in His Majesty's dominions beyond the seas. Not for nothing had Bombay been in a fever of preparation for over six months, and the scene on the Bunder on Thursday will live in the memory of those privileged to see it. The outgoing Viceroy—happily much better in health—and Lady Curzon remained on purpose to bid Their Royal Highnesses welcome to the great Empire, and were the first to board the Renown. They were followed by Lord Lamington. The Prince of Wales has already created the most favourable impression, and the Princess won all hearts as soon as she appeared by reason of her ready smiles and exceeding graciousness. She wore one of her prettiest toilettes—a white gown trimmed with turquoise-blue, a toque to match, and pearl and turquoise ornaments. For her drives through the streets and her receptions of the native ladies Her Royal Highness has worn some of the most elaborate of the muslin and lace frocks which she took out from England. At the Government House reception on Saturday night she was dressed in pale blue silk, with a superb diamond tiara and necklace. The weather is hot, but at present not disagreeably so. Lady Amphil, whose husband is Governor of Madras, is acting as hostess for the Governor of Bombay, in the unfortunate absence, through continued illness, of Lady Lamington.

Madras Mail.—The following Native Chiefs under the Madras Government have been invited to be present at the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales at Madras at the end of January next:—The Maharaja of Travancore, the Raja of Cochin, the Raja of Pudukkottai, the Nawab of Banganapalle, the Raja of Sandur, the Maharaja of Bobbili, the Raja of Venkatagiri, the Raja of Vizianagram, the Raja of Jeypore, and the Zamorin of Calicut.

Madras Mail.—After breakfast, there was the State visit of Holkar to His Royal Highness, conducted with all due ceremony, and the return visit of the Prince to Holkar, while the Princess paid an informal visit to the Begum.

The final function of the Indore visit was the opening of the King Edward Hall erected by the Indore Durbar in commemoration of the ascension of King Edward to the throne. The hall is a simple but graceful structure in the Hindu style of architecture. It comprises a hall 112 feet long with a stage and a gallery surrounded by open verandahs, the four corners of the building terminating in towers with domes. The main entrance on the south side leads to a vestibule formed by a large clock tower, rising to a height of ninety feet and capped by a large dome. This clock is equipped with chimes. The building was erected from the designs of Mr. C. F. Stevens of Bombay, and is a notable addition to the limited architectural features of Indore.

Long before the Prince was timed to leave the Residency, the streets were thronged with people, all wishing to have the last look at the King-Emperor's son and his Consort. The Prince, wearing a grey frock coat and hat, and the Princess charmingly dressed in light blue with hat to match, arrived at 5-30 and were received by a Guard-of-Honour. The Maharaja Holkar met their Royal Highnesses at the steps of the building, then walking slowly up the centre of the Hall, they took their place in the great silver howdahs placed on red and gold carpets, on either side of which were silver palanquins. All the Chiefs were assemble and a number of ladies viewed the proceedings from behind a pink gauze screen in the gallery. The Maharaja in a clear voice came forward and read his speech:—

Your Royal Highnesses.—The honour which Your Royal Highnesses have conferred on me and my State by your presence here makes this day the most memorable in my life.

My grandfather was similarly honoured by His Most Gracious Majesty, our present Emperor, when he was Prince of Wales, and my father who took part in these rejoicings of thirty years ago cherishes their memory undimmed. It was he who designed this building to commemorate His Majesty's accession, and I owe him a debt of gratitude for having bequeathed to me the privilege of sharing in this token of the loyal service to His Majesty and the great distinction of welcoming Your Royal Highnesses to the Crown. We endow the undertaking with this gracious mark of Your Royal approval in the presence of my brother Chiefs, assembled to do honour to Your Royal Highnesses. In Bombay countless thousands of His Majesty's subjects assembled to greet Your Royal Highnesses' arrival on these shores. Their ovation was but the prelude to the welcome from the many millions who watch for Your Royal Highnesses' progress through the land. We count ourselves most fortunate that Central India has been the first stage in Your Royal Highnesses' tour, and that we Chiefs have been enabled to express to Your Royal Highnesses in person, for ourselves and on behalf of our people, our enthusiastic loyalty towards our gracious suzerain and your illustrious House. In asking your Royal Highness to be pleased to open the King Edward's Hall, I have one more favour to ask. We wish that there should be in Indore a special memento of Your Royal Highnesses' visit, and subject to Your Royal Highnesses' approval, we propose that it should take the symbolic form of the new Courts of Justice.

The Prince then rising and still in the howdah, said in a few words how pleased he was to declare the Hall open. Then pressing a button, the Hall suddenly was illuminated with hundreds of electric lights. After the ceremony, the Prince and Princess walked round the building and received many of the Chiefs in the garden—where refreshments were served—shaking hands and conversing with them for nearly an hour after sunset. The gardens were brilliantly illuminated and some splendid fireworks were displayed.

The Prince and Princess, escorted by a detachment of the Central India Horse and Holkar's mounted troops, at 6-30 p.m. drove to the station through an arch lighted with electric lamps. The farewell at the station was informal. The Prince thanked Major and Mrs. Daly for the great trouble they had taken in making the Residency so comfortable. The Prince shook hands with General O'More Creagh and all the officials, then said a few words to the Maharajah, Holkar and Mr. Bosanquet and the train steamed away. Three cheers were given by Major Daly as the Royal carriage moved out of the station.

The visit to Indore was an unqualified success. Their Royal Highnesses met in formal Durbar all the leading Chiefs embraced in the Central India Agency. They met them again sans ceremony in the garden party at the Residency and at the Investiture, and entered into close personal intercourse with them. Henceforward the tie which binds the rulers of Central India to the Royal House will be more than a deep sense of loyalty and one of personal attachment to the Heir-Apparent and his Consort. Although there was a certain sense of disappointment at the enforced abandonment of the ceremonial visits, this disappeared before the gracious message and Their Royal Highness's unaffected charm of manner. Not only the Chiefs but everyone prominently occupied in the public life of these States, has been presented, and afforded an opportunity of discussing his work. Moreover, the arrangements for the State ceremonies and for the comfort of all in camp have been perfect. Their Royal Highnesses recognised this in graceful gifts to those who have been most active, notably Major Hugh Daly, but all left Indore full of gratitude for the extreme hospitality and consideration received.

Queen, The Lady's Newspaper.—No doubt, high reasons of State, not obvious to the ordinary layman, govern in large measure the particular Native States to be visited by the Prince of Wales, and the length of the stay at each Court. No less than three Rajput States—Udaipur, Jaipur, and Bikanir—will be honoured by Their Royal Highnesses.

The choice of Mewar (Udaipur) is sufficiently obvious. It is considered the premier State among the score of independent Principalities which make up Rajputana. The relative importance of the great Indian Chiefs are indicated, as is well known, by the quality of the salute to which they are entitled. The importance of the Maharana of Udaipur is shown by the fact that only three native sovereigns in the whole of the Indian Empire, the Nizam of Hyderabad, the Maharaja of Baroda, and the Maharaja of Mysore, are entitled to a bigger salute than the Maharana, that is to twenty-one instead of nineteen guns.

The salute is, perhaps, the most highly valued honour of any granted by the Viceroy as representing the King-Emperor, and the number of guns to which each ruling Prince is entitled has been at the bottom of the bitterest inter-state rivalries. For instance, the precedence of the two premier Rajput States, Udaipur and Jodhpur, was only settled as recently as 1870 in favour of Udaipur, who is entitled to nineteen guns, while Jodhpur has to rest satisfied with seventeen. The last important revision of the Table of Salutes took place in 1877 on the assumption by Queen Victoria of the title of Empress of India.

The various Rajput dynasties are among the most ancient in India, far older than that of the Imperial House of Akbar. Indeed, the Maharana boasts of being the lineal representative of the mythical Rama. The Rajputs even claim that this sovereign can count the Cæsars of Rome among his ancestors!

In the Hindu Pantheon every Maharana of Udaipur is a sacred personage, and is an object of worship, like the priest kings of ancient Egypt, and in pictures is always portrayed with an aureole around his head, while Mount Abu is the Rajput Olympus.

It seems curious that Udaipur, often described as the most beautiful city in India, has hitherto been so neglected by tourists. Indeed, the only Rajput cities visited by nine out of ten English travellers are Jaipur and Ajmir. Its difficulty of access, till the branch line from Chitore was constructed a few years ago, no doubt partly accounts for this.

The first view of the city of Udaipur from Sujjangarh Hill, with its magnificent row of palaces springing sheer from a beautiful lake studded with islands and surrounded by wooded hills, is one of the most striking in India.

A famous traveller has compared the Palace at Udaipur to Windsor, and there is a certain superficial resemblance to justify the epithet an Oriental Windsor. Both enjoy those elements of scenic charm—massive towers and frowning ramparts, combined with water and woodland. Perhaps, though, a happier comparison between Udaipur would be Windermere, especially as the Oriental note is not here very prominent, at all events in a distant view of the city and lake. A Scotchman might perhaps find a striking resemblance between Udaipur Lake and Loch Awe, the topographical parallel being intensified by the small island facing the city, which has a curious similarity to the island at the head of Loch Awe crowned by the ruins of Kilchurn Castle.

The Royal Palace can only be visited by a permit obtained through the Resident. It is an imposing pile of granite and marble, with walls over 100 feet high and flanked with octagonal towers. It has been well described by Colonel Tod, the author of the Rajputana classic, The Annals of Rajasthan.

It stands upon the very crest of a ridge running parallel to, but considerably elevated above, the margin of the lake; the terrace, which is at the east and chief front of the palace, extends throughout its length, and is supported by a triple row of arches from the declivity of the ridge. The height of this arcaded wall is full 50 feet; and, although all is hollow beneath, yet it is so admirably constructed that an entire range of stables is built on the extreme verge of the terrace, on which the whole personal force of the Rana, elephants, horse, and foot, are often assembled. From this terrace the city and valley lie before the spectator, whose vision is bounded only by the hills shutting out the plains, while from the summit of the palace nothing obstructs its range over lake and mountain.

The other palaces can rarely be seen by strangers, and the only other specific sight in the city is the great Jagannath (Juggernaut) Temple. It is considered by Fergusson a good example of the Indo-Aryan style, though of late date (about 1640). The porch is approached by a bold flight of steps ornamented on each side by a large stone elephant, and in front is a shrine with a brazen image of Garuda.

A boating excursion on the lake will, however, be far more enjoyable than a visit to a temple which is not of great artistic or historical interest. One of the Maharana's boats is usually at the service of tourists if application is made to the Resident. The islands which stud the lake are usually covered with gardens and groves attached to some fine palace or picturesque kiosk; some suggest the Borromean Islands on the Lago di Maggiore in Italy. The most interesting is the northern Island, called Jagmandar, to which retreat Shah Jehan retired when in revolt against his father Jahangir. It was here, too, that during the Mutiny the English ladies from the Neemuch garrison found a safe asylum.

Two miles or so from the city is the Royal Cemetery (perhaps one of the most beautiful in India), where the Maharanas of Udaipur have been cremated and buried since Udaipur was founded. The monuments, quite apart from their lovely surroundings, a beautifully kept garden planted with magnificent trees, are alone worth the journey to Udaipur. The finest is the mausoleum of Singram Singh, which contains the ashes of this prince and of "twenty-one of his wives." The cenotaph is of considerable architectural merit and of ambitious design, an octagonal porticoed hall crowned with a dome. Another very striking mausoleum is that of Amir Singh, which might have been a copy, with some slight Jain modifications, of the famous mausoleum of Halicarnassus.

Sphere.—According to the official programme the Prince of Wales to-day reaches Udaipur from Indore. He will be the guest of the Maharaja of Udaipur until the 20th; he will therefore spend three days in this interesting Rajput state. The Royal palace in which the Prince of Wales will be received is a most imposing building constructed of granite and marble, most effectively placed on the crest of a ridge above the lake. Udaipur is largely a rugged jungle-clad district; the altitude of the city itself is about 2,000 feet. The roads to the town are guarded by a chain of fortresses which are now, however, in a state of decay. Commanding the city on the south side is the fortified hill of Ekingarh. On entering Udaipur the Prince of Wales visits the district of India known as Rajputana, the collection of Native States that enjoy almost complete autonomy under the British residencies. The people of which the Maharaja is the head are a very proud race owning the soil; they have from time to time furnished ruling dignitaries to many of the Native States. In point of population, however, the district is not a very notable one. The population of Udaipur City is about 50,000; it contains some marvellous Hindu or Brahmin architecture dating from A.D. 1060.

Times.—The Bhopal Victoria Lancers which the Prince of Wales inspected to-day are among the most efficient cavalry in the Imperial Service Troops. The Begum takes the greatest pride and interest in the regiment, which is commanded by her second son. The troopers are of a good fighting stamp, the horses are of the right kind, and the discipline and organization are excellent. Their appearance on parade to-day gave the greatest satisfaction, showing careful drill.

The Bhopalis, who have Afghan blood in them, are the descendants of the men who carved out this small Mahomedan kingdom in the Mahratta country, and are now being largely enlisted. The Prince will see large gatherings of Imperial Service Troops at Lahore, where the Punjab regiments will be assembled, and at Gwalior, where the Maharaja Sindhia of Gwalior will manœuvre his troops during the Royal visit in December. The feudatory chiefs who maintain this class of regiments are particularly anxious that the Prince should inspect them.

Times of India.—The following Western Command Order received under Western Command No. 44-Camp, dated Bombay, 15th November 1905, is published for information:—

“His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, prior to his departure from Bombay on 14th November 1905, expressed his approval of the Military arrangements made during his stay in Bombay.

His Royal Highness commanded the Lieutenant-General Commanding Western Command to make known to all ranks his entire satisfaction with the manner in which the duties had been performed during the somewhat exceptionally hot weather.”

SELECTIONS FROM NATIVE PAPERS PUBLISHED IN BENGAL FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 18TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Daily Hitavadi.—The Daily Hitavadi [Calcutta] of the 11th November has the following under the heading “The Prince of Wales in India”:—

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has landed in India and will soon come to Bengal. He will be loudly welcomed by the dogs whose sole aim in life is to lick others' feet and look for the leavings of the table, and the jackdaws in peacock's feathers will raise a loud chorus. But will no one be found who can bring to His Royal Highness's notice the real condition of the country? Here and there illuminations will take place; but those whose heart's blood, whose money will furnish them, will not be able to speak out their minds, but will have to suppress their feelings and remain in the dark as ever. The Prince will see only smiling faces and go away. Will this duplicity go on for ever?

If His Royal Highness could see the real condition of the country, if he could see that the subject people are poor, starving and discontented, if he could know that the people of the country wanted a statue of Lord Curzon in cow-dung and not in marble, that the injustice, oppression and partiality committed by the officials have almost driven the life out of the Indians, if anybody could hold up to him true pictures of the harassment of the non-official speaker and preacher in the Punjab, of the oppression of students in Bengal, of the partialities perpetrated in the Police Court, he would see quite a different picture from that which he will see. Cannot such a picture be, by any means, shown to him? The Reception Committee will consist of a large number of men. Many will join in the reception either willingly or against their will.

Will none of them be able to inform His Royal Highness of the real state of things? Let black flags be suspended from every house, so that the Prince might see that the hearts' blood of India had turned black like ink. The refulgence of the buildings illuminated by the Government will make these black flags look all the more prominent. Let him see that the loyal Indian subjects are welcoming him with tears in their eyes, that the bright lights resembling the lurid glare given out by burning houses is concealing the house-owners' cry of despair. If he sees these things he will have to say to his father on his return “I have seen your India. It exists only in name.”

India was not in its present miserable condition when the present Emperor condescended to pay it a visit as Prince of Wales. At that time there were contentment, sympathy, sense of justice and an impartial judicial administration in the country, and it had not as yet seen a population sickly, discontented, distrustful and lacking all signs of health and prosperity. Who is that man who brought restlessness and discontent in a country which was in the enjoyment of peace and contentment? Who is that man who brought want in the store-house of plenty and made a confiding people distrustful? Will no one ask the future Emperor of India to think over these questions? And should he go away deceived?

In no sphere is there impartiality or appreciation of merit, complexion of the skin being the only merit appreciated everywhere. Let His Royal Highness consider only the treatment which the native soldiery receive. The native soldiery are prepared to lay down their lives for a pittance of ten or twenty rupees a month. But they receive no encouragement and do not receive equal treatment or similar weapons with European soldiers when on the battle field. Is this the way His Royal Highness's grandmother's Proclamation is respected? His Royal Highness should see and understand these things before he goes away.

Will not somebody explain to him the light in which we view these amusements and festivities? Where is that worthy son of Bengal who will come forward to lay before His Royal Highness the real condition of the country?

We must plainly tell the authorities: If you have any manliness in you, if you have any strength in your minds do not conceal, but plainly inform the Prince of the real state of things and give the subject people opportunities of laying their real feelings before His Royal Highness. If you fail in this, you should suffer the penalty of your sin. Do not try to deceive the Heir-Apparent to the Throne as you are attempting to deceive the English public. If you have the blood of Englishmen in your veins, do not tarnish your country's name by such misdeeds. From undue love of your own fatherland, do not bring ruin upon the country which you gained by deceit and forgery, which you kept spell-bound by showing it Britain's captivating appearance, and which you one day brought under your influence by the suppression of anarchy and crime; do not through carelessness lose the Empire which is the brightest jewel in Britain's Crown. Countries and Empires have come and gone. But do you not throw this golden country of India into the jaws of eternity? There is yet time for you to turn honest. There is yet time for you to turn just. There is yet time for you to keep to the path of righteousness. Follow this advice and Britain's glory will become brighter and you will gain prosperity, while through your grace we shall be raised and become prosperous too.

Hitavarta.—The Hitavarta [Calcutta] of the 12th November regrets that the Royal visit to India has occurred at a time when we are unable to give him cheerful reception.

Hindi Bangavasi.—In noticing the Royal visit to Calcutta, the Hindi Bangavasi [Calcutta] of the 13th November prays that His Royal Highness may see with his own eyes the actual condition of the people of this country and hear with his own ears their grievances, instead of relying for them upon the statement of officials. Then alone shall His Royal Highness be able to know what the real condition of India is. The paper does not approve that the people of Calcutta should show grief and indifference at the time when His Royal Highness visits Calcutta, and thinks that we should show our loyalty in such a way as to captivate the heart of His Royal Highness so that no one may dare cast an aspersion on our loyalty. Our expression of loyalty should take even Europeans by surprise.

Oriental Review, 5TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales at the Gate of India, the Corporation address and the Prince's reply, the laying of the Foundation Stone of the Museum and the ceremonies connected with the laying of the first stone of the Alexandra Docks were all carried out with great success. But the first procession through the City? It was poor and disappointing. It might easily have been better, and that is why we regret the poverty and disappointment which marked a great historical movement. Lord Lamington's Government have done so many things well that we felt sure His Excellency and those who form his Government could have had little share in organising a pageant which was meant to impress the classes and masses alike with the splendour and greatness of the Empire, but which degenerated into a second hand show of sweating soldiers and jaded horses.... We pitied the poor Hussars and Artillerymen, who were called out in the full blaze of the noonday sun to form a procession which was taken all the way to Government House, Malabar Hill, and were then made to form the Viceroy's escort from Government House to Apollo Bunder.... We should like to know why this double duty was cast upon them. We ask the King's chosen and trusted representatives in this land whether it was a proper thing that the King-Emperor's son and daughter-in-law, whose visit and reception were the event of the day, should be served with only a second and faded édition of the pomp and pageantry of which the first and fresh édition was reserved for the Viceroy?..... Was it right that the Viceroy should have the first meal and the Prince of Wales a cold collation from the same dishes that were served before His Excellency?.... And was it a wise thing on such an occasion to make the mail-édit the only emblem of British sovereignty? Generals and Major-Generals, the staff and Hussars and Artillery, Raj-kumars and Imperial Service Troops, Lancers and Queen's Cavalrymen were no doubt properly there, but was this the only display proper to the occasion? Where were the Rajas and Feudatories and their retinues? Where the Governor and his Councillors? The Commissioners and Secretaries—the Politicals and Civilians? Where were the leaders of our community, our Shethias and Mahajans? Are not these fit and appropriate accompaniments to a procession, welcoming and escorting to their home among us the Emperor's son and daughter-in-law? Were these not the proper and necessary parts of a great Royal pageant. What a pageant of colour and richness and wealth and pomp and nobility and intellect and power we could have easily formed!

Gujarati, 19TH NOVEMBER 1905.—It is said of Julius Cæsar that he went to a certain province, saw and conquered it. In words equally laconic it may be recorded of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, that they came to Bombay, saw it, and captivated the hearts of the entire population numbering at present a million souls.... For the time that the Royal visitors were in their midst our citizens forgot their political affliction, and specially the scurvy manner in which the Political Secretary had originally contemplated to treat them at the first day's official reception. They allowed their grievances to be thrust in the back ground. The feeling most dominant in their hearts for the time was to show by outward demonstrations their deep affection for and attachment to the person and throne of their beloved King-Emperor..... From the very moment that the Prince and Princess put their foot on the shores of beautiful Bombay they bewitched and captivated all hearts. The magnetic attraction was something marvellous. To the people they were the highest and most altruistic embodiment of what a great and omnipotent Monarchy should be. The ideal in the abstract was concretely realised in the persons of the grandchildren of Victoria the Good, the Empress-Mother, who, whilst living, evoked most enthusiastically and spontaneously not only veneration but deep affection among millions of her Indian subjects.... The courteous demeanour, the charming affability, and the beautiful simplicity of the Prince and his queenly consort at once magnetised the people. It was the first conclusive evidence of the training and traditions which they had undergone and the lessons they had learnt as to how to behave with the Indian people. These traits won the heart of Bombay. Literally, they were the subject of the highest praise among them. Turn where you will, in the market place or the square, in the humble hut or in the hall of the princely merchant, in official or non-official circles, in church or pagoda, temple or mosque, in club or society, in this community or that, there was heard naught but a symphony of praise, jubilant praise, for the son and daughter of Edward the Great, as History has already emblazoned him on her page..... Those who were privileged to hold an interview with them at Government House on the eve of their departure tell the same pleasing tale. The Honourable Sir P. M. Metha, who was doubly privileged, in that he had a most gracious audience of both the Prince and Princess, one after the other, returned only to emphasise in a remarkable degree the popular impression. He found the Prince most affable, talking with a freedom which was as agreeable as the information he possessed about India and the Indians was something unique. And how gentle, amiable, and perfectly womanly did he find the Princess! What a delicate Royal compliment both paid to the citizens of the first city in India by asking their first and most distinguished representative to inscribe his name in their Birthday book! Thus it was that the Prince and Princess came to Bombay, saw it, and conquered the hearts of the people as their illustrious parent had done thirty years ago!.... This visit has a deeper significance which needs to be pointed out on this occasion. By immemorial tradition and usage the idea of Kingship is held most sacred in India. It is associated with patriotism as much as with religion. The King is the very embodiment of both Church and State..... The religious sentiment raises him to the dignity of a mortal god on earth; while the political sentiment inculcates the sacred duty of loyalty and fidelity. 'For my King and my country' has not been an idle shibboleth in India. For ages past, it has had a living genuine significance about it. Centuries before the civilised West emerged from its naked barbarism, Indians actively carried into practice this sentiment to reverence their King and to shed blood in his defence..... Thus it is that Indians have submitted loyally to their foreign lords of whom the British are the latest. The beneficence of that rule, despite its many woeful deficiencies and defects, coupled with Western civilisation and education, has strengthened more than ever the sentiment of reverence and profound respect for the Sovereign. The long and marvellous reign of Queen Victoria, emphasised the idea as it never was emphasised a thousand years before. Her great love for her Indian subjects made her the object of the most altruistic veneration. The millions who had never seen her conjured her as a Divine figure. She was considered to have been designedly ordained by an all-wise Providence to spread her protecting ægis over the children of the soil. This sentiment was deepened when she out of Her Royal affection for the Indians, deputed her eldest son and Heir-Apparent to the throne, our present King, to visit India thirty years ago It was the same affection and attachment for the noble house of the noble Queen Victoria, the Empress-Mother, which prompted the people to receive so cordially and with such warm enthusiasm her grandchildren. Thus it is that the Monarchy of England, so historical, and yearly growing in power and influence, has brought Indians closer and closer in unity with their rulers. They made a wide and marked distinction between their Sovereign and his children on the one hand, and the servants of the Sovereign, who administer the country, on the other. There is a growing feeling that much of the gulf now existing between the bureaucracy in India and the people of the land might be bridged over with some competent and capable scion of the Royal House of Victoria at the head of affairs in India. Much of the friction, much of the bitterness and much of the prevalent asperity might then be easily removed. Better and more cordial relations could be established between the official and non-official classes. There would be none of the signs of "insolence of office" and autocratic authority which have been so painfully transparent these five years past. Aye, more, Indians under those circumstances would feel confident that the Government of the country will be carried on fully and faithfully in the spirit of the gracious Proclamation of 1858 which it is the fashion of some unwise rulers, of whom the departed Viceroy is the most prominent, to speak airily, as if it were so much waste paper; and the contentment and happiness of which they have been bereft these many years past would once more reign supreme in the land with a hundred thousand expressions of gratitude to the Sovereign. May the present visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales result in that happy event, so essential for the better welfare of the people and the permanence of the mighty British Indian Empire.

Oriental Review, Bombay Samachar, Akhbar-i-Soudagar, Akhbar-i-Islam, and Sânj Vartamân.—We offer our most sincere congratulations to Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim and to Sir Sassoon J. David upon the great honour that has been conferred upon them by His Majesty the King-Emperor in commemoration of the visit of Their Imperial Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. Both these gentlemen deserved the honour, for in various ways they have both contributed to the progress and fame of the City of Bombay. . . . Sir Currimbhoy's charities are munificent and unostentatious He has established orphanages and schools and done much for the good of his people. His munificent generosity culminated in the gift of three lakhs of rupees for the Bombay Museum. Sir Currimbhoy has thus not only won the affection of his community but also the esteem and regard of all the inhabitants of Bombay, and the honour the King-Emperor has conferred upon him is but a hall-mark of approbation and respect in which the only Bombay Muhammadan Knight is held by all classes and communities in this city. We have had occasions to differ strongly from, and oppose stoutly, Sir Sassoon J. David, but leaving those things behind we 'press forward' to congratulate the new Knight. Sir Sassoon is an estimable gentleman, kind-hearted and generous, always wishing to do well. He is as popular amongst Europeans as among Indians, and the news that he has been knighted has given satisfaction to all classes and communities in Bombay. If strenuousness of activity, application and hard work entitle a man to public honours, the Honourable Mr. S. W. Edgerley, C.I.E., deserves them, and the conferment of the honour of Knight Commander of the Royal Victorian Order upon him is well earned. He has worked hard in drawing up the programme of the Royal visit to this city. He had to work by night and by day, conflicting interests had to be reconciled and difficulties unknown to the public at large had to be overcome. He has played his part well, and he deserves the honour which has been conferred upon him. . . . The honour of the fourth class of the Royal Victorian Order, which His Majesty the King-Emperor has conferred upon Mr. Herbert George Gell, Commissioner of Police, Bombay, in commemoration of the visit of Their Imperial Highnesses, has also given satisfaction to all classes and communities of Bombay; for no man, official or non-official, has had to work harder and has had greater responsibility thrown upon him than the Commissioner of Police.

[The Gujarati dailies express unstinted approval of the honours conferred by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales upon Sir S. W. Edgerley, Mr. Gell, Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim and Sir Sassoon J. David. They recognise that the programme of the Royal visit was carried through without a hitch mainly owing to the tact and indefatigable exertions of the Chief Secretary, and that the excellence of the Police arrangements on the occasion was due to the energy and organising skill of the Commissioner of Police. Most of the papers observe that Mr. Gell deserved a much higher distinction than that conferred upon him by His Royal Highness.]

Rast Gofar, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The divine right of Kings now subsists but in name, and if there still be within us a glimmering of the reverential awe with which the Orientals regarded royalty of old, the luminous rays of education and civilisation have dispelled all lingering vestiges thereof and Royalty is as much human to us as we are human to ourselves. How can we explain, then, the sight we witnessed on the 9th of November, as hundreds and thousands inundated the streets to accord spontaneous homage and loyal greetings to Their future King-Emperor. . . . Here was every man upon his legs cheering lustily his wildest huzzas, as his heart beat and responded to the warmth of his feelings. And this he did because he knew that the Royalty he adored was no mysterious being from the Heavens, but a mortal like himself that took as much interest in mundane affairs as he himself did, and whom Providence had placed in a unique position as the head of a nation of that governed them on the lines of justice and righteousness and had showered on them the blessings of peace and prosperity unknown in the history of their country. Here then we have the clue to the outburst of genuine enthusiasm and deep loyalty of which the city gave such an unmistakeable demonstration while bidding welcome to the Royal couple on its first landing on the shores of India. . . . That we have not been slow in our appreciation of the good which has been done to the country by the British must have been visible to any casual observer, who felt the pulse of the people as they congregated in thousands to offer their greetings on Thursday last. What a strength was here, what a latent power, what a bulwark lay in this surging mass of humanity, stronger and more invincible than the mightiest armament the greatest nation has ever placed before the world. May this armament be ever at the back of the nation that has after a hard-fought struggle brought peace and prosperity in a land that was over perturbed by internecine troubles and perpetual warfare. The country was never more happy in the enjoyment of the blessings of liberty of thought and action, of prosperity and peace, never more enlightened by virtue of education and civilization, never more secure in the safety of life and property, never more confident in the administration of justice, never richer in its commerce, its industries and material prosperity. Let our countrymen give a most tangible and unmistakable evidence of their loyalty in appreciation of the immense good which the British rule has conferred upon their land. Ingratitude is the least short-coming in Indian character. Let the Indians seize this opportunity to mark their sense of gratitude to those on whose good-will and grace their future greatness and prosperity depend, as it has done for the last hundred years and more.

Oriental Review, Sultan-ul-Akhbar, Bombay Punch Bahadur.
—Educated Indians have not seldom been misunderstood or misrepresented, because they disdain the vulgar task of bespattering the British rule with hollow and high-sounding praise in season and out of season. They know that they could afford the misunderstanding and the misrepresentation because their loyalty is deep and of superior worth as could be proved when the occasion came. Such an occasion has now presented itself, and we challenge our detractors to say if in the fervour of feeling, in the display of deep-seated loyalty, in the enthusiasm of enlightened appreciation and in indefatigable endeavour to make Bombay a reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales surpass all legitimate expectations, and exceptional in the harmony, unity and sustained zeal which characterised it, the better and the greater part was not that of those who represent and lead the educated Indians of the Western Presidency. For this deep-seated and universal loyalty there are two causes. Firstly, the conviction that our Government is good. Secondly, the personal character of the Sovereigns in whose names and on whose behalf this country has been governed since the Mutiny. Personal attachment to the occupant of the Throne is our pleasure and our pride. In few countries—we are almost inclined to say that in no other country—in Europe is there such knitting together of loyalty to the Throne and attachment to the person of the Sovereign. This is due entirely to the personal character of the revered and beloved Sovereign, who was our first Queen-Empress, and of her successor, the present King-Emperor. The knowledge how largely we owe that Great Charter of our Rights and Liberties—the Proclamation of 1858—to Her Majesty's personal views and wishes for educated Indians almost a sacred possession. We have welcomed the King-Emperor's son and heir with the feelings which such loyalty and personal attachment can alone engender and shall alone make durable. No portion of the Prince of Wales's reply to the address of the Bombay Corporation has touched the hearts of the people of this Presidency, and indeed of all India, so much as that in which His Royal Highness emphasised the link of personal attachment that binds us so closely to the Throne. Long may the King-Emperor rule over us! And long may His Majesty's son and heir leave by his side—his hope and ours—the hope of an united and ever-prosperous and ever-devoted Empire! [The Sultan-ul-Akhbar and the Bombay Punch Bahadur express sentiments of enthusiastic joy and loyalty over the visit to India of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales.]

Indu Prakash, 13TH NOVEMBER 1905.—There are several features of the programme of the Royal tour which cannot be purely accidental and which indicate an extremely narrow-minded political vision on the part of those who finally settled it. We will note these unsatisfactory features whilst yet Their Royal Highnesses are amongst us. The three old and great Presidencies see the least of Their Royal Highnesses. In our Presidency, Bombay and Karachi are the only two cities where Their Royal Highnesses make a halt. Disguise the fact as you may, there is in this programme a partial boycott of the Bombay, the Madras and the Bengal Presidencies, and we suppose this is the reward for their being so loud and so clamorous and so much to the forefront in the political movements of the day. Whilst the frontier tribes are the pets there is a total boycott against the Marathas and the Bengalis, Calcutta and Bombay alone excluded, evidently because it was impossible to except them. The Marathas have equanimity enough to bear pinpricks and petty-minded slights of this kind. The Marathas have not forgotten—they cannot forget—the glorious achievements of their illustrious fathers, achievements which had placed all India at their feet. They cannot forget that they were the predecessors of the British power in the race for political supremacy in India. On the other hand, they will not lightly swerve from their devotion and reverence for the Royal family of England and will never abate a jot owing to the reactionary measures of fleeting Viceroys or Governors. There are extremists and irreconcilables amongst them, no doubt, as there are amongst every section of the British Empire, in India and out of India—aye even in the British Isles. But the bulk of the Maratha nation is unaffected by the preachings of these extremists so far as substantial attachment to the British rule is concerned. That is the Maratha nation of the day, loyal indeed, but most unjustly suspected and distrusted by those who cannot understand manly opposition and cannot brook a bold front even from honest adversaries. But supposing the Marathas and the Bengalis do not come up to the standard of loyalty which will satisfy rulers of the Curzonian type, are pinpricks and slights the best remedy to win them over completely in favour of the British raj? A true statesman would have given to them more of the Royal visit than to any other peoples of India. But the hobby of the day is in favour of the North-West of India and of the Frontier tribes. Let them be favoured and petted and patted on the back to their heart's content. We are not jealous of it. We may, however, declare it as our deep conviction that in the hour of trial it will be the Marathas and the Bengalis and the more enlightened and educated, and therefore appreciative people under the direct rule of the British in the older Presidencies who will stand closely and fight for Britain than any other communities of this Empire on this side of the frontier or that. The day will yet dawn when even our bureaucrats will realize this fully.

Indu Prakash, 14TH NOVEMBER 1905.—We are extremely sorry to have to notice that though on account of strong public feeling Government yielded so far to the representation made by Sir Pherozeshah Mehta as to send invitations to him as President of the Corporation and to the Municipal Commissioner and the Sheriff to be present in the main Reception Pavilion at the landing of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, things were subsequently managed in such a manner that what was given tardily with one hand was effectively taken away with the other. Our information is that no special supplementary notification in the Government Gazette was published notifying the inclusion of these three representatives of the city. Further, though they were allowed to go into the Pavilion, words were whispered into their ears just before Their Royal Highnesses's landing to the effect that the Prince had desired them to be at the place allotted to the Corporation. Thus they were forced to quit the Pavilion and were in fact not at all introduced to the Prince there. Substantially, then, the original programme was adhered to. The gracelessness of the procedure needs no comment. We may also express our astonishment as to how it came about that the Prince sent word in regard to a matter of such trivial detail as to the place where these three boycotted representatives of the city should stand. If the Prince did send word to that effect, it must have been the result of special coaching. There has been something extremely wrong and undignified in some quarters, where we do not care to enquire. [In its issue of the 17th November the paper writes:—We regret that on further enquiry we find that there has been some inaccuracy in regard to the facts on which the editorial note appearing in our issue of the 14th instant was based. It appears that Sir P. M. Metha, when questioned as to what he would do, himself voluntarily gave up introduction at the Pavilion, for otherwise he would not have found an easy way to his brother Corporators outside. There are different versions as regards the exact words whereby the Sheriff and the Municipal Commissioner were effectively sent away from the Pavilion without introduction. That all three were not introduced to the Prince is certain and equally certain that two were obliged to give up the honour Thus our remarks are substantiated, though in fairness we have thought it our duty to correct what appears to have been inaccurate. We confess we have found it difficult to find out the exact truth in the matter.]

Bombay Samachar, 16TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The Bombay Samachar contradicts the report circulated by the Indu Prakash about the alleged treatment of the President of the Municipality in the shamiana at Apollo Bunder on the occasion of the landing of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. It says:—In response to the representation made by the Corporation His Excellency the Governor was good enough to send the Honourable Sir S. W. Edgerley to talk over the matter with Sir Pherozeshah Metha. Sir S. W. Edgerley, on behalf of Government, verbally assured Sir Pherozeshah as well as satisfied him by documentary evidence that the authorities in making the arrangements objected to had no intention whatsoever of lowering the dignity of the Corporation. As regards the seating arrangements made for the members of the Corporation, Sir Pherozeshah was asked not to press the matter, as there was no time for mending matters in that direction. Invitation cards, however, were issued to the President of the Corporation, the Municipal Commissioner, and the Sheriff for taking part in the ceremonial reception of Their Royal Highnesses at the Bunder. Accordingly, all these three functionaries were present in the shamiana. Before the Prince landed, however, Sir Pherozeshah asked the permission of the Governor to go through the archway to the space reserved for the Corporation so as to make preliminary preparations for the presentation of the Municipal address. This course was absolutely necessary in the circumstances, because if Sir Pherozeshah and the Municipal Commissioner had waited in the shamiana until they were presented to the Prince, it would not have been possible for them to be in their respective places with the Corporation before Their Royal Highnesses were conducted to the dais for receiving the address, and perhaps they would not have been able to make their way to the enclosure at all. Several persons being unaware of the exact position have circulated a silly rumour to the effect that the whole correspondence between the Corporation and Government on the subject was placed before the Prince, and that His Royal Highness rejected the prayer of the Corporation and ordered that the programme should be carried out as originally arranged. We think it is the height of disrespect towards the Prince to import his name into this controversy. The unusual marks of honour that Sir Pherozeshah has received at the hands of the Prince during His Royal Highness's stay in Bombay go to show that the rumour in question is quite unfounded. It appears that before the Prince landed at the Bunder, the Honourable Sir S. W. Edgerley, by way of a good-humoured joke, told the Sheriff and the Municipal Commissioner to cross the road and go back to the enclosure by a circuitous route. Both these gentlemen took his words quite seriously, and one of them having informed Sir Pherozeshah of the fact, the latter set matters right in the Chief Secretary's presence and told them that it was not necessary for them to go to the enclosure by a circuitous route, but that as soon as the Prince approached the Bunder, they could go through the archway constructed for the Prince.

Indu Prakash, 15TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The claim of Bombay to be called Urbs prima in Indis has often been questioned and questioned with reason. If the rivals of the city were to cite the inefficiency of our Political Department as one reason why we should cease to pride ourselves on being the first city in India, we suppose we shall have to plead guilty to the charge. It was this Department that had in its hands the arrangements of the details of the reception of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. And how has it acquitted itself? It has insulted the Corporation and created great dissatisfaction amongst the people by the shabby treatment accorded to their accredited civic representatives. The Department has further disappointed the city by the poverty and meagreness of the Royal procession. It failed to make good arrangements at the levée and the Reception. There was little to show that the Reception was a grandeur affair than ordinary gubernatorial receptions. Lastly our Rajkumars were badly lodged, badly dressed and badly mounted for the escorting duty entrusted to them. Of the treatment accorded to Native Princess and Chiefs the less said the better. The Department has blundered and bungled and, what is worse, has shown an obstinate and unyielding spirit of which bitter memories must long survive in the minds of different persons and different classes of people. What a pity that the Department should have come off so badly in this not very difficult matter of making satisfactory arrangements for a five days' stay of the Prince and Princess of Wales! [Elsewhere the paper writes:—After finding fault with the Department over which the Honourable Mr. (and now Sir) S. W. Edgerley presides, it is so odd to have to congratulate him upon the honour of a Knight Commandership of the Royal Victorian Order conferred upon him by the Prince of Wales. We grudge it not, and perhaps the arrangements made by him so far as Their Royal Highnesses were directly concerned were very good. Those who have grievances against him are the people, their representatives and our Native Princes and Chiefs. Let us hope that now that the gentleman has been made a Knight of a high Order, true chivalry and chivalrous generosity will be planted in what seems to be an unimpressible heart.]

Kaiser-i-Hind, 19TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The cryptic Reuter cabled for the edification of India on the eve of the arrival of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales in Bombay that in a long article the scribe of Printing House Square reminds Indians that though Viceroy and Commanders-in-Chief come and go, the Government of India goes on for ever and that "mistakes, if made, are not irrevocable". What may be the import of this broad hint? Are we to interpret it as a sign of the change of views in the Ministerial organ? Is it the golden bridge which it is now attempting to jump over and thus achieve a feat in political somersault? Can it be that after all the blundering Viceroy is found out? Can it be that it is now tacitly admitted that he has made mistakes—serious mistakes—which, however, are not so irrevocable as not to be repaired? If this be the true meaning the brief contents of the cablegram would lead us to infer, then it seems that Lord Curzon is about to find his level at last in spite of all the magniloquent opinions about his own greatness as the paragon of Viceroy which he so sedulously and with 'demoniacal energy' strove to 'manufacture' throughout the term of his mischievous vicerealty. But we must await the arrival of the full text to fairly fathom the significance of the oracular pronouncement of the discredited oracle of Printing House Square.

After all, the British people are seeing through the failures, and something worse, of the hollow sounding and utterly insincere Viceroy, and that the Government in England are opening their eyes to the enormity of the mischief already done to the Empire.

Jam-e-Jamshed, 13TH NOVEMBER 1905.—Nothing could exceed the impressiveness of the special demonstration of Parsi loyalty towards the British raj and attachment to the Throne and the person of His Majesty the King-Emperor that was made on Friday evening at Dhobi-talao. The Dasturs, the priests, and the laity assembled thick outside their Fire Temple to invoke God's blessings on the Royal pair and all that is dear to them, and it is to be trusted that this formal act of benediction was duly appreciated by Their Royal Highnesses. As a special mark of their attachment, loyalty and devotion, nothing better could be conceived or done. The Parsis are in a special sense Farand-i-Khas-Doulai-i-Englishtai. Their prosperity dates from the dawn of British rule in India, their prosperity has been built on the success of British Sovereignty in India, and their prosperity depends on the existence of British authority in India. Their outlook is entirely dependent on the maintenance of British influence, and it was but meet and proper that the Parsi community should evince their loyalty and devotion to the British raj by such a special ceremony as was performed on Friday evening. Indeed the King-Emperor and his Family live every day in the prayers of the Parsis. As Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy has said in his article in the current number of the Parsi, 'obedience to the Government of the country and loyalty to the person and throne' of the monarch are enjoined by its religion. In the invocation a Parsi has to make at the end of his morning and evening prayers he beseeches Providence to shower His blessings first upon his Sovereign and thereafter upon those nearest and dearest to him.' In whatever the Parsis may lack, they can never lack in their appreciation of the benefits derived from British rule and the sense of gratitude they owe to the British rulers for the blessings they have enjoyed and do enjoy under their protection. We may also say that they can never lack in their sense of dependence on British rule, and in this lies the greatest guarantee of their devotion and love towards the British Throne and raj.

Jain and Indu Prakash.—The Native Chiefs, who at heavy expense and no small inconvenience came down to Bombay to do homage to Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, will carry away along with pleasant memories many a disappointment and heart-burning. At the landing they got far from what was their due. None of them was included amongst those that had the honour of giving the first welcome to Their Royal Highnesses in the harbour. On landing on our shores the Members of Council were the first to be introduced, and after that came the turn of the Chiefs. Then they were not allowed to form part of the Royal procession on any occasion. Lastly, at the levée precedence was given to certain high British officials, and the Princes and Chiefs were mixed up pell-mell with many others in the second private entrée circle. At the Reception at Government House they got no better treatment and had to undergo something like a drill at the hands of his drill-teacher or that master of ceremonials. We are informed that whilst driving to and from the Secretariat on the day of the levée, they were subjected to treatment of no edifying kind. On the occasion of the grand functions at the Crescent, the Docks and the Princess Street they were provided with no separate or special accommodation and were baked up in the sun like the common folks. The process of levelling down could no further go. May we ask who is responsible for all these slights? The Jain writes:—The Native Chiefs have come down to Bombay at great expense and personal sacrifice out of sentiments of loyalty to the King-Emperor. But the scurvy treatment they have received at the hands of the Bombay Government shows how these sentiments are reciprocated by His Majesty's representatives in this country. Lord Curzon, when he arrived in Bombay, showed no marks of respect towards the Chiefs and treated them as if they were all his protégés. Again, Government have asked the Chiefs to apply for cards of admission to the various functions arranged in honour of Their Royal Highnesses. This has been regarded as an insult by First Class Chiefs, who had naturally expected more considerate treatment at the hands of the Bombay Government, the head of which in writing letters to them addresses them as "My friend." We are convinced that Lord Curzon must be at the bottom of these insults. It remains to be seen what further humiliation is in store for these Chiefs. We may take this opportunity to congratulate those Chiefs, who have wisely preferred to remain in their own territory instead of coming down to Bombay and suffering indignities at the hands of the Paramount Power.

Praja Bandhu, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—An elaborate programme of the Royal tour that extends over four months has been arranged by the authorities in this country, and there is little doubt that wherever Their Royal Highnesses go, they will have a hearty reception at the hands of our countrymen. The entire tour consists almost wholly of a round of gaieties that have been carefully selected by the authorities, and which cannot fail to afford pleasure to the Royal visitors. The basal idea of a visit like this by the future King-Emperor to the greatest dependency of England is no doubt excellent, but we are afraid that the way in which the authorities generally organize the details of the tour is not such as to allow the Royal visitor to see and know as much as they wish. In fact the visitor sees artificial India, which is quite distinct from real India. The Native Chiefs, bedecked with costly jewellery, and attired in rich and gorgeous costume with their splendid retinue, that have assembled to welcome the Royal visitors, cannot give any idea of the real situation in the country. It is only when they freely mix with the real representatives of the people, as distinct from those that are generally found to crowd the levées and receptions at Government Houses, that they can come to know the real India. It is, of course, futile to hope that anything out of the common like this will happen on the present occasion, for the authorities in this country will take all possible precautions against it. In spite of all this, even a visit undertaken in this manner deserves to be welcomed because it enables the Royal visitor to form at least some idea about the people and the country whose destiny he will be called upon to control in the fulness of time. Circumstanced as we are at present, we should be satisfied if India found at least a warm corner in the Royal visitor's heart.

Indu Prakash, 15TH NOVEMBER 1905.—In its issue of 15th November the paper writes:—It was a happy thought whereby Their Royal Highnesses's visit is to be associated with three unique works, calculated to immensely benefit the city and to mark that unabated progressiveness which has been Bombay's chief characteristic. It is a pity Their Royal Highnesses's time was too much taken up in Bombay with formal functions. They had thus no opportunities of coming in close contact with the representatives of the general public and knowing more of us. We trust they will be able to do so at other places. Of course, the officials would try to monopolize all their time, and theirs can never be drawn up the programme to bring the future King-Emperor of India and his subjects face to face. Their Royal Highnesses would not in that case be fulfilling their mission half so fully as it should be unless they cut off now and then the meshes of official formalities and insist upon seeing at each place something of the normal life of the people and learning something of their normal feelings and sentiments. Occasional deviations from the settled programme, surprise visits to unprepared towns or villages, incognito excursions, these and others are some of the means whereby the real truth about India could be learnt. But if these be impossible, the Prince may at least make it a point to devote an hour or so every day to interviews with representatives of the people at each place he visits. No official should be present at such interviews. Sir Walter Lawrence could surely arrange for such highly desirable novelties in the Indian official programme.

Mahratta, 12TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The grand and hearty reception with which Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales were greeted on Thursday last on their landing in Bombay, the first City in India, is sure to create a permanent impression on their minds of the loyalty and enthusiasm of the people of this country. In ancient days it was customary for the Emperor or his son to go over the different parts of the country under his rule and become acquainted with the condition of his subjects. These old Emperors even went so far as to travel occasionally incognito and thus learn firsthand the real sentiments of the people under their care. . . . But the blessings or otherwise of the personal Imperial rule are now generally replaced either by the rule of an elected assembly of representatives or that of an official bureaucracy invested with almost absolute powers. India falls under the latter category, and the virtual rulers of the land have it in their hands to organise such demonstrations and receptions as would bring only the pleasant and the bright side of the picture to the notice of the Royal personage that may graciously be pleased to visit this part of the Empire. Illuminations and decorations, grand Civil and Military displays, assemblages of Chiefs and Landlords sweating in kinkhab to receive the Royal personages, etc., will form the prominent features of the demonstrations everywhere in India, and it would surely be no fault of Their Royal Highnesses, howsoever kind and sympathetic they may be, if they fail to notice the real condition, material and moral, of the people who would be attracted by the grandeur and magnificence of the reception to the places visited by Their Highnesses. If the present tour of the Prince and Princess, the future Emperor and Empress of India, is intended only for their pleasure and the glorification of the official rulers in India, we have nothing to say against the nature of these demonstrations. We are loyally bound to do our best to please the Royal visitors, and the people will do it ungrudgingly. But if Royal visits are intended to make the visitors acquainted with the real condition of the people, then we humbly submit that the present demonstrations are not only not calculated to serve the object, but on the contrary likely to mislead Their Royal Highnesses.

Kesari, 14TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The city of Bombay was the centre of extraordinary bustle and activity last week on account of the advent of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. There can be no doubt that the reception accorded to the Royal visitors was a grand one, befitting the dignity of the occasion. It is also meet that the people should manifest their loyalty to the Heir-Apparent of their Emperor. But we think that the significance of such visits lies deeper than mere ceremonial observances and demonstrations. The object of such tours, according to immemorial usage, is to enable the ruler or his heir to understand the condition of the subject population and not merely to afford him an opportunity of self-indulgence. Can it be said, however, that the deeper object of such visits just indicated has been kept in view in the arrangements of the Royal programme in Bombay or elsewhere. We have had full and lengthy descriptions of brilliant processions and other elaborate functions arranged in honour of the Prince and Princess. We have further been told everything about their dress, their demeanour and general deportment. We envy those people who were privileged to witness the Royal procession escorted by a squadron of Rajkumars and detachments of cavalry. But what is the practical gain to the public from such a brilliant procession. In olden days rulers used to acquaint themselves with the grievances of their subjects by mixing freely among them, but in these days of Parliamentary and bureaucratic rule the British Sovereign wields only a limited power, and it is not possible for him to do much for the people. A motto on one of our decorations in Bombay says "Tell papa we are happy." We would like the Prince to convey a different message to his Royal father. We would request him to draw the King-Emperor's attention to the unbearable hardships to which we are subjected under the rule of his representatives in India. We would also warn the Prince not to gather his impressions about the condition of the people from the signs of prosperity and joy that greet his eyes in the streets, but to look deeper below the surface of things and to cast his glance beyond the immediate circle of his official advisers if he wishes to know the truth.

Kal, 17TH NOVEMBER 1905.—During the past fortnight two places in the Presidency had attracted very large crowds. In Bombay, a large concourse had congregated to catch a glimpse of the Prince of Wales and to witness the decorations and illuminations in his honour. At Pandharpur the votaries of the God Vithoba had also gathered in large numbers to render pious homage to the deity. The spectacle in the latter city was much nobler and more elevating than in the former. The people in Bombay were bowing before a mortal from whom they cannot expect the boon of emancipation, while the votaries of Vithoba are sure of going to heaven if they will only surrender themselves to their favourite god. Apart from this contrast between the homage rendered to man and God, let us see what the object of the Royal tour is and how far that object is likely to be gained. It is said that the main object of the visit is to enable the Prince to become acquainted with the condition of the Indian people. We doubt very much whether this object will be secured at all, because the published programmes of the Royal itinerary consist wholly of a round of gaieties and festivities, such as banquets, processions, ceremonial visits, hunting excursions, and so on. If the Prince only wanted these things he need not have undertaken a long voyage to India at all. He could have commanded all of these without moving out of England. It is also unfortunate that the Indian mind should not be tranquil but in a state of fervent and excitement at the time of the Royal visit. The Swadeshi movement and the boycott agitation are in full swing and the Indians, forgetting their past differences, are fast rallying round the common cause of Swadeshimism.

Vihari, 11TH NOVEMBER 1905.—The present condition of India resembles that of England in the beginning of the 15th century as described by Shakespeare in King Henry V. The Prince of Wales has come to pay a visit to our country, but India is unable to bear the strain likely to be imposed upon it in consequence of the Royal visit. The Prince of Wales has come to pay a visit to India. But the country is now in the same plight as the hen in Æsop's fable. Brother fox expressed an ardent desire to see his dear sister and offered to examine her pulse, but she had to decline his advances with thanks. India is silently giving the same reply to the Prince to-day by maintaining a sullen attitude towards his visit. The authorities have taken a good many precautions to keep the true condition of the country from being brought to the notice of the Prince, but its chronic and notorious poverty will hardly fail to attract the attention of the Royal visitor. The Prince is bound to know that, beneath the superficial pomp and pageantry witnessed by him upon his arrival at each place, there lies concealed deep-rooted and carking poverty. Even the cost of the decorations in the city of Bombay had to be met out of Municipal funds as the people could not bear the expense themselves. The Indians are noted for their loyalty to the British Crown. Is it not then strange that the authorities should allow such a loyal population to die of starvation by the million on an auspicious occasion like the present? How can any one, with a grain of humanity in him, enjoy a round of merry-making and illuminations, when the people are dying of hunger in large numbers? The best mode of signalling the Royal visit would be to grant a remission of taxation. The people are at present groaning under oppression, and if things continue in the same state for some time more, we shall have in India a repetition of the scenes now being enacted in Russia. The autocracy of the British has surpassed the zoolium of the Moghuls. If our rulers are really desirous that there should be spontaneous manifestations of loyalty on the part of the people on the occasion of the Prince's visit, let them first conciliate the people and win their good-will by every means in their power.

Parikshak and Hindu Panch.—The Prince and Princess of Wales landed on Indian soil on the 9th instant, and many foolish people among us flocked to Bombay to have a sight of Royalty and to witness the tamasha got up in honour of the Royal visitors. There were several Native Chiefs among the number and also well to-do merchants and others. We wonder why these men went to Bombay at all. Our Sovereign is an alien, living in a far-off land and caring little for our welfare. If our Emperor had really been solicitous about the well-being of his countless Indian subjects, would he not have paid us a visit and sympathised with us in our miseries and misfortunes? He would in that case have seen for himself how tyrannically the people are governed by his officials and how intolerable their sufferings are. Nay, he would have committed suicide on being convinced that he was powerless to relieve such profound distress. Our present Emperor has done nothing of the kind after his accession to the throne, but has merely commissioned his son to visit the country. Perhaps, the object of Englishmen in holding grand processions in honour of the Prince is to increase the loyalty of the people. The crowds of spectators, witnessing the processions, the mass of gorgeous decorations and the handsome subscriptions to the Reception Fund may make Englishmen think that the Indians are throbbing with loyalty. But they are making a great mistake here. The vulgar multitude is attracted by any tamasha. Even if a man is being taken to be hanged, a crowd will gather to watch the melancholy spectacle. If the occasion is a joyous and not a sorrowful one and a Prince and his consort are being taken in a bondage procession through the public streets, a much larger crowd is sure to be attracted by the gorgeousness and brilliancy of the pageant. The Indians will derive no real benefit from the Royal visit. They will merely be sight-seers. It is the Englishmen, who wield all power, that will form prominent figures in the Royal entourage and enjoy real pleasure. The loyalty of the people is much weakened by the high-handed rule of Anglo-Indian bureaucrats. Our loyalty to the British raj now consists only in this, that we do not think of overthrowing British rule. Our Anglo-Indian officers may wish to dazzle the Indians by a display of the pomp and majesty of the British Empire, but such a display can never make the people love their rulers. [The Hindu Panch writes:—The Prince landed in Bombay last week and left the city last night to enjoy hospitality elsewhere. Flattering scribes have published lengthy accounts of the doings of the Royal couple, but we cannot follow their example as we are totally unaccustomed to tread the path of servile sycophancy. We can merely unfold India's grievances to the Prince, but it is doubtful whether he can spare time to hear us and may at the most assure us that he will lay them before his Royal father. What is the use then of enlightening the Prince on the subject of our woes, when he has not the power, under the British constitution, of mitigating them. Thus the visit of the Prince will, in our opinion, be productive of no practical good.]

Bhāda, Subodha Patrika, Arunodaya, and Brahmodaya.—It is the duty of the loyal subjects of this country to accord a suitable reception to the Prince of Wales. But it would not be right to squander public money recklessly on that account. Famine is staring us in the face, and it would be well if the money which is to be wasted on banquets, illuminations and fire-works were reserved for the relief of the famine-stricken. As the Prince will be surrounded by wealthy folks and pass through Bombay by well-decorated routes, it would be impossible for him to obtain an insight into the real condition of the people. His five days' stay in Bombay will lead him to think that India is still the golden land of ancient times. If the Prince really wishes to know the real condition of the people, he should travel through villages, and he will there find a starving population clad in rags. If His Royal Highness does not redress the grievances of the people and grant them some political right in commemoration of his visit to this country, the people will be greatly disappointed. [The Subodha Patrika and the Arunodaya make similar remarks. The Brahmodaya writes:—As the Prince is accustomed to live in great luxury in his own country, he is not likely to derive much new pleasure from the elaborate preparations made for his reception at Bombay. Moreover, he will not fail to see that these preparations are made at the expense of an enslaved people. If he peeps behind the glitter and the show of the welcome accorded to him, he will see that the people are being starved to death and are cursing the British rule. A glance at his father's diary written 30 years ago will show him that towns and villages, which were then in a prosperous condition, are now desolate and that 3½ crores of people have died of starvation during the last decade.]

Bombay Punch Bahādur, 13th NOVEMBER 1905.—A correspondent writes to the Bombay Punch Bahādur:—On the 9th November all the European and Eurasian employes of the G. I. P. Railway at Igatpuri were granted two days' holiday in honour of the Royal visit. The native employes of the Railway did not obtain the same privilege, although they were willing even to sacrifice their two days' pay in order to enable them to run down to Bombay and get a sight of Their Royal Highnesses. We fail to understand why the Railway authorities failed to give due consideration to the prayer of their native employes whose enthusiasm over the event was certainly not less intense than that of their European confrères.

Desha Sewak.—The Desha Sewak (Nagpur), of November 13th, referring to the visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to India, states that it is to be hoped that they may pass their time in India in happiness and rejoicing. It is, however, not to the interests of the people of India that Their Royal Highnesses, who have come a distance of ten thousand miles, should pass their time here in attending banquets and balls and witnessing tamashas, without becoming acquainted with the real condition of the people of India, lest they carry away the impression that universal prosperity reigns in the country.

Swadesamitran.—The Swadesamitran, of the 18th November, stating that His Majesty the King subscribed 2,000 guineas and the Prince of Wales 1,000 guineas to the fund opened for the people without work in England, remarks:—No one takes any notice of the poor Indians who, for want of work, die of hunger. If the Prince of Wales, who generously presented 1,000 guineas for the benefit of such people in England, directs that a moiety at least of the amount now incurred in his reception should be spent in giving relief to the helpless people of this country, a more benign act cannot be conceived.

Nadegannadi.—The Nadegannadi, of the 18th November, praises His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales for having given a private interview to some of the representatives of the people, such as Sir P. Mehta and learning from them the real state of the country. The great honour done to their leader has made the people of Bombay love the Prince the more. The paper hopes that wherever he goes, His Royal Highness will extend this courtesy to the representatives of the people, and get from them the first hand information about the people, instead of being guided by the Government officials.

The Malayalam papers give a hearty welcome to the Royal visitors to India and hope they will enjoy their tour, and after their return to England report to His Majesty the King-Emperor the real state of the country and the loyalty of the people of India to the Throne of England.

The Bharata Bandhu, of the 12th November, on the other hand, expresses the opinion that this Royal tour will not be in any way beneficial to the people of India. Their Royal Highnesses will not, it says, be able to observe the real state of the country inasmuch as there will only be rejoicings and festivities at every place they will visit, and that even if anybody is disposed to inform Their Royal Highnesses of the true state of affairs, Government will not allow them to do so. Such being the case, these Royal tours instead of being conducive to the benefit and welfare of the people, will only entail pecuniary loss on them.

The following is taken from a leading article that appears in the Punjabee (Lahore), of the 13th November 1905, entitled "Vive le Prince":—

"But the question is whether those who wield real power in this land will allow Their Royal Highnesses to form a closer acquaintance of their future Indian subjects? It is a difficult question to answer, for, in the first place, it is to the interest of the bureaucratic rulers of India to hide the real facts from the perception of Their Royal Highnesses. And in the second place, those who could really enlighten the Prince on the condition of the Indian people, will be held at arm's length—in other words, will be effectually debarred from having any communication with the Royal travellers. Men, who could truly acquaint the Prince on the condition of India and its people must of necessity belong to the educated classes, that is, people who have received a liberal modern education. But a large majority of such people are the betes noirs of the official Anglo-Indian community, in whose hands all the arrangements of the Royal visit necessarily lie. The remaining minority of educated Indians, who have already surrendered their consciences and their freedom into the keeping of European officials, either by accepting the badge of servitude, or by some other process, are worse than useless for any such purpose. The educated classes are looked upon as disloyal and seditious by the Anglo-Indian officials; because, forsooth, they place themselves in the fore-front in criticising severely the high-handed acts of the executive officers of Government; because forsooth, they regard with revulsion and hatred the unbridled conduct of English officials; because, forsooth, they feel and openly give vent to their discontent at the continuance of the present anomalous conditions."

The following is taken from the Tribune (Lahore), of the 14th November 1905:—

"In very happy terms the Times refers to the visit of our future Emperor to our shores. Their Royal Highnesses, the leading journal rightly remarks, 'represent the permanent authority of the British Empire,' and reminds our countrymen that 'great Viceroy may come and go but the Government of India remains and that mistakes if made are not irrevocable.' We do not know if the words we have put in italics are purposely meant as a message of hope to our countrymen. Remembering that the Times has been an enthusiastic admirer of Lord Curzon, and has consistently supported his methods and policy throughout his régime, it would be too much to expect that our ultra-Imperialist contemporary would even indirectly let it be understood that it was with regard to His Lordship's mistakes that it bade us not despair of rectification. However it may be, whether purposely or not, the Times for once gives expression to our true feelings, to the hope reawakened in the breasts of our intelligent countrymen by having their future Sovereign in their midst. The words will bear repeating once more:—'Great Viceroy and renowned Generals may come and go but the Government of India remains, and that mistakes if made are not irrevocable.'"

Indian People.—The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 12th November, says:—It has fallen to Bombay to say the first word of welcome to the Prince and Princess of Wales, and that word has been said in a manner worthy of Bombay and worthy of the Royal visitors. For this year particularly Sir Pherozshah Mehta had been elected President of the Bombay Municipality, as no name stands higher on the records of that body than his. The foremost citizen of Bombay welcomed the foremost representative, next to the King-Emperor, of Royalty. It is noteworthy also that on the conclusion of his reply, the Prince of Wales cordially shook hands with Sir P. M. Mehta, who presented the Prince and Princess with bouquets and garlands of flowers. The speech of the Prince of Wales has been highly praised, and justly. Its most prominent notes were sincerity and simplicity. There is one passage in the speech to which we should like to draw the special attention of our readers:—"I have inherited from my father and from our last beloved Sovereign, your first Queen-Empress, a love for India and for Indians from my youth. I have associated the name of India with qualities of kindness, loyalty, courtesy and bravery; and I doubt not that these early ideas will be confirmed and strengthened by the experiences which await me in the next few months. . . . We both hope to carry home with us not only a warm sympathy and affection for the people of India, but increased and abiding interests in India's wants and problems, and an acquaintance with the various classes of officials and non-officials, British and Indian, which under God's Providence are labouring to one end—the well-being of India and the happiness of her peoples." These are noble words and nobly spoken, and the Prince has won the hearts of the people of this country by his first speech.

19TH NOVEMBER 1905.

Civil and Military Gazette.—Where Royalty passes Loyalty masses. A hundred thousand citizens of Lahore will be wanting to see their future Emperor ten days hence, when the capital of the Punjab is to be honoured by a visit from the Prince and Princess of Wales; and, with due forethought, the Lahore Reception Committee have planned out the lines of the Imperial routes on so extensive a scale as to afford ample spectacular opportunities for all. On another page to-day a full list is published of these routes; and we may confidently add that of all the generous decorations which will embellish the long, white roads no sight will be so grandly gratifying to Their Royal Highnesses as the living avenues of cheering people. Throughout India there is no firmer centre of loyalty than the famous city of Lahore, and on so unique an occasion there will assuredly be no poverty in the manifestation. In this lusty part of the country Mussulmans, Hindus and Sikhs alike all know how to hurrah.

Madras Mail.—Sir,—May it be hoped that at the public reception to be held in Madras on the occasion of the Royal visit, the members of the landed aristocracy of the Presidency, who go there to tender their loyal respects to their future Sovereign, will be shown all the consideration to which their position entitles them? It is hardly conceivable that those who are in charge of the arrangements at the Reception will be so ungenerous to them as to mix them indiscriminately with other people, or make invidious distinction among their number on one ground or another, assigning prominent and distinguished seats to some and leaving the others to shift for themselves. Indeed, it is possible the Reception Committee has already done or is determined to do something on the lines I am going to suggest. Still, it may not be too forward to propose that a list may be drawn up of all ancient Zamindars of the Presidency as authoritatively declared by Government (for instance) in the Madras Impartible Estates Act, and provide for them a separate pavilion, next in order to that of the Ruling Chiefs, where they will be presented to His Royal Highness and privileged to evince their loyalty in a body. The public will not surely, grudge this distinction to a community which deserves it by reason of its ancient origin and the important part which some of its members played in the history of the country, both before and immediately after the advent of British rule. Nor will, I may be permitted to hope, His Excellency Lord Amphill's attitude to them, which has all along been one of great solicitude to preserve their prestige and integrity, be on this the most notable occasion marked by anything approaching indifference to their just needs and aspirations.

The programme of His Royal Highness's doings in Madras has not yet been made public, but there is reason to expect that when it comes to be drawn up it will include other items likewise conceived in a spirit of justice to the ancient Zamindars of the Presidency.

Praja Bandhu.—The long expected visit of Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales became a realized fact in the second week of this month, and was celebrated at the capital of this Province with festivities and illuminations worthy of the illustrious visitors, as well as of the first city of the British Indian Empire. The enthusiasm manifested by the masses as well as the classes was indeed extraordinary, and the outward decorations and lighting designed and carried out by the leading citizens of Bombay lent a splendour to picturesque Bombay, which must have deeply impressed the Royal visitors. The leading Anglo-Indian paper justly remarks that "Bombay has never before witnessed such a scene of intense enthusiasm and the fervent loyalty of the greeting surpassed all expectations." We join our contemporary in the observation that the reception was wholly spontaneous, having been organised and carried out by the representatives of the people. "It was an object-lesson revealing in the most striking manner the genuine and sincere loyalty of the natives of India to the British throne. It was the unsought and voluntary rendering of homage to the King-Emperor, and the members of his family." It must give genuine gratification to all loyal Indians that Their Royal Highnesses have been deeply impressed by the expressions of enthusiastic goodwill which have been extended to them by all classes, races, and creeds of the population, and that they carry away with them the happiest reminiscences of the occasion. The charm and dignity of the personal bearing of His Royal Highness, and his graceful and eloquent reply to the address of the Bombay Corporation will always be remembered with delight.

We have no doubt that wherever His Royal Highness goes, the same loyalty and enthusiasm will await him, and that his tour throughout this once prosperous land will always be remembered by him as one of the happiest undertaking of his life.

One principal reason of the enthusiasm of the reception accorded to him is that towards the British Throne as such the people of India entertain feelings of sincere regard and loyalty. They have come to learn through the education they have received that in the practical work of Government the King in England is a convenient figurehead, embodying materially the might and greatness of the British nation and acting as their spokesman and representative with the world at large, but having no independent power of initiative or control. This being the case, the evils from which India has been suffering are attributable, not to the nominal head of the nation, but to those who wield the actual power and responsibilities of Government. Even in shaping the policy of the exploitation of India and the exclusion of its sons from the Government of India, Royalty has, we are happy to say, no share. Fortunately Her late Majesty Empress Victoria tried by her personal influence to better the lot of the vast populations of India by promising in her memorable Proclamation that she would treat her Indian subjects as her other subjects in the Empire. Our present King-Emperor has so far walked in her footsteps. Thus our feeling towards the British Throne is one of pure and devoted loyalty, whatever our estimate of the actual imperfections of the British rule in India.

We take this opportunity to acknowledge fully the advantage of security of life and property that we now enjoy, nor do we in the least minimize the opportunities of education that the presence of the British rule places within our reach. It is as well that we should say that the peace which we enjoy is as much to the interest of the rulers as the ruled, and that though we highly prize the benefits of a sound liberal education on Western lines, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the requisite funds have been very grudgingly doled out, and that at the present rate of progress it will be five hundred years before every male and female is educated enough to write out his or her name. It so happens that the trade and industries of the land that are worth speaking of are mostly in foreign hands, and that the sons of the soil are mainly hewers of wood and drawers of water. The Times of India is correct in stating that there is willing acquiescence in the British supremacy. As for gratitude, is it reasonable to expect any, in the face of the results of the baneful system of government adopted and still pursued in spite of Indian protests? Indians are so far distrusted, that the whole population is disarmed, without any distinction of the loyal from the disloyal. The fervent loyalty and intense enthusiasm of the greeting of Their Royal Highnesses must be coupled with the commentary that those who manifest it in such an unmistakable way are unfit in the eyes of those who carry on the actual rule of British India to carry a pocket pistol without a special license, and that the authorities are very particular that the number of such licenses should be extremely limited. The European army in India is very costly, but since the native India cannot be implicitly trusted, this costly garrison is kept up, and the whole burden of it is cast on the back of the poor Indian taxpayer, though the whole Indian army is available for the Imperial purposes of the British nation. The poverty of the people is extreme beyond description, and there is generally famine with or without relief works in some part of India or another.

Their Royal Highnesses must have learnt why their visit to Rajputana has been postponed. There even now famine stalks over the land. We presume that His Royal Highness and those who conceived the idea of the present visit must have intended that it should be productive of real benefit to the people of India, as well as to His Royal Highness. It is stated that Their Royal Highnesses are anxious to meet the people of India upon such terms of intimacy as is permissible.

It is doubtful if a succession of pageants, and processions and the giving and receiving of congratulatory addresses, and illuminations and fireworks, can ever contribute to the fulfilment of the laudable desire of His Royal Highness to come face to face with those who are to be his future subjects. It will be the endeavour of the Indian bureaucracy to show him the bright side of the picture, so that he may leave India with the impression that India is a fairy-land, abounding in riches.

A contemporary suggests that he should move incognito, and note for himself whatever his personal and independent observation may suggest. Such a course, though unobjectionable in the abstract, is practically out of question on the present occasion. The next best thing for him would be to invite leaders of Indian opinion (not the rich busy-bodies who hunt after titles and decorations), and gather from them first hand information about the Indian people and the scope and character of Indian problems, as viewed by new India. In this way, if it is honestly pursued, it is likely that His Royal Highness may get some insight into the deepest thoughts and aspirations of the people of India, as distinguished from Anglo-India. If it is not possible for him to pursue this course, we may venture to predict, that despite the loud talk of the Anglo-Indian and official organs, His Royal Highness's visit will be as barren of benefit to himself or others as that of Czar Nicholas II, who was conducted over India much as show animals are, and kept ignorant of all that he might have learnt.

Daily Chronicle.—Striking almost due north from Indore we journeyed last night out of the rolling fertile plains of the Central Indian plateau into the sandy wastes of Rajputana. The contrast between the two tracts of country is a lesson in the diversity of Indian scenery. Rajputana, says the proverb, produces nothing but sand, horns, and warriors; and over the greater part of this waterless country the saying is true enough to-day. But Udaipur, the premier State of Rajputana, is an exception to this general rule; situated in a fertile valley of the mountains, and plentifully watered, it is at once the most beautiful in point of scenery and the most prosperous in point of agriculture of all the States of Rajputana.

The Rajput is the warrior and gentleman of India. He is now not so much a race as a caste, not confined to Rajputana alone, but spread over almost every province of Northern India. His name is a synonym for pride. The Rajput considers that there are two professions fit for a man—to conquer and to govern; but now that the British rule has brought peace to India, he is falling somewhat behind in the race. Despising the arts of peace, he has also declined in the art of war. The Rajput soldier of to-day has fallen away to some extent from his own highest standard; he is apt to be more easily dispirited in defeat than the Sikh or the Goorkha, and in attack shows less élan than the Pathan. But even now it would be hard to find a higher type of gentleman than the Rajput noble of a light, yellow complexion, with the small hands and feet of ancient lineage, and courtly manners, he is indistinguishable from a gentleman of Southern France or Italy.

The Maharana of Udaipur, whose guests we are at present, is the representative of the mythical Rama, King of Ajodhya, and his house was founded as long ago as 144 A.D. Through all the centuries since he can trace his descent in a direct line uncontaminated by any connection with the conquering Moguls.

The Maharana met the Prince at the station surrounded by his Sirdars and the principal attendants of the State in full pomp. There were Sirdars in gorgeous robes seated upon squealing stallions; there were warriors in chain armour, their horse furniture of buckram; there were warriors in leather jerkins, and warriors in quilted cotton. There were elephants and camel-men.

Rustics bearing battered arms lined the road. Through the motley throng strode a company of state infantry resplendent in the discarded scarlet tunics of a British regiment, armed with muzzle-loading rifles, and clothed as to their nether limbs in the dhoti of the Hindu. Unconscious of their bizarre appearance they strode along, a microcosm of that ancient India which is being slowly killed by Western influences—at once highly ridiculous and supremely pathetic. Whilst full of animation the crowd was profoundly reverential and full of loyalty to the Royal party.

The Prince's drive through the town this morning in order to return the Maharana's visit supplied another feast of Oriental colour, the narrow streets, with their overhanging balconies, being wedged to suffocation with a characteristic Rajput assembly. The main feature of this visit was supplied by the Sirdar of Baidla, who bore a sword presented to his grandfather by the British Government for succouring Englishmen in distress during the Mutiny.

The exquisite beauty of the Maharana's palace and the lake which it overlooks, is the theme of general admiration. This evening the lake, the adjacent buildings, and the surrounding hilltops are gorgeously illuminated. The lake resembles a pool of molten gold, while the buildings gird it with a flood of living fire. The Royal party are enchanted.

The Prince's speech at the banquet to-night, referring to the ancient glories of Rajputana, touched a responsive chord of loyalty in the hearts of his audience. The unaffected charm of the Prince and Princess is winning them golden opinions.

Daily Express.—When the Prince and Princess of Wales arrived here (Udaipur) yesterday they found themselves in the midst of a mediæval feudalism which has no parallel in the East. The Maharana of Udaipur is the highest in rank and dignity of the Rajput Chiefs, and is at the head of nineteen feudatories of the first rank and thirty-two of the second, who maintain at their homes a pomp which is almost the exact counterpart of their overlord's.

Eager to second the Maharana in his desire to give their future Emperor a magnificent reception, they came down to the capital surrounded by retainers in buff jerkins and chain armour, on Arab chargers and armed with curved scimitars, bows and arrows, matchlocks, and old Enfield rifles.

The Prince and Princess were received on the station platform by the Maharana and his chiefs, who were presented to Their Royal Highnesses by the Agent of the Governor-General.

After this ceremony they drove through the narrow, crooked streets of the most Indian of all Indian cities to the Residency, where a little later the Maharana paid a visit, which was afterwards returned by the Prince. The reception took place in the durbar room of the palace, where the Maharana was surrounded by his nobles in festal dress of gleaming silks and dazzling jewels.

In the afternoon the Prince paid a visit to the famous pleasure garden, and in the evening, with the Princess, attended a banquet at the palace. The Royal party was conveyed in boats across the famous Pachola lake, the islands in which blazed with illuminations.

The Maharana was unable, of course, to dine with his Royal guests, but he received them, and chatted with them for a few minutes before dinner, and entered the banquetting-room afterwards to propose the health of the Prince and Princess.
